INVENTORY OF THE GOODS AND CHATTELS BELONGING TO THOMAS, DUKE OF GLOUCESTER, AND SEIZED
IN HIS CASTLE AT PLESHY, CO. ESSEX, 21 RICHARD
II. (1397); WITH THEIR VALUES, AS SHOWN IN THE ESCHEATOR'S ACCOUNTS.

COMMUNICATED BY VISCOUNT DILLON, HON. M.A. OXON, P.S.A., PRESIDENT, and W. H. ST. JOHN HOPE, M.A.

The following inventory of the goods and chattels belonging to Thomas of Woodstock, K.G., Duke of Gloucester, is to be found in the Escheator's Accounts Queen's Remembrancer, Herts. and Essex, $\frac{77}{4}$, in the Public Record Office.

The Duke of Gloucester, the youngest son of Edward III., was born in 1355, and in the early part of the reign of his nephew Richard II. did, with his elder brother John of Gaunt, practically govern the kingdom. In 1386 he became the head of the Council of Regency; but on 21st June 1397 he, with the Earls of Rutland and Kent, and others, was seized and tried by the King's command. On 8th September he made a confession of his misdeeds, and, having been removed from the castle of Calais to a house in that town, was smothered.

He married Alianore, daughter and co-heiress of Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton. She died in 1399, and a splendid brass in Westminster Abbey marks her resting place, and shows the brilliant matches of her family. For the description of his arms and those of his wife the reader is referred to Boutell. In an alliterative poem of the beginning of the fifteenth century on the Deposition of Richard II., printed by the Camden Society, the Duke of Gloucester is referred to as the Swan.¹

The inventory is written on a long roll, indented on the dexter side. It is in French, with the occasional insertion of English words when the scribe's knowledge of the

Gallic tongue was at fault, and commences with a heading, of which the following is a translation :

This indenture of six pieces fastened together made between the Treasurer of England and the Chamberlains of the Exchequer of our lord the King on the one part and Clement Spice Escheator of our said lord the King in the counties of Essex and Hertford on the other part witnesseth that the said Escheator by virtue of a writ of the Chancery of our lord the King directed to him to deliver the 13th day of December the year of our said lord King of his reign the 21st to the said Treasurer and Chamberlains to the use of our said lord the King divers goods and chattels which formerly were Thomas Duke of Gloucester's and which the said Escheator found in the Castle of Pleshy in Essex and seised them into the hands of our said lord the King by virtue of another writ and by reason of a judgement against the said Duke given in a Parliament holden at Westminster the year aforesaid, the which goods and chattels and the value of them are contained in this indenture in manner as followeth.

The contents of the inventory are arranged under ten sub-headings, as follows :

(1) Draps de Aras	(8) Masses p^r sergeantz et cornes
(2) Tapicerie	(9) Livres de div^s rymances et Estories
(3) Litz dor et de soye	(10) Robe et vesture cum pellu^r
(4) Lit de Worsted
(5) Vestimenta pro Capella
(6) Libri pro Capella
(7) Vasa argentea

There is also an eleventh section, but without heading, enumerating the arms and armour. Most of the headings are in French ; the others are in Latin.

The section devoted to Cloths of Arras (Draps de Aras), or great tapestry hangings for the hall and chambers, gives the subjects, dimensions, and values of fifteen pieces, together with a list of various bankers and carpets. The subjects are for the most part scenes from various popular romances, such as the History of Charles the Great, of Godfrey of Boulogne and the taking of Jerusalem, and the Battle between Gawayn and Lancelot. Others are of a more miscellaneous character, such as the Story of St. George, an Assault upon ladies in a castle, the story of the discomfiture of a wodevole and a lion, etc. Two pieces bore pictures of the Nativity of Our Lord, and of the Nativity, Presentation, and Purification of Our Lady, and another the Story of Judith and Holofernes.

These Cloths of Arras varied in width from $2\frac{1}{2}$ yards to 4 yards, and in length from 6 yards to 24 yards, or 72 feet. The one piece of this length was valued at £48 12s. or about £1,000 of present value, and another piece which was 60 feet long was appraised at £45.

Of the bankers and carpets attention need be called only to three carpets of blue arras powdered with yellow Garters, with a total length of 20 yards and width of 4 yards, and another of the same suit 10 yards long and 4 in width; also to three other pieces of white arras powdered with angels in blue clouds holding scrolls lettered Miserere, having a total length of $21\frac{1}{2}$ yards by $3\frac{1}{2}$ yards in width. This set too had a supplementary piece 11 yards long and 4 yards wide.

Under the heading of Tapicerie two items only are included. The one was a white halling (sale) or set of hangings for a hall, consisting of a dosser and four costers worked with the arms of King Edward III. and his sons. with borders paly of red and black, powdered with swans (the Bohun badge) and the arms of Hereford.¹ The other item specifies fourteen carpets for the chamber of the same set with another little carpet. The value of this set was £20.

Of Beds of gold and silk (Litz dor et de soye) there were sixteen, but the section also includes a number of carpets and other appendages belonging to the several beds. The word "bed" does not refer to the mattresses, but to the hangings, often of the most splendid character, with which the beds were furnished. Thus the first on our list is described as a "great bed of gold, that is to say, a coverlet, a tester (or canopy) and the entire celure (or valance) of fine blue satin wrought with Garters of gold, and three curtains of tartaryn beaten to match. Also two long and four square pillows of the set of the bed." The whole being valued at £182. 3s. or at least £3,600 of our money. No other bed in the list approached this in richness, their values in not any case exceeding £13. 6s. 8d., and descending as low as 6s. 8d.

¹ The "arms of Hereford" were either (1) those attributed to Milo of Gloucester, Earl of Hereford. gules, two bends, one or, the other argent, or (2) those of De Bohun. azure, a bend argent

cotised or, between six gold lions. These arms occur both quartered and separately on the brass of the duke's wife, Eleanor de Bohun, in Westminster abbey church.

Some of them must nevertheless have been pretty to look at. One great bed, for instance, was of white satin embroidered in the midst in Cyprus gold with the arms and helm (i.e. crest, etc.) of the Duke of Gloucester.¹ Another was of green double samite with a blue pale or stripe of chamlet embroidered with a gold pot of blossoming lilies worked in silver. Besides the usual coverlet, tester, and valance, and three curtains, there apparently belonged to this bed three carpets of green worsted embroidered with lilies and four plain green carpets. Also a dosser and two costers of green silk embroidered with white pots of lilies. The value of the whole was only £20. Other beds were of black baudekyn powdered with white roses, of green tartaryn embroidered with gold griffins, of blue with silver owls and gold fleurs-de-lis, of white with green popinjays, and so on.

The Beds of worsted (Lit de Worsted), as might be expected, were of more humble character than those of silk, and of smaller value, ranging from 10s. to 3s. 4d.

They were nevertheless gay with embroidery and stitch-work. Thus we read of an old blue bed embroidered with a yellow stag; another of red with a crowned lion, two griffins, and chaplets and roses; of another blue bed with a white eagle thereon; and of a red one with falcons. The section includes some single articles of interest, such as a coverlet of red embroidered with a unicorn, a blue one with a lion and roses, another red one with a white greyhound, and yet another of red with a white lion couchant under a tree. A tester and a coverlet of blue worsted embroidered with a white hart were probably so ornamented out of compliment to Richard II.

The longest section is that containing the Vestments for the Chapel (Vestimenta pro capella). It occupies nearly one-third of the inventory, and includes seventy-five different items. The enumeration of even a portion of these would be tedious, but attention may be called to a few interesting points. The list begins with eight or nine "vestments" as they are called. "Vestment" here includes not only a chasuble, but albes, amices, stoles and fanons, a corporal, a towel, a pillow or cushion for the mass-book, the front, counterfront and frontlet of the altar and the two curtains that hung at its ends. The richer suits are described as "entire vestments." These contained in addition several copes, and a pair of tunicles for the deacon and subdeacon. Of copes, besides small sets of two, three, or four there were two sets of sixteen each, another of twenty-two, and another of eleven.

Two copes must have been of extreme splendour. One is described as "a fine cope of blue worked with divers beasts and birds with frets of pearls with Garters inscribed Hony soit qi mal pense, with orphreys of cloth of gold of Cyprus embroidered with images, lined with satin." The value of this was £60 or nearly £2,000 of our money. The next in the list was even more precious. It is described as "A goodly cope of gold of Cyprus worked all over with compasses and stories of imagery of the Passion etc., lined with black buckram" and valued at 100 marks. The succeeding item which describes a frontal is of interest as giving us the length of the altar to which it belonged: "A front of gold of Cyprus curiously embroidered with ten large images, containing $4\frac{1}{4}$ yards in length and $1\frac{1}{2}$ yard in depth, price £60." Another front of the same value was worked all over with the Passion of Our Lord. This and the cope above mentioned were probably of the famous opus Anglicanum. Since bishops occasionally were the guests of the Duke of Gloucester due provision of vestments for them was made against their coming, as for instance: "Also two dalmatics of blue satin doubled with ribands of Venice gold and two dalmatics of white cloth of gold with damask riband, two mitres of white baudekin of damask garnished with riband of gold of damask, one pair of sandals and one pair of sabatons of cloth of gold, with a pair of gloves, used for bishops." Among the miscellaneous entries may be noticed: four grey amesses of minever; a towel of white silk 7 yards long, ordained for the Maundy, and a towel for the relics; and a canopy of red cloth of gold with a blue silk fringe for the feast of Corpus Christi. Many of the vestments, etc. had heraldic ornaments. The Duke's favourite device of the De Bohun swan frequently occurs, together with the white hart and other badges. One of the rich suits was powdered with gold lions, and the cope-hoods were embroidered with the arms of the Duke of Gloucester. The frontlet, or "frontel" as it is called, attached to one of the altar cloths or "towels" was worked with images of the Apostles and the arms of Hainault and England¹ flourished with pearls. The two last items of the section are: "a tablet of two leaves (i.e. a diptych) embroidered with gold of Cyprus with a crucifix and the coronation (of Our Lady) flourished with pearls," and "three tablets, each of three leaves (i.e. triptychs) painted with divers images." Their small values suggest that they were of no great size.

The list of Books for the Chapel (Libri pro capella) includes bibles, massbooks, portoses, antiphoners, grayles, legends, and psalters, together with two pontificals, a martiloge, a manual, etc. Some of these volumes are described as bien escripts or bien esluminez, and as furnished with clasps of silver-gilt, silver, or other metal. White leather seems to have been the prevailing covering, but red leather, velvet, and even cloth of gold also were used. Two of the psalters are described as del escriptur de Fraunce, and another as "a little psalter with silver tables in a case of red boiled leather (quyr boilli)." Only one other book need be noticed: "a little book of divers prayers covered with black and red velvet embroidered with swans," the De Bohun badge.

The plate used in the chapel is not specially enumerated, but appears in the list of Vasa Argentea. So far as the items can be identified it included two silver candlesticks weighing 4lbs. 3½ ounces, a "halywater stopp" and sprinkle of silver-gilt weighing 3 lbs. 2½ oz., a senser with four chains of silver, and a ship and spoon for the incense of silver parcel gilt, two silver cruets and a chalice wholly gilt. The other plate included basons and ewers, pottle-pots, chargers, platters, salt-cellars, spoons, masers, etc. One maser of unusual size, capable of holding three gallons, had a band and an embossed print of silver-gilt and weighed 8 lbs. 5 oz. It was moreover furnished with a silver-gilt cover of the weight of 6 lbs. $5\frac{1}{2}$ ounces. The last item on the list is "a large alms dish in the shape of a ship weighing 10 lbs." and valued at £14, or £300 of our money.

The tenth section, specifying the Masses pour Sergeantz et cornes, is a very short one, and contains but four items. Two maces of baleen¹ harnessed with silver were probably for ordinary use by the duke's sergeants-at-mace, but a third, of beryl or crystal garnished with silver-gilt and wrought with images and other devices, in a case of boiled leather, must have been for state occasions only. It may have pertained to the duke's dignity as Constable of England. The horns, great and small, were five in number, and harnessed with silver-gilt.

The duke's library contained eighty-four volumes of Livres de diverses rymances et Estories, besides "divers old French quires without titles" and "divers pamphlets and rolls in a coffer." Only three works appear to have been written in English: a Bible in two large volumes bound in red leather, a Book of the Gospels similarly bound, and "a new Book of the Gospels glossed in English." The majority of the books were written in French or Latin. Among the historical and other romances in French were the Romance of the Rose, Hector of Troy, Merlin, Bevis of Hampton, Tancred, the Romance of Lancelot, and of Alexander, the Battle of Troy, Godfrey of Boulogne, etc. Other French books treated of the Miracles of Our Lady, the Passions of divers Saints, and the Life of St. Thomas of Canterbury. The Latin works included the Chronicles of the Popes. Bartholomæus de proprietate rerum, Rationale divinarum (probably of Durandus), two large books of Civil Law, "one called the old Digests, the other the Code," a book of Decretals, another De dictis Poetarum, Tripartita Historia, Pastoralis Gregorii, Egidius de regimine principum, Prologus sancti Ysodori, etc. The last book in the list is "an old book in Latin and French, beautifully illuminated, of prayers to the Holy Cross, with clasps of latten."

Renaissance (Paris, 1887), i. 108, s.v. Baleine, quotes from a document of 1351 a direction for making "la garnison d'argent d'une verge de ballaine dont les virolles sont esmaillees des armes du roy, etc."

The section enumerating the contents of the duke's wardrobe is a somewhat bald catalogue. It commences with a special group, entitled Robe et vesture cum pellur, of eight gowns lined or faced with minever or other fur, of which the stuff and the fur are separately valued. No doubt these gowns had some special interest attaching to them; otherwise the reason for their being singled out is not apparent, for neither in value nor in the fact of their furrings do they differ materially from some of the items that follow. A blue gown furred with minever and wrought with Garters is the only item calling for attention.

The rest of the section enumerates divers gowns, cloaks, "slops," and caps, as well as a large number of pieces of material and "remenants." A long gown of red velvet and a mantle of the same stuff furred with minever, valued at £13. 8s. 8d., may have been the duke's parliament robe, or robe of estate; otherwise the list is of little interest either from the brief description of the garments or the materials of which they were made. Almost the last item is "21 pieces of tents with the woodwork pertaining to them" valued at £20.

The inventory of arms and armour, though one of a period of which many equally interesting examples have been printed, yet contains certain items worthy of notice. The late Mr. Albert Way, in his valuable explanations of similar lists of armour¹ has elucidated most of the expressions to be found in this inventory, and, except where varieties of enrichment or other like peculiarities may be noticed, we shall not repeat his notes.

The head defences here enumerated present varieties all of which are known by name at least to the student of the military equipment of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The bascinets, some with and others without visors and aventails (by which latter term we must for this period understand the camail of mail), present two varieties, namely, the simple conical helmet so universal on monumental effigies and brasses of this era, and two others described as for jousts of war, that is, serious combats in the lists.

It is worthy of remark that these bascinets are not mentioned as having visors, but "peses de healmes" are noted in the same item as if belonging to them. The absence of visors recalls to the observer the curious fact connected with the numerous representations of the bascinet in brasses and effigies, that is, the absence in most instances of any visible mode of attaching the visor. In the full-face figures on brass we might suppose that the pivots, or holes for pivots, of the visors were not seen, being a little behind the greatest breadth of the bascinet; but in effigies which we can examine nearly all round, the same thing occurs. It may be said that in the Hastings brass, 1347; the Dijon figure of St. George, 1391; the Mauleverer brass of 1400, and others, the visor is shown, but the general rule is the other way. Froissart mentions that the valiant knight, Sir John Chandos,¹ "ne porta oncques point de visièr"; and such may have been the custom with many other warriors of his day, though the particular mention of Chandos seems as if his case was peculiar.

"Ketelhattes,"² according to the Promptorium, were exclusively formed of leather; but in this instance one is clearly of metal milled, for so "white" is understood; and the other one, like so many headpieces of former times, was covered with some textile; in this case russet velvet. Another head defence here mentioned, the pallet,³ is also supposed to have been at least originally, as its name implies, of leather, but here it is described as "de Lombardy," evidently, if not of Milan steel, at least from one of the neighbouring centres of armour manufacture. Of the form of these two kinds of helmet we have no indication save that the pallet only had a visor. The three "healmes p^r joustes de pees" were doubtless of the type seen in the tilting helm preserved with the saddle of Henry V. in Westminster Abbey, and so often absurdly

They also are mentioned in the will of Sir Wm. Langford, 1411, and of Nicolas Snypton, 1391.

³ Eight palets, naval outfit 1372-1374.

referred to as one of the casques that "did affright the air at Agincourt."

While speaking of these helmets, which in their earlier appearance were of leather, the "capels de nerfs" of the Dover Castle inventory of 1344 and 1361 will be called to mind,¹ and may perhaps be of the same kind as the huvettes which St. Remy tells us were worn by the English archers at Agincourt, and are described as being made of leather with iron bands across them.²

Of body armour, the five pairs of plates³ include some specially noted as for jousts of peace, others for jousts of war. One pair of the latter were gilt; the others were covered, as we generally find them, with velvet. Another pair are described as having formerly belonged to King Edward (III.), and these were covered with blue baudekyn, one of the varieties of the rich brocade stuff in its earlier fashion, woven of silk with threads of gold, though in later days the name came to be applied to plain silks.

The four breastplates are not mentioned as covered with any material. The briganters (the brigandines of the Middle Ages, a brilliantly coloured souple and very universal class of body armour) are, in this inventory, very rich examples, as might be expected considering the rank of the owner. One pair are deserving of special notice, as having the breast and the back (le pys et le dos) white, and the lower part, or skirts, covered with blue velvet. It will be noticed that one of the brigandines has sleeves of plate, while another is mentioned as having them without plate. In the fifteenth century we often see miniatures in MSS. of knights wearing brigandines with the arms covered with plate, and the lower part only of the breast and back similarly protected. We may therefore suppose that at the period of this inventory the breastplate, or even the pair of plates, was on some occasions worn over the brigandine.

The three "paunser," the armour for the lower part of the body, are presumably of plate, as they are described as of steel, and a bracer of steel also is mentioned in connection with them and the plates with which they were worn. What the bracer was it is not easy to say. The arm defences are called simply "bras." Gussets and voiders are also enumerated, and the explanation of the latter term as "either gussets of mail, or overlapping plates, serving to fill up the spaces, or vuides, either at the elbow, or the knee joints," as given by Mr. Way,¹ must stand as the only meaning our present knowledge allows us to attach to the term. Still, the two expressions occurring in one item mark that there was some distinction between them.

For the protection of the upper limbs there are vant bras (avant bras), rerebras, gantz de plate, and maindefers. Some of the plate gauntlets were gilt, and garnished with latten or brass. The maindefers, which in the sixteenth century occurs so often as manefaire, was the strong and simple mitten gauntlet for the bridle hand.

The leg defences are somewhat various; for besides the legherneis entiers, which would cover the front of the thighs, the knees, and the whole of the lower leg, we have some called forherneys. These were probably only for the front of the leg, and resembling the "schynbaldes" of Archbishop Bowet's inventory, 1423.² In that document we have "vamplattes" given as an alternative name for these "schynbaldes," and the same word occurs in the present inventory, where they are noted as for the lists.

The coler dasser would be the plate gorget, which, at the end of the fourteenth and commencement of the fifteenth century, superseded the camail of chain mail, and the introduction of which affords such a guide in determining the date of effigies.³

Of chain-mail armour, there are three habergeons of small-linked Lombardy make, and four others described as old. There is also one pair of mail chausses, or coverings for the legs.

The sabatons were the armed coverings for the feet, which at this period were separate from the leg defences, of which in the early sixteenth century they so often, if not always, form a part, the back portion of the greave being continued down to the lower part of the heel; while in the second half of that century the articulations at the ankle still constitute the solleret as a part of the leg armour.

In connection with the foregoing armour should be noted the three surcoats of arms described as good and rich, with the arms of the noble owner embroidered on them. The estimated value of the three at £20, while the richest brigandine is set down at 56s. 8d., will give some idea of the costliness of such additions to the military costume of this period. The similarly embroidered pennon, and the trapper for the horse, are also valued together at £20. Other trappers, banners, standards, pennons, guidons, and pennoncels also occur, but their value is insignificant. A bastard saddle for jousts of war, embroidered and gilt, appears to have been equally inconsiderable.

The weapons comprise several Bordeaux blades more or less richly mounted and scabbarded; but a Scottish sword is an unusual item. Some of the swords are mentioned as long, others short, some for war, others not so particularised.

Among other weapons we may note baselards, one with a Bordeaux blade; several daggers, of which one was for the lists, and an Irish short knife with a roebuck horn handle with silver gilt furniture.

Among the lance heads, a large one of Bordeaux steel is mentioned, and one for boar hunting.

The remaining portion of this part of the inventory enumerates a variety of covertures: carpets, sheets, mantles, hats, and odd remnants of fabrics.

A coverture of "appelblu" refers to a stuff or a colour evidently in vogue at this period,¹ for there is a furred gown of this description noted in the will of John Percehay, of Yorkshire, 1391.²

Two mantels corked are mentioned, but what the qualifying word means we do not know.

² "Unam togam de appilblome, furatam cum foygnes." Testamenta

Eboracensia, i. (Surtees Society 4) 164. There is an entry in the expenses of the Great Wardrobe of two whole pieces of appelblome as being supplied for the use of Edward III's daughter Joan in 1348.

A piece of cloth stained, of red with white deer, may have something to do with Richard II's badge of a white hart lodged.

Hassocks occur with cushions. A beaver hat is interesting,¹ but one of the most curious items is the lavender satchel.²

The "chequer de cokyle" was probably a chess or draught board inlaid with mother-of-pearl, which also ornamented a table de ij foyles, or backgammon board, or its equivalent in those days.

The values being attached to the various items give an extra interest to this collection of military and civil objects which is not to be found in the bare mention of them.

The whole of the duke's armour, together with that of Richard, earl of Arundel, and of Thomas, earl of Warwick, was ordered to be sent to the Tower by a writ of privy seal directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, dated 7th November 22 Richard II (1398).³ The armour was delivered by "Stephen atte Freth armurer notre sire le Roy" to Johan Torre 3rd May 22 Richard II (1399).
