

righteousness in the heart of the excited and indignant psalmists.

Dr. Hulley appends the outline of ten class studies in the Psalms. Under his capable leadership such studies would be very stimulating and informing.

Studies in the Book of Job.

By Francis N. Peloubet, D.D. Pages, 115, octavo, $1.00 net. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1906.

Dr. Peloubet as the author of annual select Notes on the International Lessons has won a large place for himself in popular Bible study. He has prepared this admirable manual on Job for advanced classes in the Sunday-school, for Bible classes in high schools and colleges, for evening services, and for individual use. He agrees with Carlyle that the Book of Job is "one of the grandest things ever written with pen." While not neglecting the critical questions concerning Job, the author has placed the main emphasis on "the book as it is now, on the inspiring, invigorating, transforming, comforting teachings found therein. It is not the history of the violin we here want, but the music." The author's aim is "to awaken fresh interest in the book itself; to open the doors to its greatness and glory as literature; to open windows to its blessed and comforting truths; to bring its consolations to the perplexed and suffering; to apply its character-forming elements and power." Right well does Dr. Peloubet succeed in his noble aim.

The book contains a full bibliography and complete indexes. Great skill is manifest in the paragraphing, analytical outlines, use of different fonts of type, diagrams, etc. Dr. Peloubet has read widely in the world's best literature, and he lays everything under tribute to illustrate the problem of the Book of Job, and yet nothing is lugged in for the sake of display.

Dr. Peloubet accepts the unity of the Book of Job, and places the book at an early date, probably at some period in the age of the Judges. "There is no great poem extant of which it can be shown that it was composed by several authors at different periods." One of the best features of our author's discussion is the skill with which he relates each division of the Book of Job to the great problem of human suffering. Be wise, ye pastors and teachers, and get this book.

Hand-Book of Prophecy.

By James Stacy, D.D. Pages, 149, octavo, 60 cents net. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. 1906.

The author of this treatise makes a special study of the predictions in Daniel and the Revelation. He arrives at the conclusion that the Millennium cannot be very far off. He ventures to name 2,000 A. D. as the date. In the second part of the book he attacks vigorously the premillennial theory of our Lord's Second Coming. The book is supplied with charts and chronological tables.
