

I.—The Wardrobe and Household Accounts of Bogo de Clare, A.D. 1284-6.
By M. S. GIUSEPPI, Esq., F.S.A.

Read 23rd January 1919.

BOGO DE CLARE, whose private expenditure forms the subject of the present paper, was a son of Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and a younger brother of Gilbert who succeeded his father in those earldoms in 1261.¹

Bogo was an ecclesiastic, and his career in the church has furnished our Fellow, Mr. A. Hamilton Thompson, in an article on *Pluralism in the Medieval Church*², with his most striking example of the persona sublimis, the nobleman, for whom jointly with the persona literata power of dispensation from Pope Innocent III's constitution against pluralism (De multa providentia) had been reserved to the apostolic see. Bogo's earliest appearance in the Chancery rolls as a clerk is on 25th August 1259, when he was presented to the church of St. Peter-in-the-East, Oxford.³ On 10th September following he was collated to the deanery of Stafford.⁴ In 1265 he received a grant of the prebend of Masham and was collated to the church of Howden, co. York.⁵ Thenceforward his extraordinary acquisition of one benefice after another may be traced in the records of the English and papal chanceries and in the registers of the many dioceses in which he held those benefices. Mr. Thompson has shown that by 1280 he was the greatest pluralist in this country. Within the next two or three years he obtained yet more benefices, making twenty in all.

Of church dignities which he acquired in addition to the deanery of Stafford and the prebend of Masham already noticed, he held in 1275 a canonry at Exeter⁶ and in 1294 another at Chichester.¹ In 1285 he was made treasurer of St. Peter's, York.² In 1287 as chancellor of Llandaff we find him opposing the election of Philip de Stanton to the bishopric.³

In 1294, amongst the grantees of the letters of protection given to the clergy in return for a tax of half their yearly revenues, Bogo de Clare appears in respect of his two canonries of Chichester and York, of nine churches, and of medietyes of two others.⁴ He is surpassed, however, by his friend, Ralph de Hengham, the celebrated chief justice, who appears as the parson of fourteen churches, but, as Mr. Thompson points out, it is certain that in Bogo's case the list of his livings is not complete.

The date of his last letters of protection was 18th October 1294. Within ten days of this date he was dead.⁵ In this year, says the writer of the Flores Historiarum, died Sir Bogo de Clare, 'multarum rector ecclesiarum vel potius incubator'.⁶ According to the chronicler of Lanercost, who gives an amusing account of Bogo's neglect of his spiritual cares and his personal extravagance, his death occurred during the feast of All Saints.⁷

In more secular affairs of life Bogo's grasping character stands out in the public records no less clearly.⁸ Perhaps the best-known instances of his arrogance are those recorded in the Parliament Roll of 1290, when his conduct in arresting the earl of Cornwall in Westminster Hall on the latter's way to the council resulted in his temporary committal to the Tower and subsequent fine to the crown of 2,000 marks.⁹ In the second charge brought against him at the same parliament Bogo's household was directly implicated, and I shall have occasion to refer to this later. Bogo's reputation for avarice must have died hard, for twenty years after his death it was stated at the inquisition on the death of his nephew, the last Clare earl of Gloucester, that a certain tenement in Llan-gibby had come into the earl's hands through the extortion of Bogo de Clare.¹⁰ the documents now to be described enable us to estimate. These documents belong to that collection of once private muniments of the de Clare family which has long been amongst the records of the Exchequer.¹ They are now included in the class known as 'Accounts Various' and are eight in number, seven of them being in the subdivision of this class termed 'Clare Household' and one, not identified in the official list as a Clare document, in the unclassified miscellanea towards the end of the class.

Such was the man whose domestic expenditure for about a couple of years

The accounts are clearly classified as Wardrobe and Household, and are evenly divided between these two categories, one of the former being, however, in duplicate. The present arrangement observes neither this classification nor the proper chronological order of the documents, which, owing to the method of dating by the days of the week, with the occasional mention of a church feast, and never by the days of the month, is, at least in the case of the household accounts, not readily apparent. Some preliminary explanation of the documents is therefore necessary to a better understanding of their relation to each other.

The Wardrobe accounts only are printed here and are the more important of the two. For the household account is either made out by the keeper of the wardrobe himself and its balance brought into his wardrobe account, or by some other officer of the household for the most part financed by him.

The earliest of Bogo's extant wardrobe accounts is that of Abel de Horkeley from 14th June 1284 to 2nd March 1285.² It is, however, not a true 'comptus', but merely a list of the receipts and expenditure of the office during this period without any attempt to add them up, still less to balance them. No marginal titles are used, and what little classification of the payments has been attempted shows all that want of scientific precision which is so characteristic of the medieval mind. The roll is plainly a preliminary stage in the preparation of a final account, which is not now forthcoming.

The accountant refers to five separate rolls he has made of the expenses of the household (familia), either in London or on some of its migrations. In the case of four of these he enters separately in his main wardrobe account the total shown on the front of each and that on the dorse, the latter always as the expenses incurred 'pro Garderoba'. He mentions also several payments he has made to other officers of the household for the expenses of the lord or his servants on their various journeys. Of the employment of these moneys separate accounts would have been rendered, but three only of the 'household' rolls which come roughly within the period of the wardrobe account are now extant.

Unfortunately the apparent want of method by which two of these rolls have been made up, perhaps, to judge from the early numbering and re-numbering of the several skins, at their first rendering, and the very mutilated condition of the third make the question of their exact relation to the main account somewhat perplexing. The first in point of date covers the period between 1st May and 5th December 1284,¹ and is an account chiefly by Walter de Reyny, the most important of Bogo's accounting officers with whom we have to deal, of the daily expenses of his lord's household on its various migrations about England and Wales. It consists of two membranes which are numbered respectively 'vii^{us}' and 'ix^{us}', the missing seven membranes being probably accounted for by the statement at the head of the first, 'Walterus de Langel' . vj. pecias et . j . cedula lam'. The account follows the customary medieval form, each day's household expenses, i.e. food and drink, kitchen and stable (marescalcia), being separately totalled.² On the dorse of each membrane pari passu with the entries on the face are a number of very miscellaneous but interesting items of expenditure which are described collectively as belonging to the wardrobe (garderoba).

The second³ of the three household rolls offers more difficulty, for it consists of several membranes (including 'cedulae' six in all) forming rough materials for a longer account in more final form, of which, as we shall see, the roll just described was to form a part. Walter de Reyny is the accountant throughout, and the main part of the roll is his account of his employment of a sum of £20 he had received from Adam de Horkeley, the payment of which will be found duly entered in the latter's wardrobe account, on Bogo's expenses in his journey from Leicester on 12th October 1284, to meet the king in Wales, and the journey thence to England, finally arriving at Barnet on the following 2nd November.⁴ Reyny, after totalling the household items on the face of this account and the wardrobe items on the dorse, shows a balance of £3 1s. 10½*d.* in hand. This balance, however, he has subsequently struck through, together with the entries showing how it was arrived at and the entry of the receipt of the £20, evidently because he intended the account to be only a part of a larger one extending from 1st May 1284 until the date, 12th March 1285, on which he himself became keeper of the wardrobe. Of this account we have apparently the draft commencement on a single membrane attached to this roll. It contains all Reyny's receipts within the longer period, including the £20 from Horkeley. The total of these is £59 12s. 8*d.* Now if we examine the rough workings at the end of the account of the Welsh journey we shall find that after considerable correction Reyny has set down his total expenses between 1st May 1284 and 12th March

1285 as £66 13s. 3³/₄d., and as £7 os. 7³/₄d. in excess of his receipts, thereby making the latter accord with the total already stated. In the case of the expenses we do not now possess all the materials to enable us to check Reyny's total. One other small item towards them we have on another membrane attached to this same roll, the account, namely, of Reyny's expenses with Bogo and his household on a journey from Llangibby (Tregruk') to Salisbury between 26th and 29th September.

The third household roll contemporary with Horkeley's wardrobe account, though it has now become isolated from the Clare Accounts and indeed is in a sadly mutilated and barely legible condition, proves to be the only one now forthcoming of the five separate rolls which Horkeley states that he has made of the expenses of the household (familia) either in London or on some of its migrations. It is the account of the household's journey from London to Melton Mowbray just before Christmas 1284.¹

The last definite date given by Reyny's daily expenses of the household in Exchequer Accounts, bundle 91, no. 2, is 5th December 1284, but following this are some undated items of the expenses of himself and two others in London for four days to receive the lord's wardrobe from Ralph de Siccavilla. Reyny tells us that it was on St. Gregory's day (12th March), 1284-5, that he became keeper of the wardrobe (garderobarius), and his first account in respect of that office, the second of Bogo de Clare's extant wardrobe accounts, is dated from that day.² There is thus an interval of ten days between the close of Horkeley's account and the beginning of Reyny's for which we have no account of the wardrobe. Of Siccavilla's precise connexion with it we know nothing more. He was one of the regular members of Bogo's establishment, probably a clerk, for he is styled 'dominus' in common with Horkeley and others who help to carry out their master's more spiritual functions as well as his temporal business; he receives ten marks for his robes and goes on various missions; but his brief charge of the wardrobe was probably only due to Horkeley's absence from London on some other service.

In Reyny's first wardrobe account we have a very different production from the incomplete draft that is all that remains of Horkeley's. It is endorsed 'the final account' and is set out with considerable elaboration, the work of a practised scribe, whose name, William de Horton, clerk, we know, for he was paid 3s. for the task. The elaborate tabulation on the dorse of the roll of the liveries, followed by a second table in which they are balanced against the purchases, was perhaps thought unnecessary for it was not repeated on a subsequent occasion. Nevertheless, the want of method in classifying the items of expenditure shows little advance on the methods of the previous accountant. 'Expense' is used as the heading for a number of items of very different nature. A special heading is adopted for ginger in which several sorts of sugar are included. Yet both articles reappear later under the heading spices.

The account covers the period from 12th March to Michaelmas Day 1285. Against the total receipts amounting to £672 10s. 7d. it shows a total expenditure on account of the wardrobe of £488 19s. 11½d., to which Reyny has added his household expenses during the same period, bringing up the grand total to £688 14s. 4¼d. with a consequent deficit of £16 3s. 9¼d.

Part of the account showing these household expenses is in existence.¹ This is headed 'Expense Domus facte per manus . Walteri . de Rey . a festo sancti Gregorii . anno domini . M^o.CC. lxxx . quarto . vsque ad festum sancti Michaelis . proxime . sequens'. It should therefore coincide with the whole period of the wardrobe account. But the roll as it exists at present has evidently been made up from three separate accounts, of some part of which another than Reyny was the accountant, and it is not clear whether the items in this part were eventually brought into Reyny's account.² The first day accounted for on the roll is described as Wednesday after the Translation of St. Richard of Chichester, which coming after St. Gregory's day (12th March), 1284-5, should give us 20th June 1285. But the Sunday following was the quindene of Easter, i.e. in 1285 8th April. Clearly the scribe has mistaken the original feast-day of the saint (3rd April) for the date of his translation.³ The former will give us 4th April for the commencing date of the account, and on this calculation there is no difficulty in fitting in the other saints' days mentioned in the account, which finally closes with Thursday in the vigil of St. Margaret (i.e. 19th July), 1285. Between these two extreme dates the periods from 20th April to 9th May and from 2nd to 14th June are unaccounted for on this roll.

Between Michaelmas and Christmas 1285 no account now exists of Bogo's wardrobe or household. The last extant wardrobe account begins on Christmas Day and is continued to Whit-Sunday following, namely 2nd June 1286.⁴ Reyny

² Ms. 1 and 2, the latter of which has a contemporary numbering 'ij^{us}' and is described as J. Tygre's account, are totalled together on the dorse. Ms. 3, 4, and 5, numbered respectively 'ij^{us}', 'iij^{us}', and 'iiij^{us}', are similarly totalled together, m. 3 being endorsed 'Secundus Rotulus Expensarum domus per Manus . W. de Reyni London'. This same membrane is prefaced, however, with the note that Reymund de Sulye accounted previously. M. 6 is endorsed 'Tercius Rotulus', etc., and its items are finally totalled with those on ms. 7 and 8, the three being respectively numbered 'v^{us}' (corrected from 'iiij^{us}'), 'vj^{us}', and 'vij^{us}'. Possibly the fact that the first membrane of Exch. Accounts, bundle 91, no. 2 is numbered 'viij^{us}' accounts for the present incorrect arrangement of the documents.

³ According to Walsingham the bishop's translation had taken place on 16th June so recently as the year 1276 (Hist. Anglic., ed. Rolls series, i, 16).

is still in charge and was so doubtless during the missing period, for his master's debt to him when he opens this account has risen to £228 19s. 8d. His receipts during the little more than five months of the account amount to £564 2s. 0d. and his wardrobe expenses to £393 5s. 0³/₄d., making with the sum already due to him £622 4s. 8³/₄d. The expenses of the household, for no part of which is any account now forthcoming, are entered as £317 os. 4d. Bogo de Clare has thus, at the time that our intimate knowledge of his financial affairs ceases, allowed his chief accounting officer to outrun the constable by no less a sum than £375 3s. 0³/₄d.

The account is set out with much the same care as the preceding one, but there is a rather more simple classification of the items of expenditure and less recurrence of the vague heading 'expense', though it still appears all too frequently. Perhaps the chief interest of the account from the archivist's point of view is that it exists in duplicate. The items as set out in each are in agreement, but there are some differences of phrasing and spelling between the two. We do not possess in this case the names of the scribes, and we cannot say with certainty that this duplication of the account was a new departure, though from the fact that in the previous case the cost of the parchment was 1s. only and in the later account as much as 2s. 6d. we may infer that it was. There are other indications that Reyny was progressive in his methods, and perhaps either he or his master felt that they could carry still further their imitation of royal practice by appointing to a wardrobe, already modelled on that of the king's household, a controller or keeper of a counter-roll.

It is clear that we do not possess all the accounts and vouchers of Bogo de Clare's wardrobe and household that his auditors must have had before them at any single audit within the short period of barely two years covered by the extant documents. Consequently, whatever deductions we may venture to make from them as to the probable amount of his revenues, his social and business relations and his general way of life must be qualified by this consideration. Nevertheless, the accounts as they now exist are voluminous enough and throw much interesting light on a variety of phases of late thirteenth-century life, which I shall consider under certain subject-headings. Many of these headings, however, I can do little more here than indicate, reserving for more detailed inquiry those points which appear to demand greater elucidation. Two of the household accounts it may be remarked furnished the Rev. C. H. Hartshorne with the materials for the first of his articles on 'Illustrations of Domestic Manners during the reign of Edward I',¹ and he printed a few extracts from them. He does not appear to have been aware of the wardrobe and remaining household accounts, and was completely ignorant of the identity of Bogo de Clare.

THE WARDROBE AND LONDON HOUSE OF BOGO DE CLARE. The important part which the wardrobe appears to play as the financing department of Bogo de Clare's household is interesting, and may perhaps be attributed to the intimate relations which must have existed between the de Clares and Edward I. For the keeper of the king's wardrobe at this period not only exercised general control over all the private expenditure of his sovereign but also over the finances of such national concerns as the army, the navy, and the diplomatic service, and had not yet been subjected to Exchequer audit. In Bogo's case this extension of the original functions of the wardrobe may have occurred within the period of our accounts, though the evidence is insufficient to make any positive assertion on this point possible. The influence of the wardrobe, however, over other departments of his household does appear somewhat more marked in the later accounts of Reyny than in those of his predecessor in office. In neither of the printed private household accounts of the period, to which reference has been already made, those namely of the countess of Leicester twenty years earlier in date and those of Bishop Swinfield some four or five years later than Bogo's, is a like significance of the wardrobe discernible, but neither the wife of the great Simon de Montfort, although the daughter of an English king, nor the bishop of a remote diocese could be expected to be versed in the current ways of royalty.

Bogo's wardrobe building was in London and formed part of his house there, of which we have the details of considerable repairs in Reyny's account for 1285. These repairs, which cost in all £6 7s. 2½d., were going on under Reyny's direction whilst Bogo was away at his living of Thatcham between 18th April and 10th May, and were doubtless in preparation for the sumptuous entertainment, immediately upon his return on the latter date, of Sir Edmund Mortimer and his numerous other friends and retainers.¹ From one item in Reyny's last account we have a clue to the whereabouts of this house. 'In carriage of the lord's furniture (harnesii) of his wardrobe to his house next the Trinity, twice after Easter, 13½d.' The Trinity is in all probability the priory of the Holy Trinity within Aldgate, for it seems clear from the account of the obit of Bogo's servant, John de Worteley, that it was in the church of that priory that his body lay.² The wardrobe account shows that a cloth of gold was presented to the church of the Holy Trinity 'pro Iohanne de Worteleg' mortuo'.

ROBES AND TEXTILES. The items concerned with the purchase and livery order. The identification of Bogo was subsequently supplied by a Mr. Wakeman in the same volume of the Journal at pp. 372, 373.

of the robes, the primary business of the wardrobe, naturally fill a large space in the accounts. These items deserve close study, but comment here must be restricted to the less known materials and to the light which the documents throw upon their nature. Cameline, for instance, is a material as to whose quality and nature the excellent Drapers' Dictionary leaves us in doubt. Here it appears as Camelinum de Triple, Tripoli probably, and is used for lining worsted garments for Bogo de Clare and Sir Edmund Mortimer. This supports the view that it was of North African origin and of inferior quality. Cangium is a material as to which the same authority is silent, but according to Du Cange it was a cloth of a dark colour shot with another of lighter hue like taffeta. Bogo has a tunic of it, and a cushion of two cloths of rayed or striped 'cangy' are made for his use. It was bought 'of the merchants', meaning probably those of Lucca or Florence. Sindon is another doubtful material, the term appearing to vary in significance at different periods. Considerable quantities of it of various shades of red and green were bought from the Lucchese merchants in 1285 and 1286, its price being between 10*d.* and 1*s.* 2*d.* the ounce or 6*s.* 8*d.* and 13*s.* 4*d.* the piece. It was used for the covering of mattresses and pillows, for gardecorsata (waist-coats or corsets), and for the binding of Bogo's robes. It was probably a silken material, the price of silk thread being much the same per ounce.

Of furs large quantities are bought. The commonest mentioned is budge (boga) or lambskin, of which the capes were made. Master Robert the doctor has a squirrel fur to wear with his blue gown and a cape of 'strell', a fur I do not know, but perhaps identical with 'stralling' which occurs in Bishop Swinfield's accounts. Bogo's two knights are provided with four furs which are probably minever.

The accounts of the making of the cushions and mattresses and the materials used for their upper (directum) and under (indirectum) sides, for their borders and fringes, are extraordinarily minute. For the stitching of one of them a house had to be hired, and the master who superintended the work had 40*s.* for his fee.

A number of carpets and banquaria (rugs for the seats or benches) are bought. One carpet with shields of the arms of the king of England costs 20*s.*, and four, semée with white luces, 26*s.* each. They were never of course meant for the floors, for the covering of which the household accounts provide rushes.

FOOD AND DRINK. We need not linger over these items, which are mainly the matter of the household accounts and have already been dealt with to some extent by Mr. Hartshorne. Attention, however, may be directed to the great variety of the spices which are a special province of the wardrobe. They were mostly bought of Thomas the Roman (le Romayn). Included under this head is sugar which costs from 8*d.* to 10*d.* the pound, a special sort made of roses and violets being purchased for the Ascension-day feast, as are six pomegranates at 1s. each and a gourd of ginger at 20s. The frail (fraellum), the measure by which figs and raisins are bought, is usually stated by the authorities to have been 70 pounds, but its price (4s. 6d.), with the fruit at 1½d. the pound, reduces it here to 36 pounds. For storing the spices boxes, sacks, or sheepskin pouches are bought.

JEWELS AND PLATE. Gold rings ranging in price from 2s. to 2s. 6d. are bought in considerable quantity for presents. A gold brooch given to Sir William de Carleton's clerk costs 6s. 8d. Purchases of cups of silver or silver-gilt, also usually intended for presents, are frequent. There are a few items of repairs to old plate. 'In augmentation of two old dishes of the weight of four pounds, £2 5s. 10d.; repairing the same with gold shields and enamel, £1.' 'For making anew four silver dishes and four saucers out of four old dishes and five saucers, 8s. 6d.' Leather cases (cophini) are bought for the silver dishes, spoons, and cups.

HORSES AND HORSE-FURNITURE. The number of horses in the stables with the cost of their fodder and of farriery appears towards the end of each day's items in the household accounts, sometimes under the general heading 'mare-scalcia'. The purchase of horses is recorded in the wardrobe accounts.

Some of the items concerned with the provision of saddles and horse-furniture are of interest. Historically the most interesting are the gilt saddle bought for Bogo's use in 1286 and the twelve other saddles for his fellows with the arms of Gaston de Béarn. In addition to the price paid for Bogo's saddle, which was 15s., the embroidering of it with the said arms cost 20s. The erstwhile implacable opponent of English rule in Gascony had been brought to final surrender in 1275,¹ but one wonders as to his precise relations with the de Clares in 1286. Possibly they had long found a bond of mutual sympathy in their common opposition to the great Simon de Montfort. At all events, so long before as the year 1269, Bogo's brother Thomas appears directly associated with Gaston de Béarn amongst the guarantors of Prince Edward for the fulfilment of a covenant with the king of France.²

GAMES AND AMUSEMENTS. Hunting is the only form of sport in which we find Bogo de Clare taking part, and that on two occasions only, namely at Blechingley in Surrey in 1284 or early in 1285³ and at Llangibby in September 1285.⁴ References to indoor amusements, other than those connected with the pleasures of the table, are also few. 3s. was handed out to the lord on Whit-Sunday 1285 wherewith to play at dice,⁵ and a set of chessmen (familia ad scaccarium) sent to Thatcham in the same year cost 2*d.*¹ Of professional entertainers we have the actors or mummers (ystriones). Martinot, who with his brother is so described and received a gift from Bogo of 13*s.* 4*d.*, may perhaps be identified with Martinet of Gascony, the fool (fatuus), who in 1300 played before Prince Edward.² John Morice, the earl of Cornwall's actor, was paid 6*s.* 8*d.* on 25th May 1285.³ Included with these entertainers may be William Pilk, the jester (ioculator) of Salisbury, to whom 2*s.* was given on the preceding day, and the jester with a horse, who received the like amount on 29th June following.⁴ Adam the harper (cytharista) appears in the accounts as a regular member of the household, and there are occasional payments to the harpers of Robert de Littlebury and Edmund Mortimer. Of any literary tastes that Bogo de Clare may have had we have not a single indication in these documents.

TRAVEL. The itinerary of Bogo de Clare and his household during the period that they cover must be learnt mainly from the household accounts, and so far as he dealt with these has already been set out by Mr. Hartshorne. Some of the expenses incident to travel are also to be gathered from the wardrobe accounts. Of these, those which relate to foreign voyages are interesting. Thus John de Posewyk gets £4 for his expenses to the Roman curia, and Jacobel, who was perhaps his attendant on the occasion, £2 6*s.* 8*d.* For his expenses to France Thomas de Cardolio was given £3 upon his departure on 7th July 1285, and we are told that he spent 4*s.* more which was paid him on his return. A payment of 36*s.* to Cocabretoun (or Cok Bretoun as spelt in a preceding entry) for the passage of Roland, archdeacon of Dol, and Thomas Fox at Dover was presumably in respect of the channel-crossing.

BUSINESS AFFAIRS. I have shown how, following royal practice, Bogo de Clare's wardrobe had become his chief, if not sole, business department or secretariat. A chief interest of its extant accounts is therefore the light they throw on the methods by which so notorious a pluralist dealt with the multitude of duties which the possession of so many scattered benefices might be expected to lay upon him. The known opinion of his ecclesiastical contemporaries was that those duties were usually neglected altogether. Such censure seems to have been more particularly deserved in the case of his more northern livings.⁵ We hear little of them in the accounts. Bogo's household, when its lord is not entertaining his friends over long periods in London, or off to Wales and the Marches on business with his sovereign or in respect to his own important property there, or else to Leicester on a pressing legal quest, spends its time migrating between Thatcham in Berkshire and Rotherfield and Oving in Sussex,¹ and only goes so far north as Melton Mowbray to take possession of the newly acquired church there. So far as the spiritual needs of more distant parishes are concerned they can be deputed to the vicars from whom Bogo receives the yearly farms, subject to occasional visitation from the clerks attached to his personal establishment. Items of the expenses incurred by his clerical staff in visiting his various parishes 'pro negotiis domini expediendis' are numerous in the wardrobe accounts, and the largeness of this staff shows clearly the vicarious methods by which he was usually content to administer his more spiritual duties.

How far the payments into his wardrobe represent the total revenues of Bogo de Clare during the periods which the accounts cover cannot unfortunately be determined, in view of the incomplete condition of these accounts and from the fact that we cannot reconstruct from them the state of his finances for the whole of any single year. Romeyn in 1291 estimated the yearly value of Bogo's revenues in the province of York alone to be nearly £1,300, though Mr. Thompson thinks this an over-estimate.² The total receipts shown in the three wardrobe accounts for the periods which they respectively cover are: from 14th June 1284 to 2nd March 1285, £592 3s. 4d.; from 12th March to 29th September 1285, £672 10s. 7d.; and from 25th December 1285 to 2nd June 1286, £564 2s. 0d. Amongst the various items it is possible to identify the farms of many of the benefices of which we know him to have been possessed. With the exception of Doncaster his revenues from the northern province are not distinguished, but they and those of others of his known benefices are doubtless represented in the many sums, whose source is not stated, paid in by different members of his household doubtless acting as his travelling collectors. There are also many payments made by the Mozzi, a Florentine firm of merchants whose transactions with the crown about this period are illustrated in Mr. E. A. Bond's paper on the Italian merchants in Archaeologia.³ Some or all of these latter may of course have been loans, and we have one item of the payment to them of 80 marks. On the other hand, the well-known use made of such Italian firms in this country by the papal see to collect its revenues very probably made them convenient agents to pluralists such as Bogo to collect their revenues from distant benefices. From these and other considerations I am inclined to think that the payments into Bogo's wardrobe, at all events in Reyny's time, represent a very substantial portion, if not the whole, of his total revenues.

Among the evils mentioned in the legate Ottobuono's constitution of 1268 as likely to be engendered by pluralism is the fostering of lawsuits and hatreds. The amount of legal business in which Bogo de Clare's accounts show him to have been involved suggests that such fears were well founded. Not only have we allusions in them to definite actions pending in the lay and spiritual courts; occasional fees are paid for writs in the King's Chancery¹ and for copies of instruments obtained from the clerks of the Arches in some cause apparently relating to the chapel of Rhymney.² Above all there are many indications of the methods whereby Bogo found it expedient to stand well in the eyes of the judges and officials of the various courts. These went considerably beyond the costly banquets which furnish such interesting details in the household accounts. Ralph de Hengham, the celebrated chief justice of the King's Bench, John de Vallibus, William de Saham, and John de Mettingham, who were amongst the judges to try the Melton Mowbray case, of which shortly, and Robert de Littlebury, who is with little doubt to be identified with the then clerk of the rolls, appear in the wardrobe accounts amongst the recipients of Bogo's many gifts.³ Other recipients are Henry the clerk of the writs at the Exchequer, the dean of the Arches and the dean's commissary, the official of the Court of Chancery, James the usher of the Exchequer, and Bocking and Bradefeld, two of the 'narratores', the embryo counsel of that day, in the same court.

The most interesting of the legal proceedings, upon which Bogo de Clare's accounts throw a valuable sidelight as to his methods, are those concerned with the dispute for the church of Melton Mowbray which took place at the assizes at Leicester in the Michaelmas term of 1284. Here the official records in the shape of the Assize Rolls are available to supplement the indirect allusions to the proceedings in the accounts, and in the result we learn of yet another rectory acquired by Bogo with which he does not seem to have been previously credited.

It is unfortunate that the apparently haphazard arrangement of the entries, mostly undated, in Horkeley's wardrobe account makes their correct chronological sequence largely a matter of conjecture. Happily, however, in the present instance the external evidence of the Assize Rolls and the dated entries in Reyny's concurrent household account enable us to set out the events with some approach to their probable order of date.

What we learn from the wardrobe account is that at some date, which we may presume to be a little prior to Michaelmas 1284, Bogo de Clare was much interested in some dealings with Sir Roger de Mowbray. £5 was paid to his steward and a similar sum lent to Sir Roger himself. Two of Bogo's clerks, Melkesham and Burnham, were dispatched to the north with two hired horses for the business of Sir Roger. The nature of this business we may guess from an undated item in one of Reynty's accounts :

¶liberate domino Rogero de Moubray pro expensis suis uersus Regem ad recognoscendam conuencionem inter dominum Bogonem et ipsum factam per manus Magistri Willelmi de Burnham precepto domini. x. li'.¹

Meanwhile other preparations were being made in London where some transaction, presumably of a money nature, was being carried out with the merchants of the earl of Lincoln, and four 'pugillatores' were being maintained for eight days at Bogo's expense 'pro negotiis domini . R. de Montbray'. We have a further reference to an account of the expenses of Horkeley and others of Bogo's household, and of the 'pugillatores', the 'narratores', and many other superveners from Thursday after the octave of Michaelmas and for seventeen days following. Unfortunately this is not extant, and we can only presume that these expenses were incurred at Leicester where the assizes were then in progress.

The 'pugillator' or 'pugilis' was the professional champion in the judicial trial by combat, and it is interesting to add Bogo de Clare to those of the clergy amongst whom this primitive form of trial in pleas upon writs of right was greatly favoured.² The well-known contemporary instance of a professional champion maintained by the church is that of Thomas de Bruges, who was originally engaged in 1276 by Bishop Cantelupe of Hereford to oppose the champion of Bogo de Clare's brother, the earl of Gloucester, and whose yearly retaining fee we find Cantelupe's successor, Swinfield, still paying five years after the date of our present accounts.³ It is curious, therefore, to find Thomas de Bruges's name occurring in the accounts of the earl's brother, and to be able to connect him with the business of the Leicester assizes. There is an item of a payment to him of 20s. in London 'pro sua poroffra contra priorem de Lewes', and a further, but incomplete, entry 'for his stay in London making his harness'. He next receives 20s. for his expenses to Leicester, and afterwards 13s. 4d. to go to Oxford.

Turning to the records of these 1284 Leicester assizes, we find that Roger de Mowbray had much business thereat, chiefly concerned with claims to land in Melton Mowbray. But the two most important cases to us are those against the prior of Lewes, one for the advowson of the church and the other respecting the ownership of eight virgates of land in Melton Mowbray. The story of the prior of Lewes's loss of an advowson through the failure of his champion in a trial by battle has already appeared in print.¹ It was no doubt his expected resort in the present instance to such a method of deciding the issue that induced Bogo's special preparations. As it happened, however, in the case of the advowson the prior elected to put himself upon the great assize and the jury found against him.² But in the other case, that of the eight virgates, the prior did offer to defend his right by the body of his free man, William son of John de Sutton. Roger de Mowbray responded by opposing the body of his free man, Roger son of Robert, and a duel was ordered between the two champions, a day for which was given on the morrow of St. Vincent (23rd January) at Warwick.³

The names of the champions as given in the roll are perhaps fictitious. Thomas de Bruges does not appear there as one of the combatants, though he was certainly at Leicester about the time.⁴ Nor is it clear why it was necessary to have four of these professional gentlemen on the same side, unless a strong reserve was usual in such cases. Following up the case on the roll of the Warwick assizes of Hilary term, 1285, we find the attorneys of both parties essoined for non-appearance and the duel adjourned to the following term at Westminster.⁵ The case seems to have continued some time in an undecided state, for as late as Trinity term, 1286, there is a record on the De Banco roll of an assize whether eight virgates of land in Melton Mowbray were the free alms of the church of which Bogo de Clare was then parson or a lay fee of the prior of Lewes.⁶

This last connexion of Bogo with the church of Melton Mowbray would prove clearly his interest on Roger de Mowbray's behalf in the proceedings at Leicester, even if our own records had left us in any doubt in the matter. From the sequel to the proceedings at the Leicester assizes as related in Reyny's account from 29th October to 5th December 1284,⁷ it is permissible to infer that the agreement between Roger de Mowbray and Bogo already mentioned had reference to the latter's presentation to the church of Melton should Roger be successful in his suit against the prior. A rider added to the judgment in the advowson case expressly directs Roger to have his writ to the bishop to admit a fitting parson to the church on his (Roger's) presentation. It could hardly be expected that the parson in view, being as we know Bogo de Clare, could be actually resident there, so a vicar had to be instituted. This was obviously a matter that Bogo would depute to one or other of his personal staff of clerks. Accordingly, after the assizes on 12th October, he himself set out from Leicester on his own business with the king in Wales, and we cannot be certain that he was even back at Melton with his household when it was keeping Christmas there that year. In the meantime, however, Reyny was dispatched to Melton which he reached on 4th November and made some inquisition upon the church which he took to the bishop of Lincoln. A few days later he again visited the bishop with reference to the institution of the church and appears to have returned to Melton on 2nd December, when he met Mowbray's bailiffs, the chaplain, and others. The next day, which was Sunday, the party was joined by the dean of Framland, many of the parish, and 'eight servants keeping the gates of the church on account of the clerk and chaplain, who were guarding the possession of the vicarage of the same church in the same church, so as not to permit anyone to take food or other necessaries to the aforesaid chaplain or his clerk'. On Monday the officials of the bishop were present, and on the next day, 5th December, Reyny left Melton for London, there to report to Bogo what had been done about the institution of the church.¹

BOGO DE CLARE'S ESTABLISHMENT. It is impossible in the absence of any such lists of stipendia as occur in Bishop Swinfield's accounts to prove an exact estimate of the numbers which composed Bogo de Clare's establishment. That it was a large one, both in lay and clerical members, is evident from the lists of liveries and other items in the accounts. At the head of the lay folk come his two knights, Sir Hugh de Turbervill and Sir William de Montereveli. There are numerous references to his esquires but we have no clear statement as to their actual number. The daily wages of the grooms (garciones) and the pages appear in the household accounts and their respective numbers seem to vary from day to day. Thirteen, however, of the former class and two of the latter would appear from the shoeing items in Reyny's last wardrobe account to constitute the normal staff.

The most important members of the establishment so far as the accounts are concerned are those who collect their lord's revenues and expend his moneys, undertake his numerous missions, and appear to take it in turns to supervise the affairs of his household. Many of these are clerks, designated with the title dominus. Others, such as Robert the cook and Robert the doctor (medicus), are termed magister.

That Bogo treated his servants well may be inferred from the costly obit with which he was ready to do honour to one of them. That they understood their master well and were ready to serve him in accordance with what they felt would be his own wishes is proved by the incident recorded in the Parliament Roll of 1290. The story, which is well known, records how an unfortunate emissary of the Archbishop of Canterbury with a citation to serve upon Bogo de Clare went to his house in the city of London and in the master's absence was met by some of the household, who, to translate the record, 'by force and against his will made him eat the letters and the appended seals, imprisoned him there, beat and maltreated him'. The incident seems to have caused no little stir, for besides the injury to the unhappy emissary, which was assessed at £20, there were the damages for contempt of Holy Church and the lord the king, which were reckoned at £1,000.¹ Bogo by ingenious pleading was able to obtain a remand, and the case was not finally settled until the Hilary term of 1292-3, when in the King's Bench at Nottingham he was discharged of the fact and of suasion thereto and allowed to go quit.²

Such are some of the principal points suggested by the study of these accounts. Only those which belong exclusively to the wardrobe are here printed. They must, however, be considered in relation to those of the household, which are perhaps too lengthy and too repetitive in their nature to need printing in full. But the so-called wardrobe items on the dorse of these latter are of much variety and illustrate many points of social and economic interest. They include, moreover, a number of small details which throw further light on Bogo de Clare's character and personal habits.³ In them for instance are recorded all his donations in the cause of charity. It must be confessed that those who would seek here for some set-off against the obvious neglect of his spiritual duties are doomed to disappointment. The sums given in alms and oblations are usually trifling and in strong contrast with those he was willing to expend on his own personal interests and pleasures. They seem merely perfunctory and lack the spontaneous appearance of many of those acts of charity which charm us in the accounts of such a man as Bishop Swinfield. It is sadly illuminating to find at the end of a long list of expenses on such a day as 3rd July 1285, when the food and drink bill of a great banquet comes to as much as £8 6s. 0*d.*, with additional payments of 6s. 8*d.* to a wafer-maker (the king's by the way), 4s. to another, and 5s. to a harper, 'on the same day in alms, 1*d.*', the solitary item under this head.¹ When all is said I fear that Bogo de Clare must remain a most striking example at the end of the thirteenth century of a particular type of the clergy, whose worldliness and avarice were to bring their whole order into discredit, and to excite in the succeeding century the bitter invective of a Langland and the good-humoured sarcasm of a Chaucer.

In conclusion I wish to express my deep obligation to Mr. A. Hamilton Thompson, F.S.A., for much valuable assistance in the preparation of the foregoing account of Bogo de Clare; and to my colleague Mr. Hilary Jenkinson, F.S.A., who has expended many hours with me in the examination of the proof sheets of the following documents.
