

"Okay, basically Moodle for me means that I have a list of courses. Now, this is getting a little abstract. So, a list of the faculties and on the side are my courses, and if I want to work with Moodle, that means, when I use Moodle for the first time, then I look up the course I want to have in the faculty and enroll there so to speak, when I have found the course, I enroll there and then I find my courses here on the side. Whenever I want to work with it in the respective course, I click on this specific course and in the end I more or less get to the semester schedule of my course, that lists the different weeks and with the weeks I find the respective materials and the discussion forum and the uploads I have to get. Moodle has a chat function as well. There you go to discuss things. I had to do this yesterday, pretty annoying. That means Moodle enables me to exchange with the other students of my course, even if I am not present in the class, that means it does not matter if we have a semester in presence or online, as it works the same, as our assignments are the same, that means, it is like a virtual class actually."
