

author in this book, then, is just that, to see "steadily and whole" both human life and the process of moral culture that leads to it and makes possible at once the happiest and most helpful living. It is especially intended to guide parents and teachers in their delicate duties, but is an effort, also, at a complete and inclusive view of the problem for all who are interested in moral culture. Whatever the author may lack, he is always sincere, vigorous and suggestive, believes that the great truths of life are simple and universal, is singularly clear in seeing and lucid in stating them, and is always superior to the temptation to be sensational. Religious Education.—Mainly from the Psychological Standpoint,

By Prof. Albert E. Garvie, D.D. The Sunday School Union, 57 and 59 Ludgate Hill, London, E. C., England. Price, one shilling net. Pages 94.

Dr. Garvie has packed into these four lectures (all but one of the British Chautauqua) a vast amount of thought, and thought that is worth while. Some will not agree with all that he says about sin and the conversion of children, but the book is full of suggestions and helpfulness. It is a timely discussion for Great Britain, but most of the questions treated are of a fundamental nature. Dr. Garvie has a keen mind and he writes pungently and clearly. He wisely sees that the minister of the future must know how to teach children and to train teachers of children. He will be interested to know that our Seminary has recently established a chair of Sunday School Pedagogy.

The book will help all who take genuine interest in the religious training of children. A. T. ROBERTSON.
