

The Unification of the Churches: A Present-Day Study. By Daniel W. Fisher, D.D., LL.D.; Author of "A Human Life." New York. 1911. Fleming H. Revell Company. 93 pages. 50 cents net.

There is a great deal of discussion of "Christian Union," much clamor for it, and not a little effort to make it effective in union of churches. Not many who set before them this ideal have faced in calm and analytical fashion all the issues involved as has Dr. Fisher in this fine little volume. In three chapters he faces, "The Problem" as seen first, in the fact and reasons for the present disunion; second, in the good and the ill of the disunion; and third, in the principles and methods along which alone union can be effected. Then three chapters recount the progress made and making toward union in Christian countries and on mission fields, with an outlook on the situation. There is no indulgence in impractical visions, no clamor for union that is superficial and based on mere compromise. It is a sane discussion which every one seeking union should read. The author is sure that union will not come in the recognition of "the historical Episcopate", nor by the acceptance of "only one method of valid baptism." It is quite true that the two most solid hindering bodies of Christians are the Episcopalians and the Baptists. Let us hope that by the time the other larger denominations have removed their barriers and come together the way may be open for Episcopalians and Baptists to enter upon active and thorough fellowship with their brethren. Meantime all need to recognize that in whatever measure any of us are dominated and informed by the one Spirit of Christ we are in His Church and in a unity.

W. O. CARVER.

The Value of Contentment. Edited by Mary Minerva Barrows; Introduction by Mary E. Wilkins. New York and Boston. 1911. H. M. Caldwell Co. xii+205 pages.

The editor of this volume was not easily satisfied, however contented, in her work of compiling the best words men have spoken on this topic. From two hundred and fifty authors she