

room for difference in point of view. One must sometimes take exception to the author's critical position, so far as this is indicated. He seems at times to go further with the radical school of critics than is consistent with the thorough acceptance of the supernatural in the Bible. Again, in applying the teachings of the book of Exodus to modern social conditions, the preacher sometimes gets far away from his base. He is much more vigorous in his application than accurate in his exegesis. Thus, for example, in making the sacrifices of the Mosaic law teach the duty of self-sacrifice for the social good, our author is far off the mark. There are other examples of such forcing of Scripture. In the main, however, the book is suggestive, stimulative to thought, and helpful in hints as to method and spirit in dealing with the problems of the present.

E. C. DARGAN.

The Orbit of Life. Studies in Human Experience.

By Wm. T. Herridge, D.D. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, Toronto.

This little volume of 147 pages contains a series of brief addresses or sermons in which many vital themes are discussed. Among the titles of the chapters are the following: Prospective, Appreciation, Love's Thoroughfare, Self Mastery, The Triumph of Joy, The Two Bodies: an Easter Study. The author is gifted with a clear and flowing style. He has warm sympathy with human life in its struggles, and he exhibits much insight into the spiritual conditions which attend our moral progress. Many will find inspiration and profit in the perusal of these papers.
