

gives you no preface, for he speaks not for himself. The apostle of the heart calls to the message of the heart of God and shows the way of response. W. O. CARVER.

VII. MISSIONS.

Religions of Mission Fields; As Viewed by Protestant Missionaries.

Published by the Student Volunteer Movement. 1905. Pp. X, 300, 12mo, cloth 50 cents, paper 35 cents.

There are ten chapters dealing with all organized religions with which Protestant missionaries have to do, including Judaism and Roman Catholicism. In each instance there is a good bibliography of both popular and scientific works. The authors have been chosen with an eye to experience and capacity to make use of it, and a certain uniformity of treatment, with personal diversity has been secured by the editing committee. For a practical, clear, working view of the religions as they are today no single small volume is equal to this one. One questions many of the generalizations of Dr. Richards concerning the Religion of the African and may not be in perfect accord with all conclusions of other writers. Yet the work is remarkably well done and is cast in a form easy to get. It is just the thing for study classes and for private reading. W. O. CARVER.

Mohammed and the Rise of Islam.

By D. S. Margoliouth. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. 1905. Pp. XXVI and 481. Numerous illustrations.

This volume is one of the Heroes of the Nations series which these publishers are bringing out. Professor Margoliouth is known as a competent scholar and his selection for this volume is fully justified by the outcome. Full use is made of all the sources and of all the works of preceding writers. The author is cautious of conclusions where the evidence is conflicting or insufficient and where the interpretations differ, but he is not more timid