Mapineq – Mapping inequalities through the life course– is a three-year project (2022-2025) that studies the trends and drivers of intergenerational, educational, labour market, and health inequalities over the life course during the last decades. The research is run by a consortium of eight partners: University of Turku, University of Groningen, National Distance Education University, WZB Berlin Social Science Center, Stockholm University, Tallinn University, Population Europe, and University of Oxford

Executive summary

The Mapineq project focuses on the trends and drivers of intergenerational, educational, labour market and health inequalities across the life course. A central aim of economic, social and health policy interventions is to diminish inequalities. To do so, we require an understanding of how inequalities may accumulate and how they are influenced by the structural and institutional context as well as policy implementation at the local, regional and national level.

The Mapineq Link is a rich open-access online interactive database containing information on geospatially linked structural and institutional policies. The database can be accessed through an API (Application Programming Interface) in order to link these data to the various research projects within and beyond Mapineq project.

Mapineq Link improves existing databases by: (1) harmonising and blending information from multiple data sources, (2) including geospatial indicators at the neighbourhood, city and/or regional level, (3) including geo-coded data to link to individual data; (4) providing better and broader subject coverage; (5) using objective information as opposed to subjective opinions from experts; (6) using diverse data sources from the bottom-up; (7) containing structural, socioeconomic, policy and environmental data; and, (8) providing an API for researchers, programmers, data scientists and web developers to actively and easily use the data.

Phase 1 of Mapineq Link contains ten thematic modules that can be used for standalone analyses or linked to individual-level data, with data covering structural and policy indicators for: (1) family, (2) education, (3) labour market and employment, (4) retirement and pension, (5) earnings and income, (6) migration and language, (7) housing, (8) health, (9) deprivation, poverty, crime; and, (10) demographics.

Mapineq Link will come with an online interactive dashboard and an API which allows: (1) researchers to query the database, (2) programmers and data scientists to retrieve data for specific geolocations or bespoke regions; (3) external web developers to easily integrate Mapineq data into their own interactive web applications; and (4) other users (e.g. the public) to view data and visualizations of a wide range of indicators. The Mapineq Link team is dedicated to FAIR principles to make our innovations Findable, Accessible, Interoperable, and Reusable.

1. Introduction

The Mapineq project focuses on the trends and drivers of intergenerational, educational, labour market and health inequalities across the life course, a core area of social, economic and policy research. Life course domains include those spanning early childhood, parenting, childcare and family, transition to adulthood, education, labour market, occupational mobility to retirement. These life course events and domains are, however, experienced differently by individuals depending on the context they live or grew up in, which motivates the exploration of life course differences from a spatial perspective. While differences in experiences across the life course can relate to variation in individual and family traits, they are also shaped by local, regional, national and supranational opportunity structures and influenced by local spatial as well as cross-regional and cross-national variations in resources, institutions and norms across. Put simply, the emergence and shaping of life course inequalities between individuals and groups will always be contingent on social and physical context, which motivates our pursuit of a rich spatial database on life course inequalities.

A central aim of economic, social and health policy interventions is to diminish inequalities. In order to do so, we require an understanding of how inequalities may accumulate and how they are influenced by institutional context and policy implementation at the local, regional and national level. Policies differ in their nature, are implemented at various geographic levels, and can operate both to aggravate or diminish inequalities. This motivates a focus on spatial variation in policies as the first component of our spatial life course inequalities database. Evaluating policies and their effects is an immense challenge. While policies can have very direct and tangible effects on individuals, such as cash transfers, their ultimate effects are shaped by complex interactions with local institutions and norms that can end up affecting individuals over their life courses. One can easily see policies influencing another sphere of life either immediately or having spillover effects at later stages of the life course. For instance, education policies aimed at children might impact human capital in the labour market at later stages. Policies also tend to impact groups differently (e.g., by region, sex, ethnicity, educational level). This complex interplay between differential effects on social groups, life domains and differential opportunities of inequalities make it exceedingly difficult to design and implement policies that target inequalities effectively. Furthermore, policies that are effective in one local region or country may turn out to vary considerably across other locations. Providing easily accessible data on national, regional and local policies that is linkable to life-course data in a joint spatial framework gives the research and policy community an important tool for better understanding these complexities.

This report introduces Phase 1 of the Mapineq Link geospatial social and economic policy database, a rich open-access database with API access that researchers can use to link a multitude of geo-linked policies to their own research projects. The database will later be extended to Phase 2 of the Mapineq Link geospatial environment database in autumn 2023, extending the data to cover environmental aspects (e.g., buildings, road networks, housing, pollution, flood risk, light, temperature) and to be visualised and useable through an open-access web interface.

1.1. Research problem

Although rich comparative social and economic policy and structural indicator databases exist, they face several challenges that Mapineq Link aims to overcome by doing the following:

- (1) harmonising and blending multiple sources, moving away from previous fragmented databases where information is spread across different locations and online databases, forcing researchers to access multiple unharmonized sources (e.g., national, OECD, Eurostat, UN);
- (2) including fine-grained geospatial indicators at the neighbourhood, city and/or regional level, incorporating more extensive variation and moving beyond previous databases that often include information at the unit of analysis of the national level only;
- (3) providing geo-coded data to link to individual data, given that previous data have not often been geo-coded, meaning that individuals cannot be linked to their immediate ecosystem or distance from key predictors (e.g., distance to green space, school, pharmacy). As the database is developed, users who have access to geolocated individual-level data can use locations (e.g., latitude and longitude coordinates), to query our database to retrieve spatially-linked data for those locations across multiple data sources;
- (4) expanding coverage of topics, given that many previous projects focussed on economic, family, housing and health but rarely combined all topics. We provide broader and deeper spectrum of detailed policies and ability to link to demographic and structural aspects disaggregated by key inequality stratifiers of age, sex, region, migrant status, education or labour market activity;
- (5) including objective information from multiple sources, moving beyond previous valuable projects that drew on information from expert interviewers (e.g., Multilinks);
- (6) adding both top-down but also bottom-up diverse generated data from population registries, surveys and other types of emerging data (e.g., social media). Previous data has often relied on indicators derived from local, regional and national statistical offices or supranational organisations, thus missing the opportunity to generate indicators from the bottom-up data sources;
- (7) inclusion of structural, socioeconomic, policy and data on the natural and built-up environments. In Phase 2 of the Mapineq Link project, we will include multiple new types of natural and built environment data, which is often not included in these types of databases.
- (8) developing an API (Application Programming Interface) in an interactive online dashboard to allow researchers to query the online dashboard and database, programmers and data scientists to retrieve bespoke geospatial data; and, external web developers to integrate Mapineq Link data to their own web applications.

In the first instance our database will focus on the European context and associated countries. As data becomes available and the database evolves over time, we may expand to other regions of the world.

1.2. The Life Course framework

The life course framework is a useful heuristic for the Mapineq Link database and general economic, social and health research in this area given that it examines the interrelation between individuals and their institutional and environmental context over the lifespan. In this report we highlight socioeconomic factors, adopting Elder's (1974) approach to focus on how social and economic processes, such as the family, employment, education and health domains of individual's lives are structured over their lifespan. The life course is a culmination of multiple life events that refer to significant incidents such as migration, entering or exiting the labour force, a relationship or becoming a parent. These events comprise life course domains that are interdependent and interact with one another. Life course events have changed over time in relation to their type (e.g., cohabitation instead of marriage), timing, duration and sequencing.

Life course researchers adopt a multilevel and multidimensional theoretical model that acknowledges that individuals shape their lives, but recognizes that all stages of a person's life are intricately intertwined with each other, with the lives of others in society, and with past and future generations of their families. Lives can be seen as taking shape in the context of households, networks, neighbourhoods, employers as well as historical, cultural, social, economic and other factors (Buchmann 1989; Mayer 1986). Contextual indicators are seen as playing a filtering role in the way that they impact individual opportunities, constraints and decision-making (Mayer 1989; Elder Jr. and Liker 1982; Mills and Blossfeld 2005).

2. Mapineq Link geospatial database

The Mapineq Link geospatial database goes beyond being a data download portal by providing a cloud-based toolbox for spatial queries of the innovative combinations of data that will ultimately be included in the database. This provides capability for place-based spatial linkages among traditional surveys, registries, and census-based data, and also spatial linkages with non-traditional digital and remote sensing datasets that will be added to the database in later phases of the project. Mapineq Link also provides functionality for cloud-based calculation of zonal statistics within specific geographies (e.g., NUTS regions), and distances to points-of-interest such as schools or clinics. For Phase 1 of database development, we focused on building and deploying the database infrastructure in the cloud and populating the database with socio-economic policy indicators and measures at national and subnational levels.

We prioritised indicators from OECD (2022; 2023a-e) and Eurostat (2023a; 2023b) for the initial build of the Mapineq database aiming for direct compatibility with these important data sources and to resolve any data harmonisation challenges, particularly with differences in geo-coding. Both data providers have adopted SDMX standards (Statistical Data and Metadata eXchange; sdmx.org) which allowed us to access data in bulk that were relevant to the Mapineq Link geospatial database along with detailed metadata in a machine-readable and standardised format. The Mapineq database reuses these formats for data and metadata with some modifications for harmonisation, documentation and spatial linkage purposes.

2.1. Geographic units of analysis

When it comes to data on policies, the geographical unit of analysis matters not only in terms of the implementation of those policies but also the data collection regarding their efficacy. In terms of the former, policies can be implemented and relevant at the national, regional or local level. In terms of the latter, data on the policies themselves or on outcomes influenced by them can be collected only at the national but also at regional and fine-grained geo-coded levels. For instance, federal government spending, national educational policies (e.g. required years of schooling), or national labour market policies (e.g. minimum wages), tend to be measured at the national level. If, however, regional or local authorities allocate spending or educational policies are handled by region or province/state, the relevant geographic unit of variables might change. Furthermore, many variables that are influenced by national-level policies, such as the unemployment rate or country of birth of residents may be more relevant to measure at a fine-grained lower geographic unit. The Mapineq Link geospatial database accommodates data queries across these geographic levels and subnational variations. Furthermore, it facilitates various widely used administrative boundaries datasets such as European NUTS regions, International Territorial Levels used by OECD and the United Kingdom, and GADM (globally-harmonised administrative boundaries). What is essential is the harmonisation of subnational information not only between different definitions of administrative regions, but also within these definitions (e.g., when it comes to inconsistencies over time). For Phase I, we focused on NUTS regions and OECD International Territorial Levels. As new data becomes available, it will remain a living database, where we will continue to include additional geographic unit frameworks as database development progresses.

2.1.1. NUTS Divisions

The Nomenclature of Territorial Units for Statistics (NUTS) is a geocode standard, which was adopted in 2003 by the European Union. The Mapineq Link database includes the NUTS polygon geometries and geocodes all EuroStat data to these boundaries. These boundaries can also be used to produce zonal statistics summarising other spatial layers that will be incorporated into the database in later phases (e.g. phase II incorporates environmental spatial layers).

A hierarchy of three NUTS levels (i.e. NUTS1, NUTS2 and NUTS3) was established by Eurostat. The subdivisions do mostly, but not necessarily, correspond to administrative divisions within the countries. Below the three NUTS levels are local administrative units (LAUs). The current NUTS classification, valid from 1 January 2021, lists 92 regions at NUTS 1, 242 regions at NUTS 2, 1166 regions at NUTS 3 level, and 99,151 local administrative units (LAUs). The NUTS framework provides spatial units of analysis that allow for a comparative spatial setup of European countries and that captures existing administrative boundaries. The wide usage of this system in EU, national and regional data collection makes this the most prevalent spatial classification system for data collected thus far.

2.1.2. OECD International Territorial Levels

The territorial levels used by the OECD roughly correspond to NUTS regions, but the spatial extent includes OECD countries outside of the European Union. There are also differences in Germany, United Kingdom, France, Greece, The Netherlands, Belgium, and Iceland where the hierarchy of TL levels do not map directly to NUTS levels. The polygon geometries for OECD territorial levels are not publicly available, so we have a request pending through project collaborators at OECD to access these boundaries for use in the Mapineq database. Currently, the database maps OECD TL geocodes to spatial geometries of NUTS regions. For non-European countries where NUTS regions are not available, the Mapineq database may need to link TL region codes to GADM boundaries.

2.1.3. GADM Database of Global Administrative Areas

GADM administrative boundaries (gadm.org) are openly available for free with global coverage and general alignment with NUTS regions in the European Union. The Mapineq database may need to rely on GADM boundaries for any countries included that are outside of the European Union, including some OECD countries. While Mapineq focuses on the EUR, it is important to have spatial geometries defining the boundaries of non-European OECD geographies so that these national and subnational indicators can be spatially linked to other datasets in the database and to facilitate cross-country comparisons outside of Europe. The descriptions of the types of data are illustrative rather than exhaustive and does not include all variables listed (see Appendix and Dashboard for full details).

2.2. Socio-economic policy indicators and structural measures

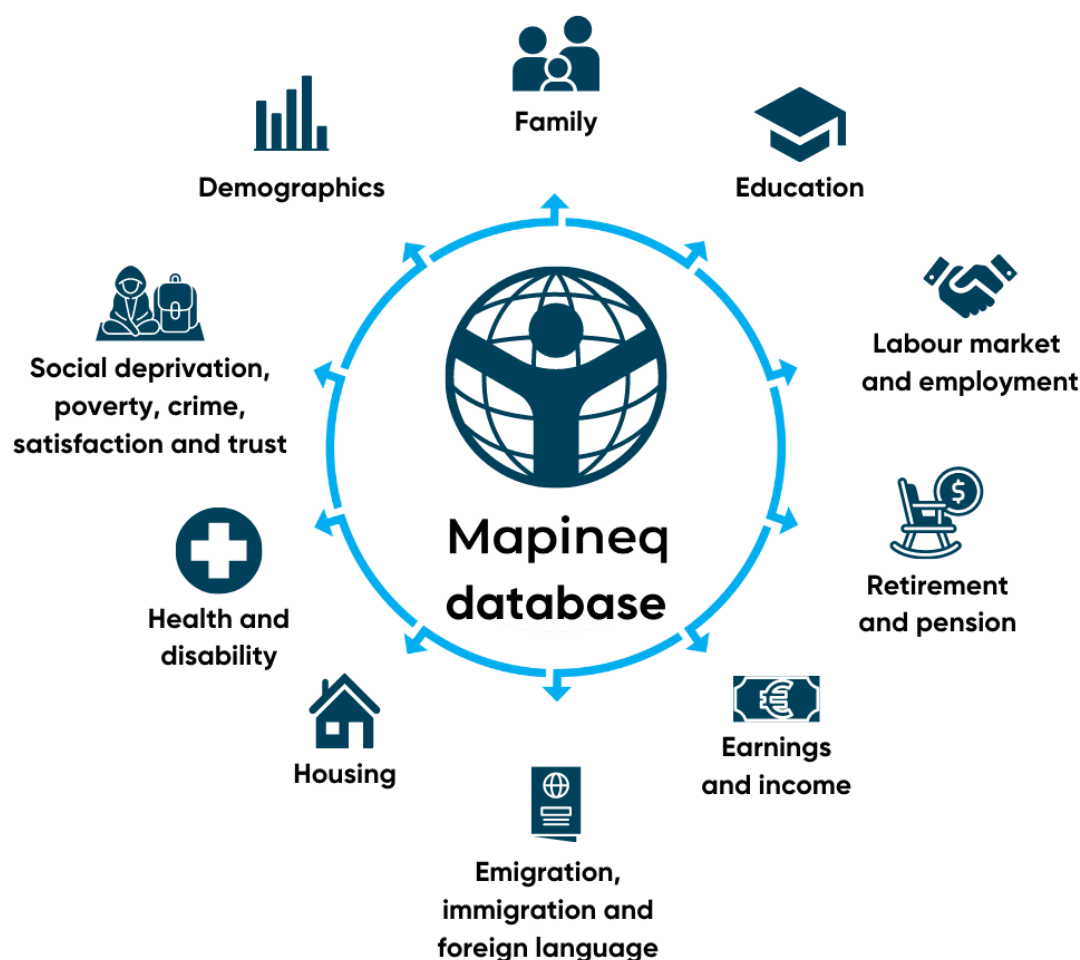

The Mapineq Link geospatial database includes key socio-economic factors known to impact and relate to life course educational, partnership, employment, health and other related transitions. For this phase of Mapineq Link, we focus on several key domains, which we will continue to develop and expand over time. A conceptual overview is provided in Figure 1, with the detailed list of current variables for each area included in the Appendix of this document.

2.2.1. Family

Family policies (Table 1) are key in shaping the interdependence between family, education and employment careers and have direct consequences for fertility, and the opportunity for labour market and educational participation. They also regulate the degree of work-life conflict, types of living arrangements, and ability to have children and combine work and life. This includes overall public expenditures as well as reimbursement and length of maternity and paternity leave. It also includes inadvertent policies that impact families such as the neutrality of the tax and benefit system and differences in net transfers to single versus dual-earner households. Indicators of the labour market position of families can also be key in understanding multiple societal outcomes such as gender gaps in employment rates, wage gaps, maternal employment rates, proportion of population with childcare responsibilities and the employment rates of mothers by the age of the children. It also relates to housing and family structure, with indicators that measure the proportion of children by age in sole-parent households where the parent is employed.

2.2.2. Education

Educational levels, structure and systems (Table 2) shape multiple aspects of the life course in various ways. There are, for instance, considerable differences in public expenditures on different levels of early, primary, secondary, post-secondary and vocational education. Other differences include the maximum number of school years attended by all, stratification or tracking, the value of certificates, standardisation or link of education with entry into the labour market (Shavit & Müller, 1998). Countries with unstratified educational systems, where a larger proportion of students attend broader education until age 18, include countries such as Sweden, post-1960s Italy, post-1970s Spain, post-1990s Estonia, United States and Canada. Stratified systems such as Germany, the Netherlands and Hungary (Allmendinger 1989), stream youth early into educational tracks at a younger age. The manner that educational systems combine theoretical learning with vocational or practical work experience also has direct implications for early labour market transitions. Educational expansion, in the form of increased participation of certain groups such as women or those from different socioeconomic backgrounds has also evolved over time and within regions of different nations.

Measures include the population by educational level, including disaggregated categories (e.g., by sex, age, citizenship, country of birth), level of early leavers and key youth categories related to participation and social exclusion (e.g., NEET rates). Enrolment rates by age are included in addition to PISA scores and mean average scores by sex (e.g., reading, mathematics, science), field of study, books and reading culture. Education is likewise linked to later employment levels.

2.2.3. Labour market and employment

Employment systems, industrial and employment relations are also key aspects that pattern the employment and the life course. There are often key country-specific differences such as the work councils, collective bargaining systems, strength of unions versus employer organisations, labour legislation or other types of administrative regulations. This produces different variations in occupational structures and industries, patterns labour and capital negotiations, strike frequencies, wages, job security and work hours (Streeck 1987).

Levels of labour market activity, employment, unemployment, type and timing of work hours, precarity and flexibility are central aspects in labour market research. The Mapineq database contains a rich battery of labour market and employment structural level and policy indicators (Table 6.3). Activity and employment levels are included and disaggregated in multiple ways (e.g., region, sex, age, educational attainment, job tenure, migrant status). Work hours and reason for part- or full-time work is likewise included (e.g. care, sickness). Researchers can also access disaggregated data on multiple types of employment relations and variants including: self-employment, temporary workers, second jobs, non-standard hours and days, long working and overtime hours and precarious employment. Considerable information is available on unemployment by disaggregated factors, but also transitions in and out of unemployment and employment. Regional disparities in (un)employment can be examined at the NUTS2 and 3 levels. There is also considerable depth and novel measures in the data including indicators related to commuting time, household composition, types of employment-related discrimination and job vacancy rates.

2.2.4. Retirement and pension

Retirement and pensions are pivotal to our understanding of the life course, particularly in the context of ageing populations. Multiple countries are engaging in discussions and policy reconsiderations in relation to state pension ages and levels. This module (see Table 4) provides indicators such as types of pension funds, current (and effective) retirement ages by sex and labour market entry, pension entitlements and gross pension replacement rates (by sex), tax treatment and net pension replacement rates. Other measures include expected years in retirement, early retirement, reasons for receiving a pension and those who would have wished to remain in employment and at-risk-poverty rates of those over 65.

2.2.5. Earnings and income

A large module in the Mapineq Link database includes multiple and varied measurements of earnings and income (Table 5). Researchers will be able to access a rich array of varied and disaggregated measures such as disposable income of households by geospatial levels (e.g., NUTS 2, 3), income quintile share ratios for disposable income (e.g., by sex, age), Gini coefficient of equivalised disposable income, mean and median income (e.g., by age, sex, household type, activity status, education, tenure, before social transfers). We also include measures of gender gaps in employment, pay gaps and differences in at-risk-of-poverty and pension gap. Labour costs are likewise integrated.

Multiple earnings measures include mean housing earnings by NUTS1 regions, average annual gross earnings (e.g., by sex, occupation, region), tax rates and mean hourly/monthly/annual earnings disaggregated along various lines (e.g., sex, age, occupation, economic activity, collective pay agreement, contract, length of service).

2.2.6. Emigration, immigration and foreign language

Emigration, immigration and foreign language prevalence are key indicators for many European and international research topics and policy discussions. The Mapineq database has harnessed a variety of indicators (Table 6). This module includes structural measures such as acquisition of citizenship by multiple factors (e.g., by age, sex, former citizenship, country of next usual residence, level of human development previous residence). Levels of immigration are also available including population-level estimates by citizenship and country of birth (also of parents) groups. Researchers can also examine authorisation types such as for seasonal work, study or longer-term mobility and reasons for migration. Considerable information is provided on the labour market participation of migrants including methods and obstacles to find a job, activity status, unemployment and self-declared over-qualified employees by migrant status. Skill and language acquisition is also available. Cross-national mobility can also be examined with measures on employment rates of EU/EFTA population who usually reside in another EU/EFTA country (by age, sex, country of birth).

A detailed grouping of variables also contains information on migration and asylum, including whether migrants had their applications processed under accelerated procedures (by age, sex, citizenship, monthly), first time asylum application by citizenship, final decisions in appeal or review, resettled persons (by age, sex, citizenship, resettlement framework), decisions and beneficiaries granting temporary protection, unaccompanied minor asylum applications (and protection), decisions or asylum applications withdrawn, disaggregated 'Dublin' requests by submitting and receiving country, third country nationals illegally present or refused entry, permits issued by reason (e.g. family, education), long-term residence permits issued. Information is also included on the population with Ukrainian citizenship (by age, NUTS3, marital status) given the recent invasion and displacement. Finally, a detailed battery of questions covered proficiency in and use of foreign languages.

2.2.7. Housing

Housing data is pivotal to understanding how housing impacts individuals, families and communities. Key factors include housing policy and conditions, quality of housing which given multiple recessions and housing market downturns, is a key factor in the transition to adulthood but also throughout the life course.

The Mapineq database (Table 7) includes core housing measures such as general government expenditures on housing and community amenities, and households with access to secure tenure. There are also key structural measures including rooms per person, level of overcrowding (e.g., by age, sex, poverty status, household type, tenure, income), average size of dwelling and portion of youth (18+) living with parents. Conversely, with an ageing population in many countries, we also include measures of people living in under-occupied dwellings. Tenure status, degree of urbanisation, ability to access transport are likewise pivotal for quality of life. With economic recessions, changing mortgage rates in some countries and expensive urban areas, housing cost overburden, financial burden, and share of disposable income on housing are additional important measures.

The access and availability of quality of housing stock is also unequal and we therefore include key measures such as housing deprivation, population living with a leaking roof, damp walls, floor or foundation or rot, having neither bath nor shower, indoor flushing toilet, dark or surrounding levels of noise, vandalism or crime. Increases in volatile weather and cold and hot temperatures also means that we include measurements on dwellings unable to keep comfortably cool during summer or warm in the winter.

2.2.8. Health and disability

Health indicators are crucial to understand and forecast the future health and prevention needs of the population. The measures included in the Mapineq database (Table 8) include both individual measures and risks but also those that allow researchers to understand and forecast disease burdens in cities, regions, and populations. The level of health care expenditure in countries such as the share of GDP, expenditures by function or by health care providers summarise information of health system priorities and often performance. The level that citizens need to pay on out-of-pocket expenditure on healthcare, government/compulsory health insurance can also signal inequalities in access.

Due to different demographic population compositions and epidemiological profiles, different countries also possess different levels of financial burdens of healthcare (Dowd et al. 2020). It is therefore important to have both supply and demand measures. We therefore include key supply measures such as number of physicians, doctors or dentists, health personnel and graduates, health workforce migration, available beds or unmet needs in hospitals (e.g., at NUTS2 regions). We also include various hospital measures such as hospital discharges by diagnosis (at NUTS2 regions, day cases by sex), hospital days, average length of stay, surgical operations and procedures performed in the hospital. Our database also includes a detailed battery of variables on disability by various disaggregated factors (e.g., sex, age, education, region, occupation, type of disability) but also unmet need and those with longstanding health issues.

Lifestyle factors are essential to understanding health profiles and we therefore include frequency and levels of hazardous alcohol consumption, BMI (by multiple factors such as age, sex, education, citizenship, income, urbanisation), level of population with a chronic disease, smoking, consumption of fruit and vegetables, daily physical activity, personal care and use of (non)prescribed medications. We also include information on proactive screening such as for breast cancer, cervical smears, depression and cardiovascular disease.

2.2.9. Social deprivation, poverty, crime, satisfaction, trust

Measures of social deprivation, poverty but also related measures of crime, satisfaction, level community cohesion, social exclusion and trust provide a more nuanced picture of an individual and geospatial social and economic context. Our Mapineq Link database (Table 9) provides multidimensional indicators in this topic area. A central theme measures poverty, often at lower regional (e.g., NUTS2) levels including at-risk-of-poverty, severe material deprivation, relative poverty after social transfers and persons living in households with low work intensity. Measures also include an indication of the inability to afford basic needs such as those for children at school, a meal with protein, a one week annual holiday, get together with friends or family, personal care, public transport or furniture. We also include in-work at-risk-of-poverty rates (e.g., by work hours, citizenship, country of birth) and persistence of poverty. Information on the inability to face unexpected financial expenses, arrears (mortgage, rent, utility bills), economic strain and children at risk are also included.

Another dimension examines the support network, community cohesion and levels of trust and civic engagement. To this end we include civic engagement, voter turnout, ratings of life satisfaction and trust, having a network or someone to rely on in case of need, being happy in the last 4 weeks, participation in cultural, sports or family and friends activities, frequency of contact and communication via social media and voluntary activities.

Crime is another essential dimension to understand an individual's context. We therefore include key indicators such as crimes recorded by police (at NUTS3 region), homicides, recorded offences by category, capacity of police, prison capacity and prison population. Finally, we include measures on violence against women and harassment. This includes violence by any perpetrator, domestic or intimate partner, non-partner and sexual harassment at work by type of perpetrator (by age, sex, type).

2.2.10. Demographics

The demographic composition of a population is the fabric that makes up multiple aspects ranging from health profiles and responses, labour market pressures, pension, education and infrastructure needs. Our Mapineq Link demographics module (Table 10) contains several key demographic measures. We provide multiple measures of population estimates and measures by age, sex, education, marital status and by regional levels. Population density and sex ratios are other key measures, also taken to the lower regional levels.

Household composition is included by sex, age group, size, age group of children, labour market activity status, citizenship and other factors. A detailed fertility section includes standard measures such as total fertility rate, live births and fertility indicators (e.g., at NUTS2/3, mother's age), birth weight and abortions. We also include measures of marriages (age, country of birth, mean age) and divorces.

Another central aspect of this module is mortality. Here we include key measures such as life expectancy (e.g., at birth by sex, NUTS2, marital status), excess mortality, infant mortality and late foetal deaths. We also have detailed information of deaths (e.g., by NUTS2, age, sex, country of birth, education, citizenship), by week. There is likewise detailed information on the cases of death (also by NUTS2 region), peri-, fetal and neonatal mortality and treatable and preventable causes of mortality. We give special attention to deaths at the NUTS2 region due to cancer, ischaemic heart disease, accidents, transport accidents, suicide, pneumonia, chronic liver disease, diabetes, homicide and drug dependence.

2.3. Interactive online dashboard and Application Programming Interface (API)

The Mapineq Link online dashboard and API serves three primary roles:

1. To serve as the intermediary for researchers to use the Mapineq web application(s) to query the database with user-defined parameters;
2. For statistical programmers and data scientists to retrieve data for project-specific locations or bespoke regions directly from within their data analysis environments in R, Python, or other programming languages;
3. For external web developers to easily integrate Mapineq data into their own interactive web applications.

The API pre-processes requests for data, queries the database, and formats the results into an easy-to-use format. It will perform quality checks on requests and results, communicating informative error messages back to the user where necessary and pointing them to relevant documentation to resolve the issue.

In Phase 1 of the Mapineq Link database development, we developed the core infrastructure for the API using the Python Flask package and Nginx web server deployed in a Docker container for interoperability across operating systems and cloud computing platforms. The API is not yet an effective tool for querying the database, but this functionality will be developed in Phase 2.

2.4. FAIR software development

The Mapineq Link team is dedicated to FAIR principles to make our innovations Findable, Accessible, Interoperable, and Reusable (go-fair.org). The Mapineq Link database is powered by a PostgreSQL relational database server (postgresql.org) with a PostGIS extension to support geospatial functionality (postgis.net). We deployed this software using Docker containers (docker.com) to ensure compatibility across operating systems and cloud providers. The API is built using the Python Flask package and Nginx web server. We chose this stack of free and open-source software because it not only provides a powerful geospatial toolbox and scalable data dashboard with broad interoperability, but it also maximises reusability of our innovations for other projects globally. We are hosting our code in a GitHub repository that will be released openly and published with a globally unique and persistent digital object identifier so that the source code is findable in perpetuity. The code will be openly available with a GNU GPL licence (<https://www.gnu.org/licenses/gpl-3.0.en.html>) which allows modifying and redistributing the source code. We deployed the Mapineq database onto a Paris-based server on Amazon Web Services which provides cloud-based computing infrastructure with scalable performance globally, but it is important to note that the source code is designed to be compatible with any cloud computing provider and/or local deployment on a desktop computer.

3. Next steps

The Mapineq Link geospatial database is the foundation for interactive online tools that the public will use to explore the Mapineq database and submit queries for their own user-defined locations. In the next phases of the project, we will grow the database by continuing to integrate data from a rich variety of sources, and we will integrate inequality indicators and other results generated across Mapineq work packages.

We designed two pathways to access the database: 1) through an application programming interface (API) most suitable for statistical programmers and web developers, and 2) through interactive web applications that provide user-friendly access for the public. Database access through the API and web application will be free and open to the public with no requirements to create an account or request access.

3.1. Application Programming Interface (API)

Our next steps in API Development for Phase 2 will focus on developing API “endpoints” for various types of database queries that we want to support. Each endpoint will be designed to support specific types of database queries and data formats. For example, an endpoint may be designed to accept geospatial coordinates defining user-defined research locations and return selected indicators or summary statistics for those locations. Other endpoints may be designed to simply return data for data visualisations in the Mapineq Link web application customised based on selections of data and locations by the user navigating the Mapineq Link web application.

3.2. Interactive online dashboard web application

The interactive web application for the Mapineq Link geospatial database will bring the API and database to life with a simple and intuitive user interface and interactive global map that can zoom to sub-national scales. This will allow users to explore inequality indicators across life course stages and the relationships among social, policy, economic, environmental, and other indicators from a rich variety of sources. By visually exploring indicators on the map and graphically analysing relationships among variables, the Mapineq Link web application will encourage users to generate hypotheses and extract data from the database to test those hypotheses in combination with their own local data sets.

We have already developed the basic scaffolding for this web application based on our unique expertise gained from previous experiences developing similar interactive maps for data visualisation and communication with a broad public audience (e.g. Fig. 2).

Figure 2. The Digital Gender Gaps website (digitalgendergaps.org) serves as the template for the Mapineq Link web application

Note: The Digital Gender Gaps website allows users to explore gaps between female and male internet access for countries globally on a monthly basis estimated using real-time digital trace data. Adapted from: Digital Gender Gaps web application, v1.0.0, by D. R. Leasure et al., 2023. doi:10.5281/zenodo.7897491

3.3. High-resolution environmental variables

Throughout the project, we will continue to add new data into the database to increase its value and broaden its scope. Phase 2 of database development will focus on broadly-defined “environmental” data. This would allow users to examine interactions between individuals and their physical environments, as well as how these influence and shape (inequalities in) certain outcomes. We will explore a wide variety of data quantifying the natural and built-up environments. This may include climate and weather, air and light pollution (e.g. Fig. 3), water quality, building and neighbourhood characteristics, housing prices, transportation, green spaces, and points-of-interest like clinics, schools, groceries, industry, and commercial districts.

4. Conclusions

This report introduced Phase 1 of the ambitious Mapineq Link database project. This initial phase offers multiple contributions to the existing research landscape by providing a 'one stop shop' where researchers, policy makers, programmers, data scientists and web developers can use and extract data under FAIR principles.

Our improvements to existing comparable databases include harmonisation and combination of multiple data sources, first starting with Eurostat and OECD data; more fine-grained geospatial indicators; an ability to link geospatial data to individual data; broader subject coverage; bottom-up (i.e., inputting data from surveys, population registers) and top-down (i.e., national and supranational) use of diverse data sources.

We note that this first phase of the project is still work in progress and as such, there are several limitations and ongoing extensions of our work. The first of these is our current limited use of initial proxy data sources. Although already rich, the Mapineq Link version 1.0 only includes measures from Eurostat and OECD and in future versions and development, we will expand to different sources. Secondly, our measurements still need further refinement and harmonisation given that there are in some cases identical and repeated measures of the same variables both within but also across the current data sources. Thirdly, we include only demographic structural measures and social and economic policy and health measures in this initial Phase 1 of the project. Phase 2 will extend the database considerably by including aspects related to the built environment and climate such as temperature, noise, pollution, and other indicators. Fourthly, as we develop the resource further we more overtly identify which variables are measured at various geospatial levels. Given the European focus of the Mapineq project, a fifth shortcoming is that we focus on Europe but in the future may opt to expand our geographical scope further. A sixth limitation and extension is to include not only a geospatial element but to also expand to a temporal element to examine structural, institutional and environmental changes across time. Hereby, we will also make sure to focus on harmonising inconsistencies in geospatial information across time. Finally, as we develop and refine the online dashboard and API further, we will build additional interactive functionality to explore and search the data in a user-friendly manner.

Appendix A. List of measures included in Mapineq Link version 1.0

Table 1. Family

Source	Indicator	Description
OECD
	C1	FAMILY POLICIES
	C1_1	Public expenditure on families, per child (0- to 14-year-olds), USD 2015 PPP
	C1_2	Percentage point difference between before- and after-tax and transfer child relative income poverty rates
	C1_3	Guaranteed minimum income for a jobless couple with two children, as a % of median disposable income
	C1_4	Total length of paid maternity and parental leave available to mothers, in weeks
	C1_5	Total length of paid paternity and parental leave reserved for fathers in weeks
	FAM11	Public social spending on family benefits
	FAM11A	Total public social expenditure on families as a % of GDP
	FAM11B	Public social expenditure on cash benefits for families as a % of GDP
	FAM11C	Public social expenditure on services and in-kind benefits for families as a % of GDP
	FAM11D	Public social expenditure on tax breaks for families as a % of GDP
	FAM12	Paid parental leave
	FAM12A	Length of paid maternity, parental and home care leave available to mothers in weeks
	FAM12B	Length of paid paternity and parental leave reserved for fathers in weeks
	FAM13	Proportion (%) of children aged 0-2 enrolled in formal childcare and pre-school
	FAM14	Proportion (%) of children aged 3-5 enrolled in pre-primary education or primary school
	FAM15	Neutrality of tax and benefit system
	FAM15A	Proportional difference in net transfers to government between single-earner and equal dual-earner couple households: household earnings at 133% of average earnings
	FAM15B	Proportional difference in net transfers to government between single-earner and equal dual-earner couple households: household earnings at 200% of average earnings
	EMP16	Expected number of years in retirement, by sex
	EMP18	Length of maternity leave, parental leave and paid father-specific leave
	EMP18_MAT	Length of maternity leave
	EMP18_PAR	Length of parental leave with job protection available to mothers
	EMP18_PAID	Total length of paid maternity, parental and home care leave
	EMP18_PAT	Length of paid father-specific leave
	ILC_CAINDFORMAL	Children in formal childcare or education by age group and duration - % over the population of each age group - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAINDFORMAL$DV_1301	Children in formal childcare or education by age group and duration - % over the population of each age group - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAINDOTHER	Other types of childcare by age group and duration - % over the population of each age group - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAMDFORG0	Median number of weekly hours of formal care by age group - children with at least 1 hour of formal care - EU-SILC survey

	ILC_CAMDOTHG0	Median number of weekly hours of other types of care by age group - children with at least one hour of other types of care - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAMNFORALL	Average number of weekly hours of formal care by age group - children with or without formal care - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAMNFORG0	Average number of weekly hours of formal care by age group - children with at least 1 hour of formal care - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAMNOTHALL	Average number of weekly hours of other types of care by age group - children with or without other types of care - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAMNOTHG0	Average number of weekly hours of other types of care by age group - children with at least one hour of other types of care - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CAPARENTS	Children cared only by their parents by age group - % over the population of each age group - EU-SILC survey
	ILC_CHMD01	Child specific material deprivation rate by age (children aged less than 16 years)
	ILC_CHMD02	Child specific material deprivation rate by household composition (children aged less than 16 years)
	ILC_CHMD03	Child specific material deprivation rate by educational attainment level of their parents (children aged less than 16 years)
	ILC_CHMD04	Mean number of deprivation items among the children deprived (children aged less than 16 years)
	LFSO_18COBS	Population not using childcare services by main reason
	LFSO_18CRESCB	Population by care responsibilities and country of birth
	LFSO_18CRESDU	Population by care responsibilities and degree of urbanisation
	LFSO_18CRESED	Population by care responsibilities and educational attainment level
	LFSO_18CRESHC	Population by care responsibilities and household composition
	LFSO_18CRESLs	Population by care responsibilities and labour status
	LFSO_18CRESNAT	Population by care responsibilities and citizenship
