

that it is spiritual, ethical, free, and indestructible; then the variety, unity and witnessing power of the various agencies for its dissemination are considered; and finally the call for such dissemination is set forth in the needs of men for this eternal life, their capacity for receiving it, and in the value put upon it by those who possess it. It is a fresh, stimulating and helpful sermon.

E. C. DARGAN.

Literary Illustrations of the Bible.

Edited by James Moffatt, D. D., Ecclesiastes. The Gospel of St. Mark. New York, A. C. Armstrong & Son. 40 cents each, net.

These little volumes contain what the title sets forth—a number of quotations from great writers, in illustration of texts from the Bible books named. There is of course difference of value and appositeness in the quotations. This sort of thing must be largely a matter of individual taste; but those who like to see how well a good reader can gather and arrange such a series of quotations for preaching and teaching purposes will find help from the series. Any who may find it accordant with their principles and tastes to have this sort of work done—and well done, in the main—ready to their hands may find another and dubious sort of aid in these selections. The little books are beautifully printed and are pleasant to eye and mind.

E. C. DARGAN.

III. MISSIONARY.

Students and the Modern Missionary Crusade.

Addresses delivered before the Fifth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, Nashville, Tenn., February 28th—March 4, 1906. New York. Student Movement for Foreign Missions. 1906. XVI. 713 pp. Price $1.50.

This report, for the most part, complete and exact, covers the general meetings and all sectional meetings and constitutes a contribution indispensable to every missionary library that seeks to be.

The remarkable success of this movement is due to a masterful leadership that nowhere becomes more evident