

some difficulty (p. 77f) in getting Paul's point of view, but he proceeds to interpret Paul correctly as giving "a symbolic meaning" to baptism as a "picture" of the experience of "a new life" which he has begun. He admits also that baptism was immersion, though he notes the modern sprinkling (besprengen). On the whole it is a very useful handbook indeed and one who wishes to have a summary of present-day German thinking will find it helpful. The author's style is flowing and interesting.

Expositions of Holy Scripture. Fifth (and last) series. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. New York. 1910. A. C. Armstrong and Sons. Eight volumes. $10.00 net.

With these eight noble volumes the great task of Alexander Maclaren is concluded. It is a source of great joy to know that he was allowed to live long enough to complete so gigantic an undertaking. It is not, of course, a commentary in the strict sense of the term, since he does not comment on every verse nor always on every chapter. But the great passages come in for luminous exposition. It is done with all of Maclaren's charm and spiritual insight. The scholarship is thorough, but is subordinate always to the purpose of expository discourse. I have had occasion to make careful use of a large part of the sermons on Second Corinthians and have found them exceedingly helpful. The eight volumes cover the following portions of the New Testament: I and II Corinthians, Ephesians, Galatians, Philippians, I and II Thessalonians, I and II Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Hebrews, the Catholic Epistles, Revelation. Happy the preacher who can have them all.
