

THE LIFE OF JOHN WILKINSON, The Jewish Missionary.

By his youngest son, Samuel Hinds Wilkinson. London: Morgan & Scott, Ltd., 1908. Pages xi—355. Price 6 shillings.

Every lover of heroic sacrifice, every student of Jewish missions, every lover of Israel, every lover of a noble life, will want to know John Wilkinson, the great London missionary to the Jews. The Mildmay Mission to the Jews has long been known as one of the truly important movements of this sort. No fitter biographer could be imagined than this son, who is at once the affectionate son, the efficient successor, and the powerful extender of the father's work.

The biography is made up of narrative, letters and extracts from letters and diaries. The subject is presented to view, rather than discussed. This means that we have a vital biography, the sort you sit up with and that stirs the blood and quickens the impulse. It will serve a great purpose, too, to the student of work among the Jews.

The son is himself a great personality, admirable and lovable for his own sake and for his widely extended work.

A number of illustrations add to the value of the book.

MISSIONS STRIKING HOME. A Group of Addresses on a Phase of the Missionary Enterprise.

By Joseph Ernest McAfee. New York: The Fleming H. Revell Co., 1908. Pages 127.

Here are seven addresses that are fresh, original, vigorous, thrilling. The author has succeeded in most unusual degree in bringing into the printed page the style, the inspiration, the charm of spoken address; and that, too, of a speaker who must be most engaging and fascinating. Moreover, the lectures constitute a vigorous and timely message to American Christians. The subjects are "The Call of the Homeland," "The Spiritual Conquest of the West," "The Latest in the Immigration Business," "The Gospel for an Age of Prosperity," "The Home Principle in Missions," "The Reflex of Missions," "The Amer-
