The Story of the American Merchant Marine. By John R. Spears, Author of "Story of the New England Whalers". Illustrated. The Macmillan Co., New York. 1910. Price $1.50 net.

It is one of the surprises of American history how the once mighty Merchant Marine of the United States has dwindled to such insignificant proportions. The coast-wise trade is very large. But Britain carries our trade to Europe and Japan to Asia. Perhaps the Panama Canal may cause a revival of interest in the subject. The present volume tells the whole story in a most intelligent and interesting fashion. The pictures of the various types of ships are most suggestive.

A. T. ROBERTSON.

The Number of Man. The Climax of Civilization. By Philip Mauro, Counsellor-at-law. Author of "The World and Its God", "Man's Day", "Life In the World", etc. New York. 1909. Fleming H. Revell Co. Pages 359. Price $1.25 net.

What one will think of this work depends largely upon one's view of the plan and purpose of God's grace in the gospel in this age. Those who think of the redemptive forces as race wide and destined to uplift the whole of humanity will find little of comfort in the contentions of this work and will reject alike its presumptions, its interpretations of current history and its predictions concerning the future. There are those who look upon the current of divine grace as a narrow channel cutting its way through the unfriendly and unsystematic counterflow of the tide of this world. This little stream of salvation will finally flow out into the glory of full salvation while the most of humanity goes on its way in rebellious pride and sin to ruin in the fierce judgment of our righteous God. Those who hold this view will find here a bulwark of strong support.

Any one will find here a highly suggestive and searching study of the main currents of human thought and tendencies in our times. Scientific theory, philosophical speculation, political developments, commercial progress and religious ideas and movements; all are viewed and all found to tend to one