Familysearch came up with: Ernest William Dent born 20 April 1857 in Calcutta; baptised there May 1857. Parents Henry William Dent and wife "Emma Lavina". Familysearch didn't have a death for this boy; on the other hand he definitely didn't attend Haileybury School like Vyvyan did so I rather assume he died in Shanghai before getting to that age. Certainly no mention of him again in records of H W Dent or Vyvyan.

Entering China's Service: Robert Hart's Journals 1854-63 Volume 1 by Robert Hart, Katherine F Bruner and J K Fairbank 1986; p355 fn59 Dent & Co are described by the editors as having "an extensive business in opium" via Calcutta, Bombay and London, with fleets along the Chinese coast and "receiving stations" off the treaty ports. H W Dent himself is described as "of Dent & Co, a bitter rival of Jardine Matheson and Co".

Shantung Road Cemetery Shanghai 1846-68 by E S Elliston 1946 has Dents listed in it; Emma Sabine but perhaps her son Ernest William as well.

Robert Hart and China's Early Modernization 1863-66 Volume 2 by Robert Hart, R J Smith and J K Fairbank 1991 p467 fn 94 in this volume, H W Dent is described by the editors as "a merchant consul" and the representative of Dent & Co. Dent & Co's offices were at Yangtze Road Shanghai; the firm's head office was at Queen's Road Hong Kong. (A note from Sally Davis October 2012: Robert Hart was the second inspector-general of the Chinese Maritime Customs department. He was first appointed in 1863 and finally retired in 1911.)

The China Who's Who issue of 1922 p84 entry for Vyvyan Dent: H W Dent described here as the managing partner of Dent & Co in Shanghai from 1859 and chairman of HSBC (no dates for the chairmanship, unfortunately).

Shanghai racecourse and the man named Whittal: the website www.earnshaw.com/shanghai-ed-India/tales/library/pott/pott08.htm has a link to www.talesofoldchina.com/shanghai/events.php which lists some of the early western buildings of Shanghai with a few details about the circumstances in which they were built. There were 4 different race courses. The 2nd of them was set up in 1860 when a syndicate was formed to buy 40 acres of land for horse racing and cricket. The syndicate's members were: R C Antrobus, James Whittal, Albert Heard, and Henry Dent. They in turn were soon bought out by the 3rd scheme, which was much bigger.

Sources for VYVYAN DENT

LOCATION OF THE DENT HONG

My partner and web specialist Roger Wright found it pretty easily on the web via a map called "Shanghai French Concession 1920s-1940s" exact date of which is uncertain but I'd say it's after 1929. Avenue du Roi Albert was an important road then, more important than it is now. On its corner with Route Vallon, to the south of which are the Albert Apartments, is an "*" - that is, a place of note - described as the residence of "R V Dent" (Vyvyan's son). Matching the roads up with the modern streetmap of Shanghai was a bit difficult but I think Avenue du Roi Albert is now Nanlu (ie Road) Shanxi; and Route Vallon is now Nanchang Lu (I think!)

Haileybury Register 1862-1910 ed by L S Milford. Published 1910 by Haileybury College. The entry for Vyvyan Edward John Dent is on p166; there is no entry for his elder brother Ernest William.

20th Century Impressions of Hongkong, Shanghai and other Treaty Ports of China ed Arnold Wright in London and H A Cartwright in HK and Shanghai. Lloyds Greater Britain Publishing Co Ltd 1908. I got the details of Vyvyan Dent's career, his collections of artefacts, and details of the towns he worked in from here.

Journal of the North China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society volume LXIV 1913 p221 is the first one to have V Dent of the Chinese Maritime Customs on its list of members; he'd been elected a member during 1912. Volume LX 1929 pi is the obituary of V E J Dent, described as "one of the most remarkable personalities in China in recent years". The obituary had been written by regular contributor "HC". In volume LVII p1926 p231 HC is identified as Herbert Chatley DSc of 8 Route Francis Garnier Shanghai.

More about Vyvyan's various collections of Chinese artefacts, which covered a big range of subjects: The China Journal volume 20, issue of February 1934 p117 in a section on Societies and Institutions, a few paragraphs on "Shanghai Museum (Royal Asiatic Society)" which had been opened "November 15 last" [1933]. The donations so far were listed and included the following items collected by V Dent and now owned by R Dent: "some interesting Chinese official beads and rosaries" (Sally Davis October 2012: an equivalent to a Catholic rosary is used in buddhism) and "a collection of Republican badges and souvenirs now unprocurable" had been given by R Dent to the museum as a gift. A "good collection of ancient bronze mirrors" and "some Chinese water-pipes and other interesting objects" were only on loan. Sally Davis October 2012: on the suggestion of the librarian at the Royal Asiatic Society, I emailed a contact she had in Shanghai who had been trying to find out whether any of the contents of the RAS North China branch museum had survived Mao and the Cultural Revolution. He emailed back to say that he had found nothing so far; and as he hasn't contacted me since spring 2011 I guess Vyvyan's collections have been destroyed.

Details of the two international exhibitions at which some of Vyvyan's Chinese artefacts were shown came from wikipedia; but wikipedia's information was only general and didn't mention any particular set of exhibits.

The China Who's Who issue of 1922 p84 entry for Vyvyan Dent describes him as Commissioner of Customs, retired.

For the politics of China around 1900: 1913: the World before the Great War by Charles Emmerson sums it up neatly. London: the Bodley Head 2013.

**

7 January 2014

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

Agnes, Baroness de Pallandt was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in May 1891, taking the motto 'Anael'. A note in the GD administration records describes her as "no good". The note doesn't say what it was she was no good at but she certainly doesn't seem to have even begun the reading and study that was expected of initiates, and resigned from the GD in 1893.

BEFORE WE START:

If you search for the Baroness de Pallandt on the web or in the Times between (roughly) 1909 and 1925 you're likely to come across the Baroness May de Pallandt. Originally from Canada and apparently living apart from her husband, she was pursued through the courts by the police and various firms for attempted fraud and unpaid bills. A colourful character! She must have been married to one of the van Pallandt family at some stage and, like Agnes, continued to keep the useful title after she and her husband went their separate ways.

The Golden Dawn's Baroness de Pallandt was born Agnes Alicia Margaret MacLean, in London in 1849. Her parents were Allan Thomas MacLean, who was in the British army, and his wife Agnes Lisle MacLean.

CLAN MACLEAN AND THE ISLE OF MULL

See the Clan website, at www.macleand.org, but here I'll paraphrase its pages on the emergence of the family in 14th century Scotland when the earliest important member of the clan - Lachlan Lubanach (Lachlan the Crafty) - was granted land on the Isle of Mull and later married his feudal overlord's daughter. Lachlan Lubanach lived at Castle Duart, which still exists and you can see a photograph of it at the Clan website. Agnes' father was one of the MacLeans of Pennyghael on the Isle of Mull who claimed direct descent from Lachlan Lubanach. Archibald MacLean of Pennyghael, Agnes' grandfather, married Alicia daughter of Hector MacLean of Toiren. They had seven sons and two daughters. Eldest son Alexander inherited the family estate (and married another MacLean). The younger sons all left Mull to find work, two going to London and four going into the army.

Allan Thomas MacLean, the second son, joined the army in December 1810 and fought all the way through the Peninsular War. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Couches in March 1814 but was freed and healed in time to fight at Waterloo. In the 1820s, and promoted to Captain, he went with his regiment, the 13th Light Dragoons, to India. While stationed at Bangalore in 1831 and now promoted to Major, he had a falling-out with the regiment's commanding officer, Lt-Col J F Paterson, which ended with his being court-martialed for insubordination and bringing the regiment into disrepute. At a hearing in Madras in December 1831 he was exonerated and Paterson criticised for not dealing with the matter by himself; but the incident seems to have led to MacLean returning to England and not serving abroad again. For reasons that baffle me, his career was not hampered by what happened at Bangalore (I know he was exonerated but these things do get about): he was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel in 1834; was promoted to be the colonel of the regiment in November 1860; and reached his highest military level, that of Lieutenant-General, in December 1861.

AGNES MACLEAN'S CLOSE FAMILY - RATHER A COMPLICATED ONE

Allan Thomas MacLean was born about 1805. However, like many military officers he left it late to marry. It must have been around 1844 that he married Agnes Lisle Lawrence; I haven't found details of the marriage registration on the web, so I'm assuming it took place in Scotland. This is where it gets complicated: Agnes Lisle Forlong had been married and widowed twice before. She too was Scottish, the daughter of William and Mary Maria Forlong of Wellshott Cambuslang. In 1822 she had married John Taylor, another army officer; they had three daughters but only one survived her infancy; and John Taylor had died in 1828. There's even less information around about widow Agnes Taylor's second marriage, to L Lawrence, than about her first; I haven't even been able to find out her second husband's forenames though his dates are 1802-40 and they don't seem to have had any children. Agnes Lawrence, widowed again and with one daughter, then married Allan Thomas MacLean. Although Agnes MacLean was around 40 at her third marriage, she and Allan Thomas had two children: Arthur, born around 1845; and the GD member Agnes Alicia Margaret, born 1849 and named after her mother and one of her grandmothers.

I can't find out anything more about Agnes' full brother Arthur; I think he died in his infancy. So in 1850 Allan Thomas MacLean's family consisted of his wife Agnes; her daughter Mary Maria, aged 18; and their daughter Agnes, aged 1. Although Agnes aged 2 had been born in London the family's usual base must have been Scotland, given the lack of English information on them at this time; they're not on the 1851 census in England.

In 1850 or 1851 Mary Maria Taylor married Lt-Colonel George Grenville Malet of the 3rd Bombay Light Infantry and went to live in India. However, Lt-Colonel Malet was killed in action in Persia in 1856. Mary Maria returned to England with her four children. By the day of the 1861 census Allan Thomas MacLean had moved his family to England and was living at 3 Oxford Square Paddington, off the Edgware Road. Living with him were his wife Agnes; his daughter Agnes aged 12 (the future GD member, in case you've already lost track); his step-daughter Mary Maria Malet; and his step-daughter's children, a third Agnes in the household - Agnes Malet, Margaret Malet, Bessie Malet and Allan Malet. It was no wonder that the census official got the ages of several of these children mixed up - writing down, for example, that young Agnes MacLean and Agnes Malet were the same age. At least Allan Thomas MacLean could afford to keep such a large household: he was able to pay for a governess (though not one who spoke French as her native tongue - they were the most expensive); a lady's maid; a footman (note that he'd decided against employing a butler, they were really expensive); a cook; a nursemaid for all the young children; and a housemaid.

Allan Thomas MacLean died at 3 Oxford Terrace on 9 December 1868. He had made his Will in 1867, setting up a trust fund whose trustees were to pay an annual income to his wife (now widowed for the fourth time) and his daughter. It's possible he included his step-daughter Mary Maria in these provisions though it was more usual to give daughters a financial settlement when they married (if they married) and of course Mary Maria was not his daughter, she probably inherited money from her father John Taylor (a man she could probably scarcely remember). The trustees of Allan Thomas MacLean's money were John Cumming; and Frederick Talbot Tasker, solicitor, of 47 Bedford Row.

The Rev John Cumming lived at 7 Montague Place Russell Square and was a popular choice as executor and trustee. He was minister of the Church of Scotland's church at Covent Garden which catered for Scots living in London. During his period in charge there, congregations were often several hundred-strong; and I think they must have included the MacLean and Malet families. Cumming was an indefatigable writer of letters to the Times, usually denouncing the doings of the Roman Catholic church and protestants who had converted to Catholicism. According to his wikipedia page, he believed that Judgement Day would take place at some time between 1848 and 1867; I wonder how he felt when 1868 arrived? He died in 1881 and was presumably replaced by a new executor and trustee of Allan Thomas MacLean's Will. At least, I hope a replacement was chosen, I hope Mrs MacLean and Baroness de Pallandt didn't just let the other executor and trustee of their money get on with it alone. Of Frederick Talbot Tasker much more further down this file.

When her father died Agnes Alicia Margaret MacLean was 19. As far as I can tell, she was not presented to Queen Victoria, but once the period of mourning was over, she was 'out' in every other sense. She may have already been engaged to be married when her father died. How she met him I do not know but in November 1870, Agnes MacLean married an officer in the Dutch army, Baron Karel (Charles) Frederick Henry van Pallandt.

This question of Van or De: they are equivalents in Dutch and French and are widely understood (however mistakenly) to denote nobility. Even in the marriage notice in the Times, however, Karel van Pallandt is named as 'de'. I think Agnes, and possibly her mother too, thought that Agnes' social status would not be so clear to English society if she used 'van', so she always used 'de'. They wanted there to be no ambiguity about it in England because in the society in which Agnes and her mother wished to move, this sort of thing mattered. The Dutch family history website on which I found details of the van Pallandt family makes it clear that all sons are entitled to call themselves 'baron': not just the eldest one. So on her marriage, though her husband was the third son not the eldest one, Agnes MacLean became the Baroness de Pallandt (or Baronne, which she sometimes used, also French). I've explained all this about her title, not because it's important to me, though it sheds light on her character and the nature of the society she lived in; I've explained it because it seemed so very important to her.

Agnes de Pallandt accompanied her husband back to Holland; she and her husband are not on the 1871 census and I presume they were living where Karel van Pallandt's regiment was stationed. The van Pallandts were a very distinguished family, diplomats and prominent members of the Dutch royal court. Perhaps in order to enhance Agnes' status with such in-laws, her mother had handed over some valuable silver plate which Allan Thomas MacLean had actually left to his wife for her lifetime (Agnes would only become its owner when her mother died). Agnes, however, did not have much luck with her marriages and the van Pallandts of her husband's generation did not seem to live long: so many of them died young that I wondered if they had a tendency to develop TB. Agnes' husband Karel van Pallandt died in 1872, aged 35.

There was no particular reason for Agnes to stay in the Netherlands: she had no children and she hadn't had time, really, to learn to speak the language. She came back to England, probably as soon as it was decent, though whether she returned to live with her mother and step-sister's family I don't know. I have only one sighting of Agnes during the period 1872-1879: in June 1876 she went to one of the state balls that were held at Buckingham Palace during the Season. The state balls had guest-lists running into the thousands but to receive an invitation still said quite a lot about you. One thing it said about Agnes was that she had by this time been presented at court, either to Queen Victoria or the Princess of Wales: the sort of filip to your social career that was more likely to happen to you if you could call yourself a baroness. However, when - after seven years - Agnes married again, her new husband was not on the royal social circuit. On 16 January 1879, Agnes de Pallandt married Richard Wade who was from the professional middle classes.

Richard Wade's father, Richard Blaney Wade was a very important man in the City, chairman from 1867 to 1894 of the National Provincial Bank (an ancestor of NatWest), one of its principal shareholders, and member of many banking committees. He married Adelaide Shadwell, a daughter of Sir Launcelot Shadwell one of the most senior lawyers in England. Richard senior and Adelaide were seriously wealthy but they had the large family that was typical of mid-Victorian England. Agnes' husband was their eldest child: Richard Edward Lancelot Wade, born in 1851 and thus two years younger than Agnes. By 1861 the Wades were living in Upper Seymour Street, Marylebone, and it's possible that the MacLeans had known them from Agnes' childhood.

Agnes' husband Richard Wade went to Harrow School. He didn't go to university but that was nothing unusual at the time. His brothers Robert and Cecil didn't do so either, they both went straight from school to work in the City: Robert qualified as a solicitor (which you did on the job in those days) and Cecil worked at the Stock Exchange. However, I haven't found any evidence that Richard Wade pursued any profession after leaving school and I wonder if he was in poor health.

I may be reading too much into the marriage lines I found (via Ancestry) in the records of St Mary Marylebone, but I do wonder if this second marriage didn't meet with the approval of Agnes' mother or step-sister. No one from her family was a witness; though several members of Richard Wade's family were. Did they think that - as Agnes was on the Queen's guest-lists now - she should aim higher if she wanted to marry again?

Or perhaps Agnes' family thought she should marry someone with a well-defined and regular source of income; and/or better health. As I've said, I can't find any evidence that Richard Wade ever worked. And both he and Agnes had expensive tastes which landed them in trouble with the law. Back to the silver plate which Allan Thomas MacLean had left to his wife: since Karel van Pallandt had died, it had been sitting where Agnes de Pallandt had left it, in a bank in the Netherlands. When Agnes de Pallandt married Richard Wade, her father's trustees asked her to sign a Deed of Settlement agreeing that the silver plate still belonged to her father's trustees; and this she did. (This is another thing that makes me think Agnes' marriage to Richard Wade was against her family's better judgement - when she had married her Dutch aristocrat they'd been very happy to let her have the silver; now they were anxious that everybody should understand that it wasn't hers, she was only allowed the use of it. This was not just a legal technicality - see the next paragraph.) An unexpected problem then arose: someone discovered (presumably the lawyers) that if they didn't hurry up and bring the silver plate back from the Netherlands, it would become liable to import duty. So the silver plate was taken out of the Dutch bank and brought back to London and Agnes de Pallandt persuaded her mother to let her continue to use it. Then she and her new husband needed money which they had not got; so they took the silver plate to a pawnbroker called Robert Percy Attenborough, who gave them £475 for it.

Items held in trust for you are not yours to sell or pawn; by the terms of her father's Will, Agnes de Pallandt would not be the owner of his silver plate until her mother died. No doubt when her mother and her trustees found out what Richard and Agnes had done, they had a fit; and Agnes' trustees began proceedings against the pawnbroker - who should have known better but perhaps Richard Wade and Agnes didn't tell him that they didn't own what they were pawning. The court case 'Tasker v Attenborough with Richard Wade and Mrs Wade' was heard in July 1881, and was a clear-cut one: Attenborough was ordered to return the silver plate and pay the trustees' legal costs as well as his own. If the judge censured the behaviour of Richard and Agnes Wade, the Times didn't say so in its report on the case. Perhaps the judge took pity on Agnes, though, because by this time she was a widow again.

Agnes' husband Richard Wade died on 4 February 1881. Although Agnes de Pallandt had lived virtually all her life in central London, at the time of Richard Wade's death the Wades were living at 3 Whitchurch Villas, Ararat Road Richmond. It's possible that they had moved there in a bid to improve Richard's health - Richmond is upwind of the worst of London's pollution. But on the other hand, the tale of the silver plate indicates that Agnes and Richard couldn't keep within their income, and rents were lower in the suburbs.

Agnes didn't marry again. Only a few weeks after Richard Wade's death she had already moved away from Richmond and was staying in lodgings in Jermyn Street off Piccadilly while her husband's legal affairs were sorted out. It seems that there was not much to sort out - Richard Wade left only £135. However, Agnes did not return to live with her family, so her income from her father's trust fund had not been too much compromised during her second marriage (that's what trust funds and trustees are for). Instead, she lived over the next 20 years at several addresses in the Bryanston Square district, near - but not too near - her mother and step-sister at 40 Oxford Terrace (now incorporated into Sussex Gardens).

So far, I've gained an impression of Agnes de Pallandt as a rather flighty, spoiled young woman, spending more than was covered by her income. However, she does seem to have gained more gravitas after she was widowed for the second time: she was, after all, in her 30s by then. For instance, she got involved in charity work with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, at least to the extent of helping out at a bazaar held to raise funds for the Society. And she joined the Theosophical Society, through which she met several women who were initiated into the Golden Dawn.

Agnes was a member of the Theosophical Society by 1889 and was attached to its Blavatsky Lodge so she knew Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and later Annie Besant, who dominated that lodge during the 1880s and 1890s. She will also have known other important members who attended Blavatsky Lodge's meetings regularly - the Swedish Countess Wachtmeister, and A P Sinnett and his wife Patience, for example; and she was definitely acquainted with the TS's co-founder, the American Colonel Olcott, because he mentioned her in his memoirs. William Wynne Westcott was also a member of the TS and of Blavatsky Lodge.

Around 1889, Agnes suggested that the TS should take on newspapers who made ill-informed (if not downright sneering) comments about theosophy. Agnes proposed that a group of TS members should read the newspapers on a regular basis with the intention of spotting articles hostile to theosophy and challenging them with letters and articles putting the TS's side of the argument - which I'm sure she knew was not often heard in the press. When Agnes was staying in lodging-house in Jermyn Street, one of her fellow lodgers was a newspaper owner, Ernest Major. Perhaps the idea for a campaign to counter press misinformation about theosophy came to her from remembered conversations with him. It probably also came to her because she decided that such a project would help her deal with yet another bereavement: Agnes' mother had died in January 1889.

Agnes put a request for help with her newspaper project in the June 1889 issue of the TS's journal Lucifer. Although the initial response from readers was slow, by the early 1890s she was in charge of 33 volunteers. Agnes paid for a subscription to a cuttings agency out of her own money, and made efforts to establish friendly relations with journals and individual reporters who were willing to treat theosophy favourably. For the next few years she and her volunteers worked systematically to argue theosophy's case. I wonder how Agnes felt when all her group's good work was undone by the bad publicity theosophy brought on itself in 1894-95 when a dispute arose within the TS that tore it in two. The argument came down to whether Annie Besant or the American W Q Judge should lead theosophy after the death of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. However, Judge's claims that he had received communications from Blavatsky's Mahatmas; and the refusal of the London hierarchy of the TS to accept that anyone but Blavatsky had ever heard from them or ever could, were a gift to the press. Meetings of individual lodges, to decide which side of the argument they should support, caused splits between members. Committees supporting W Q Judge's stance were set up to argue his case; and when he lost, all the American lodges broke away and set up their own organisation and many individuals in England resigned from the TS here and had nothing further to do with organised theosophy. Some lodges lost so many members that they never held any more meetings and the number of members of the TS in England never recovered. Agnes was not one of those that resigned from the TS, so she must have agreed with the attitude of the TS hierarchy in London towards W Q Judge's claims. But I haven't found any evidence that Agnes' newspaper project continued after the dispute: in the next few years theosophy in England was licking its wounds and keeping its head well down.

According to its own website, www.ts-adyar.org, when the Theosophical Society was founded, in New York in 1875, its original object had been to search for spiritual enlightenment through the occult texts of Western writers. It was only after Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott moved to India and settled in Adyar, on the outskirts of Madras, that its focus shifted to the texts and practice of Buddhism and Hinduism as sources of spiritual understanding and progress for the Soul. This process culminated in Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine, published in 1888; for at least the next decade it was the text most studied by TS members (most seem to have found it all but impenetrable). If you had joined the TS to pursue an interest in western occult texts such as the Kabbalah, you were no longer well catered for at TS meetings, and it might have been under these circumstances that Agnes decided that she would accept the offer of initiation into the Golden Dawn. She decided very quickly that the GD was not for her. Why was that? - something to do with the fact that she was "no good", perhaps? My opinion is that Agnes' education had not trained her to give sustained and concentrated attention to any difficult reading matter: and you certainly needed that if you were going to get any benefit out of being in the GD. However, Agnes may just have decided that if she belonged to both the GD and the TS she would not do either of them properly. She continued to be a committed member of the TS for some years. In 1896, she went to a soirée to meet Katherine Tingley, who had succeeded William Quan Judge as the leading theosophist in the USA; but she doesn't seem to have done any more to get involved in Mrs Tingley's 'universal brotherhood' movement.

In the years before the dispute over Judge, the TS was involved not only in spiritual enquiry but also in a number of practical schemes: a club for young working women in Bethnal Green, a creche and a children's home, and the Dorothy Restaurants, which were run by a limited company with directors who were members of the TS. On 21 June 1889 Helena Petrovna Blavatsky was a guest at the opening lunch of the second of the Dorothy Restaurants, at 448 Oxford Street; and Agnes was also invited, as a personal friend of Blavatsky, I think, as I haven't found any evidence that Agnes was an investor in the company.

In October 1892 the League of Theosophical Women, which ran the children's home, held an Oriental Bazaar in the lecture hall at TS headquarters (19 Avenue Road Regent's Park, owned by Countess Wachtmeister). Agnes was in charge of one of the stalls. Also helping out that day were Lady Eleanor Harbord, who later became a member of the Golden Dawn; and Ursula Bright. Ursula was the wife of Jacob Bright of the radical Liverpool family; he was a Liberal MP, she was a campaigner for women's rights. It must have been due to Ursula Bright's persuasive powers that Agnes found herself, a few months later, holding a meeting of the Women's Franchise League at her home.

The Women's Franchise League (WFL) had been founded in 1889 by campaigners who were mostly based in Liverpool and Manchester - Richard and Emmeline Pankhurst, for example, and Josephine Butler. Its founders felt that another group focusing on women's rights was necessary for two reasons: firstly because they felt that the existing suffrage groups were concentrating on rights for unmarried women and widows and not including the concerns of married women; and secondly because they wanted to campaign on a very specific issue - getting laws passed to make women eligible to vote in local elections. Ursula Bright became the WFL's main financial supporter. She was at the meeting Agnes organised; and so was another well-known campaigner for women's votes, Marie Corbett. Also there was a very radical woman indeed: Dr Alice Vickery was a qualified pharmacist and GP; however, she was living with a man she wasn't married to - neither of them believed in the institution of marriage - and they had two children; she also actively campaigned for birth control to be widely available. Some women would have refused to have Dr Vickery in their house; so it's to Agnes' credit that she was prepared to meet her. Although most of the people at the meeting seem to have been women, it was still customary for men to take the chair: Robert Arthur Arnold was chairman of this particular meeting. He was another radical Liberal MP whose wife (Amelia) was an active campaigner for women's rights. He became chairman of the London County Council in 1895.

The 1894 Local Government Act achieved one of the WFL's aims: it allowed single and married women who fulfilled all the other criteria, to vote in local elections. At that point, although the rest of its aims were still as far off as ever - divorce on equal terms with men; equality of inheritance rights - the WFL ceased to exist. However, this may not have impinged much on Agnes' life - I hope she used the vote the WFL had won for her; but she didn't become a vocal or active campaigner for women's rights as far as I can see.

One of the objects of women's rights campaigns was to protect the income of married women from the predations of unscrupulous husbands, and were especially important in the years before the married women's property acts. Trust funds were a way for those who could afford it to guarantee a woman an income independent from anything earned by any man she might marry; and to ensure that men couldn't get their hands on the woman's capital. A trust fund's trustees managed the capital and doled out the income; and the whole point of a trust fund was that the woman's husband should never be a trustee. A trust fund could continue to operate for many decades, with new people being appointed to replace trustees who had died; the trust fund being wound up when the woman getting the income from it died. Trust funds were often set up as part of the provisions of a man's Will, for his female relatives, and the Will's executors were also the trust fund's trustees. So Allan Thomas MacLean was making provisions for his wife and daughter in a manner typical of his time and class; and he appointed two executors and trustees typical of the type of person who were usually chosen: a vicar, and a solicitor. There was a snag to trust funds however: you had to be able to trust your trustees.

Frederick Talbot Tasker was the MacLean family solicitor for many years: he was there in 1867 when Allan Thomas MacLean made his will; he obtained probate on the Will of Agnes MacLean when she died in 1889. He was a fixture in Agnes de Pallandt's life and the lives of many others for decades, working from offices at 47 Bedford Row in Bloomsbury. However, on 28 February 1898 he and his wife disappeared and in his absence he was declared bankrupt a few weeks later. The Official Receiver's office, charged with the task of sorting out Tasker's finances, found evidence that he owed a total of £16000-17000 to various creditors; and that he had stolen and spent large sums of money he was holding on behalf of his clients, who included companies but also individuals like Agnes. By 1901 Tasker had not been seen in England for three years and one of his creditors, the London and County Bank, was in court alleging frauds by Tasker going back as far as 1882, involving properties owned by a client of Tasker's called Richard Ward. By 1897 the Bank had got so concerned about loans they had made to Tasker that they demanded that he give them more security. Tasker had paid a large sum of money into his account at the Bank; but the Bank now believed that the money paid in had not belonged to Tasker, it had belonged to Richard Ward.

I couldn't find any other legal cases brought against Frederick Talbot Tasker. There was no money at his offices; the money in his business's bank account didn't belong to him; his house was mortgaged; and no one knew where he had gone. Tasker's bank was the only creditor who could afford to go to court about the mess Tasker had left behind him when he skipped. Agnes' trust fund may have been one of those that Tasker had stolen from. It would have been very easy for him, if no trustee had been appointed when Rev John Cumming died - and I did notice that on the grant of probate on the estate of GD Agnes' mother, Agnes MacLean, Tasker was described as the "sole surviving executor" which meant he may also, by then, have been the sole trustee of her fund. Agnes was still living comfortably in 1911 so I think Frederick Talbot Tasker had not been able to make off with all her capital, she still had enough to maintain the style of life that was important to her. But I suppose that at the very least she would have had to find some new, more trustworthy, trustees for her fund: I've no idea what happens to a trust fund when its trustee flees abroad. The beneficiaries of trust funds can certainly apply to the courts to have a trust fund brought to an end. Perhaps Agnes did that, but I can't prove it because such an ordinary proceeding wouldn't be covered in the Times and legal journals where I found the details of Tasker's bankruptcy. If her trust fund was wound up in the aftermath of Tasker's disappearance, Agnes might - for the first time, at the age of 50 or so - have been left to take charge of her finances herself.

For that and perhaps other reasons, Agnes did make a big change, around 1900, opting not to continue to live in the house in Bryanston Street which had been her home for several years. On the day of the 1901 census she was taking a holiday in Dulverton in Somerset. When she came back, she moved out to the suburbs again, this time choosing the wealthy commuter-village of Surbiton, which had fast connections to Waterloo and plenty of imposing Victorian houses. Agnes moved into Morfa Lodge, 23 Adelaide Road; a 14-room house built of red brick and set in its own grounds, with some rather nice semi-circular rooms with big windows on the corner of the building. This was Agnes' final move: she lived at Morfa Lodge until she died, though she did change its name.

So far, the evidence I've found for Agnes de Pallandt's life has not given me any indication of an interest in music, but in 1906 Agnes had the overture to an opera dedicated to her by its composer. The opera was an obscure one called Sol Hatchuel, The Maid of Tangier. See the Sources section for more on it (there isn't much). From the opera's title page I think the writer of Agnes' overture was an Englishman called Bernard de Lisle - but I may be wrong. I can't find a reference to any composer of that name though I did find a couple of references to a Bernard de Lisle whose dates of birth and death seem to be about right for the piece and its date. If any reader of this biography of Agnes de Pallandt knows anything more about The Maid of Tangier, do get in touch. From the little evidence I've found, I'm not even sure whether Agnes' overture was ever performed!

In 1908, Agnes was one of many people who ended their membership of the TS once Annie Besant had been elected as president-for-life following the death of Colonel Olcott. Those who ceased to be TS members might have had one of several reasons for leaving: a dislike of Besant's leadership style, which, though energetic and committed, could be very combative; or a reluctance to follow where Besant was likely to lead the TS - she didn't make any secret of her preference for Hinduism rather than Buddhism as the path to spiritual progress. Besant's continued support of C W Leadbeater probably didn't weigh with Agnes - she was not a member of the TS's governing council and I imagine she didn't know he was being accused of mutual masturbation sessions with boys in his care. It's more likely in Agnes' case that she just felt ready to draw a line under what was the end of an era at the TS - the one presided over by its founder-members.

The following year Agnes made one of the most remarkable gestures of any GD member - of any woman of her class and generation - when the death notices in the Times of 26 May 1909 included one for Charlotte Seymour, "most faithful and beloved lifelong friend and maid" of Baroness de Pallandt.

It was unheard of for a mere servant to have her death recorded in one of the foremost national newspapers; and I think it indicates that Agnes was harder hit by the death of Charlotte Seymour than by the death of her own mother.

CHARLOTTE SEYMOUR

Her name is actually a rather unusual one, but I've still had some trouble finding information on Charlotte Seymour, especially about her early life, but I think this is probably her, in 1861: a housemaid called Charlotte Seymour, aged 24, was one of three servants in the household of Spencer Westmacott and his wife Mary, at Holcroft Lodge, Grove Bank, Fulham. Westmacott was a Lt-Colonel in the Royal Engineers. He and his wife ran a tight ship, with the one housemaid, a cook and one male servant whose duties were not made clear to the census official; he was probably Lt-Colonel Westmacott's batman - a military man's valet. The fewer the servants, the harder they all had to work; and in the Westmacott's household the sole housemaid was likely to have to do the kitchen scivvying, cleaning the house from top to bottom, waiting at table, answering the door... Heavy, labour-intensive, repetitious, boring work and Charlotte Seymour had probably already been doing this kind of job for 10 years.

Was Lt-Colonel Westmacott a friend of Allan Thomas MacLean? So that a servant could be handed on, as it were, from one to the other? Pushing it a bit far, I think. It's more likely that, on attempting to hire a new housemaid, Agnes' mother Agnes MacLean appreciated that one of the applicants had a good reference, from a military man. Mrs MacLean's younger daughter may have been in need of her own lady's maid, so that there would be a promotion available for the right kind of housemaid...

I can't find Charlotte Seymour on the census of 1871 so I can't be sure where she was working. But Agnes de Pallandt is not on the 1871 census either. I don't think it's too fanciful to suppose that Charlotte Seymour was working for Agnes de Pallandt by then, and had gone to the Netherlands with her on her marriage. Charlotte was certainly employed by Agnes de Pallandt by 1881: on the day of the 1881 census, she was with Agnes in the lodging house in Jermyn Street. The lodging-house keeper told the census official that Charlotte Seymour was Baroness de Pallandt's lady's maid - meaning that Charlotte had put cleaning out grates behind her and was looking after Agnes' wardrobe and jewellery and doing her hair. It's clear from Agnes' touching death notice, though, that Charlotte had become a great deal more than a mere lady's maid. In 1881 she had (probably) gone with her employer to live in a foreign country; and she was now supporting her mistress through her second widowhood.

The 1891 census was taken just a few weeks before Agnes was initiated into the Golden Dawn. She was living at 122 Bryanston Square Marylebone and Charlotte Seymour was with her, the eldest and most senior of three women servants. The census official just listed each of the servants as a general servant, so I don't know which woman was doing what; but it was likely that Charlotte was performing a housekeeping role in addition to her lady's maid duties, helping Agnes manage the household and supervising the two younger women - Eliza Jones aged 28 and originally from Brecon in remote central Wales; and Anna Jarvis, aged 22 and from Norfolk, who was probably doing all the heavy physical work that Charlotte had done at the outset of her working life.

Charlotte Seymour was like her mistress: a little bit vague about her age, when speaking to the census official; she was also vague about where she was born, saying Kent to the official in 1861 and not giving any details in 1881. It was clear from the various ages that Charlotte did admit to, though, that she was born before 1837. I still haven't found any birth details for her.

Even a Victorian servant was occasionally given time off and at Easter 1901 Agnes allowed Charlotte to visit her sister; so that Charlotte was in her brother-in-law's household on the day of the 1901 census. She was still vague about her age but she was more specific about where she was born. Both the Seymour sisters were born in Wadhurst, Sussex, a few miles south of Tunbridge Wells.

Charlotte Seymour's sister Sarah was younger than she; Sarah's birth was registered in October-December 1837, the first quarter after registration became compulsory. In 1864 Sarah married Benjamin Cornwell, a carpenter and joiner. Benjamin Cornwell was also a Sussex man, he'd been born at Buxted just outside Uckfield, but by 1901 he and Sarah were living in Tunbridge Wells. At the time of Charlotte Seymour's visit their youngest son, Reginald, was still living at home while he was apprenticed to his father.

It was during another visit to her sister, in May 1909, that Charlotte died.

I am not going attempt to write about the processes of increasing trust and liking and shared sorrow by which Charlotte Seymour advanced in Agnes' life from servant to a faithful, lifelong friend; nor about the rules and delicate boundaries that had to be negotiated, perhaps every day, by both women. I will just say that after Charlotte Seymour's death, Agnes was happy to make plain the important role Charlotte had played in her life for many years. They had probably, each of them, become the other's main emotional support. Perhaps many relationships between mistress and maid developed this way; but only Agnes, as far as I know, said so to the readers of the Times.

After Charlotte Seymour died, Agnes even renamed the house in Surbiton after her: Morfa Lodge became Seymour House. I have one last glimpse of Agnes, from the 1911 census, still at the renamed 23 Adelaide Road. No one could take the place of Charlotte Seymour, although it looks as though Agnes had done her best to fill the yawning gap by taking on a possible relation of Charlotte (a niece perhaps?) as one of the two servants she now employed: Emma Seymour, aged 31 and born in Ashurst Kent. The third member of the household was Elizabeth Small, aged 41 and from Highbridge in Somerset; though listed last, perhaps the more senior of the two.

Agnes de Pallandt died on 15 December 1925.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

ON AGNES BARONESS DE PALLANDT

THE MACLEANS

Burke's Dictionary of the Landed Gentry of Great Britain edition published 1853 p221 for Archibald and Alicia MacLean.

ALLAN THOMAS MACLEAN:

H G Hart's New Annual Army List 1840 p139 the page for the 13th Regiment, Light Dragoons also known as the 13th Hussars.

Asiatic Journal and Monthly Miscellany 1832 p153 issued July [1832]: Madras official news: court martial of Capt MacLean, at military headquarters Madras on 19 December 1831.

United Service Magazine 1862 p311 Promotions and Appointments: Major-General Allan T Maclean of the 13th Hussars to be a Lieutenant-General; order dated 20 December 1861.

Transactions of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland 1863 plix list of current members includes Allan Thomas Maclean, "admitted" to the Society (by election) in 1835, now Lt-Col of the 13th Light Dragoons.

Times Sat 12 December 1868 p5 Milit and Naval Intellig: obituary of Lt-Genl Allan Thomas MacLean.

Probate Registry: Allan Thomas Maclean of 3 Oxford Square Hyde Park, Lt-Genl and Col of HM 13th Regt of Hussars, d on 9 Dec 1868 at his home. Probate 14 Jan 1869 to the 2 execrs: Frederick Talbot Tasker, solr, of 47 Bedford Row; and John Cumming of 7 Montague Place Russell Sq ((I presume he too is a solr)). Personal effects < £16,000.

AGNES MACLEAN Agnes' mother

Some information on her first marriage from Ancestry's family history pages at wc.rootsweb.ancestry.com where John Taylor's dates are given as 1779-1828. 2nd daughter Ellen Taylor was born and died in 1825; 3rd daughter Agnes Taylor was born and died in 1827.

The best information I've found on Agnes Forlong and her three marriages comes from Ancestry.co.uk surnames' database and I give it here to iron-out the complications of Agnes de Pallandt's step-relations:

Allan Thomas Maclean of Pennycross, born circa 1805. Ancestry ID = I526134104. He was married once, to Agnes Lisle Forlong born 3 April 1805. They had 2 child: Arthur born circa 1845 (Ancestry has no information about him at all); and Agnes the GD member (the database incorrectly gives a year of birth of 1847 for Agnes).

Agnes Lisle Forlong Ancestry ID = I526134329. Her parents are: William Forlong born 1762, of Wellshott Cambuslang; and his wife Mary Maria Fleming of Kelvinbank Glasgow. Agnes' three marriages are:

1 = 1822 John Taylor; born 1779; Ancestry has no date of death for him. They had 3 children:

Mary Maria Fleming Taylor born 1823, Alice's only sibling and actually a much older half-sibling

Ellen born 1825

Agnes born 1827.

2 = unknown date L Lawrence 1802-1840; no children

3 = Allan Thomas Maclean.

Arthur born c 1845

Agnes born circa 1847

AGNES HALF-SISTER MARY MARIA TAYLOR:

Mary Maria died 1905; she married 1850 George Grenville Malet (born 1806) probably in Scotland as I couldn't find a marriage registration on freebmd. Their child were:

Allan MALET born circa 1851. He married Elizabeth Lysaght; 2s 2d

Agnes born circa 1853; died unmarried

Margaret born 1855; died unmmarried

Elizabeth born 1857; married Sydney Bates 2s 4d.

Just to make it as clear as I can: these 4 children of Mary Maria Taylor Malet are Agnes' step-nephews and nieces; but they are about Agnes' age.

In due course, Agnes' step-niece Elizabeth married Sydney Eggers Bates of Manydown House Hampshire: www.british-history.ac.uk is the website of British History Online. Re Manydown House it quotes the Victoria County History, Hampshire volume 4. The house and land are in the parish of Wootton St Lawrence. There has been a house on the site since the 15th cent. In 18th century the estate was owned by the Wither family. It was bought from Lovelace Bigg-Wither in 1871 by Sir Edward Percy Bates. Sydney Eggers Bates was Edward Percy's younger son. At www.thepeerage.com, Edward Percy Bates' dates are 1816-1896. He was Conservative MP for Plymouth 1871-80 and 1885-92. He owned two houses, Manydown House and Gyrn Castle Flintshire. He was married twice:

1 = Charlotte Umfreville-Smith; 3 daughters

2 = Ellen Thompson; 3 sons, one of whom died in childhood.

Sydney Eggers Bates is the youngest of Edward Percy Bates' six children. He married Elizabeth Malet in July 1878; 2 sons 4 daughters; he died in 1924.

HUSBAND NUMBER 1: THE VAN PALLANDTs and it's definitely VAN not DE.

Times 28 November 1870 p1a marriage notices: on 24 November 1870 at All Saints Norfolk Square: Charles Frederick Henry Baron de Pallandt, 3rd son of Baron de Pallandt de Westervoort and Rennen-Enck Holland; to Agnes Alicia Margaret Maclean only child of late Lt-General Allen Thomas Maclean of 13th Hussars.

Marriage lines from records of All Saints Paddington:

The marriage took place on 24 November 1870 and was by licence not banns. The groom was Baron Carel Frederick Hendrik van Pallandt; a man of "full age" and a bachelor. His profession was given as "Officer of Hussards" and at the time of the marriage his permanent address was Arnhem in the Netherlands. The bride was Agnes Alicia Margaret Maclean, of "full age" and a spinster; and a resident of the parish. The groom's father was Baron Jacob Adolphe Alexander van Pallandt van Westerwoort, described as a "Burgomaster of Arnhem". The bride's (dead) father was Allan Thomas Maclean, Colonel of the 13th Hussars. The witnesses included Agnes' new father-in-law and two other members of the van Pallandt family, and Agnes Malet.

The van Pallandt family:

Family history website www.genealogieonline.nl is in Dutch and I also can't see who compiled it. However, it's got accurate dates and nicely laid out family trees in it so I think I can trust it. It's clear even without knowing Dutch that in the 19th century the family was very distinguished, with diplomats and court officials in several generations. Agnes' father-in-law is Johan (or Joan) Jacob Adolf Alexander, Baron van Pallandt Heer van Westervoort; born 1807 at The Hague; died 1876 at Huize Rennenenk Arnhem which seems to be the family estate. In 1829 he had married Adolphine Charlotte Wilhelmina van Pallandt Vrouwe van Walfort. They had 5 daughters and 7 sons; though not as many grand-children as that implies as only 1 daughter and 2 sons married including Agnes' husband Karel and they had no children. Three of the children died before they reached 30; 2 more before they reached 50, including Karel. A younger brother of Karel, Jacob Adolf 1840-99 inherits if there's primogeniture; he married and has descendants. Agnes' husband was the 3rd son of this big family: Karel Frederik Hendrik Baron van Pallandt. Born 23 May 1837 at Arnhem; died 24 July 1872 apparently in London though I couldn't find a death registration on freebmd. The website confirms the marriage of Karel to Agnes Alice Margaretha Mac-Lean in 1870; and that they had no children.

On Nina and Frederick, whose surname was van Pallandt: he was Frederik Jan Gustav Floris, Baron van Pallandt 1934-94. Dutch, son of a former Netherlands ambassador to Denmark. Mother Danish. I suppose he must be a descendant of Karel's brother Jacob Adolf but I couldn't find any information on the web which confirmed that. He was murdered! He got involved in drug trafficking and is thought to have been shot dead by a gang member; the murder is still unsolved.

HUSBAND NUMBER 2 - THE WADE FAMILY

The Harrow School Register 1801-93 published by Longmans Green 1894; p328 Richard E L Wade.

Agnes' father-in-law Richard Blaney Wade:

City Bankers 1890-1914 by Youssef Cassis 1994 p57 in the chapter Banks and Bankers. Richard Blaney Wade is 1820-97. And p70.

Via www.ebooksread.com: I was able to glance at A Visitation of England volume 6 p23 where it said that Richard Blaney Wade of 13 Seymour Street had died on 29 July 1897 aged 76.

At www.personalia.co.uk/photographs/PHOTOGRAPHS.htm an album of photos of R B Wade and his family is being offered for sale (7 Nov 2012) at £250; all photos are annotated so they know who is in each picture. I noted that Agnes' husband Richard Wade is not in any of them.

Richard's younger brother Cecil Wade 1857-1908, married Frances (Fanny) Mackay Frew of Cardross Dunbarton in 1883. She had her portrait painted by John Singer Sargent in 1886, very soon after he arrived in Engl. It's now in the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City: at jssgallery.org/Paintings/Mrs\_Cecil\_Wade.html you can see it.

An obituary of Adelaide Wade's father: The Law Times volume 15 issue of 17 August [1850] p467 Sir Launcelot Shadwell had died at his home in Barnes Elms Putney; he'd been ill for several weeks after having what sounds like a stroke on his way to work. He was born in 1779, the son of a barrister. He became a barrister himself, a member of Lincoln's Inn and was also MP for Ripon. He was appointed the vice-chancellor of England in 1827; and appointed one of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal in 1835. He'd been married twice and had several children.

Marriage lines from records of St Mary Marylebone:

The marriage took place on 16 January 1879 at and was performed not by the vicar but by Richard Wade's uncle, Rev Julius Shadwell, rector and vicar of Shinfeld in Sussex. The marriage was by licence, not banns. The groom was Richard Edward Lancelot Wade. The bride was Agnes Alicia Margaret, Baroness van/de Pallandt ('van' was on the line but 'de' had been written in above the line presumably at Agnes' insistence) and she signed the register as "A A M de Pallandt". I couldn't read all the witnesses names, but there were five of them, four named Wade and none of them were MacLean or Malet.

Times Tue 8 February 1881 p1 death notices: "On the 4th inst" [4 Feb 1881] at Richmond, death of Richard Edward Lancelot Wade eldest son of R B Wade of Seymour Street Portman Square.

THE TALE OF THE SILVER PLATE

Times 5 July 1881 p4 court reports: Tasker v Attenborough in which Tasker was acting for a group of plaintiffs, the trustees and executors of the Will of the late General Maclean. The defendant was pawnbroker Robert Percy Attenborough, with Richard Wade now deceased and his widow Mrs Wade.

AGNES AFTER HER SECOND HUSBAND'S DEATH

Times 2 April 1884 p10 a bazaar in aid of the British and Foreign Sailors' Soc opened "yesterday" at Kensington Town Hall.

Wikipedia on Ernest Major: 1841-1908, founder and owner of the Shanghai newspaper Shen Bao, also known as the Shanghai News, which was first published in April 1872. Major returned to live in England in 1889 but set up the Major Company Ltd to run the paper; its final issue was published in 1949.

AGNES AND THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register January 1889-September 1891 p127 Agnes A de Pallandt Baroness, applic undated and almost certainly pre-dates this Register. Agnes paid her yearly subscription from 1891 to 1908.

Old Diary Leaves: the True History of the Theosophical Society by Henry Steel Olcott. Madras: Theosophical Publishing House. There are 6 volumes in all. Agnes appears in Volume 4, published in 1931 but covering the period 1887-92 and written many years before the publication date. Agnes' only mention in any of the volumes is on p493 of Volume 4.

The newspaper project:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume IV March-August 1889, published by the Theosophical Publishing Company at 7 Duke St Adelphi. Agnes' letter about her newspaper project appeared in Volume IV, issue of 15 June 1889 p351 in letters section. She wrote a follow-up letter which appeared in Volume V in the issue of 15 October 1889 p166. In Volume VII September 1890 to February 1891, issue of 15 December 1890 p344 Agnes was asking specifically for short articles on theosophy, suitable to be published in the newspapers and in Volume VII issue of 15 February 1891 p516 she reported that short articles on theosophy had been published in The Tablet; the Liverpool Mercury; Light; the Sunday Times; the West London Observer; the Kensington News; the Glasgow Herald; and others.

The fund-raising bazaar:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XI Sep 1892- Feb 1893 w Besant sole editor. Pubd London: Theosophical Pubg Co 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Vol XI no 63 issue of 15 Nov 1892 p257 rptd an Oriental Bazaar held over 31 Oct and 1 Nov [1892] at the Lecture Hall 19 Avenue

Road. Details of Ursula and Jacob Bright from wikipedia.

An appearance though no articles in Theosophical Siftings volumes 1-2 1888-90 published Theosophical Publishing Society, Adelphi London. Each volume is a collection in one place of recent theosophical talks, lectures, pamphlets etc. On p23 of a pamphlet by Herbert Coryn: The Scientific Basis of Occultism, is a news item/advert for The Dorothy Restaurant Co Ltd of 448 Oxford St. Members of the Theosophical Publishing Society had been invited to a luncheon held to open the restaurant, which was for women only. Some of the Company's directors are theosophists. Amongst those at the lunch: Countess Wachtmeister; Baroness "de Palland" (sic); and Helena Petrovna Blavatsky.

More on the Dorothy Restaurants:

Posted at //blavatskynews.blogspot.co.uk on 14 October 2012: information that the Dorothy Rest at 448 Oxford St opened on 21 June 1889; no source given for the information.

The Theosophist May 1890-September 1890 p533 says the Dorothy restaurants were the brain-child of Isabel Cooper-Oakley, who founded them with two other investors. However, her two partners had since left England and thus had to drop out; Isabel's sister Miss Cooper, and Countess Wachtmeister had replaced them. The premises at 448 Oxford St included a room that could seat 300 and was available for evening hire.

At www.english-heritage.org.uk at its page Personal Freedom and Public Space, about women in public life during 19th cent: the original Dorothy Restaurant was at 81 Mortimer St. You paid; and got a meat + veg lunch or dinner; if you paid extra you could have a pudding as well. It was open until 2200 hours.

London Gazette 19 July 1895 p4113 liquidations: notice issued by liquidator C L Schmitz on 17 July 1895. A final meeting of members of The Dorothy Restaurant Co Ltd would be held at 448 Oxford St on Wednesday 21 August 1895 at 1200. The liquidator would present his final report; and members would need to decide what to do with the company's accounts and other records.

At scribd, Theosophy volume XI no 2 May-December 1896 pp130-34, an account of Mrs Tingley's Crusaders' group's few days in England, June-July 1896. After trips to Liverpool and Bradford, the group went to London. On Wednesday 1 July 1896, Lady Malcolm of Poltalloch (a wealthy and well-connected woman with an interest in theosophy) gave a reception for the Crusaders at 23 Great Cumberland Place. Several old friends of Blavatsky had attended this to meet the Crusaders group, including Baroness de Pallandt.

The Women's Franchise League (WFL):

The Women's Suffrage Movement: A Reference Guide 1866-1928 by Elizabeth Crawford 2001. P719 in chap on the Women's Franchise League (WFL) Crawford gives the names of the prominent campaigners who attended; and the fact that the meeting was held at Agnes' house.

Rise up Women! By Andrew Rosen 1974 p17 in the chapter called Enter the Pankhursts Rosen gives the details of WFL's aims, and names the WFL's original governing council - it included Jacob Bright and Josephine Butler and also the pioneering worker for women's rights in the USA, Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

The Militant Suffrage Movement by Laura E Nym Mayhall 2003 p24 about WFL's success with the 1894 Local Government Act.

Details of Robert Arthur Arnold from wikipedia. He was the brother of the poet Edwin Arnold.

For Alice Vickery see www.rpharms.com, the website of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society. It has a section on women pharmacists up to the 20th century.

For Marie Corbett: no wikipedia page for her as yet so search on her name at www.spartacus.schoolnet.co.uk - Spartacus Educational.

Frederick Talbot Tasker's bankruptcy:

Law Times volume 105 1898 p14 coverage of a bankruptcy hearing in the case of Frederick Talbot Tasker of Bedford Row. Tasker didn't appear in court and court heard that he had recently disappeared. The total owed to all creditors was estimated at between £16000 and £17000.

Reports of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies parts 1-3, for year ending 1899. Published by the House of Commons. On p57 a note that Frederick Talbot Tasker had disappeared some time after March 1898 and had since been declared bankrupt.

Times Tue 5 April 1898 p15 in legal cols: in re Tasker, described as lately a solicitor at 47 Bedford Row; and living at Dartford though believed not to have been seen at either address since 28 February [1898] when he and his wife had been seen at Cannon Street railway station by Mr Farrer of Messrs Farrer and Co, the firm of solicitors now acting for the creditor now bringing bankruptcy proceedings against him. Tasker's present whereabouts were unknown. Most of the £16-17000 he owed was money entrusted to him as solicitor by clients, which he had "misappropriated". The Official Receiver had declared Tasker bankrupt on 26 March [1898]; clerks from the Official Receiver's office had gone through Tasker's papers and found virtually nothing of any value; and investigations had found that the house at Dartford was mortgaged.

Times Wed 4 May 1898 p5 m on Tasker's bankruptcy: a hearing had been held at which he did not appear, so the hearing was adjourned sine die. He had plenty of clients and his bankruptcy had come as a surprise.

There was nothing on Tasker in Times 1899 or 1900.

Law Reports: Chancery Division volume 2 1901 p233 coverage of Taylor v London and Co Bank: in which the Bank was alleging fraud by Frederick Talbot Tasker, beginning in 1882 when Tasker lent a man called Richard Ward £1400 against mortgages on 4 properties owned by Ward.

The Accountant volume 27 1901 p60 also has an item on Taylor v London and County Bank. By mid-1897 the London and Co Bank was wanting to see some security offered by Tasker for loans they had made to him; so on 14 August 1897 he made a large deposit in his account with them (which I presume was money actually belonging to Ward but I didn't follow the rest of the case).

The Maid of Tangier:

Harvard University's copy of The Maid of Tangier can be accessed via Archive.org: Sol Hachuel, the Maid of Tangier; published in London in 1906 by The Women's Printing Society Ltd of 66-68 Whitcomb Street WC. The original libretto was in French; several translations were then listed including an English adaptation by Paul P Grunfeld DA. The front page refers to music by Bernard de Lisle but doesn't say whether the reference is to the whole opera, or the 1906 version, or just the overture.

Either the music or the libretto may have been written by someone called C Macé: Folktales of the Jews Volume 1: Tales from the Sephardic Dispersion by Dan Ben-Amos 2006 has a reference to the opera held in Harvard University library, on p650: Sol Hachuel (sic) Mélodrame en Quatre Actes. The author or composer was C Macé. There's a different date altogether for its publication - Rome 1901.

I found one reference to Paul R Grunfeld of the English adaptation, in the National Anti-Vivisection Society (NAVS)'s magazine The Animal's Defender and Zoophilist volumes 22-23 1902 p1 possibly as the translator from the original German of a particular catalogue of equipment for use in experiments on animals. Arthur Arnold of Agnes' meeting with the Women's Franchise League was a member of NAVS.

I tried in the Times to see if it mentioned or at least publicised any performance of the Maid of Tangier in 1906, but couldn't find any mention of the opera at all, no adverts for a forthcoming performance, no advert for the the publication of the 1906 version; nor any reference to the overture dedicated to Agnes.

The man called Bernard de Lisle I found though www.thepeerage.com: 1864-1921, a graduate of Jesus College Cambridge. I couldn't find anything more about him so I'm not even sure he's the composer of Agnes' overture. The Times had a death notice for this man, in the issue of Monday 14 Nov 1921 p1a, which give no information about his life other than his being the brother of Everard M P de Lisle of Garendon Park Leicestershire. There was no obituary of this man in the Times.

Agnes' death:

Times 19 Dec 1925 p1a d notice f Agnes wdw of Baron Carl de Pallandt and of Richard Wade; only dtr of Lt Genl Allen Maclean. On 15 Dec [1925] at Seymour House Surbiton.

--

4 April 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

ISABEL DE STEIGER part 1: from her birth to the death of her husband in December 1872. A lot more parts follow this one - she had a long life! There's also a separate file giving some information on her work as an artist.

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 2015

A big update seemed to be the appropriate response when I was contacted by Richard Duboug, descendant of a family who were friends of Isabel in her last years. Richard Duboug sent me a copy of Isabel's Will, which revealed the names of several more friends Isabel had, that I'd never seen mentioned in any other source. The Will also prompted me to dig a bit deeper with Isabel's family and to include them in the life-by-dates. Thanks to Richard Dubourg, the life-by-dates below is much more comprehensive than it was. And a lot bigger!

INTRODUCTION

Three cheers for Isabel de Steiger! One of only four GD members to write a long memoir; the only woman to do so. The three men were W B Yeats, Aleister Crowley and A E Waite. I have based my account of Isabel's life on her Memorabilia: Reminiscences of a Woman Artist and Writer; however, I have encountered a few problems with doing so.

Isabel's intention in writing Memorabilia was not so much to keep an account of her own life but to say what she knew about three remarkable women she had been friendly with, whose contributions to the occult and to western esotericism were (she felt) in danger of being forgotten. The memoir concentrates very much on the three - Mary Anne Atwood, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Anna Bonus Kingsford. Other people are not written about in such detail and many of Isabel's other friends and acquaintances were left out altogether. In particular, there's hardly any mention of Isabel's family and her relations with them after her marriage.

Isabel began keeping a journal in her teens and wrote it up regularly; but most of her early journals were probably destroyed in 1900. Memorabilia is mostly written from memory. By the time she was finishing it off, in the mid-1920s, Isabel was looking back at 90 years or so of life, and she gets confused sometimes, especially about dates, and where she was living at particular times.

The memoir was written in three stages, and Isabel didn't bother to do much revision when going back to it (twice) after gaps of many years. She began Memorabilia around 1912 and got as far as the 1870s before putting it aside to concentrate on another project. She took it up again at the end of 1918; then worked at it on and off over the next three years; before leaving it again until having her last go at it, and finally getting it finished, in 1925-26. She only revised one or two chapters of it, and the manuscript doesn't seem to have been edited by anyone else either. It was published as she had left it, with some events mentioned twice but remembered rather differently, and some conflicting accounts of particular events.

Despite these snags, I am very grateful to have had Memorabilia to work on, and to get to know Isabel better than I will be able to know any other GD member.

The memoir's full publication details: Memorabilia: Reminiscences of a Woman Artist and Writer. Isabelle de Steiger. London: Rider and Co. The book doesn't have a publication date but there's a British Library stamp in it saying "27 MAY 27".

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

ISABEL'S LIFE IN DATES

PREAMBLE - Isabel's ancestors

Isabel was a daughter of Joshua Lace (whose father had the same name so I'll call this one 'the younger') and his wife Helena Elizabeth, née Cameron.

Sources: Memorabilia p2, p5 and website www.ancestryresearchservice.com for Hector Lochiel Cameron.

On her mother's side, Isabel was descended from Scottish and Irish professional families, with the men often in the British army or clerics in the Church of England. Isabel's mother's father was Colonel Hector Lochiel-Cameron (1777-1833), a veteran of the Peninsular War. In 1797 he had eloped with Elizabeth Lovett, daughter of Rev Dr Verney Lovett the dean of Lismore, county Waterford. Hector and Elizabeth had two daughters and four sons. Helena Elizabeth (born 1816) was the younger daughter.

Memorabilia does not mention where the Lace family came from originally. It's an unusual name in England but while I was trawling the census I noticed that it's quite common on the Isle of Man; so I'm assuming that it's the Isle of Man that Isabel's ancestors came from, on her father's side. A man called Ambrose Lace, who is probably Isabel's great-grandfather, had moved to Liverpool by 1787 and was a partner in the solicitors' firm Aspinwall Roscoe and Lace.

Sources, all seen on the web:

The Herculaneum Pottery: Liverpool's Forgotten Glory by Peter Hyland 2005. Chapter called Renaissance 1833-36: p195 footnote 1.

Liverpool as it was in the last quarter of the 18th century by Richard Brooke pubd 1853. In Chapter 6 p469 and p649 footnote 1 which has a reference to the firm appearing in Liverpool Directory issue of 1787.

Liverpool, the first 1000 Years by Arabella MacIntyre-Brown 2001: p143 in a section on Liverpool Law Society which was founded as the Law Library in 1827. Its first President was Joshua Lace (that's Isabel's grandfather, not her father - Joshua Lace the elder). The modern Liverpool law firm of Berrymans Lace Mawr is a descendent of the 18th century Aspinwall, Roscoe and Lace.

A Treatise on the Office and Practice of a Notary of England by Richard Brooke pubd 1838. In an Appendix, p82: Joshua Lace (that's Isabel's grandfather) mentioning that he'd been a Notary for over 55 years.

Source: Memorabilia p13

Inevitably, the families of the partners in Aspinwall Roscoe and Lace became related by marriage: Joshua Lace senior's daughter (Isabel's aunt) Margaret married Edward Roscoe.

Joshua Lace the elder and his wife Margaret had at least two sons: Ambrose and Isabel's father Joshua the younger; and at least one daughter, Martha. Ambrose was considerably the older of the two sons (born c 1793). Joshua Lace who was Isabel's father was the younger son, born in 1805.

Source for birth of Joshua Lace the younger: via familysearch to England EAS-y GS film 1068893.

Both Ambrose and Joshua the younger went into the family firm and qualified as solicitors. However, Ambrose was by far the more committed to his work. He was an active member of the Liverpool Law Society and served as its president in 1832-33. He married Margaret Clarke in October 1822. As far as I can tell they had no children; but after his brother's death, they took in some of his children including Isabel.

Sources:

1) Liverpool Law Society's website at www.liverpoollawsociety.org.uk, the page on the Society's history:

2) marriage registers of the church of St George Derby Square Liverpool; Marriage Register 1813-83 p16 entry 47 transcribed at www.lan-opc.org.uk/Liverpool. Ambrose and Joshua the younger's sister Martha Lace was one of the witnesses.

Isabel's father was a very cultured, artistic man, temperamentally unsuited to work as a lawyer. Before his marriage he'd travelled in Europe, spending time in Paris, Italy and Switzerland. He collected paintings, china, sculpture and ivories and amassed a good library of classics. The Lace family owned property in Liverpool and thus had income from rents. And in the 1830s at least, they succumbed to the frenzy of investment in the latest method of transport, and bought shares in a railway company.

Source: Memorabilia p8, p13.

Sources for the investments of Ambrose and Isabel's father Joshua Lace the younger:

The Herculaneum Pottery: Liverpool's Forgotten Glory by Peter Hyland 2005. In Chapter 16: p210 the final years meaning 1836-40. The pottery made earthenware goods. It rented prop in Toxteth Park from Ambrose Lace and Joshua Lace the younger, who granted the firm a new lease in 1836.

Parliamentary Papers House of Commons volume 48 1837 p32/pvii, part of a list of shareholders in the Cheltenham, Oxford, and London and Birmingham Railway. Joshua Lace the younger has 10 shares for which he had paid £1000; Ambrose Lace has bought 20 shares at £2000.

Isabel's parents were distantly related to each other, through the Pigott family. They met during a visit made by Helena Elizabeth to her relations in Liverpool. The marriage didn't meet with unqualified approval in either family, mostly due to religious differences: the Camerons were Evangelicals; the Laces, on the other hand, had relations who were Unitarians though Joshua Lace the younger was Evangelical himself.

Source: Memorabilia p5.

Comment by Sally: this was a big divide, at the beginning of the 19th century. Evangelicals believed that the Bible was the word of God and thus beyond question or change. Unitarians didn't believe that Jesus was the son of God and so rejected the idea of the holy trinity; many Christians thought them barely Christian at all.

I could not find a record of the marriage of Joshua Lace the younger to Helena Elizabeth Cameron. It probably took place in 1831. They had two boys and four girls (Sources are via familysearch):

|  |                                |
|--|--------------------------------|
| Joshua Verney Lovett Lace 7 June 1832  | England EAS-y GS film 1546288  |
| Constantia Margaret Lace 24 July 1833  | England EAS-y GS film 102362-2 |
| William Henry Lace 3 April 1835        | England EAS-y GS film 1546288  |
| Isabelle (sic) Elizabeth 29 June 1836  | England EAS-y GS film 1546288  |
| Helena Cameron Lace (Nina) 5 July 1838 | England-ODM GS fukn 1546288    |
| Elizabeth Rosamund Lace 10 Sep 1840    | England ODM-y GS film 1546288  |

All the Lace children were baptised at St Bride's, the new Church of England church which had a series of Evangelical clergy including (in the late 1830s) the Rev John Ellison Bates father of GD member Emily Katharine Bates.

ISABEL'S BIRTH

0832GMT 28 February 1836 at 2 Canning Street Liverpool: Isabelle Elizabeth Lace was born. Isabel gives some astrological details: Aries Rising, Sun-Mercury conjunction, Moon-Jupiter conjunction in Cancer.

Source: Memorabilia p247, p276.

Comment by Sally: ransacking my brain for memories from the time when I knew more astrology than I do now, I printed Isabel's chart and it's quite a dynamic one. Isabel would not have been using the planets beyond Saturn - that's a 20th-century add-on to time-honoured astrology. Consequently, she would not have been aware that her Sun-Mercury conjunction has Uranus in the middle of it. The three-planet conjunction straddles Aquarius and Pisces and is part of a grand trine in water signs with Jupiter and Saturn. Isabel's Moon-Jupiter conjunction is not a conjunction by modern standards, the two are a little too far apart; however they are linked together by both being square to a formidable Venus-Pluto conjunction in Aries in the first house.

See part 2 of this life-by-dates for Isabel's close friendship in the 1880s with Dr Anna Bonus

Kingsford, the mystic and translator of occult texts. All Dr Kingsford's circle had their horoscopes calculated, and interpreted them as part of their esoteric studies. In 1888 Isabel will also have needed to provide her birth data as part of the GD's vetting process for potential initiates.

1836-1851

The Lace family continued to live at 2 Canning Street. Amongst their neighbours were the Gladstone and the Duckworth families. Summers were spent with relations in Waterford and Scotland (her mother's family) or the Isle of Man (her father's family). In 1844, however, they opted to go abroad instead; Isabel remembered visiting the Waterloo battle site.

Source: Memorabilia chapters 1 to 5, which were written c 1911.

Source for the environs of Canning Street: visit to Liverpool August 2012 by Sally Davis and Roger Wright. 2 Canning Street is on the corner with Gambier Terrace, on the edge of a district of Georgian houses and above where Liverpool's CofE Cathedral is now although the building hadn't even been started when Isabel lived there. Behind those streets was the newly-built St Bride's church where Isabel and her siblings were baptised.

The Lace family and the Rathbone family knew each other. Isabel's father was a friend of William Rathbone.

Source: Memorabilia p47, p101.

Comment by Sally: the friend of Isabel's father Joshua Lace the younger is William Rathbone V (1787-1868) partner in the family import/export business and also in the insurance broking and ship-owning partnership of Rathbone Martin and Co. The most well-known William Rathbone is the V's son (1819-1912) partner in Rathbone Brothers, MP and philanthropist, and father of Eleanor Rathbone MP. In Memorabilia it's William Rathbone VI that Isabel particularly mentions, but it's clear from Memorabilia and other sources that she knew other family members and their business associates as well.

Source for Rathbone Martin and Co:

London Gazette 21 May 1867 p2949 dissolved partnerships: includes a notice issued 30 April 1867 announcing that the partnership Rathbone Martin and Co had been dissolved due to the retirement of Samuel Martin. The business would continue with the remaining partners: William Rathbone; Philip Henry Rathbone; and Robert Topham Steele. They worked as insurance brokers, underwriters and ship-owners.

A couple of comments by Sally on the close relationships between the Lace family and partners in Rathbone Martin and Co:

1) Philip Henry Rathbone was a Liverpool city councillor for many years. During the 1880s and 1890s he was an important member of the Corporation committees which ran the annual autumn art exhibition at the Walker Art Gallery. Isabel exhibited more paintings at the Walker than at any other gallery.

2) At the end of the 19th century, Isabel became a close friend of Robert Topham Steele's second wife, Léonie. Léonie was one of the two executors of Isabel's Will.

1841

Isabel's mother Helena Elizabeth died during the spring. Helena was only 27, Isabel was six. Isabel's father had always had a reclusive tendency and this became more pronounced after his wife's death.

Sources: freebmd, Memorabilia p13.

1840s

Isabel and her sisters began their education at a day-school in Percy Street in the village of Rock Ferry. The school was run by the Hackney sisters. Pupils were taught grammar, writing, arithmetic to long division standard, geography and history, music and singing. Much of the teaching was rote-learning but Isabel's poor memory meant that later on in her life she couldn't recall any of the poetry she'd been forced to memorise. It was at this school that she had her first drawing lessons, from the landscape artist Andrew Hunt, father of Alfred William Hunt. He thought Isabel had talent and told her to tell her father to arrange for a proper training; but Isabel didn't enjoy his drawing classes, she preferred the music lessons, so she never passed the message on!

Source: Memorabilia eg p14, p41 although Isabel doesn't give exact dates.

Comments from Sally: the curriculum at the Hackney sisters' school was much wider than was normal in schools for girls at that time. It also had higher standards, at least in its art training. Most schools for the daughters of the wealthy middle-classes gave the pupils lessons in drawing and painting, but the employment of an artist who regularly exhibited at the Royal Academy set the Hackney sisters' school apart. Andrew Hunt (1790-1861) is best known as a teacher, but he also found time to work as a landscape and genre artist. He lived in Liverpool and often exhibited at the Liverpool Academy. He had a son and four daughters; perhaps Isabel was acquainted with them. They all became painters so Isabel will have realised quite early in her life that it was possible for a woman to earn a living as an artist.

Rock Ferry is on the other side of the Mersey from the port of Liverpool. In the 1840s it was still a rural village. Isabel always had fond memories of it and returned there to live, at least twice, much later in her life when it was beginning to be built over like everything on the Birkenhead side.

Sources for Andrew Hunt, and his son Andrew William Hunt, also an artist:

Bénézit's Dictionary of Artists, a vast work, published Editions Gründ Paris 2006. In Volume 7 Her-Koo p455.

Dictionary of British Art. Volume IV: Victorian Painters I: The Text. By Christopher Wood. Published Antique Collectors' Club 1995 p268.

??LATE 1840s TO 1855

Joshua Verney Lovett Lace, the elder of Isabel's two brothers, was in business with William Lawford as an importer and crusher of seeds to make vegetable oil; at 18 Kent Street Liverpool. Their partnership was dissolved in late 1855.

Source: London Gazette 5 November 1855 p4155.

DURING 1850

Isabel began keeping a journal; a practice she continued throughout her life; though a lot of volumes of it were destroyed in 1900.

Source: Memorabilia pxx

ALSO DURING 1850

Rudolph Adolf von Steiger von Riggesberg arrived in Liverpool and found work with the cotton-broking firm of Melly, Forget and Co. Rudolph had been born in Bern, Switzerland. His family owned land outside the town but their wealth and social position were in decline. The family was Calvinist, and spoke French, German and Romansch.

Source: Memorabilia p63-64, p279

Comment by Sally Davis: the larger-than-life jazz singer and entertainer George Melly was a member of this Liverpool Melly family.

UNKNOWN DATE BUT BEFORE 1851

Isabel continued her art education in the way recommended to students in this period - she copied paintings owned by her father, which were themselves copies of originals by van Dyck and Kneller.

Source: Memorabilia p57.

FEBRUARY 1851

Isabel's father, Joshua Lace the younger, died aged 47 on 28 February 1851. The house at 2 Canning Street was sold; so were all its contents including the pictures and the library.

Sources: Source: Memorabilia p13, p32, p16; freebmd, census etc. Isabel had lost both her parents by the age of 17. She and her siblings went to live with their father's elder brother Ambrose Lace and his wife Margaret, at their house called Beaconsfield in the village of Little Woolton (then on the outskirts of Liverpool). Isabel and her siblings were part of Ambrose and Margaret's household on the day of the 1851 census, a few weeks after Joshua Lace's death. However, I think that the household didn't last very long in the form it had on that day, because (although I am not certain about the identification) Ambrose's wife Margaret may have died in 1852 - another death for Isabel to cope with before she had even left school.

1851 to ?

Isabel attended Avon Bank school just outside Stratford-upon-Avon. Effie Gray had been a pupil there.

Source: Memorabilia p16.

Comment by Sally: I presume Isabel's sisters also attended the school. Effie Gray, of course, was later the wife of Ruskin and then of Millais.

Sources for Avon Bank school:

Website bristowefamilies.com/avonbank.html has a transcription of the 1841 census entry for Avon Bank School. Euphemia Gray aged 13 is amongst the pupils. The household is headed by the school's headmistress Maria Byerly, followed by Jane Byerly; and Mary Ainsworth and Alicia Ainsworth, all described as governesses. The website says that the Byerly sisters were nieces of Josiah Wedgewood.

Wives and Stunners: the Pre-Raphaelites and their Muses by Henrietta Garnett 2012 footnote 24 but I couldn't see a page number on the snippet: the original owners of Avon Bank were Maria and Jane Byerly. They retired in 1840 and handed the school on in 1841 to the Ainsworth sisters.

The 1851 census listing for Avon Bank Old Stratford has Mary Ainsworth as its head and principal of the school. Her sisters Harriot, Alicia and Helen all work as schoolmistresses.

The pupils are listed next - 29 of them, all girls of course, the majority between 15 and 17 years old. Then there are the names of two more teachers, one born in Paris the other born in Dresden. There is no one in the household called Lace or Smiles.

As well as Effie Gray, Elizabeth Stevenson Gaskell had been a pupil. Sources:

Elizabeth Gaskell by Angus Easson p3 says she left the school 1827. The school's curriculum when Elizabeth was a pupil included dancing, drawing, Italian, French and music.

Mrs Gaskell: Novelist and Biographer by Arthur Pollard 1965 p16 Stevenson was a pupil at Avon Bank 1825-27; page makes clear it was her only formal schooling.

Faith, Duty and the Power of the Mind: the Cloughs and their Circle by Gill Sutherland 2006 p73 author is discussing the education of middle-class girls in the early part of the 19th century. She uses Avonbank to illustrate the best education that was available. Samuel Smiles' sister Julia went to the school.

Comment from Sally: Ambrose Lace's decision to send Isabel away so soon after her father's death was harsh. Even at the end of her life she found it hard to deal with.

?UNKNOWN DATE, TO ?1854 ?1855

Isabel was sent to Miss Stevens' school at North End Road, Fulham. The only thing Isabel could remember that happened while she was there was her refusing to do the art classes because they involved more copying.

Source: Memorabilia p47, p53.

?1854 ?1855

Isabel 'came out' in Liverpool, where the social scene focused on balls in the Wellington Rooms. It was at one of the dances there that she met Rudolph von Steiger.

Source: Memorabilia p47, p53.

AFTER 1855 UNTIL BEFORE 1871

Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace was in business as an importer of goods from the East Indies.

Source: 1861 census.

??LATE 1850s

Isabel's younger brother, William Henry Lace, followed his uncle Ambrose and his father Joshua into the family solicitor's firm. As the rest of the family began to scatter through England and elsewhere, he remained in Liverpool.

Source: 1861 census IF this is the right person, but the William Henry Lace who is one of the lodgers at 4 York Street Liverpool is described as a "gentleman" not as a solicitor.

1858

Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace married Theodosia Fanny Walker, in Liverpool. They went to live at Christleton Old Hall on the outskirts of Chester. They had three children: Charles Verney Lace; a younger Theodosia; and Josephine.

Source: freebmd; 1861 census.

Sources for Christleton Old Hall: wikipedia with a list (not entirely accurate) of who lived there; and www.christleton.org.uk/site/oldpics/images/oldhall.htm which has a photograph probably taken around 1908.

APRIL 1861

Isabel and her sister Helena were living at 57 New Bath Street Southport, where they employed one general servant.

Source: 1861 census. Comment by Sally Davis: as was all-too-usual, the census official doesn't seem to have asked either of the sisters for the details of their sources of income. Isabel was listed as head of household, I supposed because she was older. I don't know how long Isabel and Helena had been living there, but as Isabel was about to be married, I presume they left the house within a month or two of census day.

SUMMER 1861

Isabel Lace married Rudolph von Steiger von Riggesberg at the fashionable All Saints Childwall Church in Liverpool. They went to Switzerland immediately afterwards so that Isabel could meet his family. She never got on with them, especially with his mother - communication was part of the trouble though so also was Isabel's lack of interest in domestic matters and the fact that she wasn't Swiss. Despite these difficulties, Isabel did continue to visit Rudolph's family at least until the 1880s.

By the time Isabel and Rudolph were married, Rudolph had left Melly, Forget and Co and set up his own business, selling American cotton to manufacturers in Germany, Switzerland and France. He had also begun to manifest the coughing-up of blood that was one of the early symptoms of TB.

Source: Memorabilia pp54-55, p59; and freebmd.

For All Saints Childwall: wikipedia and www.allsaintschildwall.org.uk

Several comments from Sally Davis:

Firstly about that surname: Isabel always used 'de' rather than 'von' when writing her surname, so I shall do so.

Secondly: it was most likely to be as a wedding present that Isabel was given a signet ring bearing the von Steiger family coronet. She still had it in the 1920s though she bequeathed it back to Rudolph's family in her Will. Source: Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger dated 6 March 1924.

Thirdly, it was not the best time to be marrying someone involved in the cotton industry - at the time of the marriage, Rudolph's business must have been badly affected by the American Civil War. However, Isabel makes no mention at all of the war in Memorabilia.

1861-MID 1860s

Back in Liverpool after their honeymoon trip, Isabel and Rudolph de Steiger set up home in the Liverpool suburb of Aigburth. They were rich enough to afford to have a one-horse carriage, which Isabel learned to drive; and to employ a groom. As a married woman without children, and not wanting to be involved in the minutiae of running her household, Isabel had a life of “rather lonely leisure” during the first years of her marriage. She tried to get involved with some local charities including the Cancer Hospital in Hope Street, and William Rathbone’s home nursing scheme, but her involvement didn’t last; she “had...no affinity or ability for a truly practical scheme” something she felt guilty about as “one of my many defects of character”. Source: Memorabilia p55, p59, p66, p100-101

Comments from Sally: although she doesn’t say so in so many words, Isabel gives the impression that she resented the amount of time Rudolph had to spend on business matters. The Rathbone Isabel means is William Rathbone VI, who set up what was the first district nursing scheme after the death of his first wife. And on the question of servants: because Isabel and Rudolph never appeared on the census as a married couple, I don’t know how many servants they employed.

1862

Isabel’s youngest sister Rosamond (sometimes spelled Rosamund) married Edmund Charles Burton, solicitor, of Daventry, Northamptonshire.

Comment by Sally Davis: Rosamund’s husband was the third generation of the Burton family to be a solicitor and act as town clerk of Daventry. The head of the family lived in the town at the house called The Lodge; though until his father died Rosamund and Edmund lived in a house on the High Street. Rosamund’s husband was important in the social life of the district; a regular Church of England church-goer; a member of the Pytchley hunt and of the National Hunt Committee. When he died, the town paid for a memorial to him which is now in Daventry’s Market Square. Rosamund and Edmund Charles had four daughters and one son, Edmund Gerald, who took over the family solicitor’s firm on his father’s death.

Sources for Edmund Charles Burton (1826-1907):

At www.waymarking.com a photo of the Burton Memorial in Market Sq Daventry and some details of his life.

Via www.genesreunited.co.uk to issues of the Northampton Mercury during the late 19th century, with quite a lot of coverage of the Burton family and their social set in Daventry. Including:

- issues of 8 September 1883 and 15 September 1883 on the marriage of Evelyn Margaret Burton to Thomas William Thornton of Kingsthorpe Hall. The Thorntons were another prominent local family.
- issue of 2 February 1889 which has a report on the Pytchley Hunt Ball: Mrs E C Burton and her unmarried daughters Rosamund, Constance and Blanche were all there.
- issues of 25 July 1890 and 1 August 1890 on the marriage of Rosamond (sic) Burton to William Rhodes of Floore Fields Daventry.

POSSIBLY AS EARLY AS 1864 although Isabel writes as if it was 1883

Isabel met Christian David Ginsburg through her friends William and Fanny Crosfield.

Source for her knowing him through the Crosfields: Memorabilia p169 in pages where the rest of the action is taking place in 1883.

Comments by Sally Davis: Isabel could have read some of Ginsburg’s work as early as 1864 and 1865 - two papers by him, on the Essenes and on the Kabbalah, were published by the Literary and Philosophical Society of Liverpool. However, she writes of him in Memorabilia as if she only knew his work in the 1860s, that she had not met him in person until 1883.

This is a bit puzzling because the Crosfields knew Ginsburg from the late 1850s. The Crosfields were Quakers, owners of a sugar importing and grocery business in Liverpool. The family were active supporters of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews. It was that Society's mission in Warsaw that had convinced the Jewish David Ginsburg to convert to Christianity in 1846 and receive the new forename 'Christian'. He later worked as a missionary for the Society, firstly in London and from 1857 to 1863 in Liverpool. Ginsburg married William Crosfield's sister Margaret in 1858. Margaret died in the summer of 1864, giving birth to their daughter, and in 1868 Christian David married Emilie, daughter of Friedrich Hausburg of Woolton, Liverpool.

Sources for Ginsburg: Memorabilia and his entry in Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 22 p337, which lists several more published works than are listed in the British Library catalogue.

British Library catalogue has these two early works:

Essenes: their History and Doctrines: An Essay, reprinted from the Transactions of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Liverpool. London: 1864.

The Kabbalah: its Doctrines, Development and Literature London and Liverpool: 1865.

?1866

Spending time in Switzerland, Isabel and Rudolph visited Davos. On their return to England Isabel wrote an article about their time there which became her first published piece of work. It appeared in the magazine The Queen; under the pseudonym Esmé Suisse.

Source: Memorabilia p57 however, at November 2015 I'm no longer sure that Isabel had got the right year for her stay at Davos and her article about it. I looked through issues of The Queen volume 40 - August to December 1866 - and couldn't find any references to Davos let alone an article on it; nor any articles under the pseudonym Isabel chose. I'm sure she and Rudolf did go to Davos one summer; perhaps it was 1867 or 1864.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm assuming that Isabel chose to send her account of Davos to The Queen because it was a paper she read herself. The full title of the weekly newspaper usually known as The Queen is: The Queen: The Lady's Newspaper and Court Chronicle. It purported to be aimed at a wealthy, leisured female readership with strictly feminine interests and narrow horizons. Several pages in each issue were given over to court and social news at home and abroad (there was no political news); several more to fashion, particularly Paris fashion; and several more to sewing - that is, embroidery, not making your own clothes. There was some coverage of sport, mostly archery and hunting, with a bit of croquet. There was a page on housekeeping but written on the assumption that the reader would be supervising her housekeeper, rather than doing any of the work herself. All such magazines are upwardly mobile, of course, but this one cost 6d, 7d if you had it posted, and that's a lot of money for a weekly paper in 1866. In September and October of 1866 there were several very short articles probably written by readers about places they had visited in Europe but like every other column in the magazine, they were published anonymously.

All in all, The Queen casts a surprising light on Isabel in her early 30s.

1867

Constance Helena Burton was born, daughter of Isabel's sister Rosamond Burton. Constance was a beneficiary of Isabel's Will, though rather belatedly, in a codicil drawn up two years after the main body of the Will.

Sources: Familysearch for the baptism; I haven't been able to find a birth registration. And: codicil to the Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger, signed 28 August 1926.

UNKNOWN DATE to LATE 1860s

As the decade progressed, Rudolph's TB got worse and eventually he and Isabel decided to move to a climate that might arrest his decline. Rudolph closed down his business in Liverpool and started up again in Alexandria, Egypt. Rudolph and Isabel lived in the suburb of Ramle (also seen as Ramleh), which was popular with Europeans. They didn't meet many Egyptians though they did attend balls and receptions given by the Khedive. The ex-pat community was small, and mostly made up of business people. Everyone spoke several languages; Isabel got used to conversing in French and Italian and even tried to learn some Arabic. She also took painting lessons from Dunelli, an Italian artist who specialised in 'picturesque' scenes. Isabel at least (she doesn't talk about her husband) was still a regular church-goer at the Protestant church in Alexandria, where she was in the choir. Amongst the people Isabel met at this time were Charles Gordon (Gordon of Khartoum) and Lady Anne Blunt. I think she must also have met Lady Anne's husband Wilfred Scawen Blunt though she doesn't say so in so many words.

Source: Memorabilia p59, p73-77, p90, p215.

Comment from Sally: as at July 2013 I've been unable to identify Dunelli. I can't find anything about him (or possibly her) on the web. I'm also slightly puzzled that Isabel says she met Gordon of Khartoum. According to his wikipedia page, he didn't arrive there to begin working for the Khedive until 1874. Lady Anne Blunt married Wilfred Scawen Blunt in 1869 so it's likely Isabel was acquainted with both of them. By the time Isabel was writing the Memorabilia, however, Wilfred's serial adulteries had caused them to be divorced so Isabel preferred to be rather vague about having met him.

Bénézit in English: Dictionary of Artists a vast work, published Editions Gründ Paris 2006.

In Volume 6 Cos-Dyc I looked for this Dunelli person with every spelling and mis-spelling of the surname that I could think of and still couldn't find an entry for him/her. However, none of the volumes has an entry for Isabel, either, so it was just Dunelli's bad luck, I suppose, not to be included, just like it was Isabel's although in her case there was probably anti-feminist prejudice going on as well.

1868

Isabel's sister Helena Cameron Lace married Rev John Turnbull.

Comment by Sally Davis: I would suppose that Isabel wasn't able to attend this marriage as she and Rudolph were in Egypt by this time. Rev John was the son of Robert Turnbull of Hackness in Yorkshire. After Cambridge University he had been ordained in 1862/63 and spent some time as a curate in the Isle of Man, before becoming curate of All Saints Childwall in 1864, a bit too late to marry Isabel to Rudolph.

Sources for Rev John Turnbull:

Alumni Cantabrigiensis seen on web so no volume number visible, but p244 in that volume.

At www.tenews.co.uk, the Temple Ewell Newsletter has a short article on Temple Ewell church, which was restored from a delapidated state, 1875-75, largely due to the efforts of Rev John Turnbull.

Proceedings of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East published by the Society 1881 p79: Rev John Turnbull organising a collection for the Society after Sunday service.

1869

Helena and John Turnbull's eldest child was born: Constance Mary Verney Turnbull, who became the residuary legatee of Isabel's Will. Also born that year was Rosamond and Edmund Charles Burton's daughter Blanche Isabel, who had two aunts Isabel - my Isabel and Edmund Charles' sister Isabel Burton.

Sources: freebmd; Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger 1924.

Comment by Sally Davis: Blanche Burton was the most likely of all Isabel's nieces to have been her god-child. However, you would expect in that case that Isabel would leave her something in her Will; but she didn't, it was Blanche's sister Constance who was the only Burton beneficiary.

1870

Isabel's uncle Ambrose Lace died.

Source: freebmd, probate registry.

1870-72

Rudolph was too ill to run his business properly, and it was also badly affected by the Franco-Prussian war in Europe. Isabel was his chief nurse.

Source: Memorabilia p73.

1871

Isabel's brother-in-law Rev John Turnbull became vicar of Temple Ewell, just outside Dover. He remained in post there until 1900.

Sources:

Alumni Cantabrigiensis seen on web so no volume number visible, but p244 in that volume.

31 DECEMBER 1872

Rudolph von Steiger von Riggesberg died in Alexandria.

Source: Probate registry, Will of Rudolph von Steiger von Riggesberg.

THAT'S THE END OF THIS FIRST FILE IN MY LIFE-BY-DATES OF ISABEL DE STEIGER. The next one covers 1873 to 1888.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert.

Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER (1836-1927). This second part of my life-by-dates begins with an ending: the death of Isabel's husband Rudolph von Steiger, on the last day of December 1872. It covers the period in which Isabel began rebuilding her life, and ends in May 1878, just before she joined the Theosophical Society.

Just re-stating the Golden Dawn connection:

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888 - that is, a few months after the last event in this file. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London in the early 1890s and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

31 DECEMBER 1872

Isabel's husband, Rudolph von Steiger von Riggesberg died in Alexandria. Rudolph von Steiger's Will had set up a trust fund to provide his widow with an income and at least for the next few decades Isabel was able to live independently provided she was careful. The trust fund's sole trustee was Henry Cassels Kay, a friend of Rudolph and Isabel in Alexandria.

Immediately after Rudolph's death, Isabel left Alexandria for a trip to Minet-el Basal and the Egyptian desert. As was proper, she began to wear black, but she didn't wear the full widow's weeds as strict observance of mourning wasn't much bothered with amongst the expats of Alexandria. She carried on not wearing widow's weeds when she returned to Europe, and her refusal to do so did cause comment there. Isabel was never a regular Christian church-goer after her husband's death.

Sources:

Probate registry. Rudolph appointed three executors to put his Will into effect: Charles Forget; William Crosfield; and Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lacey.

Memorabilia p73, p87, p90, p102.

Sources for Forget and Crosfield: census etc

Comment by Sally Davis: I give short biographies of the trustee and the executors because all three were important to Isabel in the coming years and were friends of hers as well.

The Trustee: HENRY CASSELS KAY and see 1903 in this life-by-dates.

Henry Cassels Kay was of Scottish descent, the son of a businessman who lived in Antwerp. He was born in 1827 and educated in Belgium. In 1844 he went to Egypt to work for Briggs and Co of Alexandria and Cairo, a leading bank. In 1854 the Times appointed him their correspondent in Alexandria. After a brief period working at Briggs and Co's offices in London, Cassels Kay returned to Alexandria as an employee of Tod, Rathbone and Co and it was during this period of his working life that Isabel and Rudolf knew him and his wife. As well as speaking several European languages, Cassels Kay studied literary Arabic. He retired and returned to live in Campden Hill (in 1874) but kept up a keen interest in Egypt: he worked at Arabic translation and articles on Egyptian culture and in 1880 he was elected a director of the Bank of Egypt. He was a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and of the Royal Asiatic Society whose Council he served on. He collected Islamic and other art. In 1859 he married Jane Ann Edmondstone Aytoun; they had one son.

Sources:

Memorabilia pp102-05.

Times 9 June 1903 p10: obituary.

The Banker's Magazine volume 39 1880 p66 announcement of his election as a director of the Bank of Egypt.

As a collector of art:

Via www.christies.com/lotfinder to sale 5644 13 July 2005: a table clock owned by Henry Cassels Kay and in his family until this sale. Made about 1900: inlaid mahogany with brass mountings.

Via google to Islamic Art catalogue for a sale 9 October 1900 published Christie Manson and Woods Ltd: p122 lots 162-64.

Executor: CHARLES FORGET and see other entries in this life-by-dates

Charles Isaac Forget was probably a partner in the firm Melly, Forget and Co. He definitely served as Swiss Consul in Liverpool. He and his wife were both Swiss by birth though they lived in England for many years. Forget had died by 1885 but the closeness between the Forget and Lace families had continued: in 1885 Charles' daughter Cécile Marguérite married Charles Verney Lace, Isabel's nephew, the son of Joshua Verney Lovett Lace and his wife Theodosia.

Executor: WILLIAM CROSFIELD but see also subsequent entries in this life-by-dates.

There are two William Crosfields, father and son. They ran a sugar-refining and grocery business in Liverpool. They were Quakers. The older William was an anti-slavery campaigner and friend of William Lloyd Garrison. Rudolph's executor was the son. William the younger married Fanny Elizabeth Job, in Liverpool, in 1865. Both William and Fanny were about Isabel's age - born around 1838. They had one child, Dora, born 1867.

ISABEL AT A CROSSROADS

Comment from Sally: Isabel never mentions having had any children. She may have chosen not to mention in Memorabilia, her memoir, that she had had children that had died; but I get the impression that she had never been pregnant. After all, for most of her marriage her husband was seriously ill. On a wider level, when she looked back at her twenties and early thirties after many decades, Isabel was rather ambivalent about her marriage and about being married. In Memorabilia p56 she describes herself as in a state of arrested development at the time. And on p73, of her early widowhood, she even says, "Strange to say, for the first time in my life I began to feel that I was really alive...I conclude that it was because, for the first time, I had to plan and decide a great deal for myself, with only my own judgement to rely upon". However, she reiterates many times in the book that the next decade was a time of restlessness, and grinding loneliness. From the vantage point of the early 1920s, she saw her life in the 1870s in spiritual terms. On Memorabilia p125 she describes the decade as one with a great deal of action but also as a period of “almost spiritual death” with time passing in “a sort of spiritual sleep”.

?1873

Isabel decided to train properly as an artist and to make a career for herself as a painter. She began by returning to England and enrolling as a student at the Slade School of Art, where she soon discovered how much she had to learn. However, she found it lonely in London lodgings, knowing no one, and soon left, to go to Florence to study with Belucci.

Source: Memorabilia p78 but Isabel doesn't give a date for this very important decision; nor for the short time she spent at the Slade. I do find her exact whereabouts at any time over the next few years rather hard to follow.

Comment from Sally: I think that in Memorabilia Isabel's teacher's name isn't spelled right. I haven't found any evidence for an artist called Belucci with one 'l'. However, there was an artist Giuseppe Bellucci with two 'ls' who lived in Florence at about the right time to have Isabel as a pupil. This Bellucci is in Bénézit's Dictionary of Artists a vast work, published Editions Gründ Paris 2006. Isabel is not in it.

In Volume 2 Bed-Bül: p111 Giuseppe Bellucci 1827-1882, a specialist in history paintings. Most well-known paintings now are:

Death of Alessandro de' Medici, exhibited Paris 1865

The Discovery of the Body of King Manfred of Sicily, exhibited 1880 at the Florence Exhibition

The Treaty of Bruzzolo; subsequently acquired by the king of Italy.

Memorabilia p78. Again, Isabel doesn't give an exact date for this, but she seems to remember her time in Florence as after her time at the Slade, and before the winter of 1873-74, which she spent back in Egypt.

?1873 ?1874

Isabel spent some time studying painting as a member of Carolus Duran's atelier in Paris.

Source: Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881 p87 issue of 19 March 1881, letter from Isabel: Ancient Mysteries.

NOT a source for this: Memorabilia, in which studying in Paris, and studying with Duran, is never mentioned.

Comment from Sally: there's plenty of coverage on the web of Carolus Duran, who is the dapper-looking man shown on the front cover of the catalogue of the 2015 Sargent exhibition at the National Portrait Gallery. If Isabel's period as a pupil of Carolus Duran lasted into 1874 she might have coincided with John Singer Sargent, who joined Duran's atelier in the middle of that year.

See wikipedia for Charles Auguste Émile Durand 1837-1917, and there are many other websites featuring him and reproducing his paintings. Mostly a portraitist but I also saw a nude and a couple of landscapes on the web. See also:

At www.jssgallery.org/Paintings/Carolus-Duran:

At www.studiorousar.com/2011/03/21/carolus-duran-methods with some details about his painting methods and the influence of Velázquez on his work.

1873-74

Having been unable to settle in either London or Florence, Isabel returned to Egypt and spent the winter there, thinking about her long-term future. This period of reflection resulted in her rejecting the idea of moving to Paris and choosing instead to return to England and make a better go of things in London.

Source: Memorabilia p78.

Comment from Sally: I'd say Isabel had been a bit too keen to move on after her husband's death. Always an active woman, she had needed something to do, but it was too soon to be deciding what and where, with her husband not properly mourned yet.

1874

Henry Cassels Kay retired from Tod Rathbone and Co and returned to England. He and his wife Jane Ann went to live at 11 Durham Villas Kensington.

Source: Times 9 June 1903 p10: obituary of Henry Cassels Kay.

SPRING 1874

Isabel returned to London and found rooms in Kensington, firstly in Young Street off the High Street, the first of several very temporary addresses in the district. This might have been the time that Isabel spent one term at Heatherley's School of Art, where artists could go if they were more or less trained but as yet had no studio of their own. She settled down to improve her figure-painting technique and to do some oil paintings of a high-enough standard to be exhibited. She also began to form a new social life for herself, singing as a contralto in the choir which was based in the new Royal Albert Hall; and joining the Wagner Society.

Source for Isabel in London: Memorabilia p90, p92-93, p107, p123 but without good dates.

Source for founding of the Wagner Society in England:

The Pursuit of High Culture: John Ella and Chamber Music in Victorian London by Christina Bashford 2007. On p304 London Wagner Society founded 1872 by Edward Dannreuther.

For Heatherley's see its website at www.heatherleys.org. A list of its well-known ex-pupils includes Byrne Jones, Millais, Leighton and Kate Greenaway.

Comment by Sally Davis: though Isabel wasn't at Heatherley's for long, she might have coincided there with two other future GD members: Henrietta Farr and Henry Marriott Paget, who married each other in 1879. I haven't been able to tie down exactly when the Pagets were students, but it was some time during the 1870s.

Source for Henrietta Farr and Henry Marriott Paget at Heatherley's: The Correspondence of Samuel Butler with his Sister May edited and with an introduction by Daniel F Howard. University of Cambridge Press; University of California Press 1962: p80, letter dated 21 August 1879 and written while Butler was in Switzerland; and footnote 2 on p81.

FRIDAY

EARLY CAREER AS A PROFESSIONAL ARTIST so say mid- to late-1870s

Isabel's painting style was (in her own words) "somewhat perverted by a strong passion for Alma-Tadema's work". Looking back, she felt that it had been "not the right technique for me to have imitated" and saw Alma-Tadema's work as "cold and soulless".

Source:

Memorabilia p58, p86.

Sources for Laurence Alma-Tadema. Plenty of them, but I looked through these two:

Royal Academy Exhibitors 1769-1904 compiled by Algernon Graves. Volume 1 A-D pp28-29 which shows that Alma-Tadema was showing work at the RA in 1869. He moved to London in 1871 and exhibited at least one painting every year in the 1870s. Roman, Greek and Egyptian subjects and settings predominated.

The Biography and Catalogue Raisonné of the Paintings of Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema by Vern G Swanson. London: Garton and Co 1990. Swanson suggests that Alma-Tadema's work was so hugely popular during his lifetime because his paintings made it easy for the British to equate their imperial project with the Roman one: he painted Victorian bourgeois scenarios in Roman settings and Roman clothes. Isabel could have seen Alma-Tadema's work in Europe in the late 1860s if she had been to the right galleries but his style changed slightly after he moved to England and saw works by the Pre-Raphaelites: they brightened his palette.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm inclined to agree with Isabel about the rather soul-less nature of Alma-Tadema's work - so often, the people in his paintings seem to be less important than the details of the Roman architecture they are shown in.

AUTUMN 1874

Isabel exhibited some pictures at a major venue for the first time. She showed three oil paintings at the 4th autumn exhibition at the Corporation of Liverpool's Walker Art Gallery: The Coming Squall; "Basking in Heaven's Serenest Light..."; and Philae, Egypt.

Comment by Sally Davis on this momentous occasion for Isabel! I hope she was there at the exhibition's opening. The Corporation of Liverpool had organised its first autumn exhibition in 1871. The venue is huge and in the 1880s and 1890s there were around 1000 exhibits in every year's show. Isabel showed more paintings in the Walker's autumn exhibitions than at any other gallery or Society's exhibitions: Liverpool was her home town; and she had friends on the Corporation committees that organised this big event. One friend in particular, Philip H Rathbone, was on the Exhibition Committee from 1874 at the latest, to 1894; then his place was taken by another Rathbone, Herbert. WHAT ABT NO ISABEL PNTGS IN THE LIVERPOOL CORP COLLN GET THE INFO

Source: 4th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Oil and Watercolours, catalogue 1874: unnumbered page listing which Corporation of Liverpool councillors were on the various committees that ran the exhibition; list of exhibitors p47, Isabel as "de Steiger, Isabel" giving Ramle, Egypt, as her address. On p3 catalogue number 6: The Coming Squall - Mediterranean - Ramle Egypt; at £13/13. On p3 catalogue number 11 with the title line left blank but a two-line quote below:

"Basking in Heaven's serenest light

Those groups of lovely palm trees bright". Price £11.

And p12 catalogue number 220: Philae Egypt, also with a quote:

"The ruined shrines and towers that seem

The relics of a splendid dream". Also priced at £11.

Both the quotes are from Lalla Rookh: An Oriental Romance published 1817 by Thomas Moore (1779-1852).

Further comments by Sally Davis: I don't know when Isabel painted these three first exhibited paintings and of course I haven't seen any of them. >From their titles, I'd say they were landscapes; or possibly landscapes with figures. I think it's safe to assume that the basic sketches for all three paintings were probably done during Isabel's recent winter in Egypt. Again, just from their titles, they sound like subjects she very often returned to in the future. They were the kind of art that was popular with the newly-rich middle classes, who were buying art works for the first time: scenes inspired by popular literature; and scenes of exotic lands and peoples. Isabel had been lucky, in a way, going to live in Egypt: scenes of exotic lands were right outside her door there.

However, Isabel's decision to become a professional artist indicated that she was aiming higher now. The training she did over the next two or three years equipped her with the skills needed to draw the human body convincingly. The kind of painting thought of as 'great' - allegory, myth, political and history painting - was dominated by depictions of the human body, done large and with the emphasis on accurate portrayal of muscles, faces and - the ultimate challenge - hands. It was a training that women were, in general, barred from and Isabel herself had great trouble getting it; but she was determined to paint 'great' art.

For general information on the different kinds of genres, and lists of the most important artists see

Popular 19th Century Painting: A Dictionary of European Genre Painters. By Philip Hook and Mark Poltimore. Antique Collectors' Club 1986: especially p21 though NB Isabel is not mentioned or listed anywhere in the book.

1874/75

Isabel joined the British National Association of Spiritualists (BNAS).

Source for BNAS: its descendant, the College of Psychic Studies. See its website at www.collegeofpsychicstudies.co.uk. The College has the archive of BNAS and a complete run of its magazine Light, first issued on 8 January 1881 and still being published now. The BNAS was founded in 1873.

Source for Isabel joining it: Memorabilia p139.

Comment by Sally on the importance of the BNAS to Isabel: although she doesn't mention it specifically, it's clear from Memorabilia that Isabel's membership of the BNAS led to many friendships, and helped her settle to life in London. However, most of Isabel's spiritualist friends are not mentioned in Memorabilia.

1 JANUARY 1875

The Theosophical Society was founded in the USA by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott.

Sources: I got the information from www.open.ac.uk/researchprojects/makingbritain/content/theosophical-society

SEPTEMBER 1875

Isabel's younger brother, the solicitor William Henry Lace, died, aged 40.

Source: Probate Registry.

Comment by Sally Davis: almost certainly a most reluctant solicitor, just like his father had been, William Henry was the last member of the Lace family to work for the family legal firm; though out of respect especially to Isabel's uncle Ambrose Lace, the name was kept in the firm's title for many years. I can't find any evidence that William Henry married - he certainly hadn't by census day 1871 when his sister Constantia was keeping house for him.

AUTUMN 1875

Isabel exhibited four more paintings at the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition: Hagar in the Desert; The Evening Meal, Ramle, Egypt; Mansours Tent; and On the Road to Aboukir.

Source:

5th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1875. In the list of exhibitors p47. List of paintings: p13 catalogue number 277 Hagar in the Desert, for sale at £15; p16 catalogue number 342 The Evening Meal, Ramle, Egypt, price £10/10; p17 catalogue number 364 Mansours Tent (which surely should be Mansour's Tent) £30; and p18 catalogue number 405 On the Road to Aboukir for sale at £20. They were all oil paintings.

Comments by Sally Davis: in the list of exhibitors Isabel's address was given as Ramle, Egypt. She certainly used local scenes in all four paintings. However, I think she had probably left Egypt by this time.

It was brave of Isabel to tackle the Old Testament story of Hagar and Ishmael, particularly so soon after she decided to become a professional artist: even a quick search with google will show you how many other artists painted it. They included such greats as Rubens and Tiepolo and it seems also to have been a very popular subject amongst northern European Renaissance artists. I believe Isabel exhibited the Hagar painting once more, with the title 'the dismissal of Hagar'; but in the rest of her career as an artist she only painted one more Biblical character - John the Baptist - and she never exhibited that painting, as far as I can tell.

AUTUMN 1875

Isabel's sister Helena's son Verney Cameron Turnbull was born, in Ewell in Kent. The only other member of the Lace family to publish a book, he was one of Isabel's beneficiaries in her Will.

Sources: freebmd and Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger dated 6 March 1924.

PROBABLY MID-LATE 1870s

Isabel waded into the ongoing debate about whether women could paint great art - or at all - by rebutting some criticisms of works by women in the Royal Academy shows. She wrote letters to the papers saying that if women painters' technique was poor it was only because the RA wouldn't let them train in its school. As a result (she thought) not only did the RA refuse to show any of her work for many years, she was also rejected by the Society of Women Artists. In 1882 the RA did exhibit one of Isabel's works but she was sure it was because they got her name wrong, reading it - and consequently labelling her painting - as by "Miss F Steeger".

Source: Memorabilia p107, p110, p130-31. Isabel doesn't say where or exactly when her letters were published. I did check in the Times for the late 1870s as that seemed a likely time, and it's easy to search using Timesonline, but I couldn't find any from her. I'm at a loss how else and where else to follow up.

Comment by Sally: I wonder if the RA would have accepted Isabel's painting, if they'd got her name right?! Although in Memorabilia Isabel gives the impression that the Society of Women Artists banned her altogether for sticking her neck out on such a contentious issue, the SWA's catalogues show that Isabel exhibited paintings at the SWA on several occasions between the late 1870s and the late 1880s.

AGAIN PROBABLY MID-LATE 1870s

Isabel read at least some works by the French spiritualist and writer Allen Kardec. She read them in the English translations by Anna Blackwell (who later joined the GD) though she doesn't seem to have known Blackwell personally. Kardec had invented the concept which Blackwell translated with the word 'spiritism', which attempted to put together spiritualism with reincarnation.

Source for Blackwell's translations of Kardec into English: British Library catalogue.

1875 Spiritualist Philosophy: the Spirits' Book

1876 Experimental Spiritism: the Medium's Book

1878 Practical Spiritism: Heaven and Hell.

Source for Isabel reading Kardec: Memorabilia p153 but she doesn't mention which of these she read; perhaps she read all of them as they were meant to be read as a set. Despite Blackwell's efforts, spiritism didn't catch on in the UK even amongst spiritualists.

Comment by Sally Davis: these works were amongst the earliest Isabel read, according to Memorabilia.

1876

This was the only year between 1874 and 1895 that Isabel didn't show a single painting at any of the major gallery exhibitions.

SPRING 1876

Alma-Tadema's Cleopatra was shown at the Royal Academy.

Source: Royal Academy Exhibitors 1769-1904 Volume 1 A-D pp28-29.

The Biography and Catalogue Raisonné of the Paintings of Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema by Vern G Swanson. London: Garton and Co 1990, from which it's clear that this isn't a typical Alma-Tadema with people being upstaged by Roman architecture. Instead, Cleopatra, in close-up, looks sidelong at the viewer from a large, soft cushion, one shoulder bare, breast just about covered by a leopard-skin. Comment by Sally Davis: at the end of the 1870s Isabel painted four scenes from the incident-packed life of Cleopatra. I've never seen any of them so I don't know what they were like; but from their titles I think I can be sure Isabel's Cleopatras were not like Alma-Tadema's! However, I do think Isabel might have been inspired to get to work, by this painting which she must surely have seen at the RA that spring. Also on view from Alma-Tadema that year were An Audience at Agrippa's; and After the Dance (which despite its title has a Roman setting).

BEGINNING OF 1877

Isabel's sister-in-law Theodosia Fanny Lace died (wife of Joshua Verney Lovett Lace), aged 42. Isabel's eldest sister Constantia moved in with her brother at Christleton Old Hall to look after his three young children.

Sources: freebmd and census 1881.

DURING 1877

Isabel exhibited a painting in Ireland for the first time. It was shown in Dublin, at the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts' annual exhibition. Its title was given in the catalogue as 'Mansours'.

Source:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel.

Comments by Sally Davis:

On the painting: I suppose it was the same oil painting that she had shown at the Walker Art Gallery in 1875 as 'Mansours Tent' (which I think should be Mansour's Tent). This time as catalogue number 164; £20. Isabel also exhibited works at the Royal Hibernian Academy in 1882, 1883, 1885, 1887 and 1894.

On where Isabel was living at the time: I don't know how the gallery was meant to contact Isabel if the painting was sold: she gave them no address for correspondence! She must have been - as she so often was! - between rentals.

DURING 1878

Isabel lived at 3 Longridge Road in Earl's Court for a short time.

Source:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 entry for De Steiger, Isabel; painter. Information taken from catalogue of the Society's exhibition March-May 1878; by the exhibition of 1879 Isabel had moved away.

12 FEBRUARY 1878

Theodosia Lace's widower, Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace, died aged 46. Constantia became legal guardian of her two nieces and her nephew.

Sources:

Probate registry information including the guardianship of Theodosia Catherine Lovett Lace, Charles Verney Lace and Josephine Constance Stanley Lace, all still minors.

London Gazette 23 April 1878.

Comment by Sally Davis on this sequence of deaths. There seem to be two trends in the Lace family: one is to die very young - which doesn't just affect the men; and the other is to live to a remarkable age. Isabel's sister Constantia stayed living with at Old Christleton Hall with her nieces and nephew. All three of the children died relatively young.

MARCH-MAY 1878

Isabel showed three pictures at the exhibition of what was then called the Society of Lady Artists, in London: Slave Girl of the Harem; Consuelo; and a portrait of Mrs Patterson.

Source for the exhibits:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 entry for De Steiger, Isabel; painter. Paintings exhibited 1878: catalogue numbers 354 (£16); 298 (£16); and 401.

Dates of the exhibition: Times Monday 18 March 1878 p4 a typically patronising report on the Society's 1878 exhibition, which had just opened at the Society's own galleries in Great Marlborough Street. There were 800 works, about half the number that had originally been submitted to the Society. None of Isabel's works were mentioned. Times Saturday 27 April 1878 p2 an announcement that the exhibition would close on 4 May 1878.

Further information on Consuelo:

This is not the same painting as the genre scene of a Spanish girl with a tambourine that Isabel showed in 1879. It's actually an early attempt by Isabel to portray something of the Mysteries: In Memorabilia Isabel mentions, "George Sand's marvellous novel Consuelo, in which she describes the mysterious underground grotto with its strange 'well' scenes, and the powerful secret order of which Count Albert was the leader and head...it was the mystery that enthralled me. I ought to have been a little more inquisitive".

Isabel's quote is reproduced in Rudolf Steiner in Britain: A Documentation of His Ten Visits 1902-25 by Crispian Villeneuve. Forest Row: Temple Lodge 2004. In Section: A New Birth p592 Interlude (1913-21).

And further information on Mrs Patterson:

I'm not quite sure whether this is two women or one; Occam's Razor would suggest it's one:

At www.theosociety.org/pasadena The Letters of H P Blavatsky to A P Sinnett etc editor A T Barker are online. Letter number 1, with no date, written by Blavatsky in Bombay, refers to a Mrs and Mr Patterson, friends of the Sinnetts.

The American spiritualist medium Mrs S E Patterson:

Wikipedia on the Seybert Commission, which arose from a donation of money by a Mr Seybert to the University of Pennsylvania to be used to investigate the claims of spiritualism. The University's Commission was taking evidence between 1884 and 1887 and its final Report was published in 1887. Mrs S E Patterson was one of the first mediums investigated by the Commission. She used a slate to write down communications she received in a trance. However, she tended to freeze and not be able to perform at all when members of the Commission were watching her. It could have worked out a lot worse for her, though: the Commission members caught plenty of other mediums in the act of defrauding their clients.

In Madame Blavatsky Revisited by Joseph Howard Tyson. New York, Lincoln, Shanghai: iUniverse 2006. Seen via google and I cldn't find a page number: there's a reference to a Mrs S E Patterson. Dr Furness attended one of her seances on behalf of the University of Pennsylvania Commission. He admired the theatrical effects she used to create a receptive atmosphere, including playing on a small organ. But then she channelled two spirits, one German and one Italian, neither of which could speak their supposed native language. Dr Furness wasn't impressed.

Isabel's painting of Mrs Patterson wasn't for sale and was, presumably, given by her to the sitter. She exhibited it once more, in 1879.

The next file in this life-by-dates sequence begins June 1878, when Isabel joined the newly-founded London Lodge of the Theosophical Society; and ends in autumn 1882.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 May 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER 1836-1927, continuing her life-by-dates: the period from June 1878 to autumn 1882, with Isabel continuing her career as a painter while also becoming more involved in London's occult scene.

This particular update: September 2017

SALLY DAVIS

Just re-stating the Golden Dawn connection:

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888 - that is, a few months after the last event in this file. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London in the early 1890s and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

27 JUNE 1878

Isabel went to 38 Great Russell Street for the meeting which formally founded the London Lodge of the Theosophical Society.

Sources:

Date of the meeting: The Early Days of Theosophy in Europe by A P Sinnett. London: Theosophical Publishing House Ltd 1922; p11, quoted at the theosophy.wiki on London Lodge. Though Sinnett was not at the meeting himself, he gives a list of some of the people who were there. Sinnett's list includes C C Massey who was elected its first president; Emily Kislingbury who was elected its first secretary; Dr George Wyld, a later president; and Dr H J Billing (see below); but not Isabel.

Confirmation that Isabel was there: Memorabilia p141, p243 although she couldn't remember the exact date of the meeting. She confused it with the event of December 1878 immediately below – her introduction to Helena Petrovna Blavatsky.

See theosophy.wiki on London Lodge for further information and the sources.

Comment by Sally Davis: C C Massey and Isabel became good friends. I presume Isabel joined the London Lodge; though she doesn't specifically say so in Memorabilia.

DECEMBER 1878

Isabel met Helena Petrovna Blavatsky for the first time, at Mrs Hollis-Billing's house in Sydenham. Mrs Hollis-Billing's seances were known for their focus on the participants' past lives and were Isabel's introduction to the concept of reincarnation. Mrs Hollis-Billing's spirit guide was Ski (pronounced sky), who when last living had been a North American Indian. Isabel attended several seances at Mrs Hollis-Billing's. At one of them, she allowed Ski to describe one of her past lives. Oh dear! - "my record was not agreeable!" - Mrs Hollis-Billing told her that she'd been a nun walled up in her own convent for breaking her vows.

Comment by Sally: Isabel had been introduced to Mrs Hollis-Billing by Dr George Wyld. Other guests at Mrs Hollis-Billing's soiree to meet Blavatsky were Charles Carleton Massey; and Rev William Alexander Ayton and his wife Anne, who later joined the GD. Charles Massey is mentioned in Memorabilia but the Aytons are not.

Source for Ski, the founding event and Isabel's past life: Memorabilia p141, p152, p243. Isabel's past life as a nun meant that in at least one reincarnation she had been living as a Roman Catholic: a nasty surprise for someone brought up as an Evangelical Protestant.

Source for the date:

The Theosophical Enlightenment by Joscelyn Godwin. Published by the State University of New York Press in its Western Esoteric Traditions series 1994. On p307-08 Col Olcott and Helena Petrovna Blavatsky spent two weeks in England, at some point between December 1878 and February 1879, breaking their trip from the USA to India. The Aytons met them during that fortnight. Sources for this are The Spiritualist volume XIV January 1879: 41-42; and later Olcott's Old Diary Leaves volume 2 pp 4-9.

Information on the part played by Mary J Hollis-Billing:

At www.blavatskyarchives.com/hollis.htm there's a reprint of an article originally published in the journal The Medium and Daybreak issue of 19 December 1879 pp796-97: Madame H P Blavatsky, by Mary J Hollis-Billing. Despite being "in great haste to proceed on her journey to India", Blavatsky had stayed with Hollis-Billing for several days "at Norwood". C C Massey was another visitor to Hollis-Billing during Blavatsky's stay; no other person's name was mentioned in the article. Mary Hollis-Billing doesn't give any dates for Blavatsky's time as her house-guest.

Website psychictruthinfo is the web page of the medium Jonathan Koons. It has a section Mediums of the Past with a page on Mary Hollis, later Mrs Hollis-Billing: well-known American medium who visited the UK in 1874 and 1880. Koon's information comes from an article on Mrs H-B published in Spiritual Notes volume 1 p262.

The www.encyclopedia.com gives Mary Hollis' DOB as 1837; in Jeffersonville Indiana.

At www.tswiki.net there's a reference to Hollis-Billing playing a part in the formation of the TS's London Lodge, but not being a member of it herself. Information from: Reader's Guide to the Mahatma Letters to A P Sinnett editors George E Linton and Virginia Hanson. Adyar Chennai India: Theosophical Publishing House 1972 p219.

On a wiki page at wikipedia re TS's London Lodge: founded June 1878 by Charles Carleton Massey. In the early 1880s it was disrupted by the arguments over Kingsford's election as President of the British TS in 1883. A group of its members defected and formed Blavatsky Lodge.

PROBABLY JUNE OR DECEMBER 1878

Isabel did a painting for Mary Hollis-Billing, of Mrs H-B's spirit guide, a North American Indian called Ski.

Source: Memorabilia p141 and p141 footnote 1; though without a date.

Comment by Sally Davis. This was a painting done at second - if not third - hand. Mrs Hollis-Billing gave Isabel a photograph to work on, a photograph of a rough sketch of Ski supposed to have been done from life. Isabel gave the finished painting was to Mrs Hollis-Billing - that was the whole idea - and it was never exhibited as far as I know.

EARLY 1879

Isabel was at another address that turned out to be temporary - 63 Bedford Gardens, off Kensington Church Street.

Source:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 entry for De Steiger, Isabel; painter.

1878-1879

Isabel painted four paintings illustrating dramatic incidents in the life of Cleopatra; and two others based on classical themes.

Source for there being four Cleopatra paintings:

Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 p14. I saw this report via google and I'm not sure which exhibition it was covering - probably that year's Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition. The report said that Isabel had "just sold the last of four Cleopatra pictures"; and that she was working on two other paintings based on classical subjects.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm not quite sure which two other paintings Isabel was meaning when the Journal's reporter spoke to her: between 1879 and 1886 she exhibited several that might answer to that description. And on the subject of the Cleopatras, I've seen quite a few different titles for them:

- Cleopatra's Deadly Resolve in the Temple of Isis - as exhibited in 1879 at the Royal Society of British Artists
- Cleopatra "Personating" the Goddess Isis (what does that mean??) - as exhibited at the Royal Albert Hall spring show in 1879

I did wonder whether the two above were the same painting; but in May 1879 they were both being exhibited at the same time.

- Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle from the Priestess of Isis - as exhibited in the autumn 1879 at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool

A sub-set of two:

- Cleopatra Before the Battle of Actium; and
- Cleopatra after the Battle of Actium

Which makes five!

In Memorabilia Isabel confuses me completely by referring to I'm not sure how many of them, just as 'Cleopatra'! For example on p58 she refers to painting 'Cleopatra' (sic) in the style of Alma-Tadema. At the time, Isabel was a great admirer of his - as part of her early training, she copied many of his works. Looking back, however, she thought his style was not one she should have tried to imitate. Magazines reviewing the major art exhibitions are no better and maybe some of their critics never did become aware that there was more than one.

Elsewhere In Memorabilia (p278) Isabel says that one of the set of two before/after Cleopatras was bought by her Liverpool friends William and Fanny Crosfield, in 1880, after it was shown at the Walker Art Gallery. Their daughter Dora inherited it and still had it on her walls in the early 1920s. So which painting is it? No painting with either of those titles was ever shown by Isabel at the Walker; so perhaps Isabel means 'Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle...' - presumably before the battle of Actium.

However many there were, and whatever their correct titles, for a few years around the time she painted them, the Cleopatra paintings made Isabel relatively well-known.

Sources:

Bazaar Exchange and Mart and Journal of the Household volumes 20-21 1879 p81 reported on that year's Fine Arts exhibition at the Royal Albert Hall, which had 1010 works in it. The critic recommended visitors to the exhibition to seek out the Cleopatra painting Isabel was showing; and bucked the general trend by giving it its full title (hooray!) - "Cleopatra Personating the Goddess Isis".

Building News and Engineering Journal volume 38 1880 p360 another review of the Royal Albert Hall spring exhibition also gave Cleopatra Personating the Goddess Isis a special mention.

The Academy volume 18 1880 number 437 issue of 18 September 1880 p209 put one of the Cleopatra paintings in a list of "notable pictures" being shown at the Royal Manchester Institution. As the list also included G F Watts' Psyche and Burne-Jones' The Music Lesson, the magazine was paying Isabel quite a compliment.

The magazine Public Opinion volumes 41-42 1882 p490 mentioned a poem inspired by one of the Cleopatras, calling the four of them "Madame de Steiger's celebrated pictures".

The complimentary poem was a sonnet, by a poet about whom I've not been able to find anything at all except his name - Henry George Hellon - which might in any case be a writing name not his real one. It was published in Hellon's second volume of poetry: Daphnis: A Sicilian Pastoral, and Other Poems. London: Kegan Paul Trench and Co 1881. On p76: Sonnet on Viewing a Picture of Cleopatra:

In Isis' temple sits the mighty Queen,
Draped in a gown of gossamer and gold,
Through which her lovely form, fair to behold,
Peers, sweet as peers the moon through silver sheen
When misty vapours veil the fairy scene!
Yet o'er her brow some mystery seems to fold,
And in her eyes her future fate foretold;
With anger burning, passionate her mien!

Her dreams of death, of Antony, and all
The splendour of the past! her glory gone,
And throne a wreck, where monarch feigned to fall;

Her chiefs and army lost, her power undone!
Seized with despair, she deigns not God to call,
But, woe-worn, seeks a death her legions shun!

The book was reviewed in The Theosophist volume 3, April 1882 pp177-178, though the review focused on the longer poem The Seer, which had a myriad of esoteric references in it. Public Opinion, too, noted that the poems were “deeply versed in the occult philosophy” so perhaps Isabel knew his work.

Also DURING 1879

Isabel met Mrs Going at the British National Association of Spiritualists.

Source: Memorabilia p144.

Comment by Sally Davis: Mrs Going was a wealthy widow who (when Isabel met her) was living in Park Street in Mayfair. As at March 2017 I haven't been able to identify Mrs Going for sure. It seems as though their friendship didn't last: Isabel writes about Mrs Going as though she was deceived by her first impressions of the woman, saying that she was not an intellectual, and that her claims of being an accomplished mystic were exaggerated. However, Isabel had cause to be very grateful to Mrs Going: it was through her that she met Anna Bonus Kingsford - see June 1879, with whom she began to explore the world of the occult systematically.

MARCH-MAY 1879

Isabel showed one work at that year's exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists: A Daughter of the Gods.

Sources:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 entry for De Steiger, Isabel; painter. Paintings exhibited 1879. Daughter of the Gods was catalogue number 768, for sale at £8.

BY MAY 1879

After several years of not staying anywhere long, Isabel moved into Mrs Charity's house at 8 Hornton Street, round the back of Kensington Church Street. She had a studio in its basement.

Earliest source for Isabel at that address:

The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917. Compiled by Jane Johnson for the Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First printed 1975; V&A's copy is the reprint of 1993: p130.

Comment by Sally Davis: moving in with another woman artist, and meeting lots of new people who shared her interests, Isabel felt that she had found a home for the first time since her husband had died. Looking back on the early 1880s, she saw her years as Mrs Charity's tenant as the happiest time in her life, and as the time she was finally able to concentrate on improving the way she drew and painted nudes.

Source for Isabel's recollection of this time: Memorabilia p208.

MAY 1879

Isabel began to exhibit her Cleopatra paintings: Cleopatra's Deadly Resolve in the Temple of Isis was shown at an exhibition of the Royal Society of British Artists in London.

Source:

The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917. Compiled by Jane Johnson for the Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First printed 1975; V&A's copy is the reprint of 1993: p130 with Cleopatra's Deadly Resolve as catalogue number 21, for sale at £40 - which seems rather cheap. Isabel only showed one other painting at the RSBA; in 1881.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel was not a member of the Royal Society of British Artists:

Royal Society of British Artists Exhibitors 1824-1892 and 1893-1910. Both published in a limited edition of 600 copies. Compiler Maurice Bradshaw, secretary general of the Federation of British Artists. 1973: F Lewis Publishers Ltd of The Tithe House, Leigh-on-Sea. Isabel wasn't listed in either volume. The only GD member who was a member of the Society at this time was Henry Marriott Paget.

Dates of the exhibition: Times Thursday 1 May 1879 p1 in a list of adverts from galleries whose exhibitions had just opened. The Society's 56th exhibition was being held at the Suffolk Street galleries in Pall Mall. Times Saturday 7 June 1879 p2 didn't have the advert in it so I assume the exhibition had ended.

MAY TO AUGUST 1879

Isabel showed Cleopatra Personating the Goddess Isis at the Royal Albert Hall spring exhibition. She also showed her portrait of Mrs Patterson.

Source:

Royal Albert Hall of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Works of Modern Artists 1879 price 6d. I think this was the first such exhibition; there were 1010 works in it. Unlike subsequent exhibitions at the RAH, this one did have some paintings by famous artists: Leighton (p5); Alma Tadema (p8). Future GD members Henrietta Farr and her husband-to-be Henry Marriott Paget also showed some work. Isabel's two were both oil paintings: p23 catalogue number 307 - Cleopatra Personating the Goddess Isis for sale at £15/15. And p29 catalogue number 405 - portrait of Mrs Patterson, which was not for sale.

Comment by Sally Davis: the portrait of Mrs Patterson was getting its second outing - Isabel had shown it at the Society of Lady Artists in 1878. I imagine she was hoping for more portrait commissions, but - judging by the works I know about - that didn't happen. She painted only a handful more portraits, mostly for friends.

For the dates of the exhibition:

Times Thursday 1 May 1879 p1 and Times Wednesday 6 August 1879 p1 showing that the exhibition was still open, even though the social season was over by now.

JUNE 1879

Isabel went to dinner at Mrs Going's house. That evening she ate her first vegetarian meal, and met Anna Bonus Kingsford. Isabel and Dr Kingsford became close friends, Isabel thinking of Dr Kingsford with "regard and even love" and admiring her as "a sort of modern incarnation of Pallas Athene". Isabel decided that she preferred Kingsford's focus on western, Christian esotericism to Blavatsky's increasing emphasis on the occultism of the East. She and Kingsford also agreed that the existence of Blavatsky's mahatmas was "possible, but not proven". When Dr Kingsford began to hold meetings at her house in Park Street, to discuss and elaborate her view of western hermeticism, Isabel went to them regularly. Other regular attenders were Charles Massey, Dr George Wyld, and Francesca Arundale whom Isabel got to know well. After Dr Kingsford's death Isabel was very quick to leap to her defence whenever her reputation as a mystic or as a doctor was questioned.

Source: Memorabilia p144, p146, p168.

Source for Anna Bonus Kingsford as Pallas Athene: Occult Review volume 6 number 5 November 1907 pp296-97. And for both women's scepticism about Blavatsky's claims: Occult Review volume 45 number 2 February 1927 p78.

Comment by Sally: after Isabel's death, the editor of Occult Review described Isabel as a woman who had achieved (especially for her times) "unusual mental independence". As she was also "frank and outspoken" and "unsparing" in her criticism when she felt it was merited, she inspired as much dislike and fear as friendliness amongst people she knew. Dr Kingsford was one of the few women in Isabel's life that she could meet on an equal footing intellectually; and both women derived great benefit from their talks and appreciated the level of their relationship very much.

AUTUMN 1879

After a gap of three years, Isabel showed some paintings in Liverpool at the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition: one of her Cleopatra paintings, exhibited as Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle from the Priestess of Isis; and A Daughter of the Gods.

9th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1879. The Walker's autumn exhibition was always one of the biggest in the country: this year there were 1356 exhibits. List of exhibitors p121. And the two paintings which were both in oils: p19 catalogue number 187 - Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle from the Priestess of Isis, for sale at £70 which I think is the highest price Isabel had dared to ask so far in her career. And p38 catalogue number 518 - A Daughter of the Gods for the modest sum of £5/5.

Comment by Sally Davis: A Daughter of the Gods had also been shown at the Society of Lady Artists in spring 1879. It was after this exhibition that the Crosfields bought their Cleopatra painting.

EARLY TO MID 1880s to at least the EARLY 1890s

Christian David Ginsburg's works on the Essenes and on the Kabbala were being read by those people who later became "members of the Hermetic and Rosicrucian Orders" and by members of the Theosophical Society; though they weren't well known outside those intellectual circles.

Source: Memorabilia p171.

British Library catalogue for the works which interested members of the GD:

Essenes: their History and Doctrines: An Essay, reprinted from the Transactions of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Liverpool. London: 1864.

The Kabbalah: its Doctrines, Development and Literature. London and Liverpool: 1865.

Comment by Sally: by "Hermetic and Rosicrucian Orders", Isabel means the Hermetic Society and the GD. Just to reiterate: she never mentions the GD by name in Memorabilia.

BEFORE 1882, PROBABLY AROUND 1880-81

Anna Bonus Kingsford was preparing her book The Perfect Way, The Finding of Christ, which was based on her own visions. She asked Isabel to read several chapters of it while they were in preparation.

Source: Occult Review volume 6 number 5 November 1907 pp296-97.

MAY TO AUGUST 1880

Isabel exhibited two works at the Royal Albert Hall spring exhibition: Athyrtis... and one called The Dismissal of Hagar.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm assuming that 'the dismissal of Hagar' was the same painting Isabel had shown in 1875 at the Walker Art Gallery as 'Hagar in the desert'. The Athyrtis painting was based on a story in Diodorus in which the daughter of the pharaoh Sesostris acts as priestess for her father, and predicts his future.

Comments by Sally Davis on Athyrtis... I haven't seen it, of course, but maybe this painting was the closest Isabel came in her admiration of Alma-Tadema before she began to change her mind about him. A report (see below) says the figure of Athyrtis was in the classical style; and even the subject might have been inspired by a work by Alma-Tadema: his A Nigger, Grand Chamberlain to King Sesostris the Great, which was shown at the Royal Academy in 1871.

Sources for Alma-Tadema's painting:

Royal Academy Exhibitors 1769-1904 compiled by Algernon Graves. Volume 1 A-D pp28-29 though the original words "A Nigger" have been left out.

The Biography and Catalogue Raisonné of the Paintings of Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema by Vern G Swanson. London: Garton and Co 1990: p38 says that the Grand Chamberlain painting had been shown in Europe before its 1871 appearance at the RA.

Sources for Isabel's Athyrtis:

Royal Albert Hall of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings and Wood Carving 1880. Included in the works on show was a group of paintings from the royal collection. Isabel's two, which were both oil paintings: p1 catalogue number 9 - full title Athyrtis, the Divine Daughter of Sesostris, Showing Herself at the Gate of the Temple, price £75. And p2 catalogue number 24 - The Dismissal of Hagar, also £75. There were so many exhibits in the wood carving display that there were fewer paintings on show this year; I noticed too that there were no paintings this year by the big contemporary names.

The Building News and Engineering Journal, which had given a special mention to Isabel's Cleopatra painting in 1879, gave Isabel another boost in its report on this year's RAH exhibition in its Volume 38 1880 p360: its reporter picked out Isabel's Athyrtis from "the general collection of oil-pictures", recommending it as a "decorative, classically-rendered figure" and printing the catalogue number so that visitors could search for it specially.

On the tale of Sesostris and Athyrtis:

Google's first responses were all etymological: athyrtis is a genus of butterflies. However there were also web sites featuring three different pharaohs, the Greek translation of whose name is Sesostris. See www.britannica.com for the most likely one to be mentioned by Diodorus: the III, of the 12th dynasty, reigned 1836-1818BCE - he expanded the amount of land he ruled over and improved the administration of his kingdom.

Thera and the Exodus by Riaan Booysen 2013. Winchester: O Books 2013. In a section on Karnak, Booysen notes that both names are Greek in origin. A modern transliteration of the hieroglyphs for Sesostris would be Sesoösis.

Some references to the pair of them that Isabel might have read:

Ancient History, Containing the History of the Egyptians, Assyrians...from Rollin and Other Sources. No compiler's name given. Published London: Religious Tract Society 1842 and subsequent editions. On p72 in the section History of the Egyptians: a reference to a work by the Greek writer Diodorus claiming that Athyrtis had acted as priestess for her father Sesostris and had foretold his successful military conquests.

Israel in Egypt: Egypt's Place Among the Anc Monarchies by Edward Lord Clark. New York: New York Methodist Book Concern 1874. On p323 in section The Exodus Clark also says that Athyrtis was "versed in divination", only Clark adds that she was like so many who were learned in the "mysterious arts".

?SUMMER 1880

Isabel spent the summer in Brittany, possibly doing some painting but definitely visiting its ancient sites.

Source: The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881; issue of 1 March 1881 p93 in its regular column The Roving Artist: short piece on Brittany as a possible destination for British artists, signed by Isabel.

Comments by Sally Davis: Though Isabel doesn't specify exactly when she was in Brittany, I think the summer before the article was published is the most likely time.

Isabel betrayed quite a lot of her prejudices in this short article. She wasn't actually all that struck by Brittany as a place to paint, though she reported it to be "cheap and agreeable" and a place where the locals "do what artists most prefer - leave them alone". Landscape artists would find the coastline and some of the cathedrals worth it, she felt, but there was nothing in Brittany for figure painters: "searchers after ideal beauty will only be revolted", she thought, by the local peasants. Isabel was definitely a seeker after ideal beauty in her art.

What excited her most about Brittany were her visits to Carnac, "the mysterious sea of the Morbihan" and - particularly - the "mystic cave of Gavrinis, where she studied the carvings on the walls and pondered the meaning of their "wandering lines where the eye loses itself". She saw all those places as retaining a powerful aura of "dramas...enacted long ago...mysterious corners of the world, the sealed books to science".

AUGUST 1880

A letter from Isabel appeared in The Artist, the first of several pieces of writing she had published in that magazine.

Source:

The Artist volume 1 1880 p250 issue of 1 August 1880; I saw it as a snippet on google (March 2017) and haven't been able to read what the letter was about.

Some information on The Artist, which by its volume 2 (1881) was called The Artist and Journal of Home Culture.

The first issue of The Artist was published in January 1880. It was founded by William Reeves, a bookseller and supplier of artists' equipment. Reeves published it and probably edited its first two volumes and some of its third. While Reeves was its publisher, the magazine actively courted women readers, and also encouraged artist readers to send in short articles for publication - an invitation Isabel responded to several times. Reeves sold the magazine in time for the October 1883 issue, to Gardner, Wells, Darton and Co.

Sources for The Artist, none of which specify who was its editor before 1882, when Reeves appointed Wallace L Crowdy for his first stint in the post. I think that it's reasonable to assume that Reeves had done the job himself up to that point.

Publishers' details from www.victorianperiodicals.com.

Dictionary of 19th Century Journalism published Ghent: Academia Press: p25 entry for The Artist and Journal of Home Culture.

AUTUMN 1880

Isabel showed one of her Cleopatra paintings at an exhibition organised by the Royal Manchester Institution.

Source:

The Academy volume 18 1880 no 437 issue of 18 Sep 1880 p209 pntg by Isabel just ((unfort)) called "Cleopatra" is one of a list of "notable pictures" in the ((aut)) exhn at the Ryl Manchester Insttn ((soon to bec the corp art gallery)). Also in the list: G F Watts' Psyche; Burne-Jones' The Music Lesson; and R Spencer Stanhope's The Waters of Lethe; so she's in good company. This exhn had 1168 works in it. Long rvws over sevl issues in this mag but no fur mention of Isabel.

AUTUMN 1880

Isabel showed her painting Princess Scheherezada (sic) at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition in Liverpool.

Source:

10th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1880. List of exhibitors p82. P35 catalogue number 494 - The Princess Scheherezada, daughter of the Grand Vizier, thinking of the Story She is going to relate at Night. Arabian Nights. Isabel was asking £125 for Scheherezada; I think it was the highest price she ever demanded for one of her works.

1881

Isabel was elected a member of the Albemarle Club.

Source: Memorabilia p156

Comment by Sally: I haven't found many references to the Albemarle Club, but a short page in wikipedia says that it was a private members' club which had women members as well as men. That makes it virtually unique in London's contemporary club scene. It hadn't been going long when Isabel joined - it was founded in 1874, at 13 Albemarle Street (hence its name). Oscar Wilde was a member in 1895 and the Albemarle Club was where the sequence of events began which led to Oscar's conviction for homosexuality.

POSSIBLY AS EARLY AS 1881 though the only evidence I have is from 1913

Isabel began to read the newspaper The Christian Commonwealth regularly.

Source for the newspaper: the British Library catalogue has a full run of issues of it, which was published weekly from 1881 to September 1919.

Comment by Sally Davis: the only mention of The Christian Commonwealth that I've found in Isabel's writings is on p118 of her book Superhumanity (published 1915): she refers to an article in its issue of 1 January 1913, about the decline in religion. It's possible that she had always been a regular reader, however - looking at the contents and adverts in the issues of January 1913, I'd say that the paper covered just the kind of religious and spiritual issues that interested her. Its writers and tone were mostly Christian but there were also adverts for books and talks on Buddhism; some coverage of spiritualism and the Society for Psychical Research; and a great deal of coverage of a visit to England by the current leader of the Bahai faith, Abdul Baha.

Source: The Christian Commonwealth volume 33 issue 1629 Wednesday 1 January 1913.

8 JANUARY 1881

The first issue was published of the spiritualist weekly newspaper, Light. In the 1880s it was closely associated with the British National Association of Spiritualists. By 1890 the newspaper was being run by the London Spiritualist Alliance; but its content didn't change a great deal except to emphasis events in London a little more.

Sources: Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881, volume 10 1890 and volume 11 1891.

Comment June 2016 by Sally Davis on the early years of the magazine Light: I've just been contacted by Leslie Price, archivist at the College of Psychic Studies and founder of the online magazine Psypioneer. Leslie corrected a mistake I'd made when mentioning Light's early editors. I imagine Isabel knew all of them, at least as acquaintances, so here is a list of the first four of them: John Stephen Farmer; Rev Stainton Moses, until his death in September 1892; W Paice MA, although he also died, shortly after being appointed; and then, Edmund Dawson Rogers.

Leslie Price also drew my attention to a recent article on the founding of Light, based on the reminiscences of Edmund Dawson Rogers, who was such an important figure in spiritualism in the 1880s and 1890s. As well as setting up Light, he also had the idea which became the Society for Psychical Research; and was the second president of the London Spiritualist Alliance (founded 1884). See that article at www.woodlandway.org/PDF/PP4.11November08.pdf: Psypioneer volume 4 number 11, November 2008: pp276-80. The article includes a reproduction of the original share issue for Light's owner, The Eclectic Publishing Company Limited. I imagine Isabel became a subscriber to Light, for 10shillings and 10pence per year, rather than buy it week by week. I'm not so sure that she would have bought shares in the company, though - as her income was limited, she might have thought it was too much of a risk.

1881 to ?

Isabel became a regular contributor of articles and letters to Light; and read it regularly even after she had left London and no longer went to many spiritualist social gatherings. In 1890 when Light was in financial trouble (as occult journals often were) Isabel felt strongly enough to contribute £1 to keep it afloat.

Sources: volumes of Light during the 1880s and 1890s; though I haven't checked beyond 1900 as yet. For Isabel's donation: volume 10 January-December 1890 pi.

Memorabilia p146, p188

MARCH TO MAY 1881

Isabel showed two works at the Society of Lady Artists: a sketch of Shatucha the Bedouin Girl; and a genre scene, Spanish Tambourine Girl.

Source:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 as De Steiger, Isabel; painter. Shatucha was catalogue number 632, for sale at £5; Spanish Tambourine Girl catalogue number 651, £8.

CENSUS DAY 1881

Isabel was abroad but many of her relations were in England.

Isabel's older, unmarried sister Constantia was still living at Christleton Old Hall near Chester, with their nieces Theodosia and Josephine and their nephew Charles, the children of Joshua Verney Lovett Lace and his wife Theodosia, both now dead. This was a very well-to-do household, employing a governess, a housekeeper, a lady's maid, two housemaids and a kitchenmaid.

Helena and her husband Rev John Turnbull were still living in Temple Ewell on the outskirts of Dover. All their children were at home (bar the youngest who hadn't been born yet): Constance, Peveril, Arthur, John and Verney. As well as a governess, Helena and John were able to afford to employ a cook, a housemaid and a nurse.

Rosamond and Edmund Charles Burton were living at 29 High Street Daventry, with their children Evelyn, Rosamund, Constance, Blanche and Edmund Gerald. They had visitors staying with them on census day - author Hermon C Merivale and his wife Elizabeth. This too was a wealthy household: the Burtons employed a governess, and six other servants, all women though who did what was not specified in the census.

Source: 1881 census.

Comment by Sally Davis: Daventry was relatively easy to get to by train from London where Isabel was living at this time. Ewell was very convenient for those travelling to and from the continent. However, whether Isabel ever visited Helena and Rosamond and their families, I wouldn't know. She never mentions them in Memorabilia.

APRIL 1881

Isabel's first appearance as a contributor to Light was a letter on the Ancient Mysteries.

Source: Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881 issue of 19 March 1881: p87.

MONDAY 4 APRIL 1881 at 38 GREAT RUSSELL STREET WC

Isabel gave a talk at the BNAS's fortnightly discussion meeting: Art and the Supernatural. In it she argued that - contrary to modern assumptions - "earth-bound Spirits" looked just like people and therefore could be painted as easily as people. Astral light could also be painted - medieval artists had shown it as the 'nimbus' or 'aureole' of saints. The idea for the talk had been triggered by an article she had read a few months before, in the Cornhill Magazine.

Source: Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881 p100; p122 issue of 23 April 1881.

The fact that she had given the talk was also mentioned in The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 p158 issue of 1 May 1881; though with no details of what she had said.

MAY 1881

Isabel exhibited at the Royal Society of British Artists for the second and last time, showing A Dancing Girl.

Sources:

The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917. Compiled by Jane Johnson for the Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First printed 1975; V&A's copy is the reprint of 1993: p130 as de Steiger: Isabel. A Dancing Girl was catalogue number 500, price £7.

MAY TO AUGUST 1881

Isabel exhibited her Valkyries picture for the first time, in the spring exhibition at the Royal Albert Hall.

Comment by Sally Davis: as with the Cleopatras, so with the Valkyries, I'm not sure how many paintings there are. I think there is only one, exhibited five times between 1881 and 1886, every time with a slightly different title. Isabel doesn't mention this painting in Memorabilia; perhaps because it or they took a long time to get sold, if it sold at all. After this first outing, Isabel let two years go by before showing it again, at the Royal Hibernian Academy in 1883; at the Royal Scottish Academy and the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists in 1884; and at the Walker Art Gallery in 1886 - see that entry for a reference to the poem on which it was based.

Source for this first exhibiting of it:

Royal Albert Hall of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings and Art Workmanship 1881. This year p3 it also showed 200 paintings judged good enough for the Royal Academy summer exhibition but not hung in it due to a lack of space there. On p28 catalogue number 308 which is an oil painting - (my quotes) "The Three Valkyrie Maidens - Messengers of the Gods, proclaiming from a lone rock in the Northern Ocean to the sea-birds and the fishes the death of Balder (sic) the Beautiful". The exhibition also included a large group of paintings lent by the Duchess of Edinburgh: from Spain, and Renaissance Italy and northern Europe.

See wikipedia for the death of Baldr the Beautiful, son of Odin and Frigg; the first in the sequence of events which ended with the destruction of Ragnarok. The Valkyries attended the funeral.

SUMMER 1881

Isabel went on a trip to the English West Country but the weather was so bad (!) that she moved on to France instead, intending to stay at either Fontainebleau or Barbizon. She ended up not wanting to stay at either and thinking her whole summer had been wasted.

Source:

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 issue of 1 October 1881 pp301-02: article signed by Isabel in its Roving Artist column.

Comments by Sally Davis: Isabel knew of both Fontainebleau and Barbizon as artists' colonies. However, when she visited them she hated both places. Nothing pleased her: not the forest; not the chateau, though she did give mild praise to its gardens; and definitely not the villages, which she thought were "ugly" and "dirty", with ridiculously-overpriced accommodation. While she was wandering about the village of Barbizon, trying to avoid chickens that were running loose and staring at "dilapidated" gardens, she did go to an exhibition by members of the Barbizon school. Some indication of how much she disliked what she saw was her amalgamation of the names of two of the group's best-known members as Théodore Millet (she must mean Jean-François Millet and Théodore Rousseau). None of the group were excused, though - Isabel called them all "daubers of stupid vulgar subjects": neither their brush-work style nor their choice of subject-matter were what she thought of as 'art'; indeed she thought that "Art there was none" at the exhibition.

Source for the Barbizon group's style; and the two artists whose names Isabel mangled - see the group's wikipedia page which has a small reproduction of Millet's 1857 The Gleaners on it, a work whose style and very ordinary subject is typical of the group as a whole.

AUTUMN 1881

Isabel exhibited An Eastern Dancing Girl at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition in Liverpool.

Source:

11th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1881. List of exhibitors p121. And p64 catalogue number 1066 for sale at £6/10 and although she obviously considered it a modest work, possibly even a sketch, it was an oil painting.

TUESDAY AND FRIDAY EVENINGS, NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER 1881

Isabel opened her studio in 8 Hornton Street to women artists who wanted to paint nude models.

Source:

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 January-December 1881 p352 issue of 1 November 1881 on the small ads page; and again on p362 issue of 1 December 1881, just above the News column. The evenings were specifically designed for women artists and women art students to spend time painting what Isabel carefully referred to as the "undraped model". Isabel would be charging for the three-hour sessions, though the advert didn't say how much, so perhaps the price was open to negotiation.

BY LATE 1881

Isabel had sold all four of her Cleopatra paintings.

Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 p143. I saw this report in a google snippet. I think the article was a report on an exhibition. I couldn't see which one but it was probably that year's Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition. The report said that Isabel had "just sold the last of four Cleopatra pictures"; and that she was working on two other paintings based on classical subjects.

Comment by Sally Davis: if Isabel was working on two paintings with classical subjects, she must still have been under the influence of Alma-Tadema. I'm not going to speculate on which two paintings Isabel was meaning.

BETWEEN 1881 and 1893

One of Isabel's letters published in Light led to a correspondence through its pages with another regular contributor to the journal, Anne Judith Penny, who was particularly interested in the works of Jacob Böhme.

Source for the correspondence: Memorabilia p187-188, p189, p191, p193

Information on Jacob Böhme or Boehme from a good and detailed page on wikipedia:

1575-1624, a German Lutheran mystic and writer, author of (amongst other works) Die Morgenroete im Aufgang, also known as Aurora (1600, 1619). His argument that the Fall was a necessary stage in the evolution of the Universe was considered heretical by many.

Anne Judith Penny's dates: Magic and Mysticism: an Introduction to Western Esoteric Traditions by Arthur Versluis 2007: p120: born 1825 died 1893.

Source: British Library catalogue for works by Anne Judith Penny:

Her first work, published anonymously, was Morning Clouds: Consisting of Advice to the Sorrowful. London: Longmans 1858. Subsequent works published during her lifetime were also published as 'by the author of Morning Clouds'. Her works on Böhme/Boehme were not published until long after her death, though Isabel had seen extracts from the works in progress:

1901 published New York and possibly privately printed as a limited edition: An Introduction to the Study of J Boehme's Writings.

1912 published London: Watkins: Studies in Jacob Böhme.

It's not clear from Memorabilia whether Isabel and Anne Judith Penny ever met face-to-face.

Comment by Sally Davis: in 1889 and again in 1893, Isabel exhibited paintings of the mythical Aurora, goddess of the dawn. Perhaps they were inspired by ideas in Jacob Böhme's work.

BETWEEN 1881 and 1893

Anne Judith Penny brought Isabel's letters to Light to the attention of Mary Ann Atwood, and Mrs Atwood invited Isabel to stay with her at her home in Yorkshire. After this first visit, Isabel began going to stay with Mrs Atwood once a year, usually in the summer. Isabel was grateful for Mrs Atwood's notice but fretted that when staying with her she couldn't spend any time sketching.

Source: Memorabilia p189-93

Information from Wilmhurst's introduction to Isabel's 1918 edition of Mary Ann South's A Suggestive Inquiry into Hermetic Philosophy and Alchemy; and Mary Ann South/Atwood's wikipedia page:

Mary Ann South (1817-1910) was the daughter of hermeticist Thomas South. In 1850, she published A Suggestive Inquiry into Hermetic Philosophy and Alchemy but it was withdrawn almost immediately by her and her father. Thomas South (who hadn't read the book before publication) felt that it gave away information best left secret. Between them, Mary Ann and Thomas bought up virtually all the copies, and burned them. However, Mrs Atwood must have kept a few copies of A Suggestive Inquiry back from the fire as, later on, Isabel had one.

In 1859, Mary Ann South married the Rev Alban Thomas Atwood. She spent the rest of her life living in his parish near Thirsk, Yorkshire. By the time Isabel met Mrs Atwood, she had achieved almost mythical status in occult circles as a recluse, and as the author of a great esoteric work that almost no one had read.

Comment by Sally: I'm not sure that Isabel actually like Mrs Atwood all that much. In Memorabilia p119, p193 she described Mrs Atwood as, "more respected than loved", and as a "miser". On p119 she calls her "my old teacher", not a friend.

DURING 1882

After a gap of four years, Isabel exhibited at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin again. She sent one painting: Morning Effect.

Source for the painting exhibited:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel. Entry for 1882: Morning Effect as catalogue number 434, price £12/12.

APRIL 1882

Anna Kingsford's The Perfect Way was published.

Sources:

Memorabilia Preface pvii; and British Library catalogue: The Perfect Way; or the Finding of Christ was published in London by Field and Tuer; Edward Maitland as co-author. A revised edition was issued in 1887 and a 3rd edition in 1890. It's still the work for which Anna Bonus Kingsford is best known - if she's known at all.

Month of publication: Times Tuesday 25 April 1882 p12 in the New Books column as "Just published": The Perfect Way, a series of lectures. Published in London by Field and Tuer; in Hamilton Canada by Adams; and in New York by Scribner and Welford. The author's name was not mentioned.

Comment by Sally: of course, Isabel had heard the lectures and read a lot of the content of this before it was published. In any case, what Isabel remembered best about Anna Bonus Kingsford is made clear many times in Memorabilia. Listening to Kingsford's talks on western mysticism, and even just being in a group with her, all chatting as friends with this common interest - that was what was precious to Isabel.

SPRING 1882

Isabel's painting Mariamne was shown in that year's Royal Academy exhibition. By this time she was paying for an artist's studio at The Studios, Holland Park Road, a short walk from her home.

Sources:

Royal Academy Exhibitors from 1880 Volume 1 A-D p312 and just noting here that she's listed as De Steiger. Mariamne was catalogue number 596; the volumes don't give information on whether the exhibited items were for sale.

Memorabilia p107, p110, p130-31.

Comment by Sally Davis: it must have been a great day for Isabel when she found that the RA had accepted one of her paintings at last. However, she had no illusions about why that had happened: in Memorabilia she put it down to the staff having mis-read her name. In the catalogue she figured as “Miss F Steeger”.

MAY TO AUGUST 1882

Isabel showed her painting Semiramide at the Royal Albert Hall spring exhibition. I think it was the last time she exhibited anything at the RAH.

Source:

Royal Albert Hall of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings 1882. As in 1881, this exhibition included a number of paintings which couldn't be squeezed into the Royal Academy for its spring show. A note on the copy of the catalogue that I saw at the National Art Library said that it was a first edition and some paintings that were shown in the exhibition were not listed in it. So it's possible that Isabel showed more works than the one I found: p19 catalogue number 164, Semiramide which was an oil painting, for sale at £20.

Comment by Sally Davis: the next catalogue in the volume I looked at in the National Art Library was from an exhibition in 1887. I checked in the Times to see if this meant that catalogues from 1883 to 1886 were missing, but it looked from the small adverts that no art exhibitions were held in those years. Isabel didn't show any works in the 1887 exhibition, the last in the NAL's set.

Isabel showed Semiramide twice more in 1883, with its more familiar title Semiramis, at the Royal Scottish Academy and the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists.

JUNE AND JULY 1882

Isabel showed a painting of a “single figure” at the recently-opened British Fine Art Gallery at 200 Regent Street.

Source:

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 3 1882 p207 issue of 1 July 1882 - a short review of the exhibition, naming a few of the artists but none of their pictures. Isabel's single figure was picked out as one of the better paintings in an exhibition dominated by mediocre works. The reviewer called it “forcible in colour, and French in technique”.

1 JULY 1882

A letter from Isabel was published in the magazine The Artist and Journal of Home Culture. She began by stating in bald terms that artistic and musical talent was gifted equally to men and to women - if men were better artists it was because women were less well trained. Then she went on to discuss the moral issues surrounding the use of naked female models by male artists.

Source:

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 3 1882 p231.

Comments by Sally Davis: I think this must be the letter which (according to her own report, in Memorabilia pp107-08) caused works by Isabel to be rejected by the Royal Academy and the Society of Lady Artists; but if it is, it's not at all the sort of letter I thought it would be. It's not really about the disadvantages women faced when training to become artists - that's summed up in one short paragraph. Most is about the effect on a young woman's reputation - specifically her sexual reputation - of being alone and naked in the studio of a male artist. Isabel argued that when a female artist's model sat for a woman artist, not only was the model's moral reputation kept intact, her sense of self-worth was enhanced. It was therefore a Christian duty of women artists to continue to paint from the nude. A note from the editor, below the letter, expressed his agreement with Isabel's arguments; but Isabel later felt that she had reaped the whirlwind from male artists and even some female ones, for having set out her views and had them published.

May 2017: It has taken me several years to find the letter and in fact I'd long ago given up looking for it, as when Isabel was be-wailing the consequences of making her arguments in public, she didn't say where her comments were published. The letter was a riposte to a speech by J C Horsley RA at the Newton Abbot School of Art. Isabel hadn't been at the talk but had read a report of it in The Artist magazine.

Information on John Callcott Horsley RA from his wiki says that he was a painter of genre scenes, mostly of subjects from history or the theatre. Even in his own lifetime he was known as 'clothes-Horsley' for his vocal opposition to use of naked life models and paintings of nudes. Paintings of nudes became popular in the mid-1880s, a trend coming into Britain from the Paris Salon. A letter against paintings of nudes being shown in public was published in the Times 20 May [1885], supposedly written by a "British Matron" but actually written by J C Horsley.

At www.racollection.org.uk, : 1817-1903. A died-in-the-wool Royal Academician: trained at the RA; elected ARA 1855 full member 1864; treasurer of the RA.

Comment by Sally Davis: seeing he was so influential at the RA, perhaps it was Horsley himself who made sure that paintings submitted by Isabel were rejected by its hanging committees, as the controversy over nudity in Victorian British art continued to rumble on.

AUTUMN 1882

On the back of her triumph over the RA, Isabel showed Mariamne again, at the Walker Art Gallery. At one or other of the two exhibitions, the painting was bought by Warren de la Rue.

Source:

12th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1882: p132 Steiger, de; at The Studios, Holland Park Road; and p23 Mariamne as catalogue number 261.

Memorabilia pp130-131 where its name is wrongly printed as 'MariaNne'.

See wikipedia for more on Warren de la Rue (1815-89) a son of Thomas, the founder of the publishing and bank-note printing firm, and from 1871 its managing director. He's just as well known now as a spare-time astronomer and chemist: President, Chemical Society; FRAS; FRS; and Légion d'Honneur for his pioneering work on astronomical photography. He has a lunar crater named after him.

At www.getty.edu/art there's a brief mention of him, as some of his astronomical photos are now in the Getty Collections. He gave up his astronomy when he took over the running of the firm, donating the equipment in his observatory to the University of Oxford.

The next file in the life-by-dates of Isabel de Steiger covers 1883 and 1884, the years in which Isabel exhibited most pictures.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER (1836-1927). My life-by-dates continues with the two years 1883 and 1884, during which she exhibited more paintings than at any other time.

This particular update: September 2017

SALLY DAVIS

Just re-stating the Golden Dawn connection:

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888 - that is, a few months after the last event in this file. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London in the early 1890s and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

7 JANUARY 1883

Anna Bonus Kingsford became president of the London Lodge of the TS; with her spiritual companion Edward Maitland as her vice-president.

Source: The Early Days of Theosophy in Europe by A P Sinnett. London: Theosophical Publishing House Ltd 1922: p11.

EARLY 1883

Alfred Percy Sinnett and his wife Patience, returned to England from India. They were both close friends of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky.

Comment by Sally Davis on the importance of the Sinnetts, based on Isabel's recollections of the 1880s:

The Sinnetts knew a lot of people, and had the Indian habit of keeping open house. They had known Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott in India. Their homes at 7 Ladbrooke Gardens and later in Leinster Gardens Bayswater became a meeting place on Sundays for people interested in theosophy and spiritualism. Isabel was a regular visitor, even though the Sinnetts were allies of Blavatsky and Isabel an ally of Kingsford in a dispute that broke out in 1883-84 about the election of Kingsford as president of the TS: Blavatsky's followers thought Kingsford focused too much on western esotericism. Isabel liked Alfred Sinnett up to a point: she thought his wife had "far more intellectual ability" and "a keener critical faculty" and felt that he didn't question things enough. It was Patience Sinnett that Isabel came to see; and at some time during the mid-to-late 1880s she painted a full-length portrait of Patience, in pastels. Isabel didn't want to be paid for the portrait, but Patience insisted on trading the picture for a silk dress. Theosophist writer and editor Mabel Collins; and the scientist, psychic researcher and future GD member William Crookes were two of the many people Isabel met at the Sinnett's house. Isabel doesn't mention knowing Sir Edwin Arnold but he too was a friend of the Sinnetts so I'm sure she had met him. She does say that she read his poetry and his The Light of Asia.

Sources:

Memorabilia p157-159.

The Sinnetts in India and London: Autobiography of Alfred Percy Sinnett. Unedited version published Theosophical History Centre 1986 and now available online. On pp16-17: A P Sinnett began to correspond with Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott shortly after they arrived in India in December 1879. Blavatsky and Olcott accepted an invitation to stay with the Sinnetts in Allahabad and that's how they met. On pp24-25: the Sinnetts moved into 7 Ladbroke Grove on 31 January 1884; on p36 the move to Leinster Gardens isn't dated in the autobiography but Sinnett's references to it make me think it might have happened around 1890. On p31: the Sinnetts' at-homes, to which so many theosophists went regularly, were on Tuesday afternoons.

1883 and 1884

London Lodge became a battle-ground between a group focused around Anna Bonus Kingsford on the one side; and Helena Petrovna Blavatsky on the other, about whether the TS should include the study of western hermeticism. Isabel herself wanted both eastern and western hermeticism to be available to TS members; and tried to mediate as the argument grew more strident. Looking back while writing Memorabilia, Isabel felt that she hadn't done a particularly good job at reconciling the warring factions - she'd been seen as favouring Kingsford, and pro-Blavatsky members of the TS (like Alfred Sinnett) had grown cool towards her.

Source: Memorabilia p174-176.

DURING 1883

Isabel showed another work at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin: her oil painting The Valkyrie Maidens, exhibited for the second of five times.

Source for this showing of the Valkyrie painting:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel. Listing for 1883: Valkyrie Maidens as oil painting, catalogue number 73, price £35.

SUMMER 1883

Isabel exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy for the first time. She showed two paintings: Semiramis; and The Fair Slave Enees-el-Jelees which was based on a character from the Arabian Nights.

Source: The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibitors 1826-1990 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière. Calne: Hilmarton Manor Press 1991. There are no indications as to whether the paintings were for sale or not. Volume 4 R-Z p615 Steiger, de; Mme Isabel. Catalogue numbers: 393 for Semiramis; 543 for The Fair Slave...

Just confirming that Isabel was never a member of the RSA: The Royal Scottish Academy 1826-1916 list of members exhibiting; compiled by Frank Rinder. Originally published 1917; British Library's copy is Kingsmead Reprints 1975: p384 Isabel isn't listed.

Comment by Sally Davis: this was a second showing of three for Semiramis: it had been shown, as Semiramide, in 1882 at the Royal Albert Hall.

SUMMER 1883

Isabel did a charcoal drawing of Christian David Ginsburg during a series of visits to his house. She found the process very trying, partly because his head was “very unclassical” but mostly because his face was in “constant movement from incessant talking”. She shut him up by talking herself on the subject “of most interest to nearly every man, viz, himself”, in particular his The Massorah which she was reading as it was published.

Source: Memorabilia p169.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel doesn't say what she did with the drawing when she considered it was finished. I imagine the whole point of doing the drawing was to give it as a gift, to Ginsburg.

Here's some further information on Ginsburg but for his early years please see the first file in this life-by-dates:

In 1870 Ginsburg had got a job at the Old Testament Revision Company and had moved from Liverpool to Berkshire. In 1904 he was elected editor of the British and Foreign Bible Society's New Critical Bible. Ginsburg had done the work on the Pentateuch, the Prophets and some of the later books by the time he died, in March 1914; the whole thing was published in 1926.

Other publications:

- 1861 translation and commentary on Ecclesiastes
- 1867 translation and notes on Jacob ben Chayim's Introduction to the Rabbinic Bible
- ?1867 translation and notes on Elias Levita's Masoret Ha-Masoret
- 1880-86 The Massorah, in four volumes
- 1894 a work on the Hebrew bible and The Massorah published by the Trinitarian Bible Society.

Source: Ginsburg's entry in Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 22 p337-38.

AUGUST 1883

A conversazione was held at the Royal Institution on Piccadilly. The great and good of theosophy were all there, including Blavatsky; Isabel and her Jewish convert friend Christian David Ginsburg; and Anna Bonus Kingsford, who gave a speech. At his request, Isabel introduced Ginsburg to Dr Kingsford; and as a result, Isabel and Anna were invited to dinner with the Ginsburgs.

Sources:

Memorabilia p166-69 Isabel doesn't say who organised this social event. It could have been the British National Association of Spiritualists but I think it's more likely it was the Theosophical Society.

Red Cactus: the Life of Anna Kingsford by Alan Pert. Watsons Bay NSW: Books and Writers Network Pty Ltd 2006: p111.

Source for the conversazione taking place before 23 August 1883: Red Cactus p111 quoting a letter of that date, from Blavatsky to Alfred Sinnett, in which Blavatsky criticised what Dr Kingsford had worn to the event (still the easiest criticism to make about a public woman. Over a century of feminism has made no difference has it?)

PROBABLY END OF AUGUST; DEFINITELY BEFORE 11 SEPTEMBER 1883

Isabel and Anna Bonus Kingsford went to St Anne's Heath Egham to spend the evening with the Ginsburgs but the exchange of greetings between Christian David Ginsburg and Dr Kingsford turned the evening into a social disaster.

Source for a date of before 11 September 1883: Red Cactus p113: on 11 September 1883 Dr Kingsford left for a lecture tour of the north of England and Scotland on behalf of the Vegetarian Society.

Source for the evening that went so wrong: Memorabilia pp171-73.

Comment by Sally Davis: writing up the events of this dire evening out, many decades after it took place, Isabel still wasn't sure whether Ginsburg was being complimentary, or mocking, when he greeted Anna Bonus Kingsford as a prophet greater than Isaiah. She was sure, though, that Ginsburg was completely taken aback when, in her reply, Dr Kingsford agreed with him: Isabel could see him being unable to decide whether Kingsford was mocking, or indulging in hubris. Isabel was quite sure that Dr Kingsford had spoken in all sincerity. An awkward pause ensued which was filled by Ginsburg's wife Emilie (who was strongly Evangelical) saying that Dr Kingsford couldn't possibly be a prophet. Mr and Mrs Ginsburg continued to bate Anna Bonus Kingsford as the evening wore on. And the Ginsburg daughters played the piano as well brought-up middle-class young women should; though not very well, Isabel thought - the Ginsburg girls were more sporty than musical. The guests sat quiet - Isabel, Anna, and two young men previously unknown to Isabel. The time came when it would not be rude to leave; and all the guests did, stumbling after Isabel along the foggy country lanes back to the station. Dr Kingsford clung to Isabel throughout and looked so unwell that Isabel thought that the Ginsburgs' behaviour had been tantamount to a psychic attack, which had affected Kingsford physically.

Whether Isabel carried on any kind of friendship with the Ginsburgs after that fraught evening is not clear. He is certainly not mentioned again in Memorabilia. However, Isabel was still influenced by his views many years later: in Superhumanity p71 (published 1915) she urged people to study commentaries on the Old Testament written by Jewish scholars - a view that must be based on Ginsburg's arguments.

AUTUMN 1883

Isabel exhibited at the Royal Society of Artists Birmingham again. She showed two oil works: Abd-el-Rahman; and Semiramis.

Source:

Royal Society of Artists Birmingham Autumn Exhibition Catalogue 1883. List of exhibitors p80. P27 catalogue number 162: Abd-el-Rahman price £10. P32 catalogue number 270 Semiramis available at £25.

Comment by Sally Davis: Semiramis was on its third outing. It had been shown as Semiramide in 1882 at the Royal Albert Hall and as Semiramis earlier in 1883 at the Royal Scottish Academy.

AUTUMN 1883

Isabel showed two oil paintings at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool: The Enchantress; and The Lorelei Maiden.

Source:

13th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1883. List of exhibitors p135. And in the list of paintings: p16 catalogue number 149 - The Enchantress, price £100; and p80 catalogue number 1416 - The Lorelei Maiden "Sitting on a Rock over the Whirlpool, singing to the Fishermen Below" (Isabel's quote marks), for sale at £35.

Comment by Sally Davis: both paintings were exhibited once more. Isabel showed The Enchantress in 1885 at the Royal Hibernian Academy. It was a painting that GD member Frederick Leigh Gardner admired (see the entries for November 1897). The Lorelei Maiden was shown again in 1895 at the Royal Scottish Academy, as the property of Isabel's friends William and Fanny Crosfield who had probably bought it in 1883.

SEPTEMBER 1883

Isabel's niece Evelyn Margaret Burton (Rosamond's eldest daughter) married Thomas William Thornton of Kingthorpe Hall Northamptonshire.

Source for the marriage: www.genesreunited.co.uk to Northampton Mercury issues of 8 September 1883 and 15 September 1883; though I couldn't see enough of a guest-list to discover whether Isabel went to the wedding.

DECEMBER 1883- ?JANUARY 1884

Isabel exhibited at an exhibition of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours (now the Royal Institute of Oil Painters); the only time she did so. She showed her oil painting The Greek Captive and her Nubian Slave.

Source:

At archive.org, Institute of Painters in Oil Colours catalogue of 1st exhibition 1883-84, at the Piccadilly Gallery. Book lists 801 exhibits; there were only a few sculptures though one was by Rodin. On p46 in the list of exhibitors and p35 catalogue number 60.

For the opening date of the exhibition: Times Monday 17 December 1883 p1: announcement that the exhibition was open; and p7 a report on some of the exhibits, though there was no mention of Isabel's painting. The dates of the exhibition weren't given so I'm not sure when it closed.

1884

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott were in England for seven months during this year.

Information from: Helena Petrovna Blavatsky introduced and edited by Nicholas Goodrick-Clarke. Berkeley California: North Atlantic Books 2004; p13.

SPRING 1884 TO SUMMER 1886

Isabel was a member of the Hermetic Society, founded by Anna Bonus Kingsford.

Source: Memorabilia p156

Source for the dates of the Hermetic Society: Biography of Anna Bonus Kingsford and her Founding of the Hermetic Society by Samuel Hopgood Hart. It was published separately by Kessinger Legacy Reprints in 2013 but originally had been the introductory essay to a book of Kingsford's esoteric writings, The Credo of Christendom, published in 1930 and edited by Hopgood Hart. The biography is based on papers of Kingsford's. On p46 the last meeting of the Hermetic Society at which Kingsford was present took place on 15 July 1886. She founded the Society as a venue for theosophists who wanted to study western Christian esotericism. P28-29: its first official meetings were in June 1884 at 43 Rutland Gate on Thursdays at 5pm. P47 no meetings of the Hermetic Society were held in 1887 because of Kingsford's decline in health and the Society didn't survive her death in 1888.

Comment by Sally Davis: this Society will have been very much more to Isabel's taste than Blavatsky's study group. Several men who later joined the GD were members of it: the GD's two main founders, William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers; and William Forsell Kirby.

SPRING 1884

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky visited Isabel in her studio on Holland Park Road. Isabel was working on her painting of St John the Baptist at the time. As a result of a reminder from Blavatsky that John the Baptist was a "Nazar", Isabel made some corrections to her painting, making the Baptist's hair much longer.

Isabel later gave her picture of St John the Baptist to Rev C C Elcum of St Agnes and St Pancras church, Ullet Road Liverpool.

Source: Memorabilia p176-80 although the vicar's surname isn't spelled correctly - possibly as the result of a typesetting error, he's spelled as ElcRum not Elcum. Isabel's model for the painting, which was a life-size male head" was an Italian man.

Comment by Sally Davis: St John the Baptist was a very unusual painting in Isabel's oeuvre - one of only two paintings she did on Biblical themes and almost certainly the only Christian devotional painting that she did. The man she gave it to was Rev Charles Cunningham Elcum (1848-1930) who took up his appointment at St Agnes and St Pancras, Ullet Road Liverpool on the day it was consecrated - 21 January 1885 - and stayed in-post until after Isabel had died.

Where is the painting now? There is a tour of St Agnes and St Pancras (now Grade 1 listed) on its web pages, but I couldn't see anything on the walls that looked like Isabel's St John the Baptist. It may have been put in a cupboard somewhere. But I think that both Isabel and Rev Elcum understood the painting to be a gift to him personally - perhaps the Baptist was a saint the Reverend particularly identified with - so that he took it with him when he retired. Rev Elcum died in 1930; he doesn't seem to have married, so he had no direct heirs to leave it to. There was no sign of it on the web when I looked; which means that it hasn't been sold at a public auction in recent years; and isn't in a public collection - at least, not identified as Isabel's work. I wonder what happened to it.

Sources for Rev Charles Cunningham Elcum:

Web pages of St Agnes and St Pancras at www.stagnes.org. Consecration date from The History of the County Palatine and Duchy of Lancaster volume 5 by Edward Baines, William Robert Whatton and Brooke Herford. Published 1893 by J Heywood: p156.

London Gazette 23 July 1909 p3627 for Rev Elcum as a chaplain to the Territorial Force.

He's buried - like so many friends of Isabel - in Toxteth Park Cemetery. Look for him at www.toxtethparkcemeteryinscriptions.co.uk.

Some publications:

Pitcairn: the Island, the People and the Pastor... originally by Thomas Boyles Murray (1798-1860); revised and updated by Rev C C Elcum for the London Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. New York: E and J B Young and Co 1885 and later editions. There's no suggestion that Rev Elcum ever went to Pitcairn Island!

Supplemental Hymns for Use at St Agnes Church Liverpool by Rev C C Elcum. Liverpool: Hemmin 1885. It wasn't clear from the book's entry in the British Library catalogue whether he had composed the hymns or merely selected them. Perhaps he did compose them:

A Laye of Old Londonne. A Song Written and Composed by Rev C C Elcum. Liverpool: J Smith and Son 1892.

?MAY ?JUNE 1884

Blavatsky commissioned a work from Isabel - though it was understood by both parties that she would not pay for it. Isabel was to paint a portrait of one of Blavatsky's Mahatmas, the one she called Morya. Blavatsky also commissioned the German artist Hermann Schmiechen to paint both Morya and Koot Hoomi. Colonel Olcott called on Isabel to leave with her a photograph of a drawing Blavatsky had made of Morya, which was to act as the portrait's basis. Isabel later sent the completed work to the Theosophical Society's ashram at Adyar, just outside Madras. She never heard anything more about it.

15 JUNE 1884

Isabel showed to Colonel Olcott what he called a "remarkable portrait of Mahatma M..." that she had done.

Source for Isabel showing her painting of Morya to Colonel Olcott: Colonel Olcott's diary, mentioned at theosophy.com in an article The Portraits of the Masters Part I, by Daniel Caldwell; uploaded 15 September 2006.

Date of the two paintings commissioned from Schmiechen:

Reader's Guide to the Mahatma letters to A P Sinnett editors George E Linton and Virginia Hanson. Published Adyar Chennai India: Theosophical Publishing House 1972: 243-44: confirming the date of the commissions from Schmiechen; that there were two; when he painted them; and what had happened to the finished paintings. There was no mention in this account of the Morya painting done by Isabel.

26 JUNE 1884

Isabel held a reception, to which many of her theosophist friends were invited.

Information from: an account of the life of Elliott F Coues (1842-99) at theosophywiki. The wiki says that Coues first met Colonel Olcott at this reception. Coues became a member of the TS but later turned against theosophy.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm not sure, but I think Isabel was still living at 8 Hornton Street in Kensington at this time. See the entries below for 1886/87 - Isabel was trying to establish herself as a hostess on the aesthetic/spiritualist/theosophist social circuit at around this time; this evening party was part of her attempts to do so.

SUMMER 1884

Isabel showed her Valkyrie painting for the second of five times. For this showing, at the Royal Scottish Academy, Isabel gave it a longer title: The Valkyrie Maidens Proclaiming the Death of the Sun God Balder the Beautiful.

Source:

The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibitors 1826-1990 ed Charles Baile de Laperrière. Calne: Hilmarton Manor Press 1991. There are no indications as to whether the paintings were for sale or not. Volume 4 R-Z p615 entry for Steiger, de; Mme Isabel.

See the entries for its last showing, in autumn 1886, for more on this painting's subject-matter.

JULY-AUGUST 1884

Isabel was one of those TS members who signed a petition prepared by Francesca Arundale asking Blavatsky to agree to allow the forming of a study group within the TS's London Lodge. The group would focus on Eastern esotericism. However, when Isabel found out the terms and conditions of membership, she changed her mind about being in the group.

Source for the petition: H.P. Blavatsky: Collected Writings volume VI covering 1883-85. Compiled and with notes by Boris de Zirkoff. Published Los Angeles California: Blavatsky Writings Publication Fund 1954. You can see the piece of paper at Katinka Hesselink's website: www.katinkahesselink.net/blavatsky/articles/v6/y1884\_042.htm; Isabel's signature is on the petition. See also at that website Hesselink's argument for a date of between 29 June 1884 and 16 August 1884 for the preparation and signing of the petition. Source for Isabel's change of heart: Memorabilia pp174-176.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel gave two reasons for why she decided not to become a member of this theosophical inner circle. The first one she mentions is that she feared it would involve giving up her painting. But the one that weighed more with her, I think, was Blavatsky's set of rules for the group - she thought them draconian, particularly the one that required obedience to the dictats of Blavatsky's masters, her Mahatmas.

The rules were put before Isabel by Francesca Arundale, when Isabel was spending the evening with Francesca and her mother and their house-guest Mohini Chatterjee. Isabel's second thoughts about joining the group were: "If I had thrown off one set of shackles" (I presume she means those of Christianity, particularly its Evangelical tendencies) "why should I be enslaved with fresh ones?" One sad result of her change of heart was that Isabel spent less and less time with those who didn't mind Blavatsky's rules - including Francesca Arundale, who had been a good friend up until then. It's not clear from Memorabilia whether Isabel realised at the time that this would happen; certainly she never regretted her choice to keep her intellectual independence.

Sources:

The Arundales' address at the time: see www.katinkahesselink.net above: it was 77 Elgin Crescent, Notting Hill.

For Mohini Chatterjee in London:

For why he was there: Autobiography of Alfred Percy Sinnett. Unedited version published Theosophical History Centre 1986 and now available online. On p40 Sinnett says that Mohini Chatterjee had been brought to London by Olcott, having been taken up by Blavatsky as "a probationary chela". He and Olcott arrived at Victoria Station on 5 April 1884.

See also: www.open.ac.uk, the Open University's research project into the contribution of people from Asia in the making of Britain.

SUMMER 1884

Isabel exhibited her painting The Greek Captive and Her Nubian Slave at the Piccadilly Gallery, in the first exhibition held by the newly-founded Institute of Painters in Oil Colours. At this point she was still renting the studio in Holland Park Road.

Source:

Via archive.org to Catalogue of the first exhibition of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours; published 1884: p35 catalogue number 690. Separately numbered at the back of the catalogue, the current addresses of the exhibitors: p46. Edward Sherard Kennedy, husband of GD member Florence Kennedy, also had a work in the exhibition.

Comment by Sally Davis: I don't think, from the Catalogue, that Isabel was a member of the Institute - the members all seemed to be men. So her painting must have passed the scrutiny of an all-male 'standards' committee. That must have pleased her!

BY AUTUMN 1884

Isabel had given up the studio in Holland Park and moved to one at The Studios, 8 Avonmore Road Kensington.

Source: Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 2nd Autumn Exhibition 1884. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. List of exhibitors p79.

Comment by Sally Davis: Avonmore Road is near Olympia; most of it backs onto the railway. I think Isabel continued to rent this studio until 1889.

AUTUMN 1884

Isabel exhibited her oil painting Eureka! Eureka! at the Manchester Royal Institution Art Gallery.

Sources:

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 1st Autumn Exhibition 1883. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. Isabel didn't show anything at this exhibition.

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 2nd Autumn Exhibition 1884. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. List of exhibitors p79; and p14 catalogue number 128, for sale at £35. Information taken from the 1886 exhibition but applicable to all the early ones says that each artist would be allowed a maximum of three works, with works of "moderate size" being preferred to outsize canvases. The Fine Art Society of 148 New Bond Street was the Corporation's representative in London.

Comments by Sally Davis: firstly just explaining that the original Royal Manchester Institution had presented its building and its art collection to Manchester Corporation in 1882, the corporation also taking over the organisation of the Institution's art exhibitions. After this one work, Isabel didn't show any works at the corporation's Manchester exhibitions until the early 1890s.

AUTUMN 1884

Isabel exhibited three paintings at the autumn exhibition of the Royal Society of Artists Birmingham: The Veiling of Isis; The Valkyrie Maidens, shown for the third time; and Fireside Harmony.

Source:

Royal Society of Artists Birmingham Autumn Exhibition Catalogue 1884. List of exhibitors p70. P41: The Veiling of Isis, catalogue number 440 price £20. P52 The Valkyrie Maidens, catalogue number 645, price £45. P59 Fireside Harmony catalogue number 799 for sale at £6/6. The first two paintings were in oils. Fireside Harmony was a watercolour drawing.

Comments by Sally Davis: when The Valkyrie Maidens had been shown in Scotland earlier in the year, it had had a much longer title. Though the full title might have been on the frame, it had been curtailed for this exhibition's catalogue. Fireside Harmony might have been a preparatory sketch for part of a bigger work; but it might also have been an attempt at a domestic 'genre' subject. For more information on 'genre' paintings - very popular with the newly-wealthy middle-classes all over Europe - see

Popular 19th Century Painting: A Dictionary of European Genre Painters. By Philip Hook and Mark Poltimore. Antique Collectors' Club 1986. Isabel isn't listed at all in it, despite doing works in several of the genres covered by it.

AUTUMN 1884

Isabel exhibited two more paintings in Liverpool at the Walker Art Gallery: A Dream of Hermes; and Nature and Art.

Source:

14th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1884. P7 just to check whether P H Rathbone was still on the exhibition's hanging committee (he was). List of exhibitors p179. And list of exhibits: p20 catalogue number 266 - A Dream of Hermes, price £25; and p74 catalogue number 1213 - Nature and Art, for sale at £15. Both were oil paintings.

The next file in the life-by-dates sequence covers 1885 to the death of Anna Bonus Kingsford in February 1888.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER (1836-1927). My life-by-dates continues with the period January 1885 to 22 February 1888, the day Isabel's best-beloved friend - the occultist Anna Bonus Kingsford - died.

This particular update: September 2017

SALLY DAVIS

Just re-stating the Golden Dawn connection:

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888 - that is, a few months after the last event in this file. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London in the early 1890s and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

DATE UNCERTAIN BUT PROBABLY 1885/86

Isabel knew another of the first women to practice medicine in England. As well as being a friend of Dr Kingsford, through the British National Association of Spiritualists she also knew Arabella Kenealy. It was Dr Kenealy that diagnosed Kingsford as suffering from TB.

Source for Dr Kenealy's diagnosis: Memorabilia p168. Isabel says that Dr Kenealy told her of Kingsford's illness; and that it would be fatal. This was, apparently, two years before Dr Kingsford actually died.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel would scarcely have needed telling that TB killed you but perhaps Dr Kenealy didn't know how Isabel's husband had died. Being told of the diagnosis by Dr Kenealy of course, was a breach of medical confidentiality but perhaps Dr Kenealy felt that someone should know Dr Kingsford's condition who might be able to help her when she became seriously ill; and that Dr Kingsford was not likely to tell anyone herself.

Arabella Kenealy LRCP was the daughter of barrister and MP Edward Vaughan Kenealy. She was quite a lot younger than Isabel, being born in 1859. She studied medicine at the London School of Medicine for Women and worked in general practice in London and Watford from 1888 to 1894. In 1894, however, she suffered such a severe attack of diphtheria that she was unable to work in medicine again. She turned instead to writing, publishing magazine articles and books on medicine; and some novels. Later in life she listed as one of her recreations the study of race improvement; so she and Isabel shared an interest in eugenics.

Source: Who Was Who volume 3 p743 although not for the year of her birth, which I got from freebmd.

DEFINITELY 1885, POSSIBLY IN APRIL/MAY

Anna Bonus Kingsford and Edward Maitland's The Virgin of the World... was published - a book of translations of works allegedly by Hermes Trismegistus.

Comment by Sally Davis: although she doesn't mention this book in Memorabilia, Isabel will have been involved with the work-in-progress, as she had been with other publications by Anna Bonus Kingsford. Her painting A Legend of the Soul... (exhibited autumn 1887) was an illustration of Kore kosmou, the first of Kingsford and Maitland's translations.

Sources:

The Hermetic Works. The Virgin of the World.... translated into English with essays, introduction and notes by Dr Anna Bonus Kingsford and Edward Maitland. London: George Redway 1885.

It's reproduced at www.philaletheians.co.uk as

The Hermetic Works of the Virgin of the World of Hermes Mercurius Trismegistus translated, and with introductions and notes by Dr Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland, authors of The Perfect Way. 1885 Bath: Bath Occult Reprint Series, run by Robert H Fryar who also does an introduction to the book.

Date of publication: there was no advert in the Times announcing this book. However in the New Books column, Times Wednesday 13 May 1895 p12 George Redway had a one-line advert announcing that its new list was available. Perhaps The Virgin of the World was on that list.

DURING 1885

Isabel showed two paintings at the Nineteenth Century Art Society's exhibition in their galleries in Conduit Street: a painting just described as Portrait; and The Sorceress which might be a renaming of The Enchantress.

Source:

The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art published by J W Parker and Son. Volume 60 1885 p612: exhibition review. Catalogue number 28 - Portrait; catalogue number 172 - The Sorceress.

Comment by Sally Davis: the Saturday Review's reporter had been hard-put to find any paintings in this show that deserved "more than a shuddering glance"! He or she did single out Isabel's paintings from the mass, as at least possessing some merit; although he or she thought Isabel's treatment of The Sorceress's flesh was "hard and crude" and that the painting as a whole was "full of ill-distributed accents".

DURING 1885

Isabel exhibited her painting The Enchantress for the second or third time, at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin.

Source for its being shown this year:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel. The Enchantress was catalogue number £98, price £100.

Comment by Sally Davis: £100 was the price Isabel had been asking for The Enchantress when she had showed it in Liverpool in 1883. It hadn't sold then, but it might have been sold on this second outing in Ireland (see entries for November 1897).

WEDNESDAYS at 4pm 9 MAY TO 1 JULY 1885 at 22 ALBEMARLE STREET

The Hermetic Society held its annual series of lectures. Isabel didn't give any of the lectures but she probably went to most if not all of the meetings. Admittance was by visitor's card.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research. Published London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Volume 5 which covers all the talks at the Hermetic Society that spring; although it doesn't give any guests lists: p224 for the announcement; pp353-54 for Isabel's letter.

Comment by Sally: Light volume 5 also covers a dispute between the Hermetic Society and Dr G Wyld, in which Dr Wyld was claiming that the Bible was not an esoteric document. Isabel wrote in to Light on the side of the Hermetic Society, saying that in her view, Dr Wyld's argument was "untenable".

3 JUNE 1885

Isabel's nephew Charles Verney Lace (son of her dead brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace) married Cécile Marguérite Forget, daughter of Isabel's husband's first employer in Liverpool.

Source: freebmd.

Also via www.genesreunited.co.uk to the Morning Post issues of 19 March 1885 and 6 June 1885: announcement of the engagement and then of the marriage at St Matthew and St James Moscley Hill.

Comment by Sally Davis: surely Isabel went to this wedding. Just noting here that the Morning Post was a national, not a local newspaper; and it was a very Conservative and conservative paper.

SAID BY ISABEL TO BE 1885 BUT POSSIBLY 1886

Isabel returned to Brittany for the summer, and then went to Paris, where she saw an exhibition of Impressionist paintings. She wasn't impressed: she described the style as an "illness".

Source: Memorabilia p287, p290.

Comment by Sally: there's definitely a problem with Isabel's recollections here:

Website arthistory.about.com gives accounts of all 8 impressionist exhibitions; and there are discussions on wikipedia pages and elsewhere of some of the paintings exhibited at them. The 7th impressionist exhibition was held in March 1882; then four years passed before the 8th one, held at 1 rue Lafitte from May-June 1886. Neither of those dates fits Isabel's recollection so either she has got the date wrong and means 1886; or she didn't mean either of those exhibitions, but some other show involving impressionist works.

AUTUMN 1885

Once again Isabel was an exhibitor at the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition. She showed just the one work, this year: "Trust her not, she is fooling thee".

Source:

15th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1885. List of exhibitors p124. List of exhibits p75 catalogue number 1254 - "Trust her not, she is fooling thee" (Isabel's quote marks), price £10.

Comment by Sally Davis: I don't know why the title is in quotes. Assuming it to be taken from a poem, I searched for the words on the web but didn't get any useful responses.

1886-1889

Isabel lived at 3 Woodstock Road Bedford Park, Chiswick. The house didn't have a studio and after three years she decided she couldn't afford to pay rent on two addresses; so she moved out of Bedford Park, back into town.

Source: Memorabilia p168, p80.

Comment by Sally Davis: several other future GD members were living in Bedford Park by the late 1880s: John and Frances Brodie-Innes, Henry and Henrietta Paget, John Todhunter and the Yeats family. I'm assuming that when she moved out of Woodstock Road, she also gave up the studio at Avonmore Road.

SUMMER 1886

Isabel showed two works at the summer exhibition of the Nineteenth Century Art Society. Both works were in oils: Strada Tiberio Capri; and Villa Pompeiana.

Source:

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Summer 1886: p3 for their whereabouts, in the large gallery which was all oil paintings; p22 for Strada Tiberio Capri, catalogue number 224, for sale at £6/6; and p24 for Villa Pompeiana, catalogue number 253, priced £7/7.

Comment by Sally Davis: it's most likely that the two paintings were landscapes, but given Isabel's enthusiasm for Alma Tadema, they may have focused on ruined pieces of Roman architecture.

AUTUMN 1886

Isabel also had two oil paintings with figures in, in the Nineteenth Century Art Society autumn exhibition: an Odalisque, Cairo; and A Lonely Beggar in a Lonely Road, Capri.

Comment by Sally Davis, at May 2017: I still haven't been able to date Isabel's trip or trips to Capri.

Source:

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Autumn 1886; p3 for where Isabel's paintings were hung - the large gallery again. P13 for An Odalisque: Cairo, catalogue number 112 price £8/8. P21 for A Lonely Beggar... catalogue number 204, for sale at £12/12.

And just confirming from the catalogue's p49 that Isabel was a member of the Society, at least at this stage. I haven't been able to find out how long the Society lasted.

AFTER 1886, PROBABLY AFTER 1887

Isabel was invited to attend some of Lady Wilde's famous Saturday afternoons. She met Oscar Wilde at one of them but didn't really take to Lady Wilde's social circle. She also fell out with Lady Wilde when she refused Lady Wilde's request to arrange a seance in her house. Isabel was giving her own "studio receptions" at the time at her studio in Avonmore Road; which included seances.

Source: Memorabilia p81, p85-86, p107 but Isabel seems to associate it with the 1870s which can't be right.

Comment by Sally on how Isabel and Lady Wilde met: in Memorabilia Isabel mentions knowing Lady Wilde's elder son Willie, who was interested in theosophy. It was most likely Willie who invited her.

Comments by Sally on Isabel and the Wilde family: perhaps Isabel saw Lady Wilde's Saturdays as a rival to her own receptions. I've been able to tie Isabel and Lady Wilde down to the late 1880s through a work by another GD member, Anna de Brémont. de Brémont's Oscar Wilde and His Mother was published in London by Everett and Co Ltd 1911. On p42: when Anna arrived in London in mid-1886 Lady Wilde was still living in Mayfair. P57 Lady Wilde moved to Oakley St Chelsea soon after Anna began to write (which was about 1887/88). Isabel says that when she was going to Lady Wilde's Saturdays, they were in Chelsea; so she can't have been invited before 1887.

It's likely that it was through Lady Wilde that Isabel met the public raconteur Romola Tynte, whose portrait she painted in 1887 (see below).

AUTUMN 1886

Isabel showed two works at this year's autumn exhibition at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool: The Valkyrie Maidens (for the fifth and last time); and The Lost Pleiad.

Source:

16th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1886. List of exhibitors p115. List of exhibits: p12 catalogue number 93 "The Valkyrie Maidens (vide Robert Buchanan's Poem)" (my quotes), price £47/10; and p65 catalogue number 1071 - "The Lost Pleiad. Blind Merope - Hope Abandoned. Vide Edwin Arnold" (again my quotes), price £31/10. Both were oil paintings.

Comments by Sally Davis: firstly on the Valkyrie painting's last outing. It was quite usual for Isabel to vary the title slightly when showing a painting that had been exhibited before; so by September 1886, the Valkyrie painting's title had gone through five slight variations. I'm sure she was hoping that regular art-gallery visitors would think they were seeing a new painting rather than one they might have looked at before.

This, the title included mention of the work that must have inspired it.

Sources for Robert Williams Buchanan 1841-1901: there's a wiki on him with a list of some of his works. Though these lines were not published until 1885, after the painting must have been finished, Isabel obviously thought they gave a flavour of what she was trying to portray:

Like Valkyries heavenly-eyed

From the storm-cloud trooping forth

They appear in Buchanan's The Earthquake. At www.robertbuchanan.co.uk you can see the full text of the poem, The Earthquake; Or Six Days and a Sabbath published Chatto and Windus 1885.

Comment by Sally Davis on The Lost Pleiad: Isabel had taken her inspiration this time from Sir Edwin Arnold's The Lost Pleiad: A Story of the Stars - you can read the full text at poetrynook.com. Isabel would have met Arnold in the mid-1880s at the Sinnetts' Sunday evening receptions, but she probably his poetry many years before: The Economist 1856 p538 issue of 17 May 1856 had a review of The Lost Pleiad, as one of Arnold's anthology Griselda and Other Poems, published in London by Bogue.

I haven't found many reviews of Isabel's exhibited paintings on the web, but it so happens that both the paintings at this year's Walker Art Gallery exhibition did get mentioned in a Liverpool newspaper:

Via genesreunited to Liverpool Mercury 1 November 1886: The Lost Pleiad was mentioned in the Art Notes column. And also via genesreunited to an issue of Liverpool Mercury from a few weeks later, 18 November 1886, which had comments on both the Valkyrie Maidens and The Lost Pleiad. The Mercury's critic described The Lost Pleiad as "very fanciful in design". I'm not sure whether that is a compliment!

Via google to The Pall Mall Budget which was a weekly selection of articles previously published in the Pall Mall Gazette. Pall Mall Budget volume 33 described by google as 1885 but surely 1886: p83 singled out The Lost Pleiad for praise, in a review of the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition, describing it as "the only attempt in the direction of imaginative art in the gallery".

Just noting here that not all references to The Lost Pleiad mean the painting by Isabel: I noticed the Liverpool Mercury of 10 October 1887 referring to a painting with the same name by William Padgett; catalogue number 266 at the Walker Art Gallery that year.

1887

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky settled permanently in London.

Information from: Helena Petrovna Blavatsky introduced and edited by Nicholas Goodrick-Clarke. Berkeley California: North Atlantic Books 2004; p14.

A more specific date found at en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Blavatsky\_Lodge which says she arrived in England from Europe on 1 May 1887, having been invited by members of Blavatsky Lodge.

DURING 1887

Isabel may have done a portrait of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. When the painting was for sale at a French auction house in 2001 or 2002, it was tentatively entitled 'Portrait of Madame Blavatska'.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm rather cautious about seeing the painting as a portrait of Blavatsky; and so was the French auction house. There's no doubt that the painting sold in 2001 and/or 2002 was done by Isabel in 1887: the 2001 catalogue details noted that her signature and the year were in the bottom right hand corner. The person (or entity) depicted bears no resemblance whatever to the well-known photographs of Blavatsky in later life. Perhaps Isabel was painting her subject as she would have been in her youth; or even painting Blavatsky's soul rather than her body. In Memorabilia Isabel doesn't mention having painted Blavatsky's portrait; but hardly any of her paintings are mentioned in it.

Sources for the 1887 painting sold in 2001 and/or 2002.

The painting in question can be seen, though not well, at www.artnet.com; and on Pinterest. There are more details of it at www.auction.fr which describes Isabel as a "peintre orientaliste"; and at www.auctionclub.com where Isabel is said to be German. According to both these websites, the painting was in an auction at Beussant-Lefèvre Paris. The French website gives the date of the sale as 2001 while auctionclub says it was 2002. The painting could have been for sale twice in quick succession after not having met its reserve price the first time.

A list of paintings exhibited by Isabel in 1887. Perhaps the 'madame Blavatska' is actually one of these:

|      |   |                            |
|------|---|----------------------------|
| 1887 | The Fairy Syren (sic) of the Water Lilies   |                            |
| 1887 | Harmonia                                    |                            |
| 1887 | A Legend of the Soul...                     |                            |
| 1887 | Portrait of Romola Tynte                    | The second of two showings |
| 1887 | The Rock Syren (sic) Singing the Storm Song |                            |
| 1887 | Head of Beatrice                            |                            |

I don't think it's very likely that it's one of the two 'syren' paintings; and Isabel's long subtitle for what's going on in her Legend of the Soul painting makes that one an unlikely candidate. If it is not a previously unknown portrait by Isabel of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky; and if it was exhibited and not just given to the sitter, whoever that was, the two most promising paintings are: Harmonia; and Head of Beatrice.

ALSO DURING 1887

Isabel's portrait of Romola Tynte was shown at the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts in Dublin.

Source:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel. Catalogue number 296; not for sale.

Comments by Sally Davis: Romola Tynte was the professional name of Mary Magill Tynte Potter (1852-1913), daughter of the Rev Samuel George Potter and distant cousin of Isabel's hostess acquaintance Lady Wilde. For a few years from about 1886 to the mid-1890s, Romola Tynte was known as a reciter of stories, sketches and extracts from plays, on the social circuit in private houses in Ireland, England and the USA. She was helped to establish herself in this role by both Lady Wilde and Oscar Wilde, especially when she went to America. Later she went to work for the Women's Franchise League as assistant to Elizabeth Wolstenholme Elmy.

I think Isabel met Romola Tynte through the Wilde family, probably at one of Lady Wilde's Saturday afternoons. Perhaps the portrait was commissioned as part of the Wildes' efforts to establish Romola's public career. When Isabel exhibited the painting it was not for sale. As it was most likely done as a favour to Lady Wilde, she probably gave it either to Lady Wilde or to Romola herself.

Sources for Romola Tynte:

For the mutual friend Jane, Lady Wilde, see her wiki.

At freepages.genealogy.rootsweb, a transcription of Fifty Years of Sheffield Church Life 1866-1916 by Rev Canon W Odom. Rev S G Potter appears in Chapter VI: well-known churchmen Odom had known personally; as vicar of St Luke's Hollis Croft from 1869; as one who revelled in controversy; and as an Orangeman whose parish was mostly occupied by Roman Catholics.

At www.worldcat.org a few copies of a pamphlet: Church and State: Controversy Between Rev S G Potter and..."Pastor Gordon". In 14 Letters. 1874 in London, Manchester and Sheffield. Pastor Gordon is John Henry Gordon.

Marriage of Mary's parents: at www.cotyroneireland.com/marriages/cookstown.html, Cookstown marriage announcements taken from the local parish registers; the Strabane Morning Post; the Londonderry Sentinel; and the Londonderry Standard. In the list published one of those papers on 11 October 1845: marriage of Rev Samuel George Potter of Cushenden county Antrim to Elizabeth daughter of Samuel Rankin Magill Esq JP of Cookstown. S G Potter described as the eldest son of Samuel Potter of Springfield county Donegal.

Rev S G Potter and his family are on the census for 1871 at an address I couldn't read fully, in the St George district of Sheffield; a household where all except the servants had been born in Ireland.

Romola Tynte, raconteur:

Dublin Daily Express 12 May 1887: coverage of her farewell recital, under the patronage of Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar.

A [Gerard Manley] Hopkins Chronology by John McDermott. London: Macmillan 1997 p113 text and footnote. On 25th [April 1887] Hopkins went to Mrs More Madden's house to see Romola Tynte recite. She had been wearing a dress designed by Oscar Wilde. On 27th [April 1887] he went to the Antient Concert Rooms to see her farewell recital. On 1 May [1887] Hopkins told a contact that Romola was "a beautiful Sappho".

Comment by Sally Davis: does Hopkins think she is a lesbian? Or just a poet?.

At ebay and on google there was a picture of Romola Tynte in profile, originally on the front page of The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News volume 39 number 770 issue of 25 August 1888.

Not dated but probably from 1891-92: at www.christies.com, in a sale held in New York in December 2009: an autographed letter of introduction, addressed by Oscar Wilde to James B Pond, introducing Romola to Pond. Written on 16 Tyte St headed paper but without a date. Oscar Wilde describes Romola as having had “great success as a reciter” in England. The letter was published in the Holland and Hart-Davis Complete Letters of Oscar Wilde p292 with a note explaining that Pond had arranged a lecture tour in the US for Oscar Wilde, in January-March 1882.

Comment by Sally Davis: during that lecture tour Oscar met future GD member Anna de Brémont who was later a close friend of Lady Wilde and Constance Wilde.

Seen via google: autograph letter by James C Potter of New York to Romola Tynte, written during 1892 on the headed paper of the Hotel Boswyck.

At www.newspapers.com the Brooklyn Life of Saturday 3 December 1892 p18 the Social Column. Mention of a “series of entertainments” on 9 December [1892] at the St George Hotel, starring a Mr McKernan and “another celebrity” Miss Romola Tynte. It is this profile of Romola Tynte that states her real name and her relationship to the Wilde family.

At cdnc.ucr.edu, California Digital Newspaper Collection: Los Angeles Herald volume 42 number 39 issue of 20 May 1894 prints a paragraph on Romola Tynte, even though she doesn't seem to have visited LA or be about to visit it, saying that her recitals had been “a feature of New York drawing rooms the past season”. Her “earnest and spirituelle face” had been used by Poynter for his head of Christ in the dome of St Paul's Cathedral. She had also been used as a model by Lant, for his Lesbia; by Edwin Long for his Diana or Christ; and by Frank Topham for his picture of Romola.

Comment by Sally Davis on Topham's Romola: I presume Tophame was illustrating the novel Romola, by George Eliot.

Romola Tynte as a womens' rights campaigner:

The Women's Suffrate Movement: New Feminist Perspectives. Editors Maroula Joannou and June Purvis. Manchester: Manchester University Press 2009 p21 a mention of Romola as working for the Women's Franchise League; and it's October 1890.

Elizabeth Wolstenholme Elmy and the Victorian Feminist Movement by Maureen Wright. New York and Manchester: Manchester University Press 2011. On p143 Wright mentions Romola Tynte giving two recitals in May 1890 to raise funds for the Women's Franchise League.

Probate Registry 1914 re death of Mary Magill Tynte Potter, spinster, on 30 July 1913 in south Devon.

MARCH TO MAY 1887

Isabel showed a work at the Society of Lady Artists for the last time: The First Blossom of Spring: Almond Blossom, Capri, Italy.

Source:

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiled by Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328 as De Steiger, Isabel; painter. Listing for 1887: catalogue number 267, for sale at £10. Isabel was still living at 3 Woodstock Road Bedford Park at the time of the exhibition.

Comment by Sally Davis: there's no mention of a visit to Capri, in Memorabilia; perhaps Isabel went there with her husband - that is, in the late 1860s or early 1870s.

SPRING 1887

Isabel exhibited three paintings at the Nineteenth Century Art Society's spring exhibition. Once again, they were all oil paintings: The Fairy Syren (sic) of the Water Lilies, Harmonia, and L'Amour de la Nuit - La Lune - Sur la Terrasse de l'Hotel; Impression du Voyage.

Source:

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Spring 1887: p3 for where all three paintings were hung. P10 for The Fairy Syren..., catalogue number 85, price £10/10; p13 for Harmonia (which I would suppose was a classically-draped female figure), catalogue number 116, and for sale at £90, which I think was the highest price Isabel demanded for a work shown with this particular Society; and p20 for L'Amour de la Nuit..., catalogue number 205, priced at £5/5.

SUMMER 1887

Isabel showed three more works at the Nineteenth Century Art Society in its summer exhibition: Old Court Daventry; The Rock Syren (sic) Singing the Storm Song; and Head of Beatrice.

Source:

"19th" Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Summer 1887. P57 for Old Court Daventry, catalogue number 271 for sale at £9/9; p49 The Rock Syren... was a charcoal drawing, catalogue number 539 for sale at £6/6; and p50 for Head of Beatrice, a study in charcoal and red chalk, catalogue number 540, priced £5/5.

Comments by Sally Davis: this catalogue was the last I could find of exhibitions held by the Nineteenth Century Art Society. If the Society held any more after summer 1887, the catalogues have been lost.

On Head of Beatrice. Isabel wasn't really into doing paintings based on characters from Shakespeare, although that was a lucrative area for genre painters. I suppose, therefore, that Beatrice was a friend or relation, though I haven't identified any likely sitter as yet (May 2017).

On Old Court Daventry: I take this painting as evidence that Isabel did visit some at least of her relations from time to time, even though they are hardly ever mentioned in Memorabilia and there are no portraits of any of them by Isabel as far as I know. In 1862 Isabel's sister Rosamund (or Rosamond) had married Edmund Charles Burton of Daventry. Burton was a solicitor, and also Town Clerk of Daventry. On census day 1881 the Burtons were living at 29 High Street Daventry with their son, and their four daughters, none of whom were called Beatrice. By 1891, Edmund Charles' father had died and he and Rosamond had moved into the family's main house, The Lodge Daventry. When I looked on the web I couldn't find any evidence of a building called 'old court' Daventry. At daventry.mapcomp.co.uk a pub called the Old Court House was mentioned, at 23 North Street; perhaps this is the building Isabel painted.

AUTUMN 1887

Isabel showed two pictures at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition: A Legend of the Soul; and Impression de Voyage.

Source:

17th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1887. List of exhibitors p109. List of exhibits p66 catalogue number 1126 - A Legend of the Soul, price £25/10; and catalogue number 1127 - Impression de Voyage for sale at £6/6. As usual both were oil paintings.

Comment by Sally Davis: A Legend of the Soul had a sub-title: Persephone Sinking into the Abyss of Hades. Isabel also sent in a long quote, which the Corporation of Liverpool duly reproduced in the catalogue: "Persephone, wilfully straying from the Mansions of Heaven, falls under the power of the Hadean God, in other words Persephone typifying the Soul sinks into the profound depths of a material nature. Hermes Trismegistus". I haven't seen the painting but it must be an illustration of kore kosmou, the first of a group of works by the supposed Hermes Trismegistus translated by Anna Bonus Kingsford and Edward Maitland, in their The Hermetic Works. The Virgin of the World (see 1885). Kingsford and Maitland saw the tale of Persphone and the Underworld in two ways: as showing how closely linked were the religions of the Classical world and the early forms of Christianity; and as an allegory of spiritual or psychological death and rebirth, a way in which it is still seen today.

At www.philalethians.co.uk you can read the full text of the book, though it has a slightly different title: The Hermetic Works of the Virgin of the World of Hermes Mercurius Trismegistus translated and with introduction and notes by Dr Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland, authors of The Perfect Way. 1885 Bath: Bath Occult Reprint Series, run by Robert H Fryar who also does an introd to the book.

Isabel doesn't mention A Legend of the Soul in Memorabilia. I do wonder, though, whether she had in her mind when she was painting it, that Anna Bonus Kingsford was very ill with TB: Dr Kingsford's actual death and possible rebirth on some other plane were likely to take place quite soon.

22 FEBRUARY 1888

Isabel received a telegram at her house in Bedford Park, summoning her to go to the aid of Rev Kingsford (Dr Kingsford's husband, now her widower) and Edward Maitland (her partner in esotericism) as Dr Kingsford had died during the night. Isabel went at once, shocked, as she hadn't realised Dr Kingsford was so ill.

Source for the incident though not the date: Memorabilia p168-169.

Source for the date: Biography of Anna Bonus Kingsford and her Founding of the Hermetic Society by Samuel Hopgood Hart. I bought a Kessinger Legacy Reprints in 2013 but originally the Biography was only the introductory essay to Hopgood Hart's edition of Kingsford's writings, The Credo of Christendom published 1930; p52.

Comment by Sally: it sounds from Memorabilia as though Isabel had not been able to bring herself to accept that Anna Bonus Kingsford was dying, until her death had actually taken place. It's possible, of course, that Dr Kingsford had undergone a sudden decline in the last few weeks, so that though her death was half-expected, Isabel didn't expect it so soon. However it happened, her death and the loss of her friendship, was a defining moment in Isabel's life, for all the wrong reasons. In her Memorabilia she doesn't mention any other woman to whom she was so close - her relationship with Mary Ann Atwood was not the same at all.

The death of Anna Bonus Kingsford ends this file in the life-by-dates of Isabel de Steiger. The next file covers the years the rest of 1888 to 1900; including the period when Isabel was in the Order of the Golden Dawn.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER (1836-1927) This part of my life-by-dates begins with the death of Isabel's friend Dr Anna Bonus Kingsford in February 1888; and ends with a warehouse fire in the summer of 1900 in which most of Isabel's possessions were destroyed. It includes all the years in which Isabel was an active member of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn.

THE LAYOUT BELOW which I hope isn't too difficult to read.

What Isabel was doing, tends to be in italics. My comments, and the sources, are typed in my usual Times New Roman.

Lastly, before we start, a quick note on her name: she was baptised with it spelled in the French way - Isabelle - and did return to that spelling from time to time in her life. For most of her life, however, she used 'Isabel' and I'll stick with that.

22 FEBRUARY 1888

Isabel received a telegram at her house in Bedford Park telling her that Anna Bonus Kingsford had died during the night.

Source for the incident though not the date: Memorabilia p168-169.

Source for the date: Biography of Anna Bonus Kingsford and her Founding of the Hermetic Society by Samuel Hopgood Hart. I bought a Kessinger Legacy Reprints in 2013 but originally the Biography was only the introductory essay to Hopgood Hart's edition of Kingsford's writings, The Credo of Christendom published 1930; p52.

Anna Bonus Kingsford died of TB. For more on Isabel's close friendship with Anna, see Part 2 of this life-by-dates.

AUTUMN 1888

Isabel showed one painting at the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition: Celebration of the Mysteries.

Source:

Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1888. On p51a catalogue number 1261 - Celebration of the Mysteries which was an oil painting. Isabel was asking £100 for it, one of the highest prices she ever demanded.

Comment by Sally Davis: the drama at the heart of the painting was going to be unfamiliar to virtually everyone who saw it, so Isabel included an explanation of what was going on: "Celebration of one of the Mysteries in the Temple of Isis. The Roman lady, having no Password, is refused admittance by the Priestess. Roman Period." As with the modern web, so with the occult world - including the GD, which Isabel was just about to join - passwords are important in keeping out those who have no business to be there.

PROBABLY AUTUMN 1888

Isabel was commissioned by her friend Isabel Cooper-Oakley to paint something to be displayed on the day Mrs Cooper-Oakley would be opening her new café. Isabel painted The Spirit of the Crystal for the occasion; in pastels.

Source for the commission and where it was to be displayed: Memorabilia p159 and p161 but Isabel dates the commission at 1880-81 which is several years too soon.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel Cooper-Oakley, a theosophist who had been at Girton College Cambridge, was already in business as the owner of a hat shop. The projected café was the first of the Dorothy Restaurants – women-only affairs which offered a plain lunch for a fixed price. Mrs C-O hoped that by keeping the fixed price low the Dorothys would be used by the working women of the West End, but they also became popular with wealthy women shoppers. Isabel's painting was reproduced as an illustration in the occult journal Unknown World volume 1 1894. Below the reproduction was a note that Isabel had painted the original in 1890 (which wasn't right); it was signed.

OCTOBER 1888

Isabel was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at the Isis-Urania temple in London.

Source for the initiation: R A G The Golden Dawn Companion.

Source for Isabel as a GD member: Memorabilia p117, p135.

Some comments on Isabel in the GD by Sally Davis: the GD's founders, William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers, had started to move towards setting up the GD in the first few months of 1888. They were both members of Anna Bonus Kingsford's Hermetic Society so Isabel would have been well-acquainted with them. I wonder if the GD would have been founded at all if Dr Kingsford hadn't died. Helen Petrovna Blavatsky was increasingly hostile towards western esotericism being studied by Theosophical Society members. The GD was a place that the Hermetic Society's members could go to, after Anna Bonus Kingsford's death, to pursue their western-oriented occult interests.

Isabel mentioned the GD several times in Memorabilia. She thought of it as a Rosicrucian order and referred to it as such. She saw being initiated into the GD as part of a sea-change in her life, as she moved from spiritualism, through theosophy, to being "a Rosicrucian"; and then on again to anthroposophy. At least in its early days, the GD was a Rosicrucian organisation. Members of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (of which Westcott was a very senior member) were asked to advise on ritual and texts for initiates to study. It only began to move in new and exciting directions - Egyptian magic, Celtic myth - later in the 1890s.

While she was an active member of the GD she took the duties of initiates very seriously: "my studies were restricted to the manuscripts of the Order". When I was beginning to investigate Isabel's life I saw several messages on the web saying that she never mentioned the GD in Memorabilia. This is true, in the sense that the words 'Golden Dawn' are never used in it. But I think the message-posters forgot to allow for the occult habit of always referring to things obliquely, not directly, and never by name; and also for the oaths of secrecy that members took at their initiation.

BY LATER IN 1888

Isabel had moved to 58 Blomfield Road.

Source: see the next entry - Isabel at the Grosvenor Gallery. Isabel called Blomfield Road Maida Hill, but these days we'd call it 'Little Venice'.

Comment by Sally Davis: she was still there on census day 1891.

24 NOVEMBER 1888

Isabel's The Spirit of a Crystal won her £5 on the opening day of Mrs Cooper-Oakley's Dorothy Restaurant.

Source for the date:

Shopping for Pleasure: Women in the Making of London's West End by Erika Diane Rappaport. Princeton University Press 2001: p256, re footnote 146. This first Dorothy was in Mortimer Street.

Source for Isabel's competition win: Memorabilia p162.

Source for the interior design of the first Dorothy; and the opening of the second: Constance: the Tragic and Scandal Life of Mrs Oscar Wilde by Franny Moyle. London: John Murray 2011. I saw this via google and couldn't find a page number.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel was one of four women artists Mrs Cooper-Oakley asked to paint works for the opening day. Customers at the Dorothy on its first day were asked to vote for which of the four they liked best: and the vote went to The Spirit of the Crystal. Mrs Cooper-Oakley won't have gone to Isabel for the interior design of the Dorothy, I suppose. The walls were done in cream with crimson dados; and the room was decorated with Japanese fans and umbrellas.

The first Dorothy's opening was a relatively quiet affair but by 21 June 1889, the Dorothy in Mortimer Street had become fashionable, so that the opening of Mrs Cooper-Oakley's second café was an occasion for a big turn-out by the 'aesthetic' group. Constance Wilde attended it; and though the Dorothys were women-only an exception was made this once for Oscar. Other well-known guests included the art critic Lady Colin Campbell. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Countess Wachtmeister were also there; but Isabel probably wasn't.

POSSIBLY END OF 1888; DEFINITELY EARLY 1889

Isabel showed some paintings done in pastels in an exhibition - or possibly two exhibitions - at the Grosvenor Gallery at 135 New Bond Street in London.

Comments on the sources by Sally Davis: this is a tricky one as the evidence I've found conflicts with Isabel's own recollections; and I haven't tracked down as yet (that's September 2017) a copy of the Grosvenor Gallery's first Pastels Exhibition which took place just before Christmas in 1888. Isabel's recollections are on Memorabilia p159 in which she says that four of her works were all shown at the Grosvenor Gallery in one exhibition: her portraits of Patience Sinnett and Mabel Collins; Phaedra; and The Spirit of the Crystal. She doesn't give the date of the exhibition and the evidence from exhibition catalogues I've found so far suggests there were only three paintings not four; that they were not shown together; and two were not shown until 1890. The Spirit of the Crystal was included in the group on the back of its success at the Dorothy Restaurant. It didn't sell, though.

Sources I've found so far:

Grosvenor Gallery [etc] exhibitors; compiled by Algernon Graves and covering exhibitions at the Grosvenor to 1894. This is a set of handwritten entries, leather-bound in 3 volumes; in the collection at the National Art Library in the V&A. In Volume 1 A-F there's no entry for Isabel as 'de'; and in Volume 3 Q-Z there's no entry for her as 'S' either. However, I think Graves didn't have any better luck than I have done, finding copies of the exhibitions in which works by Isabel were shown.

I have found copies of Grosvenor Gallery exhibition catalogues for:

- Summer 1880, which was the first ever held. Future GD member Florence Kennedy exhibited a painting this time. There was nothing by Isabel in the exhibition but she may have gone along to see it, to see works by Lady Anne Blunt, whom she had met while she was living in Egypt.
- Summer 1882. GD member Henry Marriott Paget had paintings in this exhibition; but again, Isabel didn't show anything.
- Summer 1888. No works by Isabel.
- Autumn 1888. No works by Isabel.

I haven't tracked down any other catalogues from the 1880s yet.

- First Pastel Exhibition. I haven't found a catalogue yet, though I did come across evidence that the exhibition definitely took place, around November/December 1888.
- (definitely the) Second Pastel Exhibition 1890: p118 in the list of exhibitors: Isabel, at 58 "Bloofield" (sic, it's Blomfield) Road Maida Hill.. There was one work by Isabel in this exhibition: p67, catalogue number 302, "A Portrait" - which could be either Patience Sinnett or Mabel Collins.

For Isabel's works in a Grosvenor Gallery pastels exhibition in 1890 see below.

?WINTER 1888 TO EARLY 1889

Immediately after exhibiting at the Grosvenor Gallery, Isabel and a friend left England by P&O steamer. They went first to Alexandria before taking the popular boat-trip up the Nile, spending the winter at Aswan. Isabel describes her friend as "my comrade in spiritual investigations" but during this long period spent together, the friend's nit-picking behaviour strained their relationship severely.

Source for the trip and the problematic friend: Memorabilia p159 in which she doesn't give a specific date. However, she associates the long trip with the four paintings she exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery. She doesn't give the friend's name.

Cautious comment by Sally Davis: I do wonder if the comrade in spiritual investigations, who proved so irritating as a companion, was Anne Judith Penny.

5 MARCH 1889

Back in London, Isabel went to a meeting of the London Spiritualist Alliance, held in headquarters at 2 Duke Street Adelphi. Mr E Dawson Rogers, the founder of the LSA's magazine Light, gave a talk: Some Personal Experiences with a Sensitive.

Source:

Light: A Journal of Psychical Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi: p130.

2 APRIL 1889

Isabel was at the London Spiritualist Alliance's rooms again, this time to listen to Edward Maitland on The Probable Course of Development and Ultimate Issue of the Present Spiritual Movement.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychical Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Pubg Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 432 Saturday 13 April 1889 pp179-182. On a list of the more prominent spiritualists in the audience was a “Miss Bates” who might be the GD member and vigorous proponent of spiritualism Emily Katharine Bates.

9 APRIL 1889

Isabel was the speaker at a meeting of the London Spiritualist Alliance at 2 Duke Street Adelphi. Her talk was on Spiritualists and Public Worship.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychological Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 433 Saturday 20 April 1889 p191-193.

Comment by Sally Davis:

Isabel’s talk was her contribution to an ongoing debate in spiritualist circles, about whether there should be a building where spiritualists could worship, in public, as a group. In her talk, Isabel described her own spiritual views, which encompassed both the Pantheism mentioned by Maitland in his talk the previous week, and a conviction that students of spiritual science should follow “the law of Christ” (quoting Isabel on p193). As to whether spiritualists should gather together in public to offer public acknowledgement and thanks to “the gracious Father of the universe” (quoting Isabel on p191), she didn’t think the time had yet come for such a move. She also thought that students of spiritual science such as herself each needed to follow their own path, in private. Coming together to worship as a group might suit some, but not all. Edward Maitland was at this talk and he led the discussion that took place afterwards.

AUTUMN 1889

Isabel showed two paintings at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition: The Flight of Aurora; and The First Blush of Spring - Capri.

Source:

19th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1889. List of exhibitors p135. List of pictures p54 in Room VI which was given over to watercolour drawings; catalogue number 936 - The Flight of Aurora, described as a pastel and available at £15/15. And p43 catalogue number 722 which was an oil painting - The First Blush of Spring - Capri, price £10/10.

Comments by Sally Davis:

Firstly on The First Blush of Spring: I suppose this must be a second outing for the one Isabel had shown in 1887 at the Society of Lady Artists as First Blossom of Spring: Almond Blossom, Capri, Italy.

Secondly on the Aurora paintings - I think there are two, possibly three. In Memorabilia pp110-112 Isabel writes of a painting called “Aurora Clothed with the Dawn”. As it was “a picture after my own heart”, she never exhibited it. She took it with her as she moved from new address to new address, until it was destroyed by fire in 1900.

Perhaps Isabel’s memory was playing tricks - she was writing Memorabilia decades after many of the events in it, and without being able to use her diary entries from the time. Because not only was there a painting by Isabel called The Flight of Aurora, in pastel, exhibited in 1889; there was also another one with the same name, done in oil and shown in 1893, probably as a pair with one called The Chariot of Venus. It’s all very confusing. Or am I just making things too complicated?

19 OCTOBER 1889

Isabel went to a meeting of the Bedford Park Society to hear a talk by T L Henly. The talk was an introduction to Spiritualism.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychological Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 463 Saturday 16 November 1889 pp554-555, a letter from Isabel in response to one from T L Henly about the way he was treated that evening.

Comment by Sally Davis: editions of Light at around this time have a lot in them by T L Henly - he was a very keen proselytiser on spiritualism's behalf. But he was the type to take umbrage very easily. He was so upset and annoyed by how the audience had behaved both during his talk and in the question-and-answer session afterwards, that he wrote a long, irritable letter to Light about it, which was published in the issue of 2 November 1889. Isabel wrote in response, trying to tell Henly, in the gentlest manner possible, that she at least thought he hadn't tailored his talk to fit his rather unusual audience. His talk, she thought, had placed too much emphasis on spiritualism as a release from the fear of death: such an argument was not likely to weigh as much with a group of bohemian intellectuals as with the audiences Henly was more used to. Isabel's letter was her last word on the subject. Henly didn't like her criticisms and wrote to Light to say so; provoking one or two other people to write in, arguing on one side or the other.

It's really interesting to discover that Isabel knew people in the Bedford Park Society in 1889. I haven't ever found a list of its members but many people who later joined the GD were living in Bedford Park at the time and were likely to have been members, if not founders, of the Society. In fact, the sequence of letters in response to Henly's complaints was closed, in Light's last issue of 1889, by a short, rather brusque one from W B Yeats saying that Henly should have been prepared for robust debate, lecturing on such a controversial subject. Yeats' letter doesn't say so specifically but I think he must have been at Henly's lecture himself; perhaps he was on the Society's committee. Other people who lived nearby, were members of the GD at one time, and may have gone to Mr Hely's talk were: Florence Farr; Henrietta Paget and her husband Henry Marriott Paget; John William Brodie-Innes and his wife Frances; John Todhunter; Frederick Leigh Gardner; and Dorothea Butler. Yeats' letter was in Light number 469 Saturday 28 December 1889 p619.

26 NOVEMBER 1889

Isabel went once again to a meeting of the London Spiritualist Alliance at 2 Duke Street. This time the speaker was Morell Theobald, a very active member of the LSA. His talk, Gleanings Abroad, was an account of his recent round-the-world trip.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychological Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 466 Saturday 7 December 1889 p587.

Comment by Sally Davis: Morell Theobald's brother Robert Masters Theobald, a doctor and homoeopath, was a member of the GD. He gave one or two talks at the LSA on medical matters but probably wasn't a spiritualist as he didn't go to many other LSA meetings.

7 DECEMBER 1889

There was another lecture at the Bedford Park Society, this time on theosophy, given by Colonel Henry Olcott. Isabel may have gone to this too - though she knew the subject well and I haven't found anything specifically saying that she was in the audience that evening.

Source: Source: Light: A Journal of Psychological Occult and Mystical Research volume IX

January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 467 Saturday 14 December 1889 p603 and number 468 Saturday 21 December 1889.

Comment by Sally Davis: T L Henly might have been slightly cheered to find from subsequent issues of Light that the Bedford Park Society gave Colonel Olcott quite as hard a time as they had given him.

10 DECEMBER 1889

Isabel gave her second talk of the year at the London Spiritualist Alliance: Spiritualism Amongst the Poets - The Epic of Hades.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychical Occult and Mystical Research volume IX January-December 1889. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Issue number 468 Saturday 21 December 1889 p610-612.

Comment by Sally Davis. Because poetry is something that I have never got the hang of, I had never heard of the author of The Epic of Hades, Lewis Morris. Although I think he is not read much now, Morris was very well-known in his lifetime and has his own wikipedia page. Isabel's argument during her talk was that Lewis Morris was a spiritualist poet and the The Epic of Hades a spiritualist work. Amongst a number of characters mentioned in the poem as spending time in Tartarus learning from mistakes they made in their lifetimes was Phaedra. Isabel described the Phaedra of the poem as still wanting revenge; and she may have been inspired to start her own painting of Phaedra by Morris' work. The discussion which followed Isabel's talk was led by Alaric A Watts; and by Professor George Chainey of Boston Massachusetts who was in London on a lecture tour. While she was preparing her talk, Isabel had been lent the 30 November 1889 edition of The Agnostic Journal (I wonder who the lender was, perhaps a member of the Bedford Park Society) which had in it an article by George Chainey on Dreamers of Dreams.

Lewis Morris' The Epic of Hades was first published anonymously in London by Henry S King and Co in 1877. In 1878 Kegan Paul took it up, and published it with Morris named as its author. Kegan Paul's publication was into its fourth edition by the end of 1879; but I don't quite understand why Isabel had chosen it as a subject for a talk over a decade later.

For further on George Chainey, a convert to spiritualism who had been a Christian minister:

New Religions and the Theological Imagination in America by Mary Farrell Bednarowski. Bloomington: Indiana University Press 1989: In the Notes Section p141 note 4.

Whitman and the Irish by Joann P Krieg. Iowa City: Univ of Iowa Press 2000 p148, which covers Chainey's decisive intervention when the Boston city authorities were trying to censor Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass on grounds of obscenity. He read out Whitman's poem To A Common Prostitute in one of his sermons to force a decision on the matter - and the obscenity case was dropped.

DURING 1890

Although she was not a member of the new society, Isabel exhibited two works at the Grosvenor Gallery in the First Exhibition of the Society of British Pastellists: Phaedra "The Pale Dark Queen with Passion in her Eyes"; and The Jewel with The Spirit of the Diamonds.

Source:

The Exhibition Catalogue 1890: p52 catalogue number 225 for Phaedra; and p80 catalogue number 361 for the Jewel painting, which may or may not be the painting Isabel remembered as 'The Spirit of the Crystal'.

Comment by Sally Davis: see the entry for 10 December 1889: Isabel's Phaedra was inspired by Lewis Morris' The Epic of Hades, first published anonymously in London by Henry S King and Co in 1877, then published in 1878 by Kegan Paul with Morris' name on it.

TUESDAY 21 JANUARY 1890

Isabel went to a London Spiritualist Alliance soirée at St James's Hall. Also on the guest-list was a "Miss Bates" who might be the GD member Emily Katharine Bates, the traveller and author.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research. Published London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Volume 10 January-December 1890 Issue number 479 published Saturday 25 January 1890 p43.

28 JULY 1890

Isabel's niece Rosamund Westbrooke Burton (daughter of Isabel's sister Rosamund) married William Rhodes of Flore Fields near Daventry.

Source: via www.genesreunited.co.uk to Northampton Mercury issues of 25 July 1890 and 1 August 1890.

At www.highsheriffnorthamptonshire.com just to give a flavour of the kind of circles Isabel's sister Rosamund was moving in: Thomas William Rhodes of Flore Fields, father of her son-in-law William Rhodes, served as high sheriff of Northamptonshire in 1876-77; and Rosamund's son-in-law Thomas William Thornton was high sheriff in 1886-87.

Via archive.org to Baily's Magazine of Sports and Pastimes volume 29 1877 p12 activities of the Rhodes family as members of the Pytchley and other hunts.

AUTUMN 1890

After a gap of several years, Isabel showed a painting at the Manchester Art Gallery autumn exhibition: The Sunny South (Lyme Regis Bay).

Source:

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 8th Autumn Exhibition 1890. Manchester: Henry Blacklock and Co of Albert Square. List of exhibitors p59 with Isabel still at the 58 Blomfield Road address. On p22: catalogue number 239, oil painting, for sale at £10/10.

Comment by Sally Davis: until February 2017, when I began my trawl through individual exhibition catalogues in search of works by Isabel, I had no idea she ever did any landscapes - she never mentions any, in Memorabilia. There's no clue in Memorabilia as to when she might have visited Lyme Regis but perhaps she had been there earlier that summer.

AUTUMN 1890

Isabel exhibited one work at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition: Phaedra Meditating her Revenge.

Source:

Missing its front cover but it's definitely the 20th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1890. List of exhibitors p122. P6 catalogue number 4 - Phaedra Meditating on her Revenge; with a quote from Lewis Morris' Epic of Hades: "The Dark Pale Queen, with Passion in her Eyes". Definitely an oil painting, price £25.

Comment by Sally Davis: just making clear that this Phaedra is not the Phaedra Isabel showed at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1890: that was a work in pastel, perhaps part of Isabel's preparations for the work in oil.

APRIL 1891

On the day of the 1891 census Isabel was still at 58 Blomfield Road. Her's was the only household at that address but it was a modest one, with only one general servant employed.

Isabel's eldest sister Constantia Lace, was still at Christleton Old Hall north-east of Chester, looking after her nieces Theodosia and Josephine Lace. Constantia had scaled down her household somewhat, probably after her nephew's marriage in 1885: she now employed only a cook, a housemaid and a kitchen maid. Isabel and Constantia's nephew Charles Verney Lace and his wife Cécile were living on the west side of Chester at Sealand House; in a household with a cook, two housemaids and a groom.

Isabel's sister Rosamond Burton and her husband had moved into the Burton family's main residence, The Lodge in Daventry, and were there with their unmarried daughter Blanche; as it was still term-time their son Edmund Gerald was away at Westminster School. Their lavish household included a ladies' maid (an expensive luxury) as well as a cook, two housemaids and a kitchen maid.

Rev John and Helena Turnbull were still at the vicarage at Temple Ewell. Four of their children were at home: Constance; Peveril, currently at Cambridge University but home for the holidays; John, who was working in the offices of a land agent; and Christine, who was nine. The Turnbulls had also reduced the number of their servants; they now employed only a cook and a housemaid. However, they also employed a governess for Christine, a woman called Louise Sapolin.

Source: 1891 census.

Comment by Sally Davis: although Louise Sapolin had left the Turnbulls' employment by 1901 and gone home to her brother's house in south London, the connection with the Turnbulls remained: Verney Turnbull, beginning a career in publishing, was lodging with them.

8 MAY 1891

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky died from influenza.

Comment by Sally Davis: there was an epidemic at the time.

Information on the date from: wikipedia page on Blavatsky. Several other TS sources all confirm the date but none give the source, probably an official announcement by the TS. There is a death registration on freebmd for Helena P Blavatsky, April-June quarter 1891, registered Marylebone. She was 59.

?1891

Isabel went to see Wagner's Tannhäuser. In a separate reference, she mentions going to Bayreuth with William and Fanny Crosfield, and seeing Tannhäuser and also Lohengrin there. She continued to go to Bayreuth occasionally after this first time; she would have liked to go regularly but couldn't afford it.

Source: Memorabilia p133, p267 though neither give a date.

Trying to tie down the date: see wikipedia's page on Wagner. The date of the first performance of Tannhäuser was 1845. Wikipedia's page on Bayreuth and the Wagner festival gives the date of the first performance at Bayreuth as 1891, in a production by Cosima Wagner. I couldn't discover whether Lohengrin was also performed during the 1891 season; but I'm assuming Isabel saw them both in the same year, 1891.

Catching up with the Crosfields:

In 1881 the Crosfields, Quaker owners of a sugar and grocery business, had been living at 16 Alexandra Park, Toxteth Park Liverpool. After the death of William's father (also named William), William the younger and Fanny moved into old William Crosfield's house - Annesley, 1 Woodland Road in Aigburth, the district Isabel and Rudolf de Steiger had lived in, immediately after their marriage. This is where the Crosfields were on census day 1891, with their daughter Dora, and a cook, three housemaids and a kitchenmaid. Not part of the household, but living in a house in the grounds, were their gardener and his wife. The Crosfields sound as though they could afford to go to Bayreuth every year.

BETWEEN APRIL AND AUTUMN 1891

Isabel left London and went back to Liverpool, moving into 32 Fern Grove Sefton Park. Earliest source for the new address: see next entry - exhibition at Manchester City Art Gallery.

In Memorabilia p187 Isabel states that she went back to live in Liverpool in 1887. However, the census and other sources show her still living in London until mid-1891.

Comment by Sally Davis on this big decision: several times in Memorabilia Isabel mentions how many times she moved house and town in the later decades of her life. The Sources I've found say that between the early 1890s and 1917 she lived in Liverpool, Edinburgh, Birmingham, Bournemouth, Llangollen, and Rock Ferry just outside Birkenhead. Then at some point in the early 1920s she moved back into the city of Liverpool and stayed there. Many were stays of only a few months - those in Birmingham and Bournemouth, for example. She might have stayed in London for a few months in 1902.

I think that the deaths of Anna Bonus Kingsford and Helena Petrovna Blavatsky meant that there was less reason for Isabel to stay in London; but I do wonder whether Isabel's finances also influenced the decision to go. Isabel had been left money by her husband that had been enough for her to live on comfortably in the 1870s and 1880s; but by 1891 she may have been finding it increasingly difficult to keep up middle-class appearances on her inherited income. And of course she could never rely on any income in any year from sales of her paintings. An essay by Bryan Taylor - The Century of Inflation - shows that the years 1815-1914 were a period of deflation rather than inflation in Britain. See Bryan Taylor's article at www.globalfinancialdata.com. However, Gregory Clark's article Housing Rents, Housing Quality and Living Standards in England and Wales 1640-1909 uses Property Tax information to show that rents increased steadily from the 1850s to 1900, rising more steeply from the mid-1870s. See Clark's article (published October 1999) at faculty.econ.ucdavis.edu. Most of his statistics are based on properties owned by charities but he argues that private rents followed the same trends. Then, as now, London rents were higher than rents elsewhere.

WHILE ISABEL WAS LIVING IN LIVERPOOL

She joined the Liverpool Spiritualist Circle. She also went to some meetings of the local lodge of the Theosophical Society but was horrified to find it full of Socialists. Isabel was particularly put off by the women socialists she met, moving in these circles, calling them “rabid”, “ill-informed” and too much influenced by the men in their lives.

Source:

Memorabilia pxxi-xxii in which Isabel described herself as “By nature...a Conservative. Somehow I distrusted Liberal politicians, their politics and their selves did not seem to match”. She thought Liberals too inclined to try to please the masses. She also described herself, in a wider context, as “a pessimist” with “a vague fear of the unknown”.

Comments by Sally Davis: just noting here that the General Election of late 1918 was the first that Isabel was eligible to vote in. Socialism and its likely affect on the British Empire were in the 1890s a great unknown.

AUTUMN 1891

Isabel exhibited a second landscape at the Manchester Art Gallery exhibition: A Summer Song (Study at Boscastle).

Source:

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 9th Autumn Exhibition 1891. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. List of exhibitors p53: de Steiger, Isabel; now at 32 Fern Grove Sefton Park Liverpool. List of exhibits p39 catalogue number 466; an oil, for sale at £10.

Comment by Sally Davis: there’s no mention of a visit to Cornwall in Memorabilia but Isabel had spent time in Dorset before 1890 (see the entries for Autumn 1890) possibly as part of a wider tour of the West Country.

AUTUMN 1891

Isabel showed two works at the Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition: A Garland of Roses; and The Spirit of the Crystal.

Source:

21st Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1891. This catalogue was in a very delapidated state, with most of its page-number corners fallen off. Isabel’s paintings were catalogue numbers 935 - A Garland of Roses, price £15; and catalogue number 1208 - The Spirit of the Crystal, £20. Both were pastels.

AUTUMN 1892

Isabel showed four works at this year’s Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibition, including the only sculpture she ever exhibited - a wax-clay sculpture of a Toadstool. The paintings she showed were: Daffodils; An Avenging Angel; and Andromeda Abandoned.

Source:

22nd Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1892. This catalogue had a lot of its page-number corners missing. Catalogue number 172 - Daffodils, which was an oil painting, price £10. Catalogue number 679 - An Avenging Angel, price £25; this was a watercolour drawing. Catalogue number 1085 - Andromeda Abandoned, oil painting, for sale at £110, which I think is the highest price Isabel ever charged. In the sculpture room catalogue number 1338 - A Toadstool, in wax-clay and costing £2/2, which makes me think it was a small work.

AUTUMN 1892

After a gap of eight years, Isabel exhibited two paintings at the autumn exhibition of the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists. The paintings were Au Jardin Hôtel du Cygne Montreux; and A Garland of Roses which she had shown in Liverpool the previous year.

Source: Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 66th Autumn Exhibition 1892. List of exhibitors p73: "de Steiger, Madame Isabel"; at Fern Grove Liverpool. On p36: Au Jardin... is catalogue number 313; it was on oil painting, price £7/7. On p64 catalogue number 892, A Garland of Roses for sale at £15/15.

Comments by Sally Davis:

Firstly on the Society's slight change of name: it happened in 1885.

The sources aren't consistent about the medium Isabel used for A Garland of Roses, getting its second outing in Birmingham, after its first in Liverpool. In 1891 the Walker Art Gallery catalogue called it a pastel; The Royal Birmingham Society described it as a watercolour. Isabel exhibited A Garland... for a third time in 1894 in Dublin but unfortunately, the medium wasn't given in the Royal Hibernian Academy source I used, so I couldn't find a casting vote.

In Memorabilia Isabel doesn't specifically mention having visited Montreux; however she did visit Switzerland regularly, seeing her husband's family and then staying for several weeks elsewhere in the Alps.

Though she exhibited in one RBSA spring exhibition, 1892 was the last time Isabel showed any works at the Birmingham autumn exhibitions.

AUTUMN 1892

Isabel exhibited at the Manchester Art Gallery exhibition for the last time. She showed two works: A Song of the Greek Isles; and Princess Scheherazade.

Source:

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 10th Autumn Exhibition 1892. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. List of exhibitors p59: de Steiger, Isabel; at the 32 Fern Grove address; p34 catalogue number 362 for Song of the Greek Isles, price £50; and p44 for catalogue number 531, Princess Scheherazade for sale at £100. Both were oil paintings.

I carried on looking through the V&A's catalogues of Manchester Corporation's exhibitions until that of autumn 1899. There was nothing more by Isabel and there were far fewer exhibitors overall in the 14th Autumn Exhibition of 1896 and from then on.

Comment by Sally Davis: Princess Scheherazade had already been exhibited at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool in 1880. It hadn't sold then. Did potential buyers find £100 too much to pay for a work by a woman? Song of the Greek Isles was quite pricey too. Not having seen it, I can't say whether it was a landscape or based on an idea from mythology. In Memorabilia Isabel doesn't mention ever having visited any Greek islands but some at least would have been easy for her and her husband to get to while they were living in Egypt in the late 1860s.

OCTOBER 1892

Isabel's membership of the Theosophical Society was finally noted in its records.

Source: TS membership register.

Comment on the TS by Sally Davis: Isabel had joined the London Lodge when it was founded in 1878 (see my life-by-dates for that period). In the early 1890s, a period when many new members were recruited, the TS finally made an effort to put its membership records into some kind of order. The details of all current members were written in a series of ledgers, in no particular order so that newcomers were entered alongside people who had been members for years. The address given for Isabel at the time of this administrative exercise was the one at 32 Fern Grove Sefton Park. In the early 1890s Liverpool's TS lodge was very active. The TS lodges in Liverpool and Bradford were very close - many members of the TS in both cities were also in the GD - so Isabel would soon have found out about the GD's Horus temple in Bradford.

WHILE ISABEL WAS LIVING IN LIVERPOOL so BETWEEN MID-1891 AND 1894

Isabel went to GD rituals at the Horus Temple in Bradford for a while. However, most GD members in Bradford were business-people, so rituals were held on Sunday. Isabel had to stay in Bradford over Saturday and then Sunday night, and gave it up after a few months.

Source: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - letters mostly to Frederick Leigh Gardner from members of the GD. Letter from Isabel to Gardner no date but possibly 11 November 1897.

Comment by Sally: Isabel told Gardner she had found the travelling too difficult for her. She didn't mention the expense of two nights in a hotel in Bradford but I imagine that was an important point in her decision to give up going there.

POSSIBLY WHILE ISABEL WAS LIVING IN LIVERPOOL IN THE EARLY 1890s though evidence for such an early date is lacking

This may be the period in which she got to know the Dubourg brothers. In 1924 Isabel named one of them - John Robert Henry - as one of her two executors.

Source for her knowing the Dubourg brothers: Will of Isabelle de Steiger dated 1924 and 1926. Nothing definite beforehand but the Dubourgs had grown up in Liverpool where they and Isabel had acquaintances in common, almost certainly including Léonie Topham Steele. So I'm going to talk about them here. They are John Robert Henry Dubourg (born 1861) and his younger brother William Ernest.

Comment by Sally Davis. Firstly I'd like to thank again Richard Dubourg, great-grandson of William Ernest Dubourg, who contacted me to put right a couple of mistakes I'd made, and then sent me Isabel's Will with all its fascinating and enigmatic detail about her relationships with family and friends. Richard Dubourg has been researching the history of his family and their possible relationship with Léonie Topham Steele through the Gueyral family of France and Algiers.

Henry and William Ernest Dubourg were sons of Augustin Jules Dubourg who had come to Britain to work as a teacher of French. He had arrived in Britain by 1861 and was working in Elgin, where John Robert Henry Dubourg was born. The family's connection with Liverpool began in the 1870s when Augustin taught French at Liverpool College. By 1881 Augustin had returned to Scotland and was teaching in Edinburgh; but when his sons John Robert Henry, and William Ernest, had qualified as doctors, they both returned to set up as GPs in Liverpool and lived there until they died. Both John Robert Henry and William Ernest studied medicine at Edinburgh University in the early 1890s. At that time Robert Henry Felkin, GD member and future founder of Stella Matutina, was on the medical faculty staff, teaching tropical medicine.

Sources for the Dubourgs:

Biographical information on the Dubourg and Gueyral families sent to me by Richard Dubourg in emails during September 2015.

Will and Codicil of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger 1924 and 1926; and Memorabilia p281.

RAG Companion p166 reproduces a list of Stella Matutina members which Gilbert believes was compiled between 1910 and 1914. Both the Dubourg brothers are on the list, William Ernest at 82 Old Hall Street Liverpool; and John Robert Henry at 120 Islington Liverpool where he was still living in 1927. Neither brother had been in the GD and Isabel was not in Stella Matutina, she was in its rival daughter Order, the Independent and Rectified Rite or Order.

Familysearch Scotland-ODM 6035516: for the birth of John Robert Henry Dubourg on 24 January 1861 at Elgin, Moray. Parents Augustin Jules Dubourg and wife Mary Anne née Osborne.

Lancashire Biogs: Rolls of Honour published 1917 p123 entry for John R H Dubourg.

GMC Registers for Henry and William Ernest Dubourg.

1893

Anne Judith Penny died. Isabel took on Mrs Penny's old role in Mrs Atwood's life, that of "chief and only correspondent".

Source: freebmd and Memorabilia p189.

Comment by Sally: Isabel makes it sound rather an onerous task! See the previous file in this life-by-dates sequence for the beginnings of Isabel's correspondence with Mrs Penny, an authority on the work of Böhme.

SPRING 1893

Isabel exhibited at the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists for the last time, and for the only time at any of their spring exhibitions. From their titles at least, they might have been meant as a pair and exhibited as such: The Flight of Aurora; and The Chariot of Venus.

Source:

Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 28th Spring Exhibition 1893. List of exhibitors p66.

P54 catalogue number 637 - The Flight of Aurora; and catalogue number 639 - The Chariot of Venus. Both paintings were oils and were priced at £10/10.

Comment by Sally Davis: see the entry for Autumn 1889 for the two, possibly three, 'Aurora' paintings Isabel did. One called 'The Flight of Aurora' was exhibited in Liverpool in 1889; but it was a pastel not an oil painting, possibly part of the preparations for the work in oil.

Source for the 1889 pastel:

19th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1889. List of exhibitors p135. List of pictures p54 in Room VI which was given over to watercolour drawings; catalogue number 936 - The Flight of Aurora, described as a pastel and available at £15/15.

AUTUMNS of 1893-1900

Isabel did not show any works at all at the Corporation of Liverpool's Walker Art Gallery autumn exhibitions.

Sources for the absence: Catalogues of the exhibitions at the Walker Art Gallery 1893 to 1900.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel hadn't developed a hostility towards the Walker Art Gallery - from 1895 to 1901 she didn't show any paintings at any of the venues she had previously used. I take it that this slow-down was the result of her becoming the summer companion of Mary Ann Atwood. In the following years, Isabel's commitment to esotericism grew, and she had less and less time for her art.

8 SEPTEMBER 1893

Isabel's niece Josephine Constance Stanley Lace (younger daughter of Isabel's elder brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace) married Herbert Arthur Sutton of Kelham Hall Newark.

Comment by Sally Davis: I mention this marriage mainly because Josephine's descendants (hanging on the thread of two generations of only children) are the only descendants of Joshua and Theodosia Lace.

Sources for Herbert Arthur Sutton and Kelham Hall:

Plantagenet Roll of the Blood Royal a set of genealogies which trace all the descendents of Edward III; the Anne of Exeter Volume p161 has the Suttons in it. Herbert Arthur Sutton is the second son of Captain Frederick Sutton of the 11th Hussars, and his wife Georgina née Croft.

He can also be found in www.thepeerage.com: which uses Burke's Peerage as its source: his dates are 1853-1924. The descent is through Herbert Arthur and Josephine's only child Roland Manners Verney Sutton (1895-1957), then through Roland's only child Ursula Constance Sutton who married Norman Yearsley.

Via www.genesreunited.co.uk to Nottinghamshire Guardian of 10 September 1893: announcement of the wedding, at Christleton parish church near Chester.

For Kelham Hall and Kelham House, see www.newarkadvertiser.co.uk article 4 July 2006 on the donation of a painting of Kelham Hall, done by artist E F Holt around 1885; plus some postcards; by the painting's owner, Ursula Yearsley; to Newark and Sherwood DC.

At www.picturethepast.org.uk a photo taken 1979 of the burial plot of Herbert Arthur Sutton where he, wife Josephine and son Roland are all buried. At St Michael Averham.

1894 OR AFTER though on Memorabilia pxix Isabel equates this important change in her spiritual views to when she was 50, ie 1886

Isabel read Froude's edition of the letters of Erasmus. The book led to another move in her spiritual outlook, away from the Lutheran/Evangelical view that she had grown up with, to a more mystical one. She saw Erasmus as encouraging deep reflection and seeing the accumulation of knowledge as an intellectual equivalent to adding money into a bank account.

British Library catalogue: Life and Letters of Erasmus by James Anthony Froude. London: Longmans and Co 1894.

Source for Isabel reading them: Memorabilia pxix.

Comment by Sally: I couldn't see an edition of the Letters earlier than 1894. I think, too, that Isabel's doing herself a disservice in attributing to the Letters the change in her understanding of her own spirituality - what she needed from religion. Perhaps what reading Erasmus did was to justify what had happened to Isabel already as a result of her own efforts in the books she had read and the people she had listened to - that may be why she wrongly dates her reading of him to nearly a decade before the book was published.

1894

Isabel contributed illustrations to the occult magazine, The Unknown World.

Source: journal The Unknown World.

Comment by Sally: The Unknown World was a short-lived attempt by A E Waite (as producer and editor) to start an occult magazine. It lasted only one volume's worth of monthly issues, but Isabel contributed several illustrations to the issues that did see the light of day. I would suppose that Isabel was a regular reader, as well as a contributor, while the magazine lasted. Accidents of history mean that her illustrations are one of the few of Isabel's works that still exist; which is ironic seeing she did so little illustration work.

DURING 1894

Isabel exhibited at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin for the last time. She showed two works: her pastel work A Garland of Roses; and Lavinia. Although she was about to move away, she still gave the Royal Hibernian an address in Liverpool for correspondence.

Source for the paintings exhibited:

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210 as de Steiger, Mme Isabel, at 33 (rather than 32) Fern Grove Liverpool which I presume is a type-setting error. A Garland of Roses is catalogue number 344, price £15/15; and Lavinia is catalogue number 391, at the same price.

Comments by Sally Davis: this was a third showing for A Garland of Roses - it had already been seen in Liverpool and Birmingham. As with so many art works by Isabel, I have no information at all on 'Lavinia'; not even whether it was a portrait or based on a literary work. As at March 2017 I don't know of anyone called Lavinia amongst Isabel's acquaintances.

PROBABLY BEFORE AUGUST 1894

Isabel moved from Liverpool to 20 Dublin Street Edinburgh. Isabel continued to be an active member of the TS. She went to the weekly meetings of the TS's Scottish Lodge, held in the Edinburgh home of its most active members, John William Brodie-Innes and his wife Frances.

Source for the move: Memorabilia p270 but without an exact date.

Source for Isabel's address in Edinburgh: Theosophical Society membership register but again without an exact date for the change of address.

Comment by Sally Davis: Dublin Street was on the edge of the 18th century estate known as the New Town; and about five minutes' walk from Royal Circus where the Brodie-Innes's lived. John and Frances Brodie-Innes were GD members.

4 AUGUST 1894

Isabel had a letter published in the magazine Light in which she said that she thought she had seen the same ghostly face in two different photographs.

Source: Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research. Published London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Volume 14 1894; issues between August and September.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel only meant to suggest that the same spirit had placed itself in the way of two photographs taken several years apart. She wasn't accusing anyone of fraud - but that's how her letter was understood by a lot of Light's readers.

The second of the two appearances of the same ghost, that Isabel thought she had seen, was in the photograph which was the frontispiece to The Veil Lifted, published in 1893 and edited by a member of the London Spiritualist Alliance, Andrew Glendinning. The book consisted mostly of the texts of recent lectures on spiritualism; but there were also some photographs purporting to feature spirits photographed during seances by the well-known medium David Duguid of Glasgow. That the photographs were genuine had already been doubted by Practical Photographer. But Isabel rapidly became thought of as the first person to question them in a spiritualist magazine. Isabel wrote to Light several times, saying that she did believe that spirits from the astral plane could be photographed in certain circumstances. The point she had been trying to make was that she thought the same spirit from the astral plane had been photographed by Mr Duguid; and in the photograph of a German painting which had been bought (the photograph, that is) by some friends of hers. She had noticed the similarity when dining with them at their house in Edinburgh and had written to Light to tell its readers about the curious coincidence.

The vehemence of the response from Light's readers, Mr Glendinning, and friends of Mr Duguid clearly took Isabel by surprise. In an attempt to pacify all the people who wrote in criticising her for something she hadn't actually said, she asked her Edinburgh friends if they would allow their photograph to be displayed at Light's offices in London so that interested parties could inspect it so as to judge how similar it was to the frontispiece. Her friends turned out to be GD and TS members John and Frances Brodie-Innes; and the series of letters in Light ended with a furious letter from John Brodie-Innes, saying that he would bring his photograph with him next time he came to London and it would be available for inspection in his barristers' chambers though certainly not in Light's offices; but he would not bring it with him unless the harrassment of him and Isabel ceased. It did cease; but I've no idea what happened afterwards because Light never referred to the matter again. Duguid's photographs of spirits were faked (see wikipedia) and Isabel is credited with inadvertently starting the chain of events that led to the discovery of how the faking was done - not at all what she had intended!

WHILE ISABEL WAS LIVING IN EDINBURGH so probably mid-1890s

Isabel became very friendly with the artist Mrs Traquair. As women artists they had a problem in common - getting their paintings exhibited. Isabel was not allowed to join the Royal Scottish Academy.

Source: Memorabilia p183.

Comment by Sally Davis: Mrs Traquair - Phoebe Anna Traquair - is better known now than Isabel, mostly because so much of her work is still in existence; but also because she had a wider range than Isabel, doing murals as well as easel painting; she also did regular illustration work and jewellery design. There's a detailed biography of her at www.oxforddnb.com. There was no need for Isabel to take personally the refusal of the Royal Scottish Academy (RSA) to let her join, and I hope she didn't. Despite moving in very cultured circles in Edinburgh and so having all the right contacts, Mrs Traquair wasn't offered membership until 1920 and even then it was only honorary. Just another case of male institutions keeping female artists down: members, naturally, got priority if exhibition space was short.

Just confirming that Isabel was never a member of the RSA: The Royal Scottish Academy 1826-1916 list of members exhibiting; compiled by Frank Rinder. Originally published 1917; British Library's copy is Kingsmead Reprints 1975: p384 Isabel isn't listed.

?MID 1890s

Isabel must have been working on her translation from the German of the letters of Councillor von Eckartshausen, which she published as The Cloud Upon the Sanctuary. In his introduction to Memorabilia (pxi) A E Waite saw this as Isabel's greatest contribution to mystical literature in English. But Isabel hardly mentions it in Memorabilia at all.

Source: publication date and Memorabilia AE Waite's Preface pxi.

BETWEEN 1894 AND 1901

Isabel exhibited no new paintings.

Comment by Sally Davis: as well as her translation of The Cloud upon the Sanctuary, in the mid-1890s Isabel was also preparing for her 2nd Order initiation in the GD. Reaching that level involved a lot of reading and exams as well. However, the lack of new work continued after her 2nd Order initiation and perhaps indicates a decline in Isabel's creativity and/or enthusiasm for painting.

ISSUE OF JANUARY 1895

A serialisation of The Cloud upon the Sanctuary began in the last issue of A E Waite's magazine The Unknown World.

Assuming that Isabel knew the Dubourg brothers by now:

SPRING 1895

John Robert Henry Dubourg married Rose Ellen Hutchings, in Liverpool.

Source: freebmd.

BY SUMMER 1895

Isabel was living at 7 London Street Edinburgh.

Source: The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibitors 1826-1990 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière. Calne: Hilmarton Manor Press 1991. Volume 4 R-Z p615 entry for Steiger, de; Mme Isabel:

SUMMER 1895

After a gap of a decade, Isabel exhibited a work at the Royal Scottish Academy exhibition in Edinburgh. She showed her Lorelei painting, borrowing it temporarily from her friends William and Fanny Crosfield, who had bought it.

Sources:

The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibitors 1826-1990 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière. Calne: Hilmarton Manor Press 1991. Volume 4 R-Z p615 entry for Steiger, de; Mme Isabel. Catalogue number 68: The Lorelei Maiden Singing to the Fishermen Below.

Comment by Sally Davis: although Isabel continued to live in Edinburgh for several more years, this was the last year she showed anything at the RSA. The Lorelei had first been exhibited at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool in 1883; it was probably bought by the Crosfields then.

1896 TO 1900

Though she did some art work for the GD in Edinburgh, Isabel did not exhibit any paintings.

MAY 1896

Isabel was initiated into the GD's inner, 2nd Order. I think the initiation took place in London - perhaps Isabel was in town to supervise The Cloud's publication.

Source: RAG Companion.

JUNE 1896

John Robert Henry Dubourg's only child, Gladys Osborne Dubourg, was born in Liverpool.

Source: Familysearch baptism record: 18 June 1896 at St Mary-for-the-Blind Liverpool. Also freebmd where her surname is written as 'Du Bourg'.

Comment by Sally Davis: even if Isabel didn't know the Dubourgs yet, the birth of Gladys is important because in due course, she inherited all the paintings and painting paraphernalia that Isabel had in her house at her death.

1896, PROBABLY LATE IN THE YEAR

The Cloud upon the Sanctuary by Councillor von Eckhartshausen, translated from the German and with notes by Isabel, was published in London by George Redway.

Comments by Sally Davis: the British Library doesn't have any copies earlier than the 3rd edition, published in 1909. Isabel had asked John William Brodie-Innes to do the preface. They had obviously discussed the content and meaning of the letters many times. On pvii and pviii Brodie-Innes described Isabel's work as "admirable" but doubted that von Eckhartshausen's vision of an "Interior Church" would be much welcomed by British church-goers too focused on their concept of a "Church Triumphant".

ISSUE OF 15 NOVEMBER 1896

The Cloud upon the Sanctuary was reviewed in Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine by Isabel's good friend Patience Sinnett.

Source: Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XIX number 111.

DECEMBER 1896

Isabel was painting the ritual vault at the rooms used by the GD's newly-founded Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh.

Source: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73. Letter from Isabel to the GD's Frederick Leigh Gardner; no date but has to be late December 1896.

PROBABLY 1897

Isabel read Religion and Art, Ashton-Ellis's translation of works by Wagner.

Via google to Religion und Kunst by Richard Wagner published 1880 as volume 6 of his Prose Works. Though Isabel's German was well up to reading the work in its original language, she does specifically say that it was Ashton-Ellis' translation that she read. Ashton-Ellis' work was published in 1897.

Source for Isabel reading it: Memorabilia p133.

EARLY 1897

Isabel's niece Constance Helena Burton, daughter of Isabel's sister Rosamond, married Norman McCorquodale.

Source: freebmd; I couldn't find any coverage of the wedding at www.genesreunited.co.uk.

Comment by Sally Davis: Constance's marriage was - in 19th-century terms - the best that any of Rosamond and Edmund Charles Burton's daughters made. It had a Liverpool connection: the man she was marrying was the son of George McCorquodale of Liverpool and Newton-le-Willows, founder of the stationery and publishing firm, McCorquodale and Company, that at one time held the contract to print the magazine Harpers and Queen. Constance's husband, Norman, worked for his father's firm, and so in his turn did their son. Shortly after their marriage, Constance and Norman bought Winslow Hall, on the road from Aylesbury into the town of Winslow Buckinghamshire. They were still living there when Isabel died.

Some information on the firm's founder, and on Constance's son, (also Norman) the first Baron McCorquodale: see www.epsomandewellhistoryexplorer.org.uk.

Constance and Norman McCorquodale are in www.thepeerage.com which uses Burke's Peerage as its main source.

Winslow Hall: a photograph of it at www.winslowhallopera.co.uk and some history; and there's also a page on it in wikipedia.

24 APRIL 1897

Isabel's nephew Charles Verney Lace died; he was the only son of Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace.

Source, though a puzzlingly long time after the event:

Notes and Queries issue of 1904 p483 a reference to an obituary of Charles Verney Lace giving his DOD as 24 April 1897. I couldn't find a death registration on freebmd so perhaps he died abroad.

Comment by Sally Davis: although Isabel may not have known her nephew very well, his death must have been a sad occasion for her. Charles Verney Lace was only 37, and had no children, meaning that although Isabel's father had many descendants, from 1897 on there was no possibility of any of them having his surname.

JULY and AUGUST 1897

Isabel's translation of The Cloud upon the Sanctuary was serialised in Lucifer.

Source:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume XX numbers 119 and 120: Isabel's translation of The Cloud...

BY ?NOVEMBER 1897

Isabel's painting The Enchantress had probably been sold. GD member Frederick Leigh Gardner had seen it and told Isabel that he'd liked to own it one day.

Source: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - a letter from Isabel to Frederick Leigh Gardner. The corner where the address and date had been has been cut away; but a handwritten note by Gerald Yorke says it was written on 11 November 1897. Yorke doesn't say why he's so sure of the date but perhaps it was because he had noted down what was on the corner that was cut away.

Comment from Sally: it's not clear from the letter exactly when Gardner had seen The Enchantress. Isabel had exhibited it in Liverpool in 1883 and in Dublin in 1885 and not since; so I'm not sure why it should be mentioned in a letter written so much later. Perhaps it hadn't sold in the 1880s and Gardner had seen it in Isabel's studio more recently. Gardner was a stockbroker - he could easily have afforded to buy a painting by Isabel. But he hadn't bought this one; nor had Isabel given it to him as a gift. The text of the letter reads as if Isabel no longer had the painting in her possession. So presumably, someone else had bought it.

IN NOVEMBER 1897

Isabel had a pupil.

Source: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - the same letter from Isabel to Frederick Leigh Gardner that I refer to immediately above this entry; probably written 11 November 1897.

Comment by Sally: Isabel mentions that as an artist she has a pupil as a glancing reference in a letter about other subjects. I haven't found any other reference to this pupil, so I can't say who it was or how long the arrangement lasted.

LATE 1890s

Isabel was living at 90 Canning Street.

Comment by Sally Davis: whether Isabel was in Edinburgh or Liverpool I can't say for sure. I looked on streetmap, hoping to find that Edinburgh hadn't got such a street, but it had. I suppose I favour it being the street in Liverpool that's meant - Isabel had spent her childhood further down the street. If it's the one in Edinburgh that's meant, it's to the west of the Prince's Street Gardens.

Source for the street but not the town: Theosophical Society membership register though there's no precise date.

VERY DIFFICULT TO DATE but likely to be 1898 at the earliest Isabel went to a talk by Ebenezer Howard, and got involved with the garden city movement.

Source for her going to the talk: Memorabilia p99 but the date of the talk is a problem. Isabel remembers it as being during her time living in London; which she left in 1891.

Comment by Sally Davis: all the sources I've seen for Ebenezer Howard suggest that he did not publicise his garden cities scheme until shortly before his book on the subject was published – To-Morrow: A Peaceful Path to Real Reform London: Swan Sonnenschein 1898. I really think Isabel must have got the date of the talk wrong, because she says that at the end of it, she paid 1 shilling for a share in the company that was being set up to build a garden city; and did some publicity work for the scheme. Two companies were founded to raise money for a garden city; but not until 1902 – so see 1902 for the next instalment.

DURING 1900

After not exhibiting any art works for several years, Isabel was preparing for a one-woman show.

Source: Memorabilia p279.

Comment by Sally: a one-person exhibition is a great honour for any artist and during Isabel's lifetime it was almost unheard of for a woman to be offered one. Unfortunately Isabel doesn't mention where the exhibition was going to be held. I'd bet on it being planned for either Edinburgh or Liverpool, but it doesn't really matter all that much, because the show never took place.

1900

After almost thirty years as vicar of Temple Ewell in Kent, Isabel's brother-in-law Rev John Turnbull (husband of her sister Helena) became rector of Great Linford Buckinghamshire. He remained in post there until his death in 1922 and his children continued to live in the area after the death of both their parents.

Source:

Alumni Cantabrigiensis seen on web so no volume number visible, but p244 in that volume.

SUMMER 1900, BEFORE AUGUST

Isabel seems to have been between addresses yet again at this time, and had put most of her possessions into store in Edinburgh while she went on her annual visit to Mrs Atwood in Yorkshire. While she was away, a fire in the Edinburgh storage warehouse destroyed virtually everything she owned, including - most catastrophically of all - most of her finished paintings and all the paraphernalia that surrounds making art - sketches, notebooks, easels, paint brushes, paints etc. Her friend Andrew Cattanach went to rescue what he could, but all he was able to save were two trunks of books. When she claimed on her insurance for her lost possessions, she got £500 and a lecture on being under-insured.

Source: Memorabilia p181, pp279-280.

Comments by Sally Davis: no amount of money could make up for the loss of the results of thirty years of painting.

Andrew Petri Cattanach and his wife Margaret were members of the TS's Scottish Lodge; Andrew was its secretary and its librarian. Andrew was also a GD member though Margaret never joined. In 1901 Andrew was sent by his employer, the Edinburgh paper manufacturer Cowan and Co, to work in their London office. He and Margaret stayed in England until Andrew retired in 1931.

Information on Andrew Petri Cattanach from Kenneth Jack. Kenneth has written a series of biographies of Scottish freemasons, including some of freemasons who were also in the GD.

All my files on Isabel end on a tragic note! THIS IS THE END OF THE THIRD OF MY FILES ON THE LIFE-BY-DATES OF ISABEL DE STEIGER. The first two in the sequence cover 1836 to December 1872; and 1873 to February 1888. The last in the set of four covers the period after the fire: summer 1900 to Isabel's death in February 1927.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web. Very good on bankruptcies!

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER (1836-1927). This is the last of my files detailing Isabel's life-by-dates. It covers mid-1900 to her death on the first day of 1927.

UPDATE NOVEMBER 2017

I was amazed to read an email from Barbara Lawson-Reay saying that Isabel had been a member of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies during 1915. By her own admission, Isabel distrusted even the Liberals, let alone the socialists – I never supposed she would support votes for women. Thanks are due to Barbara for the information and for proving that Isabel can still surprise me. Barbara researches the suffrage campaign and women's war work in North-East Wales.

Just re-stating Isabel's involvement in the GD:

Isabel de Steiger was one of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn's earliest members, being initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London in October 1888. She chose the Latin motto 'Altiora peto'. She took her time over the learning and exams required for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was initiated into it in May 1896. She moved out of London in the early 1890s and was a member of the GD's Horus temple in Bradford for a time; and then (in the late 1890s) of its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh.

And a brief bit of preamble from Part 3 of the life-by-dates: in the summer of 1900 Isabel put all her possessions into store in Edinburgh while she went to make her annual stay with Mary Anne Atwood. A fire broke out in the warehouse and nearly everything Isabel owned was destroyed, including her diaries and her unsold paintings and artwork.

AUGUST 1900

When she found out about the fire, Isabel was in Ilfracombe, probably with Mrs Atwood.

Source: Memorabilia p282.

Comment by Sally: although she had been spending more time on her esoteric research than on her painting in recent years, Isabel took a long time to recover from the shock of losing virtually everything she owned; and the disappointment of being deprived of a one-woman show she had been promised, recognition of herself as an artist of importance after so many years of unappreciated work. All that was left was a box retrieved from the warehouse by Andrew Cattanaach; and two trunks of possessions that she had brought with her for her summer with Mrs Atwood. Mary Lodge, wife of Sir Oliver Lodge, was kind to Isabel during the next few weeks, as Isabel tried to pick up the pieces of her life.

AFTER THE FIRE OF AUGUST 1900

Isabel painted very few more art works.

Source: Memorabilia p290.

DIFFICULT TO DATE THOUGH PROBABLY AFTER SUMMER 1900; DEFINITELY BY 1903

Isabel moved to Handsworth in Birmingham to live near some (unnamed) friends who shared her theosophical interests. She doesn't say who they were. After only a year, they moved away from Birmingham, so Isabel moved back to Liverpool. Isabel got to know Sir Oliver Lodge and his wife Mary while she was living in Handsworth. Mary Lodge was an artist.

Comment by Sally Davis: the TS was beginning to flag in its efforts to keep up with Isabel's almost continual moving from place to place. I'm certainly struggling to cope. One thing I can tie down is Oliver Lodge and family in Birmingham: they arrived in the spring of 1900, after Oliver had reluctantly agreed to become the first head of the new University of Birmingham. They moved into a house called Mariemont, in Edgbaston. The Lodges came to Birmingham from Liverpool, though Isabel doesn't mention having been acquainted with them there. They did, however, have at least one mutual friend: the spiritualist F W H Myers.

Source for the move: Memorabilia p290.

Source for a new address: Theosophical Society membership register though again without a precise date. The TS noted Isabel's latest address as 23 Wretham Road and the TS member who kept the members' register updated made a note that it was in Liverpool. However, streetmap shows it was in Handsworth, Birmingham.

Source for Oliver Lodge though see also wikipedia for Oliver Lodge and his wife Mary F A Marshall.

Past Years: An Autobiography of Sir Oliver Lodge. Hodder and Stoughton 1931: pp271-75; pp276-77; pp314-315. There's no mention at all of Isabel in Lodge's book.

The source giving 1903 for Isabel living in Birmingham is: Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940 p145 entry for Isabel de Steiger.

AFTER 1900

Isabel's friendship with the Sinnetts declined.

Source: Memorabilia p266.

CENSUS DAY 1901

As so often, Isabel was not in the UK as far as I can see. Most of her relations were, though. Her eldest sister (the unmarried one) Constantia, was still living at Old Christleton Hall just outside Cheshire, with Theodosia, the elder daughter of Joshua Verney Lovett Lace and his wife (the other Theodosia). Isabel's sister Helena and her husband, Rev John Turnbull, had been at Great Linford rectory for less than a year. Their sons were all working now and lived elsewhere, so only their two daughters were at home - Constance, and Christine. With their household scaled down, the Turnbells only employed a cook and a housemaid now. Their son Verney Turnbull was in London, working as a journalist and lodging in Camberwell with Ralph Sapolin, a teacher, and his sister, the Turnbells' ex-governess Louise. Isabel's sister Rosamond and her husband Edmund Charles Burton were still living at The Lodge, Nelson Road Daventry. Although only one of their children was still at home - the youngest daughter, Blanche - the Burtons still employed a large staff: a cook, two housemaids, one kitchen maid and a ladies' maid. Their son Edmund Gerald was in London, lodging in a boarding house at 12 York Street Marylebone. He hadn't yet joined the family legal firm though he would return to Daventry later in 1901 after his marriage to Maud Attenborough.

Mentioning some of Isabel's friends, the Crosfields - William, Fanny and their daughter Dora - were now living in Sefton Park West at 3 Fulwood Park. Isabel's trustee Henry Cassels Kay and his wife Jane were still living in 11 Durham Villas Campden Hill.

Source: 1901 census.

Source for Edmund Gerald Burton's marriage: via www.genesreunited.co.uk to Northampton Mercury issue of 29 November 1901; Edmund Gerald and Maud Burton would move into Newnham Grange near Daventry after their honeymoon.

?DURING 1902

Isabel may have lived in London for a few months.

Source. I haven't found any direct evidence for this; but Isabel does seem to have gone to more meetings in and around London in 1902 than you would think she would while living elsewhere.

1902 AND LATER

Isabel subscribed to the magazine Hibbert's Journal.

Source: Memorabilia p271. Although Isabel associates it with her time in Edinburgh, its first issue was not until 1902.

Information on wikipedia gives the full title, which shows clearly why Isabel might want to read the magazine regularly. It's Hibbert's Journal: a Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology and Philosophy. An annual subscription in 1910 cost 10/-. Oliver Lodge was a regular contributor.

PROBABLY 1902

Isabel went to a lecture by Ponnambalam Rama-Nathan, a Tamil from Sri Lanka who had written commentaries on the gospels of St Matthew and St John.

Source for Isabel at the lecture: Superhumanity: A Suggestive Enquiry into the Mystic and Material Meaning of the Christian Word Regeneration London: Elliot Stock 1916 p28 but she's not sure when it happened - she can only pin it down to "in London a few years ago" and she doesn't mention what organisation invited him to speak. A likely date of 1902 is mentioned in Florence Farr: Bernard Shaw's New Woman by Josephine Johnson. Gerrard's Cross: Colin Smythe 1975: p93; because Florence Farr heard Rama-Nathan lecture, read some of his pamphlets, and met him for the first time.

They are not in the British Library catalogue but the wikipedia page of Sir Ponnambalam Rama-Nathan, Tamil politician and solicitor-general of Sri Lanka, has the booklets that Isabel remembered and Florence Farr read:

An Eastern Exposition of the Gospel of Jesus According to St Matthew published 1898.

An Eastern Exposition of the Gospel of Jesus According to St John published 1902.

The most likely organiser of the talks is the Theosophical Society.

1902

Isabel's friendship with Francesca Arundale ceased altogether after Francesca went to live permanently in India.

Comment on the date, by Sally Davis: I found the date of Francesca's departure on a wikipedia wiki on Arundale. See the earlier files in this life-by-dates sequence for Isabel's friendship Francesca Arundale, active member of the Theosophical Society in the 1880s.

Source for the decline of the friendship: Memorabilia p266. There was no quarrel, it would appear; the two women just stopped writing to each other after a while.

1902

An illustration by Isabel was the frontispiece of A E Waite's A Book of Mystery and Vision.

Source:

A Book of Mystery and Vision by A E Waite, published London: Philip Wellby 1902. This was a book of poems by Waite, a limited edition of 250 copies. Isabel's illustration took as its starting point some verses that depict a person sitting on a cliff above the sea, in contemplation of "paths untrod, Sung on by all life's voices". Seen not by me but by Roger Wright, via archive.org 17 July 2013.

ALMOST CERTAINLY 1902 though Isabel seems to be remembering it as earlier

Isabel went to hear Ebenezer Howard give a talk on garden cities. She invested in a company that was being set up to fund the building of the first garden city; and did some publicity work for the scheme.

Comment by Sally Davis: the two biographies of Howard that I looked through both suggest that he didn't publicise his garden city scheme until around the time that his book on it was published. To-Morrow: A Peaceful Path to Real Reform was issued in a limited edition by Swan Sonnenschein in 1898. Serious fund-raising for building a garden city doesn't seem to have taken place before June 1902 when the Garden City Pioneer Co was founded. It was wound up 18 months later and First Garden City Ltd was set up with a share issue published in September 1903; it was this company that bought the land in Hertfordshire which became Letchworth Garden City. I suppose it must be this last company that Isabel is referring to in Memorabilia; she says she had one share in it; got a dividend of 1/6 after three years; and later gave her one share to one of her nephews. It's a puzzle, though: the meetings that formed the two companies were well publicised and well attended, including by the great and good. Isabel, however, describes the talk she attended as not publicised at all – she found out about it through a friend – and attended by about half a dozen people. Perhaps she's conflating two separate meetings.

Source for Isabel having heard the talk; though not for a date of 1902: Memorabilia p99.

Wikipedia on Sir Ebenezer Howard (1850-1928); Una Stubbs is a descendant of his. And these two biographies:

Sir Ebenezer Howard and the Town Planning Movement by Dugald Macfadyen. Manchester University Press 1933. On p20: Howard's ideas were influenced by a novel Isabel may have known: Looking Backward by Edward Bellamy, published in the US only in 1888; though this biography says Howard didn't read it until 1898. The first lectures on garden cities were not until 1898. Garden City Association: pp24-25; Garden City Pioneer Co p38; First Garden City Ltd p39.

Lifelines 18: An Illustrated Life of Sir Ebenezer Howard by John Moss-Eccardt. Shire Publications Ltd 1973. This biography pp14-15 implies that Howard read Bellamy's novel much sooner, and worked on the ideas that became the garden city movement for ten years before his book was published. But it doesn't mention any early lectures on the subject.

At www.rickmansworthherts.com an article: The Effect of Sir Ebenezer Howard and the Garden City Movement on 20th Century Planning. By Norman Lucey. This article also says that Howard's garden city scheme was developed over many years; but without further details. This is the source for the meeting of the Garden Cities Association at Port Sunlight.

The 1898 edition of Howard's book wasn't well-known. The British Library only has the 2nd edition, with its revised name: Garden Cities of Tomorrow. London: Swan Sonnenschein and Co Ltd 1902.

5 JUNE 1903

Henry Cassels Kay died in hospital after being involved in a carriage accident.

Sources:

Probate Registry 1903

At journals.cambridge.org, the first page of Kay's obituary in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland (New Series) volume 35 no 4 October 1903 pp851-87

Comment by Sally Davis: Cassels Kay's death - so sudden and so awful - robbed Isabel not only of a long-standing friend, but also of a link with her dead husband - they had all known each other in the 1870s in Egypt. Cassels Kay had been the sole trustee of the trust fund that provided Isabel with her income. Isabel was perfectly capable of managing her own money but I haven't found any evidence either way, about whether the trust fund continued after Cassels Kay died.

24 JULY 1903

Isabel was one of the 14 members of the GD's 2nd Order who announced their intention of breaking away from the GD to form a new order, the Independent and Rectified Rite or Order (known in shorthand as the RR et AC). The group was led by A E Waite.

Source: R A Gilbert's The Golden Dawn Companion p169.

7 NOVEMBER 1903

The Independent and Rectified Rite/Order was constituted. There's no list of who was present at the ritual but I would suppose that Isabel would have been there. The RR et AC continued until Waite closed it down in 1914 but I don't know whether Isabel remained a member for that whole period.

Source: as for 24 July

Comment by Sally Davis: just noting that there's no mention of this new Order in Isabel's book, not even an oblique one. She may not have attended many of its meetings - if any - as they all took place in London and Isabel never lived there after the 1890s.

BEFORE 1905

Isabel's friend Charles Massey persuaded Isabel to publish what became On A Gold Basis. Isabel hadn't thought of publishing her many writings on the occult in this form until Massey suggested it. She offered them to the Theosophical Publishing Society, the publishing arm of the TS, but the editor, and then Annie Besant, rejected them on the grounds that they were too Christian. Massey took up Isabel's case with the TPS, but the firm was adamant, and in the end Massey resigned from the TS over it.

Source for the story of On A Gold Basis: Memorabilia p148.

Comment by Sally Davis: records in the Probate Registry say that Charles Carleton Massey of 124 Victoria Street died on 29 March 1905; so his campaign to persuade Isabel, and his arguments with the Theosophical Publishing Society, must have happened before then.

JANUARY 1905

The first issue of Occult Review was published. Isabel was a regular subscriber, a keen reader and regular contributor to the magazine until her death.

Source: Occult Review volume 1 number 1 January 1905. It was a monthly magazine, published by William Rider and Son Ltd. From 1905 until the mid-1920s it had the same editor, Ralph Shirley.

1 JUNE 1905

Isabel's niece Josephine Sutton, daughter of her brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace, died aged only 41.

Source: probate registry 1905, 1925.

POSSIBLY AS EARLY AS 1905, OR AS LATE AS 1907

Isabel began to subscribe to the magazine The Seeker, A Quarterly Magazine of Christian Mysticism, further described by its editor as "devoted to the search for God and the true self".

Source for the magazine: British Library catalogue.

Some information on The Seeker from The Expository Times 1914 p471: it was founded by the Rev George William Allen in 1905. Before 1914 he had been succeeded as its editor by Walter Leslie Wilmhurst. It survived the first World War but ceased publication in 1919.

28 JUNE 1905

Isabel resigned from the Theosophical Society.

Source: Isabel's membership record in the TS membership registers.

Comment by Sally Davis: Charles Massey's death, and the rejection of the papers that became On A Gold Basis, led to Isabel deciding she'd had enough of the TS; however, she did change her mind.

AUGUST 1905

Isabel's article Last Hours of a Mediaeval Occultist was published in Occult Review. She had been reading Aurofontina Chymica, or a Collection of Fourteen Small Treatises Concerning the First Matters of Philosophers, published in Latin in London in 1680. The body of the article was Isabel's translation of the third treatise, which concerned an alchemist and doctor who had converted from Judaism to Christianity. Isabel took issue with recent scholars who had accused the writers of the treatises of fraud.

Source: Occult Review volume 2 number 8 August 1905 pp73-75.

APRIL 1907

Isabel's niece Blanche Burton, daughter of her sister Rosamond, married Henry Bruce Campbell of Little Everdon, a barrister.

Sources: via www.genesreunited.co.uk to Northampton Mercury issues of 16 November 1906 and 19 April 1907.

20 AUGUST 1907

Isabel's brother-in-law Edmund Charles Burton, the solicitor (husband of her sister Rosamond) died.

Source: probate registry 1907 and just noting that he had not made Rosamond his executor, he had chosen two of his sons-in-law instead - Thomas William Thornton and Norman McCorquodale.

Comment by Sally Davis: I wonder very much how Isabel had got on with this hunting-shooting-local-government type man; and what she made of her sister having married him. And what did Edmund Charles make of his sister-in-law Isabel, with her esoteric leanings and her independence of mind?

OCTOBER 1907

Isabel rejoined the Theosophical Society.

Source: Isabel's membership record in the TS membership registers.

SUMMER 1907

On a Gold Basis was published, finally, by Philip Wellby, a publisher that Isabel had done work for in the past.

Comments by Sally Davis: perhaps Isabel shouldn't have bothered! Because On A Gold Basis

continued to cause her grief: both spiritualists, and theosophist followers of Annie Besant, shunned her for having published it rather than keep her occult work a secret. The reviews were reasonable, though. The Theosophical Review's reviewer was rather surprised to find it more like a student's note-book than a treatise. However, he noted that in her introduction, Isabel had stated that she hadn't wanted to offer cast-iron solutions, only to suggest possibilities and to encourage readers to study the esoteric works of the past, as well as those of the present. The review in Occult Review was also favourable, describing the work as making "fruitful and suggestive inquiries into modern problems of thought and life" and Isabel as "one of the most capable writers on the higher Alchemy" with an "industrious, truth-seeking mind".

Source for the publication: first edition.

Source for the hostile reaction of theosophists: Memorabilia p127, p147.

Sources for the reviews:

Theosophical Review volume XL number 240 August 1907 in the review section: p563-65 review by "A.A.W.", a regular reviewer at this time. There's an article in Theosophical Review volume XXXIII number 196 September 1903 to February 1904: pp443-450; by an Arthur A Wells. I imagine he is 'A.A.W.'

Occult Review volume 6 number 4 October 1907 p227. The review was written by the regular reviewer whose writing name was 'Scrutator'.

NOVEMBER 1907

Isabel was one of several annoyed readers who wrote to Occult Review to disagree with a recent article on Anna Bonus Kingsford and Edward Maitland. Curiously enough, it was the photographs of Kingsford and Maitland that Isabel had disliked - she thought they didn't do the sitters justice.

Source: Occult Review volume 6. The offending article, by Scrutator, was in the Occult Review's Modern Mystics series and was published in volume 6 number 4 October 1907 pp191-203. Isabel's letter of complaint appeared in volume 6 number 5 November 1907 pp296-97. That so many people took issue with Scrutator's article seems to have embarrassed Ralph Shirley: in volume 9 number 4 April 1909 pp183-88 he devoted a large part of his editorial to a discussion of Kingsford and Maitland and the importance of The Perfect Way.

1 MAY 1908

Isabel resigned from the TS for the second time; only this time she didn't change her mind. .

Comment by Sally Davis: the final straw was probably Annie Besant's rise to absolute power in the TS after the death of Colonel Olcott. Isabel wasn't the only long-standing member of the TS to regard with despair the election of Annie Besant as its president-for-life: in my biographies of the members of the GD who were members of TS as well, I've noticed quite a few resigning either just after she was elected, or just before, when it was clear that her election was inevitable.

Isabel said of her resignation, that "Mrs Besant and Mr Leadbeater as its leaders had lost my conscientious respect." In fact, Isabel had never liked Annie Besant's style of leadership, which she described as, "a sort of personal mania to rule alone". She had also noticed, since Besant had become the TS's dominant personality, an increasing tendency especially amongst younger and newer members, to know less and less about the alternatives to Blavatsky's approach - to have read only Blavatsky's writings.

Sources: Memorabilia pxx, p150, p263; and the TS membership register.

A bit more comment by Sally Davis: Isabel was thinking of Dr Kingsford, of course, and her emphasis on western, Christian esotericism; but also perhaps even of A P Sinnett's Buddhist-based theosophy. Besant was more interested in Hinduism than Buddhism; and where she led the TS was likely to go in future.

Some information from wikipedia on Annie Besant's involvement in theosophy: she first discovered theosophy as late as 1889. She joined the TS at once, and quickly became a leading member. She met Leadbeater in 1894 and always supported him afterwards; they worked together eg on clairvoyance. Leadbeater was ejected from the TS in 1906 after accusations that he had encouraged boys in his care to masturbate. But when Besant became the TS president, in 1907, he was let back in again.

Comment from Sally Davis on the accusations against Leadbeater: how much Isabel knew about them I can't tell, of course; probably more than the brief reference to him that she made in Memorabilia. However, I think her main objection to what happened in 1906 and 1907 was that Besant had reinstated a man against whom such accusations had been made and had overturned a decision made by the TS's ruling body. Rumours that Leadbeater was a homosexual continued to circulate for the rest of his life.

BY 1909

Isabel had moved to 399 Old Chester Road Tranmere, on the edge of the Rock Ferry district.

Source: see Eugenics Society below.

DURING 1909

Isabel joined the newly-founded Eugenics Education Society.

Source: via google to the Annual Report of the Eugenics Education Society volumes 2-6 1909 p40: a list of members living in the Liverpool area includes Madame de Steiger of 399 Old Chester Road Rock Ferry.

Comment by Sally Davis: I was really quite shocked to discover this - eugenics has such horrific connotations these days after the Nazis and others took its assumptions and aims to their logical conclusion.

The EES had two aims: the prevention of procreation by those deemed unfit (particularly, the poor who were users of the Poor Law); and the encouragement of procreation amongst those deemed the fit. I couldn't find any EES membership lists at the British Library or in the EES collection at the Wellcome Institute; so I don't know for how long Isabel continued to be a member. She certainly still held eugenicist views when she prepared Superhumanity for publication in 1915; though she disagreed with Nietzsche's views that the evolution of the super man would end the need for god.

Sources for the EES and its views during the time Isabel was definitely a member; not exhaustive but just giving an impression of what the EES stood for:

Times Thurs 15 October 1908 p4: coverage of a talk by the EES's president Francis Galton in which he confirmed that unlike most eugenics societies, the EES would promote procreation by the right kind of citizen as well as the more usual prevention of procreation by the wrong kind.

Times Sat 9 Oct 1909 p7 a short report on a talk at the EES: Eugenics and Military Service, the gist of which was that the labouring classes were too weak to make good soldiers.

Eugenics and the Superman: A Racial Science and a Racial Religion by Maximilian A Mügge. Isabel would certainly have read this paper, because it was originally published in The Eugenics Review issue of October 1909 before being sold as a separate pamphlet by the EES of 6 York Buildings Adelphi. In the paper, Mügge puts the work of Francis Galton and Nietzsche together - scientist and theorist - as the basis for the creation of the super man, who would be "the accumulated, condensed virtue of all ages and nations", by which Mügge meant the best of Buddhism, Sparta, Athens, Rome and "our Teutonic ancestors" (both quotes from p2).

A modern assessment of the EES:

Eugenics, Human Genetics and Human Failings. The Eugenics Society, its Sources and its Critics in Britain. Pauline M H Mazumdar. London, New York: Routledge 1992. The book stresses that eugenics was seen by the EES as a means of social control of the poor by the professional classes; and that members refused to acknowledge the part played by environment and social background in poverty - in keeping poor people poor.

The eugenics efforts of the Nazis are well known, but the eugenics experiments of the Americans are not: see Neurotribes: The Legacy of Autism... by Steve Silberman. Penguin Random House 2015.

17 MAY 1909

Isabel's old friend William Crosfield died.

Source: Probate Registry 1909.

Comment by Sally Davis: William Crosfield died in Liverpool Town Hall - I suppose while doing business of some kind there. As with the death in 1903 of Henry Cassels Kay, William Crosfield's death broke a link with Isabel's husband. Rudolf had now been dead over thirty years but I imagine it was still particularly sad for Isabel to hear of the death of his surviving executor. William had left his widow and daughter comfortably off so Fanny and Dora were able to continue to live at 3 Fulwood Park: that's where they were on the day of the 1911 census though with a slightly reduced staff of cook, one housemaid and a parlour maid.

Source for 1911: census entry.

??1909 though the friendship may date back as far as the 1840s

Isabel became or continued to be a close friend of Mary Elizabeth Pitt-Taylor, of The Lawn Rock Ferry.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel and Mary Elizabeth Pitt-Taylor may even have been related, through the marriage of Isabel's uncle Ambrose Lace to Margaret Clarke in 1822. Mary Elizabeth was the daughter of William Clarke and his wife Sarah Ann; born in 1844 at Gerard Street Liverpool. Because Clarke is such a common name, and so often mis-spelled, I haven't tried to establish whether she and Isabel's aunt Margaret were related.

If Isabel and Mary Elizabeth Clarke were related, then of course they had known each other from Isabel's adolescence and Mary Elizabeth's childhood. If they weren't, then it's likely that they got to know each other well when Isabel moved to Old Chester Road, very near to where Mary Elizabeth had been living since the 1870s.

In 1871 Mary Elizabeth Clarke - whose father had moved on from being a book-keeper to being in business on his own account - married Arthur William Pitt-Taylor, son of John Pitt-Taylor, a judge on the north-western circuit. Arthur worked in Liverpool as a cotton broker, with offices in the Queen Insurance Buildings. He and Mary Elizabeth moved into the house called The Lawn, in Rock Ferry, after their marriage and were still living there in the mid-1920s. They had three sons. Their son Francis became a doctor and was working at the Birkenhead and Wirral Children's Hospital during 1898-99. When he left, GD member William MacFarlane was appointed to replace him; though I don't know whether he met Isabel.

In her Will Isabel left Mary Elizabeth Pitt-Taylor her oval garnet and gold brooch. Mary Elizabeth did survive Isabel, but only by a few months. Her husband Arthur died in 1933.

Sources:

Baptism: www.lan-opc.org.uk baptisms at Christ Church Hunter Street, Baptism Register 1813-51 p134 entry 1068 10 February 1844.

Marriage: also at www.lan-opc.org.uk, marriages at St George Everton. Marriage Register 1869-1872 p175 entry 349.

Gore's Directory of Liverpool and its Environs issue of 1889 p7.

Francis Stanhope Pitt-Taylor as a doctor and at the children's hospital: University of Manchester Register of Graduates seen as a snippet on google.

Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger dated 6 March 1924.

Probate Registry 1933 entry for Arthur William Pitt-Taylor.

AFTER 1910

A friend took Isabel on a drive in his car, around Queen's Drive and Liverpool's garden suburb at Wavertree. Isabel was delighted with what she saw - "new roads...adorned with trees and gardens and delightful little houses". Her admiration for City Engineer James Alexander Brodie – designer of the Queen's Drive road scheme - knew no bounds.

Sources:

Memorabilia pxx, pxxii. Isabel doesn't name the car driver, just calls him "a medical friend of mine"; but she must mean Henri Dubourg, whom she later named as executor of her Will. Henri and his brother were both GP's in Liverpool. They were members of the GD's daughter order Stella Matutina: R A Gilbert's The Golden Dawn Companion p166 has a list of people who were active in SM at least between 1910 and 1914. Both Henri and his brother William were on it.

An account of Liverpool Garden Suburb from shortly after people moved in: seen at www.bbc.co.uk, Mersey Times but originally published in Garden Suburbs, Villages and Homes issue 2 summer 1912: Life in a Garden Suburb by Bryce Leicester. London: Co-Partnership Publications Ltd. The building of the houses started in 1910 and the first residents – who were tenants, not owner-occupiers – began to move in during 1912.

Design Culture in Liverpool 1880-1914: the Origins of the Liverpool School of Architecture by Christopher Crouch. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press 2002: p13, p178, p182.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel's medical friend was roused to take her on this trip to Liverpool's new outskirts by listening so often to her condemning the ugly sprawl that had marked the expansion of Liverpool in the mid-19th century. The arterial road Queen's Drive was begun in 1904; 6½ miles around and a minimum of 120 feet across, it was designed by City Engineer James Alexander Brodie to ease traffic flow while bringing green space into the city. It wasn't part of Brodie's brief to build a garden suburb near it, but in 1910 the Co-Partnership Tenants Ltd put forward a plan to build such a suburb on land enclosed by Queen's Drive at Wavertree. The design of the houses in Liverpool Garden Suburb was influenced by the Arts and Crafts movement – like Letchworth, in which Isabel was an investor (see 1902). In Memorabilia Isabel doesn't have anything to say about the insanitary horrors that suburbs like Wavertree were designed to replace. Her enthusiasm was for the design and for the way the suburb was laid out, with its air of bringing the countryside to the city. Although it seems rather harsh of her, her attitude was consistent with her firm belief that art and beauty were as important to human society as drains and fresh air.

Isabel doesn't date her afternoon out, but it was probably quite a few years after 1910, perhaps even after World War 1.

13 APRIL 1910

Mary Anne Atwood died at Knayton Lodge, her house near Thirsk. In her Will, Mrs Atwood left Isabel a large sapphire ring.

Source for Mrs Atwood's death: probate registration.

Sources for Isabel's response: Occult Review volume 11 number 5 May 1910 p279 and Memorabilia p239. On the ring: Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger dated 6 March 1924 in which she left the ring to her nephew Verney Turnbull.

Comment by Sally Davis on Isabel's response to Mrs Atwood's death: Isabel saw herself as having the "prime duty" of editing and otherwise preparing Mrs Atwood's book to be published for a second time. As soon after the death as May 1910, she also had a letter published announcing her intention of writing a short biography of Atwood, asking for people who had letters from Atwood in their possession to contact her, and acknowledging Atwood's influence on her own On a Gold Basis.

Mrs Atwood's great but almost unread book was A Suggestive Inquiry into Hermetic Philosophy and Alchemy published privately in 1850 by Mrs Atwood under her maiden name of Mary Anne South. Isabel must have been doing the editing and notes over the next few years, at the same time as two other important projects.

The other result of the death of Mrs Atwood was Isabel's decision to put together an account of her relationship with Mrs Atwood and Dr Kingsford: published in 1927 as my main source for this life-by-dates – Memorabilia.

LATE 1910 TO 1925

Isabel worked on and off on her last painting. She originally called it TITLE but changed it to Castles in the Air, probably in 1917.

Comments by Sally Davis on Castles in the Air: it was quite a long life, by now, that Isabel was attempting to sum up - Isabel was 76 in 1912. No more paintings are mentioned by Isabel as having been completed or even started after it. I think Isabel meant it to be her last work as an artist.

Sources:

- confirming Isabel as the painter: one of several pieces of paper attached to the back of the picture's frame has "Painted by Isabelle de [Steiger missing from right-hand end]" on it.
- the date is not so straightforward. On three different pieces of paper stuck to the back of the frame are three slightly different dates:

    "1910" written in Isabel's handwriting

    "1910 to 191" with the last number in the end-date missing

    "1917", also in Isabel's handwriting.

It all points, I think, to a long gestation period, with fallow times and many changes of mind.

The painting's meaning for Isabel: on Memorabilia p220 Isabel writing in 1925 when she was still working on it from time to time: on p219 she calls it a reminder of what she could have achieved if she had concentrated on her painting and not chosen to "follow many interests" ie spiritualism, theosophy and alchemy. In footnote1 on p219 she says that painting had helped her through her first years as a widow, when by her husband's death she'd been given a freedom she had never wanted. Isabel was intending to exhibit Castles..: on p280 says that Castles was "destined to be hung in the Walker Art Gallery in 1926". As at September 2017 I still haven't been able to find a copy of the WAG's autumn exhibition catalogue for that year; to confirm that Castles.. was actually shown.

Information on its two titles and that it was for sale when exhibited:

1) the words “The Lady of Illusion, from the Greek Pilgrim’s Progress” are on one of the pieces of paper attached to the back of the frame. On another piece of paper, in Isabel’s handwriting, the address “42 Hawarden Avenue; price £150”.

Memorabilia p219: when discussing Castles... Isabel makes no mention of its earlier title.

I think that ‘the lady of illusion’ is a reference to a book: at archive.org you can see a copy of The Greek Pilgrim’s Progress, Generally known as The Picture; by “Kebeles, a disciple of Sokrates?” published by the Comparative Literature Press Philadelphia as their “Volume First” in the Wisdom of the Ancients series. It’s a translation from the German of a work originally in Greek; done c 1910 by Kenneth Sylvan Guthrie PhD. Philadelphia: Montsalvat Press of 1501 North Marshall Street. Privately printed and published London: Leizac and Co of 46 Gt Russell Street. I couldn’t spot the actual words ‘Lady of Illusion’ anywhere; but the book was printed in a Gothic-style script that I found very difficult to read so I expect I missed them. The general idea of the book was the journey of a male seeker after truth, threatened by all sorts of snares and wrong paths, all of them described as seductive women.

2) Castles in the Air is the title on a ‘with care’ label that was stuck to the back of the frame; in Isabel’s handwriting; price £150; address Hawarden Avenue (no house number on this piece of paper) Liverpool. Slip signed off on behalf of Jackson and Sons (see below for more on them).

In an email to me of 29 May 2017 Ben Fernee of Caduceus Books said that ‘castles in the air’ is a phrase familiar to esotericists. To quote Ben: “The term “castle” is used by some witches to refer to their sacred space or magic circle here, and the term Château likewise in France. But I doubt Isabel would have encountered this usage. It is very obscure...Dr. Herbert Silberer uses it in Problems of Mysticism and Its Symbolism published in 1917 to refer to the Freudian view of dreams as wish fantasies. Mostly this book is about alchemical symbolism so I think it highly likely she was aware of it. Also, putting the phrase into the title field for the British Library catalogue turns up loads of hits...”

Summing up Silberer’s wikipedia entry: 1882-1923, Viennese psychoanalyst. Originally one of Freud’s circle but disagreements over the interpretation of dreams caused them to fall out. The book Ben Fernee suggested was a possible source for ‘castles in the air’ was published in German 1914 as Probleme der Mystik und ihrer Symbolik. Its starting point was the Rosicrucian text the Parabola Allegory. Silberer’s argument was that Freudian psychoanalysis can only go so far in interpreting dreams or understanding creativity.

Isabel would have agreed, I think, with Silberer’s arguments about dream interpretation. She could have read the book in German if she had been able to obtain a copy. An English translation followed very quickly: Problems of Mysticism and Symbolism translated by Smith Ely Jelliffe and published New York: Moffat Yard and Co; London: Kegan Paul 1917.

CENSUS DAY 1911

Census day 1911 found Isabel in the UK for once. She was still living in Rock Ferry at 399 Old Chester Road and still had enough money to employ the one basic general servant, Mary Jane Evans, aged 54. None of her close relations were living near her - the two sets that had been living in Cheshire were both now living in London. Isabel’s unmarried sister Constantia Lace and their unmarried niece Theodosia Lace had gone to 64 Ashley Gardens Westminster.

And Cécile Marguérite Lace, widow of Charles Verney Lace, was at 36 Holland Villas Road Kensington.

John and Helena Turnbull and their daughters Constance and Christine were still living in the rectory at Great Linford. John and Helena's son Verney Turnbull was a lodger in the boarding house at 110 Guilford Street Russell Square, run by William and Sarah Tizard; he was still working as a journalist. A lot had changed for Isabel's sister Rosamond: after her husband's death she had moved out of The Lodge. She was now living alone at a house called the White Lodge - still a substantial residence, with eight habitable rooms.

Constantia and Theodosia Lace, the Turnbulls, and widow Rosamond Burton were all employing roughly the same servants: a cook or housekeeper, and a housemaid or parlourmaid.

Source: 1911 census which is the first where the householder filled in the census form for their household.

AUTUMN-WINTER 1911 to 1912

Isabel spent the winter at Bournemouth. During her time there she met Alfred Russell Wallace's daughters, although she never knew the man himself.

Sources: Occult Review volume 14 number 6 December 1911 p349; and Memorabilia p213.

18 NOVEMBER 1911

Isabel began her first attempt to write Memorabilia. Perhaps she was in Bournemouth on that day, having moved there in order to begin work. In this first attempt, she got to the end of Chapter IX, the early-1870s, before putting it to one side, writing later that it "caused me much difficulty" and that what she had written to date had been "hardly in accordance with my original intention".

Source: Memorabilia p1 and p95 for (for once) a specific date.

Comment by Sally: it's clear that working on Mrs Atwood's book had caused Isabel to reflect on her own spiritual journey - which was entering yet another new phase.

DECEMBER 1911 and again FEBRUARY 1912

An article and a letter by Isabel on A E Waite's The Secret Traditions of Freemasonry appeared in Occult Review. Although she praised Waite's book as "magnificent and monumental" she pointed out that his attitude towards the work of Mary Anne Atwood had changed since his magazine The Unknown World and his book Lives of the Alchemical Philosophers and - in Isabel's opinion - for the worse. She took the opportunity to announce the imminent publication of her own new edition of Atwood's A Suggestive Inquiry....

Source: Occult Review volume 14 number 6 December 1911 pp346-349 and Occult Review volumn 15 number 2 February 1912 pp105-06.

NOVEMBER 1912

The Alchemical Society was founded as a forum for the study of alchemy in theory and practise. Isabel and A E Waite both joined it, and maintained friendly relations despite Isabel's recent criticisms of Waite's attitude to Mary Ann Atwood. They were the Society's two honorary vice-presidents during the two years of its existence. The Society held meetings each month.

Source: Memorabilia p273 but Isabel dates the founding of the Society as January 1913. Perhaps that's the date she first went to a meeting. I'm supposing most meetings were held in London.

Source for the Society's founding and for Waite's changed attitude towards the work of Mary Ann Atwood: A E Waite: Magician of Many Parts by R A Gilbert. Wellingborough: Crucible 1987: p151-52.

1 JANUARY 1913

Isabel read an article in the weekly paper The Christian Commonwealth which she identified with: it argued that programmes of social reform should be seen as complementing religious commitment, not as replacing it.

Source: The Christian Commonwealth volume 33 issue 1629 of Wednesday 1 January 1913. Page 251: Religion and Social Reform, by Rev E W Lewis. The subtitle of Rev Lewis' argument was: "does religion need to be saved from the social reformer?", too many of whom (he argued) had no particular religious belief and wanted to improve social conditions by taking action, rather than through prayer and contemplation. Isabel agreed very strongly with Rev Lewis' argument that social reform without religious practice would always result in a lack of quality of life; and she incorporated a reference to it in the book form of Superhumanity (its page 118). He also argued that the Church must resist any attempt by social reformers to use it for their purposes; he especially mentioned the extension of the right to vote, in this context. Religious observance and social reform were not an 'either/or'; but if it came to a choice of one or the other, Society would be the better for choosing the Church rather than a programme of social reform. I don't know whether Isabel would have been quite so comfortable with Rev Lewis's parting shot, though: that if the Church, rather than social reformers, was to undertake to improve society, it could only be after the Church itself had undergone "the biggest revolution the world has ever seen".

If Isabel read the paper's next issue, that of Wednesday 8 January 1913, she will have seen an editorial quoting evidence for a continuation of the decline in church and Sunday school attendance that had begun in 1906; using figures from churches in Liverpool. She will also have seen a riposte to Rev Lewis' argument, by Herbert Burrows.

Source: The Christian Commonwealth volume 33 number 1630 issue of Wednesday 8 January 1913 p273, p270.

Comment by Sally Davis: The Christian Commonwealth was first published in 1881; it managed to survive changing times, and the first World War, but ceased publication in September 1919.

Judging from adverts and articles in the issues of January 1913 its Christian stance was a broad-minded one: there was coverage of the visit to England by Abdul Baha, the current leader of the Ba'hai faith, that The Christian Commonwealth had helped to publicise and promote. There were adverts for talks on Buddhism. There were interviews with a member of the Society for Psychical Research and Mrs Sophie Bryant, current head-mistress of the North London Collegiate School. In 1913 issues cost 1d at the newspaper stall or shop; or 6 shillings and 6d for a yearly subscription.

SPRING 1913 TO AUGUST 1914

Isabel's book Superhumanity was published in several parts in the journal The Path. This was the work Isabel was particularly thinking of when she said her writings were looking ahead to the Age of Aquarius, an Age Isabel thought would be accompanied by "a further step forward in man's evolution".

More information on magazine The Path from Villeneuve's Rudolf Steiner in Britain (for full publication details see just below) p245, 248 The Path had been set up by the newly founded (or possibly re-founded) Theosophical Society Scottish Section; its first issue had been published in July 1910. It was printed by the Blavatsky Institute, whose headquarters were at Hale near Altrincham in Cheshire. The British Library catalogue has volumes 1 to 4, probably all that were issued; they cover July 1910 to September 1914.

Sources for the serialising of the book: Occult Review volume 17 number 5 May 1913 p295, Occult Review volume 20 number 2 August 1914 p120 and Memorabilia p136, p274-75.

Some sources for the Blavatsky Institute:

The Theosophist volume 32 1911 p155; catalogue.nla.gov.au, in the introduction to its issues of The Path; and www.suffolkpainters.co.uk, biography of Alice Leisenring.

Comments by Sally Davis:

1) The central figures in the Theosophical Society in Scotland were Isabel's friends John William Brodie-Innes and his wife Frances: in the 1890s the TS Edinburgh branch used to meet at their house.

2) I've come across this feeling that Humanity was at or approaching the dawn of a new and better age in quite a few works by GD and TS members. Even the first World War didn't put an end to the hopes of some of them.

19 JULY TO 2 AUGUST 1913

Isabel attended the Steiner-influenced 5th International Summer School, held at the Peebles Hotel-Hydro.

Source for the occasion: Memorabilia but I can't find the page number!

Source for the exact dates and place: Rudolf Steiner in Britain: A Documentation of his Ten Visits. Volume 1 1902-21. By Crispian Villeneuve. Forest Row: Temple Lodge 2004 p412 quoting the official announcement, published in the TS's members' magazine The Vahan. Just noting from p11 of this volume that Isabel could have met Steiner in London as early as 1902. He also visited in 1903, 1904, 1905 and spring 1913; then not again until 1922.

?1913; or possibly as late as 1923

Isabel joined what she called the Anthroposophical Society of Spiritual Science.

Source: Memorabilia p135

Website www.anthroposophy.org.uk is the Society's own: a spiritual path respecting the freedom of the individual; and recognising that freedom was something inside you, to be worked towards through spiritual development. Founded 1913 in Switzerland by Rudolf Steiner as the Anthroposophical Society; then re-founded in 1923 together with the new School of Spiritual Science.

Information from wikipedia on Rudolf Steiner: born 1861 Croatia; died 1925 Switzerland. From 1902 to 1913 Steiner was involved with the Theosophical Society in Europe.

Comment by Sally: Steiner's idea that each person should follow their own spiritual path; and his emphasis on meditation; were tailor-made for Isabel.

14 NOVEMBER 1913

Isabel read her paper The Hermetic Mystery at an Alchemical Society meeting. It was later published in the Society's Transactions.

Source: Memorabilia p274.

EARLY 1914

Christian David Ginsburg died.

Comment by Sally Davis: see 1864 for Isabel meeting him through the Crosfields; and 1883 for why Isabel might not have been aware that he had died; though from her mentions of the work of Jewish scholars on the books of the Old Testament, she still appreciated her discussions with him on the subject.

1914

Isabel's nephew Verney Cameron Turnbull's book Stories from Robert Browning was published.

Source: the book - Stories from Robert Browning by V Cameron Turnbull with 12 illustrations by Sybil Barham. London: George G Harrap and Co of 2-3 Portsmouth Street Kingsway. 1914

Comment by Sally Davis: this may be of no relevance to Isabel at all. The book's dedicated to Verney's parents - Isabel's sister Helena Turnbull and her husband the Rev John - and there's no mention of Isabel anywhere in it. I include it in this life-by-dates for three reasons: firstly, Verney ended his working life as a reader for a publishing company - perhaps Harrap was that company; secondly, this book is the only item I've found published by any of Isabel's close relations; and thirdly, while she ignored many of her nieces and nephews, Isabel did leave something to Verney in her Will.

1914

A E Waite closed down the Independent and Rectified Rite or Order, which had been dogged by the same kind of internal strife that had bedevilled the GD. I'm not sure that the closure made much difference to Isabel as she hadn't been a very active member of the Order.

R A Gilbert's The Golden Dawn Companion published Wellingborough Northants, The Aquarian Press 1986 p175.

BY SUMMER 1914

Isabel had moved to Llangollen where she was living in a house called Vron Dêg. She was still living there in mid-1915.

Source: Occult Review volume 20 number 1 July 1914 pp45-47; and Occult Review volume 21 number 6 June 1915 pp356-57.

JULY 1914

Once again Isabel felt herself called upon to defend the reputation of Anna Bonus Kingsford, and to a lesser extent Edward Maitland; this time against an article in the magazine The Seeker. What had upset Isabel particularly was the article's suggestion that Dr Kingsford was not a genuine mystic, just a woman exploiting occult teachings for her own ends; and that she was making money during her lifetime from selling patent medicines.

Source: Occult Review volume 20 number 1 July 1914 pp45-47. The article that had so annoyed her had been published in The Seeker's issue of May 1914.

1914-18

I think the War delayed the re-publication of Mrs Atwood's book.

DECEMBER 1914 TO DECEMBER 1915

Isabel was on the committee of the Llangollen branch of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies, stepping down only because she was about to leave the district. She and Bertha Aikin also ran a members' reading group that year.

Source:

National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies, Minute Books of the Llangollen branch; December 1914 to December 1915. Seen by Barbara Lawson-Reay who sent me the details by email November 1917.

Comment by Sally Davis: Barbara has been researching the members of Llangollen's NUWSS and has come up with a possible reason why Isabel moved there – even if it was for only a short time. She has found that Bertha Aikin, née Gorst, had been born in Thornton Hough near Rock Ferry; and that she was an artist and etcher. Perhaps Isabel had known Bertha in Liverpool.

BY JUNE 1915

Isabel had inherited a manuscript entitled Divine Revelations and Prophecies, apparently written down by Mrs Jane Lead (sic). Isabel was particularly curious about one prophecy, headed, 'Remarkable Prophecy by a Jew' which predicted the birth of an Englishman who would build a new Jerusalem and convert the Jews to Christianity. She wrote to Occult Review wondering if any readers knew who the Jewish prophet might have been.

Source: Occult Review volume 21 number 6 June 1915 pp356-57. Looking through the volumes for the next few years, I couldn't find any reply to Isabel's query.

Comment by Sally Davis: Isabel didn't mention who she had inherited this manuscript from; or how long she had owned it herself. Perhaps it had been Mrs Atwood's.

END OF 1915/BEGINNING OF 1916

Isabel left Llangollen.

Source: at cymru1914.org is the edition of the Llangollen Advertiser for 17 December 1915 in which there's an advert for Vron Deg, available to be let.

Comment by Sally Davis: I suppose she moved back to Rock Ferry; she was certainly living there again by March 1917.

1916

Isabel's articles in the magazine The Path (1913) were published in book form as Superhumanity: A Suggestive Enquiry into the Mystic and Material Meaning of the Christian Word Regeneration.

Source: the book, published London: Elliot Stock of 7 Paternoster Row EC.

Comment by Sally Davis: in the Preface Isabel admitted that, as articles, her ideas had only reached “a small circle of readers”. Their response, though, had been “so gratifying and stimulating” that she had been encouraged to publish the articles as a book. She felt like a Cassandra in doing so, however. Superhumanity would be drawing attention to an “unforeseen crisis” of Christianity that was being overlooked by a world at war. If something was not done about the crisis as a matter of urgency, the human species was in danger of a second Fall and Christianity would lose its status as the world’s dominant religion and source of social organisation. The second Fall would also delay or even prevent the achievement by the human species of a higher level of spiritual development: the superhumanity of the title. Isabel envisaged that super-human status would be achieved by means of eugenics - the procreation of those who were more spiritually advanced than the rest of society and the discouragement of procreation amongst those who were less so.

Source for Isabel’s reasons for publishing: Preface pv-vi.

1917 AND PROBABLY FOR MANY YEARS BEFORE

Isabel was a regular reader of the Daily Mail for which she had an “esteem” which was “extreme”. However, an article called ‘Psychic Brain Storms’ had annoyed her and she wrote to the Occult Review to denounce it, especially its “contemptible” treatment of the work of spiritualist Sir Oliver Lodge - apparently the Mail had called his latest publication a “Spook Book”.

Source: Occult Review volume 25 number 3 March 1917 pp174-75.

BY MARCH 1917

Isabel had moved back to Rock Ferry.

Source: Occult Review volume 25 number 3 March 1917 pp174-75.

AUTUMN 1917

Isabel’s Superhumanity was published in book form, by publisher Elliot Stock. The subtitle Isabel had chosen for the work consciously echoed Mrs Atwood’s book. It was “A Suggestive Inquiry into the Material and Mystic Meaning of the Word Regeneration”.

Source: Occult Review volume 26 number 4 October 1917 p241 in the forthcoming publications section.

22 FEBRUARY 1918

After a gap of several years, Isabel went back to writing Memorabilia, beginning again with Chapter X and the 1870s and possibly revising one or two chapters she’d written earlier. By this time she was aware of post-Impressionism and even Cubism, but felt that both styles reduced art solely to an expression of feeling and refused the challenge of painting in three dimensions.

Source: Memorabilia p95, p110-11.

SPRING 1918

Isabel’s new edition of Mary Anne South’s A Suggestive Inquiry into Hermetic Philosophy and Alchemy was finally published, under Miss South’s married name of Atwood. Some people wrote to Isabel to congratulate her on the editing and other work she had done to get it back in the public domain. However, A E Waite in Occult Review mentioned only Walter Leslie Wilmhurst as author (Wilmhurst had done the introduction but nothing else) setting a trend that still continues of ignoring Isabel's far greater contribution. One friend who wrote to Isabel to acknowledge what she had done was ex-GD member Sydney Turner Klein; he and Isabel had corresponded for many years and continued to exchange letters at least until 1925. Klein thought Isabel should have done the introduction herself but Isabel felt that - given the book's intellectual nature - a man was better suited to the task of introducing it.

What Isabel considered her final task as Mrs Atwood's last pupil was done. Looking back at the re-issue at the end of the 1920s, she felt depressed about the outcome. She felt that hardly any more people had read the re-issued work than had read the original publication.

Publication details for the new edition of Mary Anne South's book: A Suggestive Inquiry into Hermetic Philosophy and Alchemy by Mary Anne Atwood, published in Belfast by William Tait and in London by the well-known esoteric publisher and book-shop owner J M Watkins. With an Introduction by Walter Leslie Wilmhurst. Watkins knew many members of the GD and published books by several of them; however, he was never a GD member himself.

Source for Waite's misleading review: Occult Review volume 28 number 1 July 1918 pp44-46, article by A E Waite: The Hermetic Tradition.

Source for Isabel's reflections: Memorabilia p221, p240.

Comment by Sally: for a website which completely ignores Isabel's contribution, see wikipedia's page on the book, where Wilmhurst is given all the credit and Isabel's name isn't even mentioned.

20 MAY 1918

Isabel's sister Rosamond Elizabeth Burton died.

Source: Probate Registry 1918.

SUMMER 1918

The effort she had made, over several years, to resurrect Mrs Atwood's great work, had left Isabel feeling tired and in low spirits but she was still reading Occult Review regularly, and with care. She wrote to agree with an article by Richard Bush in which he argued that a child was conceived by the actions of the parents, not by the direct action of God. However, she did still believe that there was a "spiritual tincture" in a human foetus that lifted it above the foetus of any other animal. This spiritual tincture gave Man a capacity to rise to a super-human state of being, provided Man had true faith in God.

Source: Occult Review volume 28 number 1 July 1918 pp47-48.

Comment by Sally Davis: because Memorabilia was about Isabel's life in the occult more than her life with her family, she didn't mention the death of her sister as a reason for her low spirits this year. It was over 30 years since their two brothers had died, but with Rosamond's death a new threshold had been crossed. But even the war might have been getting Isabel down like it was everyone else as it remorselessly entered its fifth summer of fighting, having brought food shortages in 1917 and being about to bring Spanish flu.

SATURDAY 14 DECEMBER 1918

Voting took place in the 1918 General Election. As a result of the Representation of the People Act 1917, Isabel was eligible to vote in a general election for the first time. She was 83.

Source for the date: see wikipedia.

25 MARCH 1920

Isabel's niece Theodosia Lace died, the last of the children of Isabel's brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace.

Source: Probate Registry 1921.

NOVEMBER 1920

Isabel began on Memorabilia chapter XIII. In that chapter and those that followed she covered her meetings with Kingsford and Atwood, spiritualism and theosophy - the beginnings of her spiritual quest.

Source: Memorabilia p125.

FEBRUARY/MARCH 1922

Isabel's brother-in-law Rev John Turnbull, and her sister Helena Turnbull, died within weeks of each other.

Source for both deaths: Probate Registry 1922.

Comment by Sally Davis: Rev John seems to have retired from active work as the rector of Great Linford a few years before his death. Leaving the charge of the parish to a curate, he and Helena went to live at 6 High Street Olney. At some point after the death of Theodosia Lace (in 1920) Constantia Lace went to live there too. Also living there permanently were John and Helena's two daughters, Constance and Christine. Their sons went also there to live, in between jobs and when they retired - so that there were Turnbulls living at 6 High Street Olney until the 1960s. I have to say that there's something odd about John and Helena's family: six children, none of whom ever seems to have married.

SPRING 1922

In January 1922 an article by S Foster Damon appeared in Occult Review in which he likened what spiritualists called ectoplasm to what alchemists called "first matter". Isabel was inspired to write in, not discussing whether Foster Damon was right or wrong, but describing the contradictory reactions of alchemists to their creation of first matter, a process that was not only illegal, but against the laws of nature, and very dangerous as well. Alchemists were willing to take the risks of offending both God and men, though, on the chance that they might create gold by chemical process. She ended the article with a quote from Philalethes, whose work she knew well.

Source: Occult Review volume 35 number 5 May 1922 pp298-99.

BY MAY 1922

Isabel had changed her address for what was probably the last time, moving across the Mersey to 42 Hawarden Avenue Liverpool, on the edge of the Aigburth district where she had begun her married life.

Source: Occult Review volume 35 number 5 issue of May 1922 pp298-99.

Comment by Sally Davis: Hawarden Avenue was also close to Fulwood Park where her friends William and Fanny Crosfield had lived, and their daughter Dora was still living.

IN 1924 and possibly up to Isabel's death

Isabel was still employing one servant, a woman called Clare or Clara Reece.

Source: Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger 6 March 1924.

Comment by Sally Davis: I've searched for the woman Isabel actually calls 'clare' Reece, but can only find (on the 1911 census and elsewhere) women called Clara; so that's a bit confusing. If Clare or Clara was still working for Isabel when Isabel died, she will have been one of Isabel's beneficiaries.

FEBRUARY/MARCH 1924

Isabel prepared her Will. It was signed on 6 March 1924.

Source: the Will.

Comment by Sally Davis: the witnesses were a Dr Parry Jones of 9 Hawarden Avenue; and an Ernest Johnson whose address I can't quite read except that it's in Liverpool somewhere.

31 MAY 1924

Another of the generation below Isabel died: Herbert Arthur Sutton of Kelham House, Newark-on-Trent, the widower of her niece Josephine.

Source: Probate Registry 1924.

MARCH 1925

Isabel covered the years just before the first World War, and finally brought her life up to date, in Memorabilia chapters XXI to XXVII. She was living very quietly, with very few friends but quite a few correspondents including Sydney Turner Klein and A E Waite.

Source: Memorabilia p220-221.

Comment by Sally Davis: A E Waite was an ex-GD member, of course; and Sydney Turner Klein been in the GD in the 1890s.

SUMMER 1925

John Robert Henry Dubourg's daughter Gladys married Lancelot Edwards and went to live in Essex.

Source: freebmd.

25 MAY 1926

Dora Crosfield, daughter of Isabel's close friends William and Fanny Elizabeth Crosfield, died.

Sources: Probate Registry 1926 and www.toxtethparkcemetery.co.uk an Index to burials in Toxteth Park cemetery. In the list of burials 1920-29: Dora Margaret Crosfield date of burial 28 May 1926.

28 AUGUST 1926

A short codicil to Isabel's Will was signed.

Source: Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger. Unlike the main body of the Will from 1924, the codicil was typed. It was witnessed by schoolteacher Florence Huntley, and office worker Ernest Gabrielson.

Comment by Sally Davis: I bet thereby hangs a tale! The codicil leaves what was then quite a large sum of money to one of Isabel's nieces, one not mentioned in the Will itself, and not one of the unmarried women nieces Isabel had, who might have been in more need of the money.

1 JANUARY 1927

Isabel de Steiger died at her home at 42 Hawarden Avenue, a few weeks short of her 91st birthday. The two executors of her Will were John Robert Henry Dubourg and Léonie Topham Steele.

Sources: Probate on Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger; Probate Registry 1927; and Occult Review volume 45 number 2 February 1927 pp78-79.

Comments by Sally Davis: in On A Gold Basis and again (with more urgency) in Superhumanity, Isabel had discussed the concept of death as "the supreme initiation", as the gateway to eternity; so that your life needed to be a preparation for that moment. This was something that she had read about in the works of Jacob Böhme, and probably talked over with Anna Bonus Kingsford. No one can say that during her life, Isabel had not done her very best to prepare herself; I'm sure she was ready.

On a more mundane level, Isabel had continued mentally alert until her final illness: only a few days before contracting pneumonia she had written an eleven-page letter to Occult Review, defending Mary Anne Atwood's views on alchemy. The letter wasn't published. Times had moved on - Occult Review had a new editor, who paid tribute to Isabel in his editorial for the February issue, but didn't think her of sufficient interest for a separate obituary. However, he did wish Isabel's soul well after her "long and active" life, sure that it would now be undergoing the spiritual regeneration that she had so fervently believed in.

Sources for Isabel's attitude to death as a passage to the world beyond:

On A Gold Basis: A Treatise on Mysticism. London: William Rider and Son Ltd 1909: p24 mentioning the work of Böhme.

Superhumanity: A Suggestive Enquiry into the Mystic and Material Meaning of the Christian Word Regeneration London: Elliot Stock 1916: p163 with a footnote citing Kingsford's The Perfect Way.

MAY 1927

Memorabilia: Reminiscences of a Woman Artist and Writer by Isabelle (sic) de Steiger was published in London by Rider and Co, publishers of Occult Review. A E Waite had written a Preface for it.

Source: the book.

ISABEL'S WILL

Now that the Dubourg family have sent me a copy of Isabel's Will I can write a short section on who was bequeathed something in it - and who was not.

Source: Will of Isabelle Elizabeth de Steiger dated 6 March 1924 and one Codicil dated 28 August 1926.

Isabel's executors were her two friends Léonie Topham Steele and John Robert Henry Dubourg.

WHO BENEFITED? And who didn't. Comments by Sally Davis:

When Richard Dubourg first sent me a copy of Isabel's Will, I emailed him back that I hardly knew any of the beneficiaries! I'm still not sure about the identification of one of them, whose name I found difficult to read. Not all of them were family. In fact, non-family members did well out of the Will while most of Isabel's nephews and nieces were ignored in it.

The bequests:

Isabel left several people pieces of jewellery:

- Mary Pitt-Taylor got an oval brooch in gold with garnet decoration
  - Léonie Topham Steele was left Isabel's topaz cross and her amber necklace
  - if Clara Reece had still been in Isabel's employment when Isabel died, she will have got Isabel's silver watches (as well as other things)
  - Constance Turnbull (who was also one of the legatees) got all Isabel's other jewellery, Isabel mentioning two rings in particular - a small diamond and sapphire ring and one with an amethyst with diamonds set round it
  - this is the person whose name I can't quite decipher: a Miss ?E Bewley was left Isabel's gold chain
  - a signet ring with the de Steiger family coronet on it was to be returned to the de Steiger family, whose property Isabel clearly thought it was
- and
- Verney Cameron Turnbull got a large sapphire ring that Isabel had inherited from Mary Ann Atwood. I'd love to know where that is now.

As well as the silver watches, if Clara Reece was still working for Isabel when Isabel died, she would have inherited all Isabel's clothes and all her furniture and other items in the house which were not specified as going to anyone else.

To me, this is the interesting bit: what Isabel left to Henri (actually John Robert Henry) Dubourg. He got all the pictures Isabel still had amongst her possessions, and all the photographs she had of her paintings; a black and white engraving of a Christ figure; and some coloured Egyptian panels which she had put over the doors in the hallway (Isabel had probably been carrying them about with her since she had lived in Egypt). Isabel also returned to him some colour-prints he had given her which she had hung on the walls in her bedroom. Perhaps hoping that he might derive some financial benefit from it, Isabel left him the right to any royalties from her three occult works (which they had probably spent many hours discussing): The Cloud Upon the Sanctuary (in which she was translator not author); On a Gold Basis; and Superhumanity. Lastly, John Robert Henry Dubourg got the manuscript of Isabel's Memorabilia, which he duly saw through the publication process.

Isabel left £5 to Charles Barlow, manager of the Bank of Liverpool and Martin's Limited at Rock Ferry; perhaps as a 'thank you' for financial help he had given her.

Isabel's niece Constance Helena McCorquodale (one of her sister Rosamond Burton's daughters) got £300. This was an afterthought, in a Codicil signed two years after the Will.

Everything else was given equally to her niece Constance Turnbull and Constance's brother Verney Cameron Turnbull (two of the six children of Isabel's sister Helena Turnbull). The 'everything else' must mostly have been any stocks and shares Isabel owned, as the contents of the house were all going to other people unless Clara Reece had left Isabel's employment.

To me, who amongst Isabel's family was NOT left anything is as intriguing as who did benefit. Isabel left nothing to her only surviving sister Constantia Lace. Maybe Isabel supposed that Constantia would die before her; but she also left nothing to any of the descendents of her brother Joshua Verney Lovett Lace whom Constantia had cared for for so long. In leaving money to Constance McCorquodale, Isabel was benefiting the child of Rosamond Burton whose financial circumstances were probably the most comfortable; while ignoring Constance's three sisters and one brother, one of whom might even have been a god-child. And she also left nothing to the other four Turnbells, children of her sister Helena. I suppose that to benefit all of them would have reduced the value of the bequests to very little; but I do feel that thereby hangs a tale, probably several tales, of family indifference or even strife. That Verney Cameron Turnbull should be left an item Isabel had been bequeathed by Mary Anne Atwood suggests that he had taken at least some interest in Isabel's occult studies; but I haven't found any other indication of that - he isn't mentioned at all in Memorabilia and none of Isabel's publications are dedicated to him.

AFTER ISABEL'S DEATH

SUMMER 1929

Isabel's sister Constantia Mary Lace died aged 96 in the Turnbells' house at Olney, Buckinghamshire.

Source: Probate Registry 1929.

Comment by Sally Davis: Constantia was the first Lace sister to be born; the only one not to marry; and the last to survive. Perhaps there's a message in there somewhere!

AUGUST 1934

John Robert Henry Dubourg died in Liverpool.

Source: Probate Registry 1934. William Ernest Dubourg was his executor.

.

1943

Isabel's niece and beneficiary Constance Mary Verney Turnbull died.

Source: Probate Registry 1943.

Comment by Sally Davis: as far as I've been able to discover, none of the Turnbull children ever married. Certainly, Constance Turnbull didn't do so. Without obtaining a copy of Constance's Will I'm not able to say who were her beneficiaries; probably her brothers (as her sister Christine was already dead). The electoral registers for Buckinghamshire (seen at www.myheritage.co.uk) show Constance's brothers Arthur, John and Verney living at 6 High Street Olney in 1951; all now retired and all apparently unmarried.

1965

Isabel's beneficiary Verney Cameron Turnbull died.

Sources: Probate Registry 1965, 1966.

Comment by Sally Davis: Verney was the second-last of the Turnbull children to die; he was living at 6 High Street Olney at that time. His executor was Rev Ronald Collins, whose task it will have been to see that Mary Anne Atwood's ring - if it was still in Verney's possession - was received by his heirs. Perhaps his heir was the last surviving Turnbull, his brother John Gervaise. John Gervaise died in 1966 at a nursing home in Olney. His Will had named Verney as his executor and had not been altered when Verney died.

18 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER'S ART WORKS BY YEAR

This is almost certainly not a complete list. Some of the works on it will have been destroyed in a warehouse fire in August 1900 (see my life-by-dates for more information on that); though I only know the names of one or two of those lost works.

Isabel had the habit of slightly altering the title of a work she was exhibiting for the second or third time; so that if you count up the items on the list there will be more works than she actually did.

| DATE | TITLE  | ?EXHIBITED MORE THAN ONCE |
|------|--|---------------------------|
| 1874 | The Coming Squall...                               |                           |
| 1874 | [untitled. Subtitled] Basking in Heaven's Light... |                           |

|  |  |                                     |
|--|--|-------------------------------------|
| 1874   | Philae Egypt...  |                                     |
| 1875   | Hagar in the Desert  | Possibly the first of two showings  |
| 1875   | The Evening Meal, Ramle Egypt  |                                     |
| 1875   | On the Road to Aboukir   |                                     |
| 1875   | Mansours Tent  | Possibly the first of two showings. |
| 1877   | Mansours   | Possibly the second of two showings |
| 1878   | Consuelo   |                                     |
| 1878   | Mrs Patterson  | The first of two showings           |
| 1878   | Slave Girl of the Harem  |                                     |
| 1879   | Mrs Patterson  | The second of two showings          |
| 1879   | as Cleopatra Personating the Goddess Isis                                |                                     |
| 1879   | A Daughter of the Gods   | The first of two showings           |
| 1879   | A Daughter of the Gods   | The second of two showings          |
| I'm not sure how many Cleopatra paintings I've got here! |  |                                     |
| 1879   | as Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle from the Priestess of Isis |                                     |
| 1879/80  | as Cleopatra's Deadly Resolve in the Temple of Isis                      |                                     |
|  | as Cleopatra After the Battle of Actium                                  |                                     |
| 1880   | Athyrtis...  |                                     |
| 1880   | as The Dismissal of Hagar  | The second of two possible showings |
| 1880   | Princess Scheherezada  | The first of two showings           |
| 1881   | as The Three Valkyrie Maidens...   | The first of five possible showings |
| 1881   | ?as A Dancing Girl   | The first of two possible showings  |
| 1881   | ?as An Eastern Dancing Girl  | The second of two possible showings |
| 1881   | Shatucha, the Bedouin Girl   |                                     |
| DATE   | TITLE  | ?EXHIBITED MORE THAN ONCE           |
| 1882   | Dr George Wyld   | Never exhibited                     |
| 1882   | title unknown: a "single figure"   | Yes; not sure how many times        |

|               |  |  |
|---------------|--|--|
| 1882 showings | as Semiramide  | The first of three                               |
| 1882          | Mariamne   | The first of two showings                        |
| 1882          | Mariamne   | The second of two showings                       |
| 1882          | Morning Effect   |  |
| 1882-85       | John the Baptist   | Never exhibited                                  |
| mid-1883      | Dr Ginsburg  | Never exhibited                                  |
| 1883          | Enchantress  | The first of two or even three possible showings |
| 1883          | Fair Slave Enees-el-Jelees   |  |
| 1883          | Lorelei...   | The first of showings                            |
| 1883          | Semiramis  | The second and third of three showings           |
| 1883 showings | Valkyries  | The second of five possible                      |
| 1883          | Abd-el-Rahman  |  |
| 1883-84       | Greek Captive with her Nubian Slave  |  |
| 1884          | Eureka! Eureka!  |  |
| 1884          | A Dream of Hermes  |  |
| 1884          | St John the Baptist  | Never exhibited                                  |
| 1884          | [Mahatma] Morya  | Probably never exhibited                         |
| 1884          | Nature and Art   |  |
| 1884          | Valkyries (full title)   | The third and fourth of five possible showings   |
| 1884          | The Veiling of Isis  |  |
| 1884          | Fireside Harmony   |  |
| 1885          | Enchantress  | The second of two or three possible showings     |
| 1885          | Portrait   |  |
| 1885          | The Sorceress  |  |
|               | If this is also known as 'the Enchantress' it's the third of three possible showings |  |
| 1885          | as Portrait of Miss Mary Tynte Potter  | The first of two showings                        |
| 1885          | "Trust her not..."   |  |
| 1886          | Strada Tiberio   |  |
| 1886          | Villa Pompeiana  |  |
| 1886          | as The Valkyrie Maidens  | The fifth of five showings                       |
| 1886          | The Lost Pleiad...   |  |
| 1886          | An Odalisque: Cairo  |  |

| DATEONCE     | TITLE   | ?EXHIBITED MORE THAN         |
|------------------|---|------------------------------|
| 1886             | A Lonely Beggar in a Lonely Road: Capri               |                              |
| 1887             | The Fairy Syren (sic) of the Water Lilies             |                              |
| 1887             | Harmonia  |                              |
| 1887             | ...Impression du Voyage                               |                              |
| 1887             | First Blossom of Spring: Almond Blossom, Capri, Italy |                              |
| 1887             | A Legend of the Soul...                               |                              |
| 1887             | Portrait of Romola Tynte                              | The second of two showings   |
| 1887             | Old Court Daventry Northamptonshire                   |                              |
| 1887             | The Rock Syren (sic) Singing the Storm Song           |                              |
| 1887             | Head of Beatrice                                      |                              |
| by 1888          | portrait Mabel Collins                                |                              |
| by 1888          | portrait Patience Sinnett                             |                              |
| by 1888/89       | as Phaedra (no long title)                            | The first of two showings    |
| by 1888/89       | Spirit of the Crystal                                 | The first of two showings    |
| 1888             | Celebration of the Mysteries                          |                              |
| 1889             | The Flight of Aurora                                  |                              |
|                  | For a different version of this, see 1893             |                              |
| 1889             | The First Blush of Spring - Capri                     |                              |
| 1890             | The Sunny South...                                    |                              |
| 1890             | Phaedra (long title)                                  | The second of two showings   |
| 1891             | A Summer Song...                                      |                              |
| 1891showings | A Garland of Roses                                    | The first of three           |
| 1891             | Spirit of the Crystal                                 | The second of two showings   |
| 1892             | Au Jardin Hotel du Cygne...                           |                              |
| 1892             | A Garland of Roses                                    | The second of three showings |
| 1892             | A Song of the Greek Isles                             |                              |
| 1892             | Princess Scheherazade                                 | The second of two showings   |
| 1892             | An Avenging Angel                                     |                              |

|         |  |                             |
|---------|--|-----------------------------|
| 1892    | Andromeda Abandoned  |                             |
| 1892    | Daffodils  |                             |
| 1892    | Toadstool  |                             |
| 1893    | The Flight of Aurora   |                             |
|         | Definitely not the same painting as the one exhibited 1889   |                             |
| 1893    | The Chariot of Venus   |                             |
| by 1894 | Spirit of the East Wind also known as Ghoul of the Shipwreck |                             |
|         | Not exhibited as far as I know                               |                             |
| 1894    | A Garland of Roses   | The third of three showings |
| 1894    | Lavinia  |                             |
| 1895    | Lorelei (full title)   | The second of two showings  |

Then nothing until:

|         |  |  |
|---------|--|--|
| 1901    | Sunset in the Marshes, Rhos Neigr Anglesea |  |
| 1901    | The Rose Garden, Clarens Lake Geneva       |  |
| 1910-17 | as Castles in the Air                      |  |

AN EXTRA LIST of paintings sold at auction in recent decades, with titles I didn't recognise.

Until I have evidence to the contrary, I'm assuming that they are in the list above, but with the original titles Isabel gave them when she exhibited them or referred to them in Memorabilia. It's even possible, I guess, that two of them, or even all four, are the same painting!

DANCING GIRL RESTING

DANCING QUEEN 1888

PORTRAIT OF GIRL IN EASTERN COSTUME

RESTING GRECIAN GIRL DANCER

According to details in the various sales catalogues, Isabel had signed all the paintings – as she usually did – though only the painting called 'dancing queen' was dated. I found the sales details on the web but there were no pictures.

FINALLY, ISABEL'S ILLUSTRATION WORK

There's very little of it - it did not chime with the view Isabel had of herself as a painter of 'high art' subjects (scripture, literature, myth, historical events) in a 'high art' style. The illustrations she did do were, I think, favours for friends. Two were reproductions of works Isabel had already exhibited as full-size paintings.

1885: 3rd edition of Chandos Leigh Hunt's Private Instructions on the Science and Art of Organic Magnetism by Chandos Leigh Hunt (later Wallace). Published London: G Wilson. Isabel's illustrations don't appear in either of the first two editions.

Thanks are due to Vivienne Roberts and Leslie Price of the College of Psychic Studies, who told me about the book and Isabel's contribution to its 3rd edition.

1894: three illustrations to editions of the occult magazine Unknown World:

Avenging Angel

Spirit of the Crystal

Spirit of the East Wind

1902: frontispiece to A Book of Mystery and Vision, poems by A E Waite. Published London: Philip Wellby 1902, limited edition of 250 copies. Isabel chose to illustrate the poem on p12. Roger Wright found the book on the web via archive.org and you can see Isabel's illustration there; but actual copies of the original book are very rare - the only one we could locate in the UK was at Cambridge University, not even the British Library had one.

SALLY DAVIS

Copyright 18 September 2017

Contact me about this list especially if you think you own one of the art works on it:

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER'S ART WORKS    ALPHABETICAL BY TITLE

AUGUST 2017: comments and introduction by Sally Davis.

As at August 2017, no paintings known to be by Isabel are in a public art collection, even hidden away in a basement. I found details in the web pages of some auction houses of a handful of paintings including photographs of two; none of them had titles I recognised from my research elsewhere. They must be in private collections somewhere. I imagine they are in the list below, where they've got the titles Isabel gave them. But of course I couldn't be sure even if I could see them! And Isabel didn't help her own cause by slightly changing the title of a painting she was going to exhibit for a second time. Isabel mentions some of her paintings and some drawings in her Memorabilia, but not very many – when I started going through the usual art history sources, I was surprised at the number of exhibited paintings I was finding. But in most cases I've no idea whether they were sold; and in all cases I don't know where they are now. Some at least will have been destroyed, including all the unsold and half-finished works Isabel put into store in a warehouse in the summer of 1900.

Details in the list below are, consequently, rather limited. Fortunately, Isabel very often found inspiration for her paintings in literature, mythology and – increasingly – the western Mystery tradition, so in some cases I can at least guess what they were about; though not what they looked like. Isabel's art training and her views on art and the 'isms' of her day are in separate files.

Isabel usually signed and dated her paintings.

ART WORKS IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER

ABD-EL-RAHMAN

Exhibited 1883; Birmingham.

I thought this might depict a character from the 1001 Nights; but he wasn't in any of the lists of characters that I could find on google.

*

ANDROMEDA ABANDONED

Exhibited 1892; Liverpool

*

ATHYRTIS

Full title: Athyrtis Divine Daughter of Sesostris, Showing Herself at the Gate of the Temple.

An oil painting. Exhibited 1880: Royal Albert Hall London with the full title.

It caught the eye of a reviewer from the Building News and Engineering Journal who was probably at the exhibition to focus on the architectural drawings. In The Building News and Engineering Journal volume 38 1880 p360 he described it as a “decorative, classically-rendered figure”.

Google's first responses were all etymological: athyrtis is a genus of butterflies. However google also came up with three pharaohs whose names go into Greek as Sesostris. At www.britannica.com there was an entry for Sesostris III, 12th dynasty, reigned 1836-1818BC. What's more relevant is where Isabel might have read about such a pharaoh. I came up with two. One from Isabel's school-days:

Ancient History, Containing the History of the Egyptians, Assyrians... from Rollin and Other Sources. London: Religious Tract Society 1842 p72 in the section History of the Egyptians there's a reference to an account of Sesostris (probably III) by Diodorus, who wrote that Athyrtis acted as priestess for her father and foretold his successful military conquests.

And another published much closer to the date of the painting, though only in the USA:

Israel in Egypt: Egypt's Place Among the Ancient Monarchies by Edward Lord Clark. New York: New York Methodist Book Concern 1874. On p323 in the section The Exodus, another reference to Diodorus' account of Sesostris, with Athyrtis described as "versed in divination", like so many who were learned in the "mysterious arts". This would have appealed to Isabel.

*

AU JARDIN HOTEL DU CYGNE MONTREUX

An oil painting. Exhibited 1892; Birmingham.

*

This one caused me a lot of confusion until I realised that Isabel painted at least two versions of this classical subject, one in oils and one in pastels.

AURORA CLOTHED WITH THE DAWN also known as THE FLIGHT OF AURORA; and as AURORA AT DAWN in Memorabilia p110 where Isabel confessed that she couldn't remember what title she'd originally given it! She'd also forgotten that she had ever exhibited it. By p112 she'd remembered it as Aurora Clothed with the Dawn.

Assuming the pictures were identical except in the kind of paints used, on Memorabilia p112 Isabel described them both as "a nude figure, half-veiled, draped by the passing clouds". A friend told her Aurora looked as though she was sitting in "a nice soft pink and blue arm-chair". Isabel didn't have much of a sense of humour and she couldn't see the funny side of that.

The pastel painting which (Memorabilia p112) she thought of as a "replica". Exhibited 1889; Liverpool. It was for sale but I think was not sold.

The oil painting. Exhibited 1893; Birmingham as The Flight of Aurora.

The oil version was kept by Isabel until 1900 (Memorabilia p110) when it was destroyed in the warehouse fire. The pastel version she still had with her when she was working on Memorabilia after World War I (Memorabilia p112).

Isabel called the Aurora painting "a picture after my own heart"; perhaps she saw herself, in Aurora.

*

AVENGING ANGEL

Pastel. Exhibited 1892 as "an avenging angel" and described as a "watercolour drawing"; Liverpool.

This painting was also reproduced (in black-and-white) in Unknown World volume 1 1894.

Google came back with a snippet including the words 'the avenging angel' apparently in H. P. Blavatsky: Collected Writings Volume VI 1883-85. Compiled by Boris de Zirkoff.

Published Los Angeles: Blavatsky Writings Publication Fund 1954. Neither the phrase nor the individual words were in the index and I couldn't find it in the text. However, perhaps it was in there somewhere. If so, it might indicate the period in which Isabel was working on her painting of that name.

*

...BASKING IN HEAVEN'S SERENEST LIGHT

An oil painting. Exhibited 1874; Liverpool.

Isabel's title is the first line of a two-line quotation attached to the painting, the second line continuing: Those Groups of Lovely Palm Trees Bright.

The quote is from Lalla Rookh: An Oriental Romance by Thomas Moore 1779-1852. Published 1817.

*

BEATRICE see HEAD OF BEATRICE

*

portrait of Helena Petrovna BLAVATSKY

See MORYA but as far as I know, Isabel never painted Blavatsky's portrait.

*

CASTLES IN THE AIR, originally THE LADY OF ILLUSION

An oil painting. Worked on between 1910 and 1917; possibly later. Probably exhibited 1926: Liverpool.

Just in case there was any doubt, confirmation of Isabel as the painter: on the same piece of paper, torn at the right-hand end, on which the date "1910..." is written in Isabel's handwriting: "Painted by Isabelle de [Steiger missing from right-hand end]". To the Lady's left, Isabel has painted her GD motto 'Alta peto'.

Its long gestation period is confirmed by two of the pieces of paper Isabel stuck to the back of the painting when she was preparing it to be exhibited. Both are in Isabel's handwriting. One is torn at the right-hand end of all the lines; it says "1910 to 191". The other gives a clear date of "1917".

In Memorabilia pp219-220 Isabel said that she was working on Castles in the Air at the same time as she was beginning Memorabilia; that is (p1) about 1910-1912; and that (p219) she was still working on it in 1925. She thought of it as a reminder of what she could have achieved if she had concentrated on painting and not chosen to "follow many interests". However, the painting is full of mystical symbolism and Isabel also chose to paint in her GD motto - 'Alta peto' - to her left (the viewer's right) so Castles is also a summing-up of all that she had learned of the western esoteric tradition.

The two titles, only the second of which was used by Isabel in Memorabilia:

1) "The Lady of Illusion, from the Greek Pilgrim's Progress." Isabel didn't use this title when she was writing about the painting in Memorabilia. However, she wrote it on a piece of paper stuck to the back of the frame, with her last address (42 Hawarden Avenue Liverpool) and a price £150. So at some point she was thinking of exhibiting the painting with that title. As at August 2017 I still haven't found a copy of the 1926 exhibition catalogue, to check it out.

I went in search of references to a "Lady of Illusion" and to identify the Greek Pilgrim's Progress.

At archive.org I found Cornell University's copy of The Greek Pilgrim's Progress, Generally Known as 'The Picture'; by "Kebes, a disciple of Sokrates?". Wisdom of the Ancients "Volume First". Published Philadelphia: Comparative Literature Press of the Montsavat Press of 1501 North Marshall Street. Privately printed and published London: Leizac and Co of 46 Great Russell Street. This was a translation of a translation, rendered into English c 1910, by Kenneth Sylvan Guthrie, from a German translation of the original Greek, published by B G Teubner of Leipzig. I could not see the actual words 'lady of illusion' in the text but I might have missed it in the Gothic script that was used. The work certainly seems to be about the dangers to those trying to follow the path of hermeticism; most of which are personified in the text as seductive women, the Pilgrim being a man (and thus easily led astray).

2) Castles in the Air, which Isabel wrote on a 'with care' label and stuck to the back of the painting; again with the price of £150 and her Hawarden Avenue address. The label was signed off on behalf of Jackson and Sons, picture framers, of Liverpool. So the painting may have been exhibited with this title.

Being an Ibsen fan I immediately associated 'castles in the air' with a conversation from The Master Builder. However, Ben Fernee of Caduceus Books suggested in an email of 29 May 2017 that the phrase has a much longer history in the occult, including an appearance in a book Ben thinks Isabel would certainly have known about: Dr. Herbert Silberer's Problems of Mysticism and Its Symbolism, which Ben describes (I haven't read it, of course!) as being "about alchemical symbolism".

Silberer's book was published in German in 1914: Probleme der Mystik und ihrer Symbolik. Isabel could have read it in the original language, of course, but an English translation by Smith Ely Jelliffe was published as Problems of Mysticism and its Symbolism in New York: Moffat Yard and Co and London: Kegan Paul in 1917. According to Silberer's wikipedia page, the work takes as its starting point the Rosicrucian text known as the Parabola Allegory. Silberer was a psychoanalyst, and he was arguing in the book that Freudian psychoanalysis can only go so far in interpreting dreams and understanding creativity. Though Freud and his followers rejected that idea, it was taken up later by Jung; and Isabel would have agreed with it.

Provenance

Nothing is known about what happened to Castles in the Air in the decades after Isabel sent it to the R Jackson and Sons to be framed. I can't yet confirm that it was in the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition of 1926; and even if I could, I wouldn't be able to tell whether anyone bought it.

Castles finally reappeared in 1997 when it was sold at Bonhams and bought by a collector in South London. Ben Fernee sold it on in 2005 to an art lover in Wiltshire. By this time the painting was in a bad state of repair, and the 2005 buyer paid for a great deal of conservation work to be done on it so many thanks to him. He, however, decided to part with Castles early in 2017; and I bought it from him in May 2017, with Ben Fernee acting as agent so thanks to Ben as well.

Sources for the provenance:

Sale in 1997: snippet including a pre-sale list at www.bonhams.com/auct/a970909

Its buyer in 1997: email from Ben Fernee 12 May 2017 giving the buyer's name, and the buyer's recollection of buying it at auction though he couldn't remember quite when.

Its buyer in 2005 and the conservation work: documents including a CD of conservation procedures, passed to the current owner May 2017.

Its buyer in 2017: Ben Fernee's invoice stamped 'paid' May 2017.

Castles in the Air is still in its original frame – oak, ornately carved and with some of the gilding still in place. The work was done for Isabel by R Jackson and Sons. The firm still exists, though it has moved down the road from 3 Slater Street (where it the firm was founded in 1866) to 20 Slater Street Liverpool 1. Its website is at www.rjacksonandsons.co.uk

*

portrait of CHRISTIAN DAVID GINSBURG see Ginsburg

*

1888

CELEBRATION OF THE MYSTERIES

Exhibited 1888; Liverpool.

*

CHARIOT OF VENUS

An oil painting. Exhibited 1893; Birmingham.

*

the CLEOPATRA paintings, which have been a real headache!

Firstly, independent evidence that there were FOUR of them: Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 p143: a short report which seems to be referring to the current exhibition at the Walker Art Gallery, saying that Isabel had "just sold the last of four Cleopatra pictures". It also mentioned two other paintings with classical subjects that Isabel was working on; but didn't mention the titles so I've no idea which they were.

Exhibited as CLEOPATRA'S DEADLY RESOLVE IN THE TEMPLE OF ISIS

1879; Royal Society of British Artists London.

Exhibited as CLEOPATRA RECEIVING AN UNFAVOURABLE ORACLE FROM THE PRIESTESS OF ISIS which I think Isabel later refers to as CLEOPATRA BEFORE THE BATTLE OF ACTIUM – see below.

1879; Liverpool

Exhibited as CLEOPATRA PERSONATING (sic) THE GODDESS ISIS

1879; Royal Albert Hall London.

Its full title was used in a review of the RAH exhibition in Bazaar Exchange and Mart and Journal of the Household volumes 20-21 1879 p81 in which the reporter recommended readers to look out for it especially. Building News and Engineering Journal volume 38 1880 p360 also printed the full title in its RAH exhibition review.

Exhibited as CLEOPATRA. I'm wondering if Isabel sent this one with a full title; but the Gallery left most of it out when preparing the catalogue. 1880; Manchester.

Referred to by Isabel as CLEOPATRA BEFORE THE BATTLE OF ACTIUM on Memorabilia p278 where she says it was exhibited at the Walker Art Gallery and bought in 1880. So this must be Isabel calling by another name the painting exhibited as CLEOPATRA RECEIVING AN UNFAVOURABLE ORACLE... at the Walker in 1879. Calling the painting CLEOPATRA BEFORE THE BATTLE OF ACTIUM on Memorabilia p278, Isabel says it was bought by her great friends William and Fanny Crosfield; for its catalogue price of £70. In due course it was inherited by their daughter Dora and was still on display in the Crosfields' house when Isabel was finishing Memorabilia after World War I. However, Dora died unmarried in 1926 and I don't know what happened to this Cleopatra afterwards. The Crosfields also bought Isabel's The Lorelei Maiden...

On p58 of Memorabilia Isabel mentions a painting called Cleopatra after the Battle of Actium – making five Cleopatras in all! I'm sure this was just a slip-up by Isabel that her editors, if she had any, didn't notice: the other details in the same paragraph make it clear she means CLEOPATRA BEFORE THE BATTLE OF ACTIUM.

Mentions of one or the other of the four, just as 'Cleopatra'.

- Memorabilia p58, a painting referred to by Isabel only as 'Cleopatra' and – she recalls – exhibited probably in 1879. Which is fine except that she exhibited two that year. This is the source for Isabel's early admiration for the style of Alma-Tadema.

- The Academy volume 18 1880 number 437 issue of 18 September 1880 p209 which included Isabel's painting catalogued as 'Cleopatra' in its list of "notable pictures" currently on view at the exhibition at the Royal Manchester Institution. Also in the list were G F Watts' Psyche; Burne-Jones' The Music Lesson; and R Spencer Stanhope's The Waters of Lethe; so the 'Cleopatra' - whichever one it was - was in good company.

- The Architect volume 23 1880: p19. Having seen the reference in a Google snippet I ordered the magazine at the British Library. The page-numbering was completely impenetrable: all I know is that p19 did not have anything about a work by Isabel or indeed anything about an art exhibition. The magazine's full title is: The Architect: A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Art, Civil Engineering and Building. Volume 23 covered January-June 1880 so I think the reference – wherever it actually was in the book – was to the 'Cleopatra' shown at Manchester.

I think, for a brief period, the Cleopatra paintings made Isabel almost-famous. I found a reference to them inspiring some poetry: Public Opinion volumes 41-42 1882 p490 mentions poems written after the writer had been (quoting the magazine) "viewing pictures of...Cleopatra". Public Opinion's reporter assumes that the poet means "Madame de Steiger's celebrated pictures".

The poet in question was Henry George Hellon, about whom I haven't found out much: he isn't in ODNB or DNB, Who Was Who or Boase; and there's no wikipedia page. He does appear in the two main reference works I use when chasing Victorian poets:

Mid-Victorian Poetry 1880-1899: An Annotated Biobibliography compiled by Catherine W Reilly. London and New York: Mansell 2000 p216 has one volume by Henry George Hellon: Lord Harrie and Leila: or, a Romance of the Isle of Wight, and Other Poems.

London: Provost and Co 1869.

Late Victorian Poetry 1880-1899: An Annotated Biobibliography compiled by Catherine W Reilly. London and New York: Mansell 1994 p219 another one volume by Henry George Hellon, now listed as a member of the Authors' Club. Daphnis: A Sicilian Pastoral, and Other Poems. London: Kegan Paul Trench and Co 1881.

Daphnis: A Sicilian Pastoral, and Other Poems. London: Kegan Paul Trench and Co 1881. The designs on the front and back cover are Egyptian/esoteric. There are two long poems, the second of which is called The Seer: A Prophetic Poem (pp25-41) which would have interested Isabel if she had known about it. Most of the other poems are sonnets, including on p76: Sonnet on Viewing a Picture of Cleopatra:

In Isis' temple sits the mighty Queen,
Draped in a gown of gossamer and gold,
Through which her lovely form, fair to behold,
Peers, sweet as peers the moon through silver sheen
When misty vapours veil the fairy scene!
Yet o'er her brow some mystery seems to fold,
And in her eyes her future fate foretold;
With anger burning, passionate her mien!

Her dreams of death, of Antony, and all
The splendour of the past! her glory gone,
And throne a wreck, where monarch feigned to fall;
Her chiefs and army lost, her power undone!
Seized with despair, she deigns not God to call,
But, woe-worn, seeks a death her legions shun!

Hellon must have seen one of the two 'priestess of Isis' Cleopatras.

*

THE COMING SQUALL - MEDITERRANEAN - RAMLE EGYPT
Oil painting. Exhibited 1874; Liverpool.

*

CONSUELO

Exhibited 1878; Society of Women Artists London.

Despite sounding like a genre picture of a Spanish girl, possibly playing a tambourine, this is actually a one of Isabel's many paintings with a literary source; and also one of her paintings featuring the Mysteries. In Memorabilia Isabel mentions the novel of that name by George Sand several times as one of her favourites when she was a girl in Liverpool. On p11 she describes its male protagonist Albert of Rudolstadt as one of the hero-figures of her adolescence. On p34 she wonders how she managed to get a copy of a novel by an author whose works were considered immoral. And on pp133-134 she talks of her excitement at the novel's depiction of a "mysterious Underground Grotto"; and the "powerful secret order", known only by the initials "L.P.D.", of which Albert of Rudolstadt was the head. "It was the mystery that enthralled me", Isabel commented in Memorabilia but perhaps the novel also made Isabel receptive to the idea that secret organisations might exist in real life.

Sources:

Wikipedia on George Sand's Consuelo: A Romance of Venice, whose popularity had declined by the late 19th century. It first appeared in 1842-43, serialised in La Revue Indépendante. The British Library catalogue has the first English translation, published in 1847 as volumes 4 and 5 in the Parlour Library series. I think this must be the edition Isabel read; on Memorabilia p134 she mentioned that she was already very familiar with its plot by the time she was 14 – around 1850.

*

DAFFODILS

Exhibited 1892; Liverpool.

As with the Cleopatras so too with the dancing girls, there are rather too many of them!!

*

DANCING GIRL

Exhibited 1881; Royal Society of British Artists London.

Probably exhibited again later in 1881 as THE EASTERN DANCING GIRL; Liverpool.

It's possible that this is the painting sold in 1980 as Egyptian Slave Girl, which had the date "1881" on it, in Isabel's handwriting.

*

Painting sold in 1985 with the title DANCING GIRL RESTING

At artsalesindex.artinfo.com is the Blouin Art Sales Index. In the index are details of a painting by Isabel sold with that title as lot 50 at Christie's South Kensington in July 1905. There was no photograph of the painting in question; but these details were there: oil on canvas; 53cm high by 33cm wide.

I suppose it's quite likely that 'dancing girl resting' is the painting or paintings I've listed immediately above: Isabel's Dancing Girl and/or Eastern Dancing Girl exhibited 1881. Without knowing how big the 1881 painting or paintings were, I can't be sure.

See also the painting or paintings sold as Dancing Queen sold in 1997 and Resting Grecian Girl Dancer in 1988 which might be the same one.

*

Painting sold in 1997 as DANCING QUEEN making it sound like something by Abba and I'm also sure queens didn't dance in Isabel's imagination, they sat on a throne and watched.

It's definitely not Isabel's 'dancing girl' of 1881. Its details were also at artsalesindex.artinfo.com, the Blouin Art Sales Index though again without a photograph: signed on the back by Isabel and dated by her 1888; oil on panel; 60cm high by 33cm wide. In 1997 it was lot 286 in a sale at Christie's South Kensington. I don't feel comfortable equating it with any other painting by Isabel that I know of, despite knowing the original exhibition date.

*

DAUGHTER OF THE GODS

Exhibited twice in 1879: Society of Women Artists London, and Liverpool.

*

The DISMISSAL OF HAGAR

see Hagar in the Desert. I'm fairly sure this is the same painting as Hagar in the Desert. I'm certainly going to treat it as such so see below for further information.

*

EASTERN DANCING GIRL

Exhibited 1881; Liverpool.

This was probably its second showing. I think it is the same painting as the one Isabel exhibited as THE DANCING GIRL at the Royal Society of British Artists London.

*

Painting sold in 1980 as EGYPTIAN SLAVE GIRL

This was another item I discovered at artsalesindex.artinfo.com, the Blouin Art Sales Index: signed by Isabel; dated 1881; oil on panel; 25cm high by 40 cm wide. Again, there was no photograph of it. It was sold as lot 3013 at Sloan's Auctioneers North Bethesda, Maryland.

The date of 1881 makes it possible that this was Isabel's 'Dancing girl' and/or 'Eastern Dancing Girl' (see above) but without knowing the dimensions of that painting or paintings I can't be sure.

*

A DREAM OF HERMES

Exhibited 1884; Liverpool.

*

THE ENCHANTRESS

An oil painting.

Exhibited twice with that title: 1883 in Liverpool; 1885 at the Royal Hibernian Dublin.

Probably exhibited 1885 as The Sorceress; Nineteenth Century Art Society London. Of course, The Sorceress may be a completely different picture; but I think not.

Although I haven't seen The Enchantress, it's clear even from its title that Isabel had chosen to paint a subject much liked by her contemporaries. Those by Waterhouse and Sandys are particularly well-known. As The Enchantress, Isabel's painting was coveted by GD member Frederick Leigh Gardner. In a letter to him written in November 1897, Isabel mentions Gardner's wish to own The Enchantress one day. The way she phrases it, it sounds as though the painting had been bought, probably at its showing as The Sorceress.

Source: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - letters to Frederick Leigh Gardner by various GD members. Letter from Isabel de Steiger dated 11 November [1897].

As The Sorceress it received a half-a-sentence from a reviewer in the Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art published by J W Parker and Son. Volume 60 1885 p612 described The Sorceress thus. While admitting that the painting had “merit”, the reviewer did not like Isabel’s brushwork, saying, “the flesh...is hard and crude, and the detail full of ill-distributed accents”.

*

EUREKA! EUREKA!

An oil painting. Exhibited 1884; Manchester.

*

The EVENING MEAL RAMLE EGYPT

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1875; Liverpool.

*

The FAIRY SYREN (sic) OF THE WATER LILIES

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1887; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

FIRESIDE HARMONY

Watercolour drawing.

Exhibited 1884; Birmingham.

*

FAIR SLAVE ENEES-EL-JELEES

Exhibited 1883; Royal Scottish Academy Edinburgh.

It was exhibited as a character from the 1001 Nights. I couldn’t find it listed when I checked with google but that was probably because of the way Isabel spelled it.

*

FLIGHT OF AURORA

See AURORA above.

*

FIRST BLUSH OF SPRING: ALMOND BLOSSOM, CAPRI, ITALY

Exhibited 1887 with this title; Society of Women Artists London.

Exhibited 1889 with the shortened title THE FIRST BLUSH OF SPRING CAPRI; Liverpool.

*

GARLAND OF ROSES

Variouly described as a pastel or a watercolour.

Exhibited 1891 as pastel; Liverpool.

Exhibited 1892 as watercolour; Birmingham.

Exhibited 1894; Royal Hibernian Dublin.

*

Portrait of CHRISTIAN DAVID GINSBURG, not the ideal sitter.

Memorabilia p169: this was a charcoal drawing and Isabel was working on it in mid-1883. I think it was of his head and perhaps his shoulders only because Isabel mentions how difficult she found both the head – its “unclassical” form - and the fact that Ginsburg would keep talking and not keep his face still. She doesn’t say what happened to the drawing but I would suppose it was one of the many that she did for her friends and gave to them as gifts. I haven’t found any evidence that it was exhibited.

See my life-by-dates around mid-1883 for more information on Ginsburg, a Jewish convert to Christianity who was employed as a translator of Hebrew texts.

*

GREEK CAPTIVE AND HER NUBIAN SLAVE

An oil painting. Exhibited 1884: Institute of Painters in Oil Colours London.

This might be the same painting as the Slave Queen Zumurrud; probably not, but see separate entry.

Memorabilia p131 Isabel writes that she sold a painting after it had been shown at what she calls the “Royal Institute”. I think she means what had originally been the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, which had taken the name it’s still known by – the Royal Institute of Oil Painters – in 1909. Isabel doesn’t name the painting, but it must be Greek Captive..., the only one she exhibited at this particular venue.

*

HAGAR IN THE DESERT and assuming THE DISMISSAL OF HAGAR is the same painting.

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1875 as Hagar in the Desert; Liverpool

If they are not two paintings, exhibited 1880 as The Dismissal of Hagar: Royal Albert Hall London.

Isabel was setting herself up against some impressive opposition in taking on Hagar. There is, for example, a ‘Hagar in the Desert’ by Rubens, now in Dulwich Picture Gallery, and there are other paintings with slight variations on Rubens’ phrase by other great painters.

And similarly with ‘The Dismissal of Hagar’ which seems to be the more popular title. See //commons.wikipedia.org/wiki/Category:Paintings\_of\_the\_Ddismissal\_of\_Hagar examples by Tiepolo, Claude Lorraine, Pietro da Cortina, Gabriel Metsu, and earlier ones from Renaissance Northern Europe where the subject was particularly in vogue.

Isabel does not mention this painting/these paintings in Memorabilia. Perhaps she had forgotten it or them. However, I know of only one other painting by Isabel on a biblical theme, and I think she may have realised that with Hagar she had bitten off more than she could chew in terms of 'great' art portrayed in the 'great' way.

*

HARMONIA

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1887; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

HEAD OF BEATRICE

A study in charcoal and red chalk.

Exhibited 1887; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

Was this a portrait? Maybe not. There are two literary characters it could be: Shakespeare's Beatrice from Much Ado About Nothing; or Dante's Beatrice from The Divine Comedy, his guide to the Purgatorio and the Paradiso. If it was a portrait, I haven't been able to identify the sitter. I don't know of a Beatrice in Isabel's family or amongst her friends.

September 2017: I think that the painting sold as ?Portrait of Madame Blavatska might actually be this one.

*

...IMPRESSION DU VOYAGE

I think this was the same painting exhibited twice in the same year, once with a longer title, once with the shorter one. If that's correct, it was an oil painting.

Exhibited 1887 as L'Amour de la Nuit - La Lune - Sur La Terrasse de l'Hotel: Impression du Voyage; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

Exhibited 1887; Liverpool.

*

JOHN THE BAPTIST

I think this was almost certainly an oil painting, though I can't prove it. Biblical subjects were 'great' art and 'great' art required oils.

As John the Baptist was never exhibited, I can only date it approximately. On Memorabilia pp177-178 Isabel writes that she was working on the painting in her Holland Park Road studio. Exhibition catalogues list her at that address in 1882, 1883 and the early part of 1884; but she had moved away by autumn 1884.

Memorabilia p177 says that Helena Petrovna Blavatsky visited her while she was working on John the Baptist and pointed out a doctrinal error in it: she reminded Isabel that the Baptist was a Nazar, so he should have long hair. Isabel had painted him with short hair but after Blavatsky left, she repainted the hair, longer. She describes the painting as "a life-size male head". Her model for it was an Italian man who was very pleased with the lunch of macaroni Isabel gave him while he was working for her. Obviously homesick, he asked her where you could buy macaroni in London.

On Memorabilia p177 Isabel says that she gave the painting to the Rev Elcum, vicar of St Agnes, Ullet Road Liverpool. The church was consecrated in 1885; Rev Charles Cunningham Elcum was its first incumbent and remained in charge until his retirement in August 1927. In fact it's likely that Isabel didn't even know Rev Elcum until she moved back to Liverpool in 1891; so I'd say the painting was being worked on in the mid-1890s. I also assume that Isabel painted it for him, and that he may even have commissioned it from her.

A warning about Memorabilia p177: Isabel spelled the Rev's name wrong, as ElcRum, which led me on a wild goose chase when I set out to identify him.

Information on Rev C C Elcum at www.stagnes.org website of St Agnes and St Pancras Liverpool. He's buried in Toxteth Park cemetery, see www.toxtethparkcemeteryinscriptions.co.uk. His tombstone gives the dates he was in-post at St Agnes. Census and other information indicates that he never married and had no close relations; so where Isabel's John the Baptist went after his death is anyone's guess.

*

L'AMOUR DE LA NUIT...

See Impression du Voyage

*

LADY OF ILLUSION see CASTLES IN THE AIR

*

LAVINIA

Exhibited 1894; Royal Hibernian Dublin.

*

A LEGEND OF THE SOUL - PERSEPHONE SINKING INTO THE ABYSS OF HADES

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1887; Liverpool, with a very long quotation from a work purporting to be by Hermes Trismegistus: "Persephone, wilfully straying from the Mansions of Heaven, falls under the power of the Hadean God, in other words Persephone typifying the Soul sinks into the profound depths of a material nature".

A painting inspired by the occult work of Isabel's close friend Anna Bonus Kingsford.

At www.philalethians.co.uk you can read the full text of The Hermetic Works of the Virgin of the World of Hermes Mercurius Trismegistus translated and with introduction and notes by Dr Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland, authors of The Perfect Way. 1885 Bath: Bath Occult Reprint Series, run by Robert H Fryar who also does an introduction to the book.

*

a LONELY BEGGAR IN A LONELY ROAD: CAPRI

Exhibited 1886; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

LORELEI MAIDEN...

Exhibited 1883; Liverpool.

Almost certainly exhibited a second time, this time lent by its owner, Isabel's friend William Crosfield. 1895: Royal Scottish Academy Edinburgh. William and Fanny Crosfield had probably bought the painting in 1883. It had a longer title this time: The Lorelei Maiden Singing to the Fishermen Below.

*

The LOST PLEIAD. BLIND MEROPE - HOPE ABANDONED vide Edwin Arnold.

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1886; Liverpool.

This is one of Isabel's paintings inspired by literature. At poetrynook.com you can read Sir Edwin Arnold's The Lost Pleiad: A Story of the Stars. The poem was included in the 1856 anthology Griselda and Other Poems published by Bogue. The Economist 1856 p538 issue of 17 May 1856 had a review of it.

Googling this painting produced more contemporary references than any other painting by Isabel: that is, more than what was usually none at all!

Via genesreunited to Liverpool Mercury 1 November 1886 where it was mentioned in the Art Notes column. And also via genesreunited to Liverpool Mercury 18 November 1886 which had comments on the Lost Pleiad and on the other painting Isabel showed at the Walker that year: the Valkyrie Maidens. The reviewer's comment on the Lost Pleiad was: "very fanciful in design". Both issues of the paper referred to Isabel by name. NB though you'll need to be careful on the web: Liverpool Mercury of 10 October 1887 referred to another painting called The Lost Pleiad, by William Padgett; catalogue number 266 at the Walker Art Gallery that year.

Via google to The Pall Mall Budget which was a weekly selection of articles previously in the Pall Mall Gazette. PMB volume 33 p83 in an article on the Walker Art Gallery's autumn exhibition: "Miss (sic) Isabel de Steiger's Lost Pleiad (140) is noticeable as the only attempt in the direction of imaginative art in the gallery".

*

portrait of MABEL COLLINS

A painting in pastel.

Exhibited ?1888; Grosvenor Gallery (Memorabilia p159) although I haven't been able to confirm that in the correct exhibition catalogue.

Memorabilia p247-51 both Isabel and Mabel Collins (Mrs Keningale Cook) were friends of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky in the late 1880s/early 1890s. Early volumes of the Theosophical Society journal Lucifer were edited by Mabel who also wrote articles for it.

The website www.katinkahesselink.net has a short biography of Mabel Collins: The Many Lives of Mabel Collins, by Kim Farnell. Here I'll just say that Mabel was born Minna Mabel Collins in 1851 and died in March 1927. She published over 40 full-length works and many articles and was for a time the fashion correspondent of the magazine The World. She married the stockbroker Keningale Robert Cook in 1871 but the two were separated by the time of his death in 1886. Her husband introduced her to spiritualism and in the late 1870s she was known as a spiritualist medium; however, after a few years she rejected spiritualism for theosophy.

Mabel made an important contribution to the acceptance of theosophy in the West with her book Light on the Path:

Light on the Path. A Treatise... Written down by MC, Fellow of the TS. The volume also contained Mabel's essay on Karma. Madras: Scottish Press 1885. Perhaps easier to obtain: London: George Redway 1888.

*

Painting by Isabel sold 2001/2002 as ?MADAME BLAVATSKA

Found with that title at artsalesindex.artinfo.com, the Blouin Art Sales Index . If so, it has the wrong title: the details on the Index say that it was for sale as a portrait of Madame Blavatska and I haven't found any evidence that Isabel ever painted Blavatsky. As ?Madame Blavatska it was lot 242 in a sale of Modern and Contemporary Art at Beaussant et Lefèvre Paris in 2001. Lot 242 was signed by Isabel; dated by Isabel 1887; oil on canvas; 53cm high by 43cm wide.

There are reproductions of the painting sold as Madame Blavatska at www.artnet.com; and on Pinterest; as well as www.auction.fr where the dimensions are slightly different and it's only presumed to be a portrait of Blavatsky. This website gave the asking price – 1220 euros.

The painting probably remained unsold in 2001. The same details as at www.auction.fr are also at www.auctionclub.com where Isabel is described as German and the painting is described as sold by Beaussant-Lefèvre on 19 June 2002.

None of the websites give any indication as to who bought the Madame Blavatska painting in 2002; nor where it is now.

The painting is dated 1887. If Isabel exhibited it that year, the two most likely candidates for its correct title are: Harmonia; and Head of Beatrice. See my life-by-dates for 1885-88 for more on why they seem the most promising identifications.

*

MANSOURS

Exhibited 1877; Royal Hibernian Dublin.

Almost certainly exhibited a second time in 1877; Liverpool. With the alternative title Mansours' Tent. The one shown at Liverpool was an oil painting.

*

MARIAMNE

Almost certainly an oil painting though I didn't find definitive evidence of that. Mariamne was perhaps the most sinister subject Isabel ever painted: she was the wife of Herod, mother of Salome.

Exhibited 1881; Liverpool and 1882: Royal Academy.

On Memorabilia p131 (where it's understandably but wrongly given as 'MariaNne') Isabel said this was the only work she ever got accepted for exhibition at the RA; probably because RA thought she was someone else - she was in the catalogue as "Miss F Steeger". Mariamne was sold, probably from its showing at the RA: on Memorabilia p130: Isabel named the buyer as Warren de la Rue.

See wikipedia for more on Warren de la Rue, son of Thomas, the founder of the bank-note printing firm and his successor as the firm's manager. Until obliged to give it up due to pressure of work, he was a keen amateur astronomer and chemist, a pioneer of astronomical photography. FRAS, FRS, sometime president of the Chemical Society. Légion d'Honneur. And he has a lunar crater named for him.

At www.getty.edu/art brief mention of him as they have some of his astronomical photographs in their collection.

*

Portrait of MISS MARY TYNTE POTTER

See Romola TYNTE

*

MORNING EFFECT

Exhibited 1882; Royal Hibernian Dublin.

*

portrait of Mme Blavatsky's mahatma MORYA

Not exhibited to my knowledge. Commissioned by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky 1884. Sent to Adyar, India, by Isabel 1884 and not heard of since.

Isabel definitely did do such a painting. Blavatsky commissioned it during her visit to England in 1884; together with two more such, one of Morya and one of Koot Hoomi, both of which were painted during June and July 1884 by Hermann Schmiechen. The Schmiechen paintings were sent to Adyar in October 1884 and were on display there for many years. It's not clear what happened to the Morya commissioned from Isabel.

On Memorabilia pp177-179, Isabel says that Colonel Olcott called at her studio to give her a photograph of a black-and-white chalk drawing Blavatsky had done of Morya; which Isabel was to use as the basis for her painting. Isabel added, from memory, an oriental head like those of the Bedouins she had seen in Egypt. When it was finished, she took it round to show Colonel Olcott, who was suitably impressed. She then sent the painting to Adyar; presumably on Blavatsky's instructions. She never heard anything more about it. She kept the photograph of Blavatsky's drawing. It survived the fire of 1900 and eventually she gave it to Joseph Bibby, a member of the Theosophical Society. I haven't found much information on Joseph Bibby but one web page I came across said that he went to Adyar eventually. I'm wondering if Isabel knew he was going, and hoped he would look for her version of Morya there.

Other sources for the commissions of 1884:

Colonel Olcott's diary entry for 15 June 1884, used as source at theosophy.com in an article The Portraits of the Masters Part I, by Daniel Caldwell; uploaded 15 September 2006. Olcott wrote that Isabel had brought round to show him a "remarkable portrait of Mahatma M..." .

The two commissions painted by Schmiechen:

A very basic wiki on Hermann Schmiechen confirms that he painted both Koot Hoomi; and Morya.

Seen at de.wikipedia.org, Hermann Schmiechen's dates: born Neumark July 1885; died Berlin 1925.

Reader's Guide to the Mahatma letters to A P Sinnett editors George E Linton and Virginia Hanson. Published Adyar Chennai India: Theosophical Publishing House 1972: 243-44: confirming the date of the commissions from Schmiechen; that there were two; exactly when he painted them; and what had happened to the finished paintings. There was no mention in this account of the Morya painting done by Isabel.

*

NATURE AND ART

Exhibited 1884; Liverpool.

*

An ODALISQUE: CAIRO

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1886; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

OLD COURT, DAVENTRY, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1887; Nineteenth Century Art Society.

The sketches for this could have been done by Isabel during a visit to her sister Rosamond (sometimes spelled Rosamund). In 1862 Rosamond married solicitor Edmund Charles Burton. They lived in Daventry.

*

ON THE ROAD TO ABOUKIR

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1875; Liverpool.

*

PARADISE AND THE PERI

This is one of very few works Isabel mentions painting after the fire of 1900. On Memorabilia pp290-91 she mentions a group of "imaginative pictures" that she did after the fire. Paradise and the Peri is the only one of the group that she names. She probably singled it out because its buyer was well-known, at least in Liverpool - Mr Style, solicitor and "positivist". Isabel said that he bought it around the time he and his wife Jane May moved into 69 Hope Street; census information shows they were living there in April 1901, so Isabel must have got back to work on her art – even if in only a small way – very soon after the disaster.

A section of Thomas Moore's Lalla Rookh relates the successful attempt of the Peri to get back into Paradise after it had been expelled. See that section of the poem at www.bartleby.com.

Paradise and the Peri's buyer was Sydney Style, a leader – if not the leader – of the positivist group in Liverpool. At <https://journaleahn.org> is the open access journal Architectural Histories. Volume 3(1) article 15, published 2015: On the Material and Immaterial Architecture of Organised Positivism in Britain, by Matthew Wilson, gives some information on the arrival of Comte's Positivism in England, and the designs of the churches of humanity positivists wanted to build. There was a positivist group in Liverpool by 1883, meeting in Faulkland Street though not in a purpose-built building. A Church of Humanity for Liverpool was consecrated in 1913 and is now the St Pius X church.

At liverpoolmurders.blogspot.co.uk a posting from May 2011 says that in the years before their Church of Humanity was built, the Liverpool positivists met at 69 Hope Street.

Sydney and Jane May Style had no biological children of their own but adopted several, some but not all of whom took their surname. I don't know what happened to Paradise and the Peri after Sydney and Jane May died.

*

portrait of MRS PATTERSON

Exhibited 1878; Society of Lady Artists London. It was probably not for sale but my reference work for the SWA didn't specifically say so.

Exhibited again 1879; Royal Albert Hall London where it definitely wasn't for sale.

I'm not certain who Mrs Patterson was but I did find two possible candidates who may actually be the same woman:

Mr and Mrs Patterson: see The Letters of H P Blavatsky to A P Sinnett etc, editor A T Barker, online at www.theosociety.org/pasadena. Letter number 1 was written by Blavatsky in Bombay; there's no date on it but Blavatsky was in Bombay in 1879. She mentions a Mrs and Mr Patterson, friends of the Sinnetts; presumably a couple then living in India. There's no other reference to the couple in the letters.

An American Mrs S E Patterson:

In Mme Blavatsky Revisited by Joseph Howard Tyson. New York, Lincoln, Shanghai: iUniverse 2006. Seen via google and I couldn't find a page number but it contained a reference to a spiritualist medium "Mrs S E Patterson". A Dr Furness attended a seance with her as medium. He admired the theatrical effects used, including a small organ; but was less impressed when the medium channelled two spirits, one German and one Italian, neither of which could speak their supposed native language.

Further investigation of this Mrs Patterson led to wikipedia's page on the Seybert Commission. A Mr Seybert left money to University of Pennsylvania to be used to investigate the claims of spiritualism. The University set up the commission, which was taking evidence between 1884 and 1887, with a final Report published in 1887. Mrs S E Patterson was one of the first mediums the Commission investigated. She was known as medium who used writing on a slate. She couldn't perform at all when members of the Commission were watching her. It could have been worse for her, though - Commission members caught plenty of other mediums being actively fraudulent during seances.

*

Portrait of PATIENCE SINNETT

A painting in pastels.

Exhibited probably late 1888/early 1889: definitely the Grosvenor Gallery London but there was a snag about the identification.

On Memorabilia pp157-59 Isabel writes about the 'at homes' held by Patience and A P Sinnett during the 1880s; she was a regular guest at them. At some point in the 1880s, she did a full-length portrait of Patience in pastels, which she gave to Patience after it had been exhibited. Isabel says it was one of four paintings shown at the same exhibition at the Grosvenor Galleries; where it was not as well hung as she would have liked.

There are two problems with this account of Mrs Sinnett's portrait. Firstly, though I haven't been able to find one of the relevant exhibition catalogues, it looks as though the four pastels were not exhibited all together, as Isabel remembered, but in two separate exhibitions that followed each other quickly around Christmas 1888/New Year 1889. Secondly, in the catalogue I did find, of the second of the two, a portrait by Isabel was certainly shown, but without the name of the sitter; so it could have been Isabel's portrait of Mabel Collins.

*

Persephone - see A LEGEND OF THE SOUL

*

PHAEDRA also known as PHAEDRA MEDITATING ON HER REVENGE

A painting in pastels

Exhibited Grosvenor Gallery London; either late 1888 or early 1889 and I'm not certain whether or not it had its full title.

Exhibited 1890 with the full title; Liverpool

See portrait of Patience Sinnett, above: Phaedra was another of the four pastels Isabel got confused about on Memorabilia p159. Unlike Patience's portrait, Phaedra had been hung to advantage at the exhibition.

Probably while she was working on Phaedra, Isabel was also preparing to give a talk at the London Spiritualist Alliance. The talk was covered in Light, the journal of the British National Association of Spiritualists: volume 9 1889 p610 has a report on a recent meeting of the London Spiritualist Alliance, where Isabel had spoken on Spiritualism Amongst the Poets, mentioning Phaedra by name.

*

PHILAE EGYPT

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1874; Liverpool. With a quote from Lalla Rookh:

The ruined shrines and towers that seem

The relics of a splendid dream.

Lalla Rookh: An Oriental Romance first published 1817 by Thomas Moore (1779-1852).

For the Greco-Egyptian temple complex at Philae, see wikipedia.

Isabel had probably visited Philae, and sketched there, while she and her husband were living in Alexandria in the late 1860s/early 1870s.

*

PORTRAIT

Exhibited 1885; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art published by J W Parker and Son.

Volume 60 1885 p612. A review of the current exhibition at the Nineteenth Century Art Society mentioned both the paintings Isabel was showing: The Sorceress; and something the report simply referred to as 'portrait'. The exhibition catalogue I looked at was no more helpful. It's most likely that the portrait was one shown elsewhere as well, or mentioned by Isabel in Memorabilia; and thus in this list of works. But there's a chance it's a completely different portrait; if it is, I don't know who the sitter might have been.

*

Painting sold in 1992 as PORTRAIT OF GIRL IN EASTERN COSTUME

This painting was said at its sale to be by Isabel, but the information I found didn't say that the painting was signed by Isabel, when she usually did sign her works. The details were at artsalesindex.artinfo.com, the Blouin Art Sales Index. The painting was sold with this title as lot 125 in a sale at Bonhams in 1992: no date either; oil on canvas; 53cm high by 38cm wide. Again, I haven't found a picture on the web of this painting and I don't know where it is now.

*

PRINCESS SCHEHEREZADA

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1880; Liverpool; and again 1892; Manchester.

Another of Isabel's paintings with literary origins.

*

Painting sold 1988 as RESTING GRECIAN GIRL DANCER

An oil painting.

This was another of the paintings by Isabel that I found at artsalesindex.artinfo.com, the Blouin Art Sales Index. It was sold with that title as lot 796 in a sale at Waddington's of Toronto in November 1988; signed by Isabel but with no date; oil on panel; 22cm high by 40cm wide. As usual with these works sold in recent years at auction houses, I couldn't find a picture of the painting on the web; and also as usual, I don't know where it is now. I think it might be the same painting as the one sold as 'dancing girl resting' in 1985 and as I've said when discussing the other 'dancing...' paintings (see 'd' above), any one or more of them might be in this list under the name Isabel originally bestowed on them.

*

The ROCK SYREN (sic) SINGING THE STORM SONG

A charcoal drawing.

Exhibited 1887; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

Portrait of ROMOLA TYNTE which was the professional name of Mary Magill Tynte Potter.

Exhibited 1885 as 'Portrait of Miss Mary Tynte Potter'; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

Exhibited 1887; Royal Hibernian Dublin.

The painting was not for sale on either occasion and was certainly given by Isabel to Mary Potter; possibly commissioned by her.

Mary Tynte Potter burst on the social scene as Romola Tynte, doing recitings and short dramatic scenes at private soirées and – later – public concerts. Her family was Irish and she was related to

Jane, Lady Wilde. Oscar Wilde helped Romola launch herself when she went to the USA and I think she might have begun her public career at Lady Wilde's famous afternoons. Neither Mary Potter nor Romola Tynte is mentioned in Memorabilia but Lady Wilde's afternoons were the most likely place for Isabel to have met her.

Some information on Mary Potter/Romola Tynte and her rather brief career in recitation:

At freepages.genealogy.rootsweb, see Fifty Years of Sheffield Church Life 1866-1916 by Rev Canon W Odom. In Chapter VI, the well-known churchmen that Odom knew personally include Mary's father, Rev S G Potter, vicar of St Luke's Hollis Croft, well-known in the city for his willingness to involve himself in theological debate. Rev Potter was an Orangeman whose parish was mostly occupied by Roman Catholics. He died 1904 in South Devon.

At www.worldcat.org the pamphlet: Church and State: Controversy Between Rev S G Potter and..."Pastor Gordon". In 14 Letters. 1874 in London, Manchester and Sheffield. Pastor Gordon is John Henry Gordon.

Mary's parents: www.cotyroneireland.com/marriages/cookstown.html, has transcripts of Cookstown marriage announcements taken from local parish registers; Strabane Morning Post; Londonderry Sentinel; Londonderry Standard. In the list published in one of the papers 11 October 1845: on 1st inst [1 Oct 1845] at Derryloran Church Cookstown, Rev Samuel George Potter of Cushenden co Antrim to Elizabeth daughter of Samuel Rankin Magill Esq JP of Cookstown. Rev Potter was the eldest son of Samuel Potter of Springfield county Donegal.

As the reciter Romola Tynte:

Dublin Daily Express 12 May 1887: Romola Tynte's farewell recital in Dublin had been attended by Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar.

A [Gerard Manley] Hopkins Chronology by John McDermott. London: Macmillan 1997 p113 and we're in April 1887: on 25th [April 1887] Hopkins went to Mrs More Madden's house to see Romola Tynte recite. An editor's footnote says that as well as her recitations, Romola also worked as an elocutionist. On the evening Hopkins heard her, she was wearing a dress designed for her by Oscar Wilde. On 27th [April 1887] Hopkins went to the Antient Concert Rooms to see Romola's farewell recital. On 1 May [1887] Hopkins told a contact that Romola was "a beautiful Sappho".

At ebay and on google there was a picture of Romola Tynte, a profile from front page of The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News volume 39 number 770 issue of 25 August 1888. I couldn't see who the artist was - if a name was mentioned - but it's more likely to be one of the male artists who painted Romola Tynte than the portrait by Isabel.

For Jane, Lady Wilde see wikipedia on her husband and younger son; and wiki on Jane herself: Jane Francesca Agnes Elgee born December 1821 daughter of Charles Elgee 1783-1824, a solicitor in Wexford, and his wife Sarah née Kingsbury.

After establishing herself on the professional recitation scene in Dublin and London, Romola Tynte went to the USA:

At www.christies.com, details of items in a sale held New York December 2009 including an autograph letter from Oscar Wilde, on the headed paper of 16 Tyte St; to James B Pond. There's no date on it but it's a letter of introduction for Romola Tynte to show to Mr Pond when she reached New York. The letter was published in the Holland and Hart-Davis Complete Letters of Oscar Wilde p292, where Pond was described as the man who had arranged Oscar Wilde's lecture tour in the US of January-March 1882.

Seen via google: autograph letter by James C Potter of New York to Romola Tynte; written during 1892 on the headed paper of the Hotel Boswyck.

Oscar Wilde was not the only famous person helping set Romola Tynte up in America:

At www.newspapers.com the Brooklyn Life of Sat 3 December 1892 p18 the Social Column: one of a "series of entertainments" on 9 December [1892] at the St George Hotel would feature a Mr McKernan and "another celebrity" Miss Romola Tynte. Miss Tynte had arrived in the US "last June" [June 1892] with a letter of introduction from Ellen Terry to William Winter of New York. Winter introduced Romola Tynte to the Newport social set and she made her debut at the Newport casino. She later gave recitals at the homes of Mrs Beach and Mrs William C Whitney.

(I'm just wondering here if 'Mrs Beach' is the composer and pianist Amy Beach).

At www.worldcat.org a reference to a letter from Romola Tynte in New York to William Winter, written during 1893. The only copy is in Washington DC.

New York Times 3 January 1894 a report on a recitation by Romola Tynte, which I couldn't read in full without paying: one item on Romola's programme, "a tragic little recitation" ended with everyone present, including herself, with tears in the eyes.

At //cdnc.ucr.edu is the California Digital Newspaper Collection: Los Angeles Herald volume 42 number 39 issue of 20 May 1894 prints a paragraph on Romola Tynte's success in New York, even though she doesn't seem to have visited Los Angeles or even be about to visit it. This report says that Romola's "earnest and spirituelle face" had been used by the painter Poynter as the basis for his head of Christ in the dome of St Paul's Cathedral. Romola Tynte had also been used as a model by Lant, for his Lesbia; by Edwin Long for his Diana or Christ; and by Frank Topham for his picture of George Eliot's. There was no mention of Isabel's portrait in this report, alas!

Romola Tynte's career in public recitation seems to have been short; and she moved on to work for the women's suffrage movement, giving only occasional, fund-raising performances:

The Women's Suffrage Movement: New Feminist Perspectives. Edited by Maroula Joannou and June Purvis. Manchester: Manchester University Press 2009 p21 in the chapter Women's Franchise League. By October 1890 Elizabeth Wolstenholme Elmy was the WFL's secretary and Romola Tynte was her assistant. Elmy was complaining at the WFL's "brutal" treatment of both of them, which was making Elmy ill.

Elizabeth Wolstenholme Elmy and the Victorian Feminist Movement by Maureen Wright. New York and Manchester: Manchester University Press 2011 p143 mentions two recitals by Romola Tynte given during May 1890 to raise funds for the Women's Franchise League.

Probate Registry index shows that Mary Magill Tynte Potter died on 30 July 1913, in Exmouth.

*

ROSE GARDEN, CLARENS, LAKE OF GENEVA

An oil painting.

This is one of the few works Isabel showed after the fire of August 1900 and it was probably painted after that disaster. Exhibited in 1901; Liverpool.

*

SEMIRAMIDE/SEMIRAMIS

Exhibited as Semiramide 1882; Royal Albert Hall London.

Exhibited 1883 as Semiramis; Royal Scottish Academy Edinburgh and Birmingham.

*

SHATUCHA THE BEDOUIN GIRL (EGYPT)

This was a sketch; the medium wasn't described in my source.

Exhibited 1881; Society of Lady Artists London.

I'm thinking here that, as this was a sketch, it might have been part of the preparations for one of Isabel's 'dancing girl' works, or for Semiramide or the Greek Captive and her Nubian Slave.

*

SKI

Probably 1878

Ski, apparently pronounced Sky, was the name of the native American Indian who was the spirit guide of the American spiritualist medium Mary J Hollis-Billing. The work was never exhibited. It has a rather curious history: in Memorabilia on p141 footnote1 Isabel says that Mrs Hollis-Billing showed her a photograph of a "rough sketch" of Ski in his native American Indian costume, supposedly painted from life. Isabel then used the sketch as the basis for a painting, and gave the painting to Mrs Hollis-Billing. Isabel doesn't give a date for this 'portrait' on that page she states that it was done around the time that the London Lodge of the Theosophical Society was being formed; which was June 1878.

*

SLAVE GIRL OF THE HAREM

Exhibited 1878; Society of Lady Artists London.

*

SLAVE QUEEN, ZUMURRUD; probably THE GREEK CAPTIVE AND HER NUBIAN SLAVE

An oil painting. 1884.

This painting isn't mentioned in any exhibition catalogue that I've been able to find; nor does Isabel write about it – at least, not with that title – in Memorabilia. The reference to a work of that name, by Isabel, was in The Building News and Engineering Journal volume 46 1884 p820. This was a snippet, a review of an exhibition but I haven't been able to confirm the venue. The reviewer said of Isabel's painting that it was "somewhat hard and crude in colour". Isabel showed her The Greek Captive and Her Nubian Slave at the Institute of Painters in Oils in 1884 and I think that it must be the one the reviewer saw; though I'm puzzled as to how he or she gave it what seems to be the wrong title.

Wikipedia has a list of the characters who appear in translations of 1001 Nights: Zumurrud is one. The name is from the Persian, meaning "the emerald from Samarkand".

Seeing Isabel chose to illustrate several 1001 Nights' characters, here's a potted history from its wikipedia page. Most of the stories are from the Middle East and can be traced back to the Middle Ages. The work as translated and known in the west has a very complex history. A lot of work was being done in the 1880s and 1890s to try to understand how the collection first came together; perhaps Isabel knew some of the people involved in that work. The first translation into a European language was a French one from 1704. The first translation into English, a bowdlerised one from 1840 and 1859, was the one Isabel would have read in her youth; it was the standard work for many years. of what has been seen as the std version, by Edward Lane 1840, 1859. Unexpurgated translations didn't follow until John Payne's (9 volumes in 1882) and Richard Francis Burton's (10 volumes in 1885), both of which had to be private publications available to subscribers only, to avoid possible prosecutions for obscenity. Isabel could have been a subscriber to one or the other of those, of course! but it does seem unlikely.

*

A SONG OF THE GREEK ISLES

An oil painting.

*

The SORCERESS; see THE ENCHANTRESS

*

SPANISH TAMBOURINE GIRL

Exhibited 1881: Society of Lady Artists London.

*

SPIRIT OF THE CRYSTAL

See Isabel's comments on this painting, which mean it can be dated at 1888, probably late 1888.

A painting in pastels.

Said by Isabel (Memorabilia p159) to have been shown 1888, probably on the back of the success I describe below. Grosvenor Gallery; though I haven't found it listed in the catalogues I have seen, I haven't yet come across a copy of the one for the pastel exhibition of 1888-89.

Exhibited again 1891; Liverpool.

On Memorabilia p159 Isabel names Spirit of the Crystal as one of the four paintings she showed in the same exhibition at the Grosvenor Galleries. On pp161-62 she says it was a pastel, done for Isabel Cooper-Oakley, one of several works Mrs Cooper-Oakley had commissioned – all by woman artists - to be hung on the walls on the opening day of her Dorothy restaurant. Spirit of the Crystal was voted the most popular of the commissioned paintings, by the women who went to the opening, and Isabel won £5. It wasn't sold, though – maybe the exhibits weren't for sale. It was destroyed in the fire of 1900, together with a photograph Isabel had had taken of it.

Sources for the Dorothy restaurant:

Shopping for Pleasure: Women in the Making of London's West End by Erika Diane Rappaport. Princeton University Press 2001. On p256 notes to Chapter 3; re footnote 146:

the first Dorothy restaurant was in Mortimer St. It opened on 24 November 1888.

Constance: the Tragic and Scandal Life of Mrs Oscar Wilde by Franny Moyle . London: John Murray 2011. This was a snippet and I couldn't see the page number. The opening of the second Dorothy, at 448 Oxford Street, on Friday 21 June 1889 was much more of a 'high society' affair than the opening of the first. Constance and the art critic Lady Colin Campbell were amongst the guests that day and although the Dorothys were women-only restaurants, Oscar Wilde was allowed in, for this day only. Mrs Cooper-Oakley wanted her Dorothys to serve wholesome food, cheap enough to be affordable by shop girls. Unlike clubs etc their doors opened onto the street. You paid on the way in: 8d for a main course of meat, 2 veg and bread; 2d extra got you a pudding; and coffee or tea was 1d extra again. When you had paid you were given a ticket. You found somewhere to sit; and your meal would arrive.

Reproduced as a black-and-white illustration: Unknown World volume 1 1894; shown to have been signed by Isabel. Below the reproduction was a note saying that Isabel had painted the original in 1890.

*

SPIRIT OF THE EAST WIND also known as GHOUL OF THE SHIPWRECK

An oil painting.

Before 1894.

Reproduced as a black-and-white illustration: Unknown World volume 1 1894. Below the reproduction was a note stating that the design was based on an oil painting. No details were given of when and where the original painting had been shown; so perhaps Isabel had never exhibited it. The reproduction wasn't signed or dated.

*

STRADA TIBERIO CAPRI

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1886 as one of a pair, with Villa Pompeiana; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

A SUMMER SONG (STUDY AT BOSCASTLE)

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1891; Manchester.

*

SUNNY SOUTH (LYME REGIS BAY)

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1890; Manchester

*

SUNSET IN THE MARSHES, RHOS NEIGR, ANGLESEA

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1901; Liverpool.

Given the year that she showed it, it's probably one of the few paintings Isabel did after the fire of August 1900. I don't know when Isabel went to Anglesey but all her sketch books were destroyed in the fire of August 1900.

*

The THREE VALKYRIE MAIDENS...

See Valkyrie Maidens

*

TOADSTOOL

Wax-clay.

This was the only sculpture Isabel ever showed.

Exhibited 1892; Liverpool.

*

“TRUST HER NOT, SHE IS FOOLING THEE”

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1885; Liverpool.

Those are Isabel's quote marks. However, when I googled the phrase, I didn't get any responses.

*

VALKYRIE MAIDENS

I'm assuming that Isabel showed one painting five times. If so, it's an oil painting.

Exhibited 1881 with a very long title: “The Three Valkyrie Maidens - Messengers of the Gods, proclaiming from a lone rock in the Northern Ocean to the sea-birds and the fishes the death of Balder (sic) the Beautiful”. At the Royal Albert Hall London.

Exhibited twice in 1883 as ‘the Valkyrie maidens’: Royal Hibernian Dublin; Birmingham.

Exhibited 1884 with the 1881 full title; Royal Scottish Academy Edinburgh.

Exhibited 1886 with no subtitle but a reference (my quotes) “vide Robert Buchanan's Poem”.

There's a wiki but not a full wikipedia page on Robert Williams Buchanan (1841-1901) poet, novelist and playwright. The wiki refers to the mysticism of his The Book of Orm published 1870. At www.robertbuchanan.co.uk you can see the full text of the poem reproduced from the 1885 edition published by Chatto and Windus. Its full title is The Earthquake; Or Six Days and a Sabbath pubd Chatto and Windus 1885. The reference to Valkyries that I suppose Isabel is illustrating is:

Like Valkyries heavenly-eyed

From the storm-cloud trooping forth...

There's a wiki on the Norse god Baldr (also seen spelled Balder and Baldur). He was a son of Odin and Frigg. Baldr's death was the first in the series of events which ended with the destruction of Ragnarok. After his death he had to remain in the underworld; he could only come out after Ragnarok had gone and the world had been remade. His death is covered at length in the Poetic Edda.

Wikipedia on valkyries, which are mentioned in the Poetic Edda (13th cent) and also in the 13th cent Prose Edda of Snorri Sturluson. The Valkyries accompany Odin and Frigg and Odin's ravens to the funeral of Baldr.

*

VEILING OF ISIS

Exhibited 1884; Birmingham.

*

VILLA POMPEIANA CAPRI

An oil painting.

Exhibited 1886 as one of a pair w Strada Tiberio; Nineteenth Century Art Society London.

*

Portrait of Dr GEORGE WYLD

1882

I've not found any evidence that this was exhibited. I would think that it was either commissioned by Dr Wyld or painted for him as a friend (though he isn't mentioned in Memorabilia). Either way, I'm sure it was given to Dr Wyld when it was finished.

My only source for it is The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 3 1882 p106 in issue of 1 April 1882. The last item in several pages detailing what various artists were working on at the moment mentions briefly that Dr George Wyld was "sitting for his portrait" at Isabel's studio in Holland Park Road.

That's the end of the list of paintings.

ISABEL AS AN ILLUSTRATOR

Isabel doesn't mention having done any illustration work in Memorabilia. The only examples I've found are these:

1) illustrations in Private Instructions on the Science and Art of Organic Magnetism by Chandos Leigh Hunt. They aren't in the first two editions, only in the 3rd: published London: G Wilson 1885.

I imagine Isabel was a friend of Chandos. Though Chandos is not mentioned in Memorabilia, the two women shared some interests and moved in some at least of the same circles. Private Instructions... is a 'how to' book. Isabel's illustrations are small drawings trying to explain some of the physical work Chandos was describing in the booklet: on an unnumbered page just before p1, for example, there's one of a pair of hands resting on someone's shoulder blades.

Thanks are due to Vivienne Roberts and Leslie Price of the College of Psychic Studies for telling me about this work, which I hadn't heard of before. The College has several copies of Chandos' work and you can also see the Bodleian Library's copy of the 3rd edition at www.iapsop.com.

Chandos Leigh Hunt was born as Emily Honoria Leigh Hunt in 1854. Originally a teacher, she became a professional hypnotist early in the 1870s, trained by Joseph Wallace, the man she married in 1878. Wallace held several patents on medicines. He and Chandos were in business for many years, preparing and selling the medicines and giving consultations. They also campaigned, for a vegetarian diet and against vaccination. Joseph Wallace died in 1910. With the help of some of their children, Chandos kept up her own and her husband's businesses until her death in 1927.

There are several works by Chandos in the British Library though it has "mislaidd" its only copy of the booklet illustrated by Isabel:

1876 Vaccination Brought Home to the People. Published London, originally a lecture.

1876 A Treatise on All the Known Uses of Organic Magnetism, Phenomenal and Curative. Published London; also a lecture originally.

?1878 listed under Chandos Leigh Hunt's name, perhaps as its translator into English: Inoculation und Vaccination sind einerlei. Baron C Dirckinck-Holmfeld. German original published Hamburg.

1884, 1885, 1901 8th edition: Physianthropy; or, the Home Cure and Eradication of Disease. London: Philanthropic Reform Publishing Office of 37 Oxford Mansions, Oxford Circus, which seems to be one of the businesses owned by Leigh Hunt and Wallace.

1885 as Mrs C L H Wallace. 366 Menus...Without the Introduction of Fish, Flesh, Fowl or Intoxicants...

1885 Dietetic Advice to the Young and the Old. Published London; originally an article in The Food Reform Magazine.

?1888 Visibility Invisible and Invisibility Visible. A New Year's Story. London: J Burns

2) the works listed above as appearing in Unknown World in 1894 (all of which had originally been paintings).

3) frontispiece to A Book of Mystery and Vision, a book of poems by A E Waite, published London: Philip Wellby 1902, in a limited edition of 250 copies. Isabel's illustration is to the poem on p12. Roger Wright found Cornell University's copy on the web via archive.org; the only one we could locate in the UK was at Cambridge University, not even the British Library had one. Isabel's illustration is black and white and is opposite the title page. Below it to the right is printed: "Drawn by I. De Steiger". The drawing doesn't have a title as such, but below it there's a quote from the second-last verse of Waite's poem pp10-12: The Voyage and the Venture. On p10 Waite gives an introductory paragraph to the poem making it clear even to the most clueless that it's the soul that's voyaging and venturing. As at p12:

[So therefore] days and nights dissolve

By this low-breathing sea,

While hear I pause and still resolve

Voyage and venture free!

Dim main through all my paths intone
And far through paths untrod,
Sung on by all life's voices, lone
Let me embark for God.

I don't think that Isabel's drawing was ever exhibited. It's hard to know when she did the drawing but it might be one of the few art works from after the fire of August 1900.

18 September 2017

Contact me – especially if you think you might own one of the works listed in this file – by email:

See the full list of my biographies of members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER AS A PROFESSIONAL ARTIST

THE BIRTH OF MODERN ART

Isabel de Steiger lived from 1836 to 1927, through a period of unprecedented change in European art. She was born before the Pre-Raphaelites and died during the early years of Surrealism. During her lifetime, the Renaissance ideas of what painting should consist of, and the academies which taught those ideas, were being assailed from every side. Influences were coming in from countries as far away as Japan and cultures as different as those of the African tribes. Advances in technology and chemistry brought new colours; and paints in tubes, which made painting out-doors so much easier. And photography was challenging art on many fronts while freeing artists (if they wanted to be freed) from the need to paint one-d representations of what was – supposedly – 'real' or 'natural'.

In the midst of all this upheaval, what kind of artist did Isabel choose to become?

Well, that's a tricky one! It has been a surreal experience, trying to figure out what kind of paintings Isabel did, when I've only ever seen one of them in real life. Most I know only by their titles. However, I think that those titles, and Isabel's writings on art, do give her away, as a would-be academician.

Sources for this introductory section:

Genre painting, the most widespread but also the most unsung challenge to the art of the academies:

Popular Nineteenth Century Painting: A Dictionary of European Genre Painters. By Philip Hook and Mark Poltimore. Antique Collectors' Club 1986. Isabel is not listed in this book. The only GD artist member who is, is Henry Marriott Paget, listed with the painters of children when in fact he did very few pictures of that kind. The book does seem rather limited in its attitude: it doesn't allow for artists painting in more than one genre. However, I did find the introduction very helpful.

A short definition of "the modern aesthetic", seen on the wall at the Sargent Watercolours exhibition Dulwich Art Gallery 24 August 2017: "formal structure and surface pattern".

Wikipedia pages on the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood – founded 1848; Impressionism – first exhibition 1874; Surrealism, a reaction against Dada, and using Freud's ideas on dreams – two separate manifestos, both 1924. Wikipedia on mauve – invented 1856, named 1859; paint in tubes – invented 1841.

ISABEL'S TRAINING AS AN ARTIST

In Memorabilia Isabel was looking back at her life. Knowing that eventually she became an artist, she remembered childhood lessons and incidents that point in that direction. However, in talking about her schooling she remembered music as much as painting and drawing; and also admitted that in the early years of her marriage she did no art at all for several years. That said, Isabel does seem to have shown more promise as an artist, and more willingness to work at painting and challenge herself, than most schoolgirls.

Lessons in sketching were part of the curriculum of the average school for young ladies in mid- 19th-century England. In that respect, Isabel was lucky to be spending her 1830s and 1840s childhood in Liverpool: her first school, run by the Hackney sisters, sent its pupils to the studio of a professional artist, the landscape painter Alfred Hunt, for their drawing lessons. Alfred Hunt made Isabel and her fellow pupils imitate "Jullien's chalk heads" but his daughter Maria brought all sorts of art works for them to copy. Isabel remembered being thrilled by the "glamour" of painting "a dewdrop on a purple convolvulus" on "Bristol board" in one of the lessons. Isabel got to know Alfred Hunt's children very well and as all of them – the daughters as well as the son – were professional artists, she will have taken in the extra lesson that a woman could make a living out of art.

Alfred Hunt told Isabel that she had more talent than most. He suggested that she ask her father to pay for a proper training, but she never did approach her father on the subject. The opportunity to have an art education paid for by her father was lost in any case in 1847, when he died. Before his death, Isabel did paint copies of some old masters her parents had in their house, copies of originals - almost certainly all portraits - by van Dyck, Kneller, Lely and Lawrence. At his death, her father's collection of books and paintings was sold, but even decades later Isabel had a vague memory of one in particular, one of the van Dyck copies. She had always wanted to paint something along the same lines and thought she had finally done so with her Castles in the Air.

Isabel continued to draw but had no more art lessons until she was at her last school, Miss Steven's school in North End Road Fulham. As Isabel doesn't name the person who taught art at the school I guess lessons were taken as they usually were in such schools, by one of the staff members, not by a professional artist. Isabel refused to do the copying work she was set. She doesn't say why but perhaps she found it not challenging enough. Instead, she borrowed a portfolio of "classical line drawings" she had noticed in Miss Steven's drawing room; and copied those. She kept up her drawing practice after she left school and 'came out' – a point at which most young women gave up art for good – and began to try her hand at portraits. But at this stage in her life, Isabel had no thought at all of being a professional painter, and when she married Rudolph von Steiger in 1861 she did no painting or sketching or copying for several years.

I think two acts of Fate changed the situation for Isabel and drove her back to her art work. Firstly, she and Rudolph had no children. That was something that would make more difference in the future. Making an increasing difference in the 1860s present was Rudolph's TB. At some point in the late 1860s, a warm climate was recommended for him, so Isabel had to leave Liverpool and the social life she had there, and go with her husband to Egypt. Increasingly worried about her husband's health, and with time hanging on her hands, Isabel began to paint and draw again, and for a few months she was also able to take more lessons.

Her teacher in Egypt was another professional artist, an Italian who was in Egypt temporarily to work on portrait commissions from the Khedive and the European community there. In Memorabilia Isabel calls this man Dunielli and says he specialised in picturesque scenes (so he was a genre painter). I haven't been able to find out anything about Dunielli, even allowing for her having possibly spelled his name wrong. It's a pity, because he helped Isabel over a very important artistic hurdle – he taught her how to take a sketch and make a finished painting from it. After those lessons Isabel felt herself to be "a fully fledged artist". She began to paint portraits of her friends in Alexandria, and scenes she describes as "Bedouins, palm trees" - which sound like the first paintings she ever exhibited in public.

Rudolph von Steiger died in December 1872, leaving Isabel a widow at 36. If he and Isabel had had any children, Isabel's choices at that point would have had to be different. As it was, she had been left an income, enough to make her financially independent, but she had to find a new purpose for her life. As she remembered it nearly 40 years later, she made up her mind to become a professional artist very soon after her husband's death; but it's clear that there were several false starts in the process, and a lot of moving on from one art training to another.

The first false start was Isabel's decision to go to London and study at the Slade School of Art. This was during 1873 and I think it came a bit soon after her bereavement. Staying in lodgings, and having not lived in London since her teens, Isabel knew no one and she was very lonely. She also soon got tired of what the Slade required of its new students - "drawing from the casts". She'd done all that before.

She left London for Florence. She found rooms in a pensione there and went to be a pupil of the artist she calls Belucci (with one 'l') but who is correctly spelled Bellucci. Giuseppe Bellucci (1827-82) was part of the post-Renaissance Italian painting tradition that still continued in Florence. He had studied with Giuseppe Bezzuoli (1784-1855), some of whose works Isabel might have seen at the Royal Academy in the 1840s. She had probably seen Bellucci's own Death of Alessandro de' Medici in Paris in 1865; later, his The Treaty of Bruzzolo got a royal accolade when the king of Italy acquired it for his collection. Paintings of historical subjects, displayed at the RA and bought by a king: what Isabel was going for in this bit of training was the academic tradition with a vengeance. However, it turned out to be another false start. Bellucci told Isabel that he could make her a great artist, like he had “the Great Inglese, Miss Thomson”; but she would have to stay as his pupil for two or three years. Isabel decided she couldn’t afford it. This was probably the autumn of 1873. She left Italy to go back to Egypt; where over the winter of 1873/74 she thought long and hard about her future, deciding to continue with her art - “to begin a real Art life” - but in London.

Isabel adds “not in Paris” to that decision; which is why I suggest early 1874 for a false start not mentioned in Memorabilia. Perhaps it occupied such a short time that, decades later, she had forgotten all about it, but at some point, she went to Paris to study in the studio of Carolus Duran.

Carolus Duran (1837-1917 – he was younger than Isabel) is the dapper-looking man on the front cover of the catalogue of the 2015 John Singer Sargent exhibition at the National Portrait Gallery: Sargent trained with him from mid-1874. By 1874 Duran was one of France’s most sought-after portrait artists, and training places in his studio were also highly prized, so Isabel was going straight to the top in choosing his studio for her next phase of training. Though best known for portraits, Duran also did landscapes. And nudes – so that working in his studio Isabel would have been able to overcome one of the main problems facing women who wanted to train as artists: not being able to learn to draw the human body by studying naked human models.

Duran’s technique is well-understood and given in great detail on the web. I’m not going to talk about it here, because when Isabel began to paint pictures for exhibition and sale, she imitated a very different artist. What Isabel might have taken away from Duran’s studio is his enthusiasm for Velázquez’s idea that nature could be seen as a manifestation of the Divine.

Having decided to make a go of living and painting in London (mid-1874); and presumably immediately after the false start in Paris, Isabel stepped over the threshold from student to professional, by signing up for at least one term at Heatherley’s School of Fine Art. Heatherley’s was founded in 1845. It still exists and still keeps to its original purpose of giving artists who have finished their training some help at the outset of their career, by offering space in which to paint, and the use of models at shared cost. Future GD members Henry Marriott Paget and his wife-to-be Henrietta Farr were both at Heatherley’s – that’s where they met; I haven’t been able to find out when exactly, so I don’t know whether they and Isabel coincided.

Sources for Isabel’s training:

Memorabilia

- on the Hackney sisters’ school: p14, p42. On p44 Isabel remembered having a drawing by Alfred Hunt, perhaps given to her by the artist: a scene painted at Drachenfels on the Rhine. Like so much else, it was destroyed in the fire of August 1900.
- on copying her father’s paintings: pp57-58.
- on Miss Steven’s school: p53.
- on the mysterious Dunielli: pp77-78.
- on the months at the Slade; in Florence and in Egypt: p78.
- on renting space and models at Heatherley’s: p78.

ALFRED HUNT

Wikipedia on Andrew Hunt 1790-1861.

Bénézit's Dictionary of Artists a vast work. Published in English: Editions Gründ Paris 2006.

Volume 7 Her-Koo pp454-455: Andrew Hunt and his family though the daughters are not named.

A short entry for the father and son Hunts but not the daughters in Dictionary of British Art. Volume IV: Victorian Painters I: The Text. By Christopher Wood. Published Antique Collectors' Club 1995 p268.

DUNIELLI

Bénézit's Dictionary of Artists published in English: Editions Gründ Paris 2006.

In Volume 6 Cos-Dyc. No entry for him as Dunielli. I also tried every mis-spelling I could think of, without any luck. Just noting though that p521 there's no entry for Isabel as de Steiger. Nor is Isabel in Volume 13 Som-Val p275 as Steiger, de. So despite the supposed comprehensiveness of this reference work, some artists have been missed out.

SLADE SCHOOL OF ART: see wikipedia and other websites. The bequest which enabled a professor to be employed at University College London was made in 1868. There's a good list of well-known graduates of the Slade on its wikipedia page, but two not well-known students at the Slade in the late 1880s were future GD members Mina Bergson Mathers and Annie Horniman.

BELLUCCI

Bénézit's Dictionary of Artists published in English: Editions Gründ Paris 2006.

In Volume 2 Bed-Bül: on p120 no artist spelled Belucci was listed. However p111 there was a Giuseppe Bellucci 1827-1882 born and died in Florence. Same volume p415 on his teacher Giuseppe Bezzuoli. If I made enough effort going from pupil to master, I could probably trace the line back to Renaissance Florence.

I'm still trying to figure out who Bellucci's ex-pupil Miss Thomson is.

DURAN

If I hadn't been reading through Light on the hunt for something else, I never would have known. The only reference I've come across is a mention in passing by Isabel, in a letter she sent to the magazine about the Ancient Mysteries: Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 Jan-Dec 1881 p87 issue of 19 March 1881.

For Duran see wikipedia and also

- www.jssgallery.org/Paintings/Carolus-Duran:

- www.studiorousar.com/2011/03/21/carolus-duran-methods for his painting technique and influences.

HEATHERLEY'S SCHOOL OF FINE ART

Its website is www.heatherleys.com

References to the Pagets at Heatherley's; though neither give any clues about the dates they were there.

The Collected Letters of George Gissing 1892-1895 by Gissing and Paul F Matthieson, Arthur C Young and Pierre Coustillas. Ohio University Press 1994 p272 footnote 8.

The Corresp of Samuel Butler with his Sister May edited and with introduction by Daniel F Howard. University of Cambridge Press; University of California Press 1962: pp80-81, a letter written in August 1879 in which Butler says he'd known both the Pagets about ten years ago (so taround 1869). The Pagets aren't named in the letter – presumably May didn't know them – but they're identified p81 footnote 2 from Samuel Butler: A Memoir Part 1 by Henry Festing Jones, p307.

ISABEL'S WORKING LIFE AS AN ARTIST

In the autumn of 1874 Isabel showed her first paintings at a major exhibition venue. For the next 13 years she was a professional artist first and foremost, painting several works each year for sale or for friends. Her output only slowed down after 1887, when she seems to have made a not-necessarily-conscious decision to give more time to her study of western hermeticism.

I've only seen Isabel's last painting in real life and I think it probably isn't typical of her earlier work. There are a couple of reproductions of her paintings on the web, but on the basis of three pictures I don't fancy making dogmatic statements about her style or technique at different times. One thing that she said herself about her early works, however, is that they were very influenced by the paintings of Lawrence Alma-Tadema.

There's no suggestion in Memorabilia that Isabel ever met Alma-Tadema so she probably never went to his studio. However, she could have seen his pictures on show in Europe from as early as 1861 and at the Royal Academy from 1869. As a student of painting, perhaps even the finished article could tell her something of his technique and style, but it's obvious from the titles of some of her paintings that she also liked the subjects and the backgrounds he chose to paint.

Alma-Tadema did do portraits and landscapes but he had trained to be a history painter and his history paintings were what was most popular with British buyers. His earliest works focused on the history of the Low Countries but in the 1860s he branched out into scenes of ancient Egypt, ancient Rome and ancient Greece. He had been trained to be as accurate in his detail as was possible and he had always had a fascination with architecture and sculpture. On a visit to London in 1862 he had spent time in the British Museum, making sketches of bits of classical statuary and architecture; later he spent several months doing the same in Rome and Pompeii and the results of all that effort are easily seen in his paintings.

After her time as a student in Florence Isabel's finances wouldn't stretch to another long spell in Italy, but she did spend time in the British Museum copying probably the same exhibits that Alma-Tadema had done, to put them in her paintings as he did. Even her very last work, Castles in the Air, has classical temples in its background and – if you go by her titles – some of her earliest paintings had even closer links with Alma-Tadema.

Scenes of ancient Egypt were popular, and Alma-Tadema regularly painted them. Some of Isabel's earliest exhibited works were Egyptian landscapes and genre scenes, but when she started to gain confidence she also painted several works, presumably in conscious imitation, with titles that Alma-Tadema might easily have picked for his own paintings. Though of course I don't know what it looked like, Isabel's very long-titled Athyrtis Divine Daughter of Sesostris, Showing Herself at the Gate of the Temple (1880) can be thought of as a woman artist's riposte to, or a 'part two' to, Alma-Tadema's Grand Chamberlain of Sesostris the Great, the portrait of a young, black man exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1871. A reviewer described Isabel's painting as a "decorative, classically rendered figure", giving me the impression of a work very much in the Alma-Tadema style. Isabel's A Daughter of the Gods (1879) and perhaps her Nature and Art (from as late as 1884) also sound like the kind of subject Alma-Tadema painted - figures in front of classical architecture. In 1876 Alma-Tadema's Cleopatra was shown at the Royal Academy, one of his most erotic paintings. Isabel was inspired to make another riposte: in 1879/80 she showed four paintings whose titles suggest her Cleopatra wasn't just the desired object of Roman commanders, but also the last pharaoh of Egypt, failing to prevent its conquest by Rome, but failing gloriously.

Although she might still have envied Alma-Tadema his art training in an academy and two academic studios, and the ease with which he entered the English art establishment; later Isabel suffered a revulsion of feeling about his style, describing it in Memorabilia as "cold and soulless" and "not the right technique for me to have imitated". It's not clear when her attitude towards his style began to change; and unfortunately Isabel didn't elaborate in her memoir on the style she developed after she left Alma-Tadema behind. I would cautiously suggest, though, that the 'moving on' process began in the early 1880s. A painting she exhibited in 1882 - which might be her Mariamne, her Semiramide or another painting altogether - was described by a reviewer as "French in technique" so perhaps she was reverting to the method she learned during her short time with Carolus Duran.

Most of her exhibited paintings in the 1880s seem to show continuity with her 'Alma-Tadema' phase, at least by their titles. She continued to paint classical subjects - A Dream of Hermes (1884); Andromeda Abandoned (1892); and a couple of what sound like allegories - Nature and Art (1884) and Harmonia (1887). There were paintings which illustrated poetry, though one of her earliest exhibits - Basking in Heaven's Light - had been accompanied by a quote from Lalla Rookh, so that strand in her work was also not new. The Arabic or Egyptian theme continued, with one, probably several, eastern dancing girls; and characters from The 1001 Nights. Only one post-1880 theme was new: myths from northern Europe - The Valkyrie painting (or possibly paintings) of 1881 and other years; and the Lorelei... (1883).

Isabel exhibited very few portraits. If she had been hoping for a regular income from portraiture, she was disappointed. Though she mentions several in Memorabilia, they were all done as gifts for friends. She did two, possibly three, religious paintings, one of which was never exhibited. She hardly did any still-lives - she must have been aware that they were looked on in academic circles as women's work; and she only ever exhibited one, small, sculpture.

Isabel was moving in spiritualist circles by the mid-1870s and in occult ones from June 1879. Her first painting with a 'western mysteries' theme was Consuelo (1878), based on a novel by George Sand in which there is a secret society holding its meetings in a cave; and during the 1880s, she did what sound like several more. You might include her Dream of

Hermes (1884) in that list; with The Enchantress (1883) (though this was also a popular subject with artists who had no particular occult leanings). The Veiling of Isis (1884); The Lost Pleiad (1886); and particularly A Legend of the Soul (1887) could also have a ‘western mysteries’ theme, though A Legend of the Soul is also an illustration of the classics – the legend of Persephone in the Underworld.

Virtually all the works Isabel exhibited up to the late 1880s were in oils, the chosen paint of the academies. Around 1888/89, however, she experimented with pastels, newly popular again after decades of neglect. As the 1890s progressed, she exhibited more landscapes and even one or two flower pictures – another type of art seen as women’s art – and more of her exhibited works were watercolours. These changes did not seem to affect her reputation as an artist: in 1900 she was excitedly preparing for the ultimate art accolade of a one-person show. But in August 1900 a break-point came with the warehouse fire that destroyed all the paintings Isabel still had in her possession, and all her sketch books and other preparation work. Although she did exhibit some art works after that, the momentum had been lost and she never recovered it.

Isabel’s last known painting – Castles in the Air – was worked on in parallel with Memorabilia, between 1910 and 1925. In Memorabilia she writes of it wistfully, as showing “what I could have done” - meaning, what she could have achieved if she hadn’t opted to spend so much of her time and effort on her other interests. Castles.. is a summing-up, though, of both her painting and her investigations into the western occult tradition. It shows her young, against a background of clouds but also of Roman architecture; surrounded by the paraphernalia of the occult, and with her GD motto – Alta peto – written to her left. Looking at it, you would not know that even Turner had happened; let alone Kandinsky. But it is a fitting end to both her careers.

LIMITATIONS

Isabel said that she was never a “great enough” artist to inspire jealousy in other artists., but by the age of 45 (around 1881) she was a “moderately known professional”, aware of the limitations she faced.

She knew her imagination was limited, saying about her Aurora at Dawn painting that she had to have a large number of props when painting it, because she couldn’t conjure up just from her head a picture of the goddess flying across the sky. Unnamed members of her family puzzled her by saying that all her faces looked the same; something she thought was true of Burne-Jones but not of herself – her faces all looked different to her.

Her small income was not a limiting factor to start with, though she always had to be careful with her money. In the mid-1870s she was able to sell some of her capital to buy the remainder of the lease on 8 Hornton Street Kensington with a studio in its basement; and at the end of the 1880s she was able to live for three years in a house with no studio, so that she had to rent a studio separately. However, at the end of the three years, she left that house because of the cost of the two sets of rent. From the early 1890s rents began to eat into her income more and more; so that in her last few years I don’t think she had a studio at all but made do with rooms in wherever she was renting. Though not all exhibition venues welcomed them and Alma-Tadema didn’t do them in his early years, big canvases were something that got you noticed as an artist; but increasingly, Isabel had to paint small.

Other limitations were nothing much to do with Isabel's abilities or her attitude. They were faced by all women artists and in Isabel's case were played out especially in her 'longing but resentful' relationship with the Royal Academy.

How Isabel would have loved to exhibit regularly at the Royal Academy! It was particularly the academies that made it difficult for women to learn their kind of painting to the highest standards, by refusing to let them in as students and often as exhibitors as well. In a fine example of how difficult the academy system was for women to negotiate, Isabel set out to cultivate the only RA member she was acquainted with – Edwin Long – visiting his studio and inviting him into her own. He duly promised that if he got elected to the annual exhibition hanging committee, he would help get her submissions selected and hung prominently. He may have helped usher Isabel's Mariamne through the selection process in 1882, but no other picture of hers was ever shown there and she even felt that she had probably got herself onto an RA black-list.

The academies had the 'separate spheres' arguments of the Evangelical churches to keep women out. This being the 19th-century, they could also make assertions about the immorality and impropriety of women artists painting or even seeing a naked artist's model, particularly in a studio where male artists were also working. (They could, of course, have put men in one studio and women in another; but no.) In 1882, the academic attitude was summed up by arch-proponent J C Horsley RA in a lecture in Devon, the gist of which was printed in The Artist and Journal of Home Culture, which Isabel regularly read. Isabel was asked by a number of angry women artists to reply on their behalf. Her letter appeared in The Artist and Journal of Home Culture's issue of 1 July 1882. When writing Memorabilia decades later, she felt that the letter had helped along the process of improving art training for women – in the long run; but she had made its wording too vehement. The result at the time had been that the Society of Lady Artists joined the RA in refusing to show her work. More helpful to women artists wanting to paint the nude, was Isabel's decision (the year before her letter) to hire a model on Tuesday and Friday evenings and charge women painters and students for three hours' time in her studio, drawing and painting him or her.

Isabel's Mariamne was already up on the walls in the RA when her letter to The Artist and Home Journal was published, and it was hanging in a very advantageous position. However, Isabel soon discovered that the catalogue had got her name wrong; she was in it as Miss F Steeger. So even this small triumph over the RA was soured.

Of course, there were an increasing number of alternative exhibitions which noisily challenged the whole academic selection and rejection process, but for Isabel, they felt like venues where the failures went, the pictures that hadn't been selected by the RA. She did exhibit at the Society of Lady Artists (now the Society of Women Artists) before the 1882 letter, and again after they had had time to forget it. She did so with reluctance, though – Isabel thought art did not have gender, and that the LSA's exhibitions were a public statement of women's art as separate and somehow lesser.

There were still hurdles to overcome even after your submission had been accepted for an exhibition. In Memorabilia, the importance of having your painting hung to advantage is a recurring theme; a place on the line of the eye of the beholder being the best. Of course, associates and members of academies got preference in this. For the less favoured, the results of your painting not being on that line could often be – no sale. Isabel was even told as much, by the collector who bought her The Greek Captive and Her Nubian Slave from the first exhibition of the Institute of Painters in Oils (now the Royal Institute of Oil Painters) in 1883/84. In 1879 Isabel's Cleopatra Before the Battle of Actium had been hung on the line at the Walker Art Gallery; she thought the several bids she received for it came in part because it had been in that eye-catching position. The Walker Art Gallery is in Liverpool of course. It was a place – perhaps the only place – where Isabel had an 'in': there was a Rathbone on the hanging committee, and Isabel knew the family well. That's not to say that Cleopatra.. didn't deserve to be allotted a prime space; just that the Walker art exhibitions had huge numbers of paintings and not much room on the line; and every little helps. Even when Isabel exhibited a painting that was not for sale, she still wanted it to be hung to advantage, as an aid to new commissions. Consequently she was annoyed when her pastel portrait of Patience Sinnett was not hung well at the Grosvenor Gallery.

One limitation on Isabel's career as an artist was of her own making. She did make a friend of Edwin Long; and she did live for three years in the artists' colony of Bedford Park. But she chose not to cultivate acquaintances other than Long who might have put a word in for her where a word might have helped. She had the opportunities, but chose not to take them. Near the outset of her professional life as an artist, Isabel was introduced to various members of the group she called the 'Chelsea' set – Burne-Jones, Holman Hunt, William Morris and others. In the 1880s she also failed to follow up the opening given her by her acquaintance Lady Wilde, to become a member of the group around Oscar Wilde, the aesthetes. Neither group shared her enthusiasm for Alma-Tadema; and Burne-Jones' style she actively disliked, thinking his figures not human enough to be convincing and disagreeing with those who said his paintings were spiritual.

On moving to Liverpool in the early 1890s she intended to make an effort to socialise in art circles there. However, she soon realised that it would involve some rather expensive entertaining. With a choice between socialising and renting a studio, she rented the studio.

Moving on to Edinburgh in the mid-1890s, she found her paintings given a moderate welcome by the Scottish Academy. She took the welcome a bit further by inviting some of the city's leading artists to visit her studio; only to find herself treated as "a negligible woman foreigner". However, on getting to know artist and designer Phoebe Traquair – an Irish woman living in Edinburgh – she found Mrs Traquair was not treated any better by the city's male art establishment; so being left out in the cold wasn't personal in this case.

When she moved to Birmingham, she didn't bother much with art circles there at all!

I think that when Isabel writes "The fact was I did not trouble much about the artist community.." she is wondering if she should have tried a bit harder. But she preferred to move in occult circles; and wherever she was, she didn't like cliques. I wonder myself how she would have reacted if given the opportunity to move in Royal Academy art circles; but even with Edwin Long's friendship that would never have happened – RA art circles were strictly male.

Sources for Isabel's working life:

Lawrence Alma-Tadema by R J Barrow. Phaidon Press Ltd 2001: pp13-76.

Royal Academy Exhibitors 1769-1904 Volume 1 published 1905: pp28-29.

- Isabel on Alma-Tadema: Memorabilia p58, p86, p105, p117, p163, p278.

- the reference to her 1882 technique being French in style: The Artist and Journal of Home Culture issue of 1 July 1882 p207.

- on her limited imagination: Memorabilia p112, p110.

- on Edwin Long and his promises: Memorabilia p107. Wikipedia gives his dates as 1829-91. Elected ARA 1870; full RA member 1881 so Isabel's cultivating of him must have been after that. He's also mentioned in Lawrence Alma-Tadema by R J Barrow. Phaidon Press Ltd 2001: pp69, as another painter who used Egyptian settings. Unlike Alma-Tadema, Long had travelled in the Middle East. He was in Egypt in 1874. And also unlike Alma-Tadema, his paintings featured nudes, especially nude women. In Alma-Tadema's paintings the figures tend to keep all their clothes on.

- on women and the nude model: Memorabilia pp107-09; The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 3 1882 issue of 1 July 1882 p231.

- on opening her studio for study of the human nude: two adverts in The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 issue of 1 November 1881 p352; and issue of 1 December 1881 p362.

- on having your painting hung on the line: Memorabilia p130 about Mariamne at the RA; pp131-21 about The Greek Captive.... Though Isabel doesn't name the picture, it so happens she only ever showed one at that particular venue. And p208 for Cleopatra Before the Battle of Actium. And Memorabilia pp157-159 about the portrait of Patience Sinnett.

- on cliques and art circles in London in 1870s and 1880s: Memorabilia pp80-81, p124.

The friend who introduced Isabel to Burne-Jones, Holman Hunt and Morris was an American, woman journalist. Isabel doesn't name her, but I wonder if she was future GD member Anna Blackwell. Anna was actually born in Bristol, England, but her family had moved to the USA while she was a teenager. See my biography of Anna, elsewhere on this website. As a woman, Anna found no English newspaper willing to employ her as a reporter, so she went to live in Paris, where she wrote columns for a number of English and French language newspapers.

- on art circles in Liverpool, Edinburgh and Birmingham: Memorabilia pp80-81; p183; p279.

Two short sections to round off with:

ISABEL AS TEACHER

Probably in 1897, while she was continuing her professional career as an artist in Edinburgh, Isabel had a pupil. She mentions the fact in passing in a letter about something else entirely and I haven't been able to find out anything more about it – who the pupil was, how long the arrangement lasted; nothing.

Source:

Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection in the group of letters with catalogue number NS73: letter from Isabel to Frederick Leigh Gardner; not dated by Isabel but Gerald Yorke gave the date as 11 November 1897.

WHERE ARE ISABEL'S PAINTINGS NOW?

Any that she still had with her in 1900 will have been destroyed in the warehouse fire. I don't know how many that was. She names one or two which definitely suffered this fate: the oil version of The Flight of Aurora which Isabel also calls Aurora Clothed with the Dawn; and the pastel The Spirit of the Crystal.

Castles in the Air was not even begun until about 1910. It still exists in a private collection – mine. As at September 2017 I am in the process of loaning it to the College of Psychic Studies.

Two or three of her paintings have surfaced at auctions in recent decades. They too must be in private collections.

As for the rest of the works Isabel painted, although she signed and dated most of her work, none were known to be in any British public collection in June 2017 when I searched this website which lists 212,055 works in public collections by 35000 or so artists.

//artuk.org/discover/artworks

Source for the paintings definitely destroyed in the fire: Memorabilia p110, p159.

10 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

ISABEL ON ART; PHOTOGRAPHY; and DESIGN

HER VIEWS ON ART - AT THE TIME

Isabel did some writing about art while she was still a professional painter. In 1880 the editor of the new monthly magazine The Artist and Journal of Home Culture put out a call for artists to send in news items and short articles on their working lives. Isabel was one of those who responded. Between 1880 and 1882 the magazine also published several of her letters, including one on the morality of artists' models which – she thought – got her into trouble with the Royal Academy and the Society of Lady Artists. The Artist also mentioned Isabel's talk (in 1881) on Art and the Supernatural, which she gave at the British National Association of Spiritualists; though it didn't elaborate on what she had said.

Isabel wrote two signed contributions to The Artist..s 'the roving artist' column. Her first followed a summer (probably 1880) spent in Brittany. She described Brittany as “cheap and agreeable” and thought it would repay “a couple of months’ work” but not more. She appreciated the fact that the Bretons, being used to having painters in their midst, “do what artists most prefer – leave them alone” and she did think that her trip had been worthwhile. She strongly recommended artists to go to Carnac and “the mysterious sea of Morbihan”; and she was intrigued by the “mysterious cave of Gavrinis” which had carvings on its walls - “wandering lines where the eye loses itself” - images whose meaning was now lost.

Isabel’s second ‘roving artist’ contribution was on Fontainebleau and Barbizon, which I think she visited in the summer 1881. She arrived already in a state of mind to find fault: originally she had intended to spend the summer in the West Country, but the weather had been so bad she’d had to move on, and probably spend more money than she had intended. At Fontainebleau the forest scenes had not inspired in her any desire to paint: to her mind, they were not picturesque. Moving on to the well-known artists’ colony at Barbizon, she’d been disgusted with the village itself - “inexpressibly ugly dirty” and – its biggest crime in her eyes - “modern”, a place full of “disorder and dulness”. The chief inn was expensive, with rooms that hadn’t seen much cleaning lately. She gave up the idea of painting in either place and I think (from other sources, she doesn’t say so in the article) moved on to Paris. She suggested to The Artist...’s readers that unless they had an urge to paint “dirt and dunghills”, they go elsewhere.

Sources for The Artist and Journal of Home Culture

It has a wiki, naming the editors from 1882 but not the editor from 1880 to 1882. It may be a function of the issues google has access to, but I haven’t found any articles by Isabel in The Artist after mid-1882.

At www.victorianperiodicals.com: there’s a short history of the magazine, which was published from its first issue in January 1880 to September 1883 by William Reeves. In the autumn of 1883 Reeves sold it to Gardner, Wells, Dalton and Co and they appointed their own editor.

Dictionary of 19th Century Journalism Ghent: Academia Press p25 entry for The Artist... has more on William Reeves. His main business was a retailer of artists’ supplies, so perhaps Isabel was a customer of his; but the Dictionary says that while he was its publisher, The Artist... actively cultivated women readers – hence the subtitle of Journal of Home Culture. Isabel was a great magazine reader so she needn’t have been a customer of Reeves to have come across it.

As none of the sources above give the name of the magazine’s editor from 1880 to 1882, I assume it was William Reeves himself.

The request for articles by artists:

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 1 1880 issue of 1 August 1880: p304.

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 issue of 1 March 1881: p93 The Roving Artist: Isabel on Brittany. Issue of 1 May 1881 p158 Isabel’s talk at the BNAS. Issue of 1 October 1881 p301 The Roving Artist: Isabel on Fontainebleau and Barbison. And a ‘roving artist’ NOT by Isabel: Issue of 1 April 1881 p125 Roving Artist: the delights of Capri. Isabel had certainly visited Capri by 1886 but I’m sure she wasn’t the author of this piece: it’s anonymous and she always signed her work; and it’s a very enthusiastic piece in a bubbly style – not like Isabel at all!

There was something by Isabel on pp142 of this volume but I haven’t been able to read that page as yet; pages 142 and 143 were not available via google when I searched, and paper copies of The Artist..’s earliest years are hard to find.

HER VIEWS ON ART – LATER IN HER LIFE

In Memorabilia (written between 1910 and 1925) Isabel expressed very frank opinions on art, its purpose and the role of the artist. To her, art - and music as well – should never be seen as expensive superfluities in society; they should be the foundation of any person’s existence. That meant that artists had a particular duty to be “searchers after ideal beauty”, an ideal that – inevitably – was always out of reach. Isabel’s view of what ideal beauty in a painting actually was required artists to show an illusion of three-dimensional space on a flat surface – an aim that needed effort; not just inspiration. Whatever the artist painted, it had to be the highest quality work the artist was capable of. In 1878 she wrote that it was better to paint a cockroach well than an angel badly. Later, she thought she hadn’t expressed her meaning very well because of course, an artist would never paint a cockroach. She thought they shouldn’t paint peasants, either; but of course even when she said they shouldn’t (in 1881), they were doing so.

In part, Isabel’s views were a reaction to what she called the “deadness” of the Evangelical and commerce-orientated atmosphere in which she grew up, in 1830s and 1840s Liverpool. But I think they were also a reflection of her own personality, something that may have come out best in the paintings she did whose titles suggest the influence of western esotericism; in which she tried to portray “mysterious corners of the world, the sealed books to science”.

Perhaps it’s already becoming obvious that Isabel never reconciled herself to modern art, with its focus on “formal structure and surface pattern” and its portrayal of everyday subject-matter to that end. Modern art’s “chance creation” of a work of art out of ideas coming up from (Isabel’s quotes) the “inner consciousness” was not what she thought art was about at all. Its “chaotic scribbling and daubing” was also the end of the art created by the Renaissance.

Isabel wasn’t venting her opinions on the basis of no real knowledge. She had seen and read about a great deal of the modern art ‘isms’; though in Memorabilia she never mentions any of the ‘expressionisms’ or surrealism so she may not have known about those.

The earliest modern art movement that Isabel wrote about was the Barbizon group. It had come together around 1830 and stayed active until around 1870; so when Isabel visited the village it was named after, in 1881, she arrived some years after its heyday. Formed of people who were influenced by the landscapes of John Constable, the group became known for its paintings of peasants working in typically French rural landscapes. An exhibition of Barbizon-group paintings was on when Isabel arrived in Barbizon, so she went to see it “Art there was none”, she wrote of the paintings on display. The artists were “daubers of stupid vulgar subjects”, she wrote; and she mixed up the names of the group’s most well-known artists - Jean-François Millet and Théodore Rousseau – to produce one called Théodore Millet. Looking back when writing Memorabilia Isabel did spare one Barbizon painting from this general indictment: she thought Millet’s The Angelus – which portrays two peasants in a field, in a moment of religious enlightenment – to be a very spiritual painting: spirituality in art was something she could appreciate.

Although she doesn't specifically say she saw any of his work, I think Isabel must have seen murals and perhaps paintings as well, by Puvis de Chavannes: in Amiens (works done in the 1860s and 1884); and in Paris (works from the 1870s). Puvis de Chavanne was one of the early symbolists. His work struck Isabel as another unwelcome challenge to the ideals of the Renaissance she held dear: unlike Greek sculpture which portrayed Nature at its best, Puvis de Chavannes painted Nature at its worst.

Isabel knew about impressionism – which she described as an “illness”; and about cubism and its British descendant, vorticism; but viewed them as expressing feeling and nothing else. By 1921 she had read what she described as van Gogh's memoirs. She had “rejoiced” in his “mystical autobiography” and agreed with his emphasis on the importance of showing the beauty of objects by portraying them plainly. However, when it came to the “maniacal juxtapositions...dazzling to the optic nerves” that were his paintings, she thought they just showed how far he had failed to achieve his aims. Cubism she seems to have been more puzzled by than condemning of: she thought it was the static, canvas equivalent of moving pictures. Perhaps she was right!

I'm not quite sure where Isabel would have seen examples of art from post-Revolutionary Russia. She may only have read about it. She certainly realised that it was the antipathy of what she thought art should be. Soviet art focused on materials (particularly modern, industrial ones), on art for mass production, and on the functional rather than the beautiful. Isabel thought the Bolsheviks were doing their best to kill art altogether, by insisting that it represent a political stance, rather than the Truth.

All the 'isms' Isabel commented on with such dislike bordering on despair were art coming out of Europe; Isabel was not alone in feeling a great deal of hostility towards them on that account. Apart from Vorticism's brief mention, she didn't have quite so much to say about art trends within Great Britain; but she did have something to say about the influence of Ruskin on British art in the 19th-century, and he was not spared from criticism.

Isabel had read the early work of John Ruskin before she was 18 (that is, before 1854) but hadn't liked its criticisms of the Old Masters. She didn't appreciate Ruskin's arguments until she finally read his later work, long after his influence on British art had made way for the ideas of Rossetti and William Morris. While admitting from the vantage-point of the early 20th-century that Ruskin's writings had led to a new way of looking at nature, she thought they also showed the kind of “sickly sentimentalism”. She particularly disliked the sentimentalism of “Miss Kate Greenaway and her chubby little children in their pretty green gardens” - an artist Ruskin was a supporter of.

Sources; most of which are Memorabilia

Wikipedia on Barbizon group; Puvis de Chavannes (1824-98); van Gogh (1853-90) and where Isabel could have seen examples of his work; Vorticism; Ruskin. Website www.theartstory.org for art in the Soviet Union in the years after the revolution.

The modern art aesthetic of “formal structure and surface pattern”: I saw this quote on wall at the Sargent Watercolours exhibition Dulwich Art Gallery 24 August 2017. The exhibition was making a good case for Sargent's watercolours as definitely in the modernist camp.

Isabel's views:

- on the Evangelicals: p45.

- on the nature of art and the aims of the artist: Memorabilia p3, p35, p111, p129, p86 and The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881 p93: Isabel on Brittany.

- modern art as scribbles and daubs: p11.

- on the Barbizon group: The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 2 1881, issue of 1 October 1881 p301. On second thoughts about The Angelus: Memorabilia p164.

There are plenty of reproductions on the web of Jean-François Millet's The Angelus: oil; 1857-59; now in the Musée d'Orsay.

- on impressionism, cubism and vorticism: p110, p290.

-on Soviet art: p132.

- on van Gogh: p130. Vincent van Gogh died in July 1890 and as early as 1891 Isabel could have seen some of his paintings on exhibition. In 1901 there was a major retrospective in Paris; and in the years up to World War 1 his work was shown widely in Europe and the USA. I can't find a Memoir by van Gogh that Isabel could have read. She may be meaning The Letters of a Post-Impressionist translated from the German and with an introduction by Anthony M Ludovici. London: Constable and Co 1912. Vincent van Gogh's letters to his brother Theo weren't published in English until after Isabel's death.

- on Ruskin: p36, p38, p123. Ruskin's Modern Painters will be the early work Isabel read in her teens. Published London: Smith Elder and Co; volume 1 in 1843, volume 2 in 1846. In volume 1, Ruskin championed Turner against his critics and against the way the Old Masters painted landscape. In volume 2, Ruskin linked the aesthetic with the divine. In mid-century, Ruskin was a defender of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood.

PHOTOGRAPHY

Isabel doesn't have much to say in Memorabilia about photography as such. I don't think she ever learned to take photographs and develop them and she probably lived rather too early to appreciate the possibilities of it as an art form. She did realise that for an artist, it was a useful practical tool. Several times in Memorabilia she mentions in passing that she had a photograph of this or that painting, and I wonder if she had all her art works photographed, as a matter of course. On at least two occasions, she worked on a painting using a photograph as the basis for the design. Particularly during the period that she was influenced by Alma-Tadema, she might have collected photographs of classical architecture, like he did, to help with painting backgrounds; though she does not say she ever did this, she only mentions using her own sketches.

Photography brought portraiture (at least in black and white) to the mass of the population who couldn't even dream of commissioning an artist to paint them. Isabel, of course, could have painted her own portrait; and did so in a particular way, in her old age. However, she also had herself photographed several times. One of the illustrations to Memorabilia is the portrait she had done around 1880, with paint brushes and easel in hand and staring challengingly at the camera, very much the professional artist.

Isabel was a spiritualist, she believed in the existence of both ghosts and spirits. She thought they looked like humans. She thought they could be painted - I wish I knew whether she painted any herself! - and that they could be photographed. Consequently, when she thought she had seen the same spirit in two different photographs, one recent and one from 20 years ago, she wrote to the spiritualist magazine Light to tell its readers of this curious coincidence. What an uproar her letter caused! Although she had not implied anything of the sort, Isabel was accused of suggesting that the more recent photograph had been faked. The photographer's friends were up in arms and the current owner of the earlier photograph – GD member John William Brodie-Innes – became very angry at demands that he make his photograph available for their inspection, demands that he thought were implying he had faked it himself. In fact, the more recent photograph was found to have been faked: you could see the wires, apparently. Isabel's letter had been instrumental in causing the photographer's methods to be investigated; not what she intended at all. I think she might have been quite disappointed that in one case at least, the ghost or spirit she thought she saw in the two photographs wasn't actually there.

Sources:

Isabel's photographs of her paintings: Memorabilia p159, p279.

Isabel using photographs as the basis for a painting; they were both rather special cases: Memorabilia p141, pp177-179.

The reappearing ghost/spirit:

Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research. Published London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 2 Duke St Adelphi. Isabel's letter: volume 14 1894 number 708 Sat 4 August 1894 p370. Replies and accusations: see the next two issues. The more recent photograph that Isabel had seen was mentioned in Light volume 14 1894 number 679 Sat 13 January 1894 p19: it was the frontispiece of a book, The Veil Lifted. The book was mainly the publication of a series of talks on spiritualism, particularly one given by Mr Traill Taylor on 8 March 1893 to the London and Provincial Photography Association. Light's editor described the frontispiece as the "very beautiful face" of a spirit/ghost photographed by Mr Glendinning with Mr Duguid acting as medium.

URBAN DESIGN

If Isabel did any design work, I have not come across it yet. She was quite clear, however, about the importance of good design, especially in cities; giving good design more importance than other aspects of building a city that people were glad to live in. In Memorabilia Isabel condemns 19th-century Liverpool not for its notorious slums, but for its "dull ugliness". She rails at several generations of property developers in Liverpool, not for erecting tenements that were a hazard to life and health, but for building "ugly old streets" with buildings packed in where there had been gardens and trees before. If it seems rather harsh of her, not to seem to care about people's well-being, her attitude was consistent with her firm belief that art and beauty were as important to human society as drains and fresh air.

Isabel found out about the garden city concept when she went to a talk by Ebenezer Howard. Howard's book on the subject - To-Morrow: A Peaceful Path to Real Reform - was published in 1898 and launched the garden city movement. Isabel became a shareholder in Letchworth, the first garden city, investing in either Garden City Pioneer Company (founded June 1902 and wound up 18 months later) or in the company that actually bought the land at Letchworth, First Garden City Limited (share issue September 1903).

By the time she was finishing Memorabilia in the early 1920s she may have visited Letchworth to see a garden city for herself. She had definitely been driven around Wavertree, Liverpool's garden suburb. The design of the houses in Liverpool Garden Suburb was influenced by the Arts and Crafts movement – like those in Letchworth. And of course all Arts and Crafts architecture owed a huge amount to the houses of Bedford Park, Chiswick, where Isabel had lived for three years in the late 1880s. She was delighted with Queen's Drive and Wavertree: "new roads...adorned with trees and gardens and delightful little houses". It even gave her some pride in Liverpool as her native city – a feeling she hadn't had for decades – and particularly in the work of City Engineer John Alexander Brodie, designer of Queen's Drive, in giving Liverpool's old streets "a most picturesque surrounding of beautiful roads, and in an arrangement which seems to me to suit modern wants and desires extraordinarily well".

Sources:

- on Brodie and the garden city suburb of Liverpool at Queen's Park:

Memorabilia pxx, pp99-100 and pp285-86 though the references read as though Isabel had never met Mr Brodie in person. On Isabel's drive around Wavertree Garden Suburb: pxxii.

John Alexander Brodie's engineering work is important enough for him to have his own entry in Grace's Guide to British Industrial History, at www.gracesguide.co.uk. In 1889 he invented the football goal net! He was appointed City Engineer of Liverpool in 1898. As well as being engineer in charge of the building of Queen's Drive (Liverpool's first ring road) and Wavertree, he also designed some houses in Letchworth.

- on Ebenezer Howard and the Garden City Movement:

Wikipedia on Sir Ebenezer Howard (1850-1928); Una Stubbs is a descendant of his. And these two biographies:

Sir Ebenezer Howard and the Town Planning Movement by Dugald Macfadyen. Manchester University Press 1933. On p20: Howard's ideas were influenced by a novel Isabel may have known: Looking Backward by Edward Bellamy, published in the US only in 1888; though this biography says Howard didn't read it until 1898. The first lectures on garden cities were not until 1898. Garden City Association: pp24-25; Garden City Pioneer Co p38; First Garden City Ltd p39.

Lifelines 18: An Illustrated Life of Sir Ebenezer Howard by John Moss-Eccardt. Shire Publications Ltd 1973. This biography pp14-15 implies that Howard read Bellamy's novel much sooner, and worked on the ideas that became the garden city movement for ten years before his book was published. But it doesn't mention any early lectures on the subject.

At www.rickmansworthherts.com an article: The Effect of Sir Ebenezer Howard and the Garden City Movement on 20th Century Planning. By Norman Lucey. This article also says that Howard's garden city scheme was developed over many years; but without further details.

The 1898 edition of Howard's book had an influence out of all proportion to its rather small print-run. The British Library only has the 2nd edition, with its revised name: Garden Cities of Tomorrow. London: Swan Sonnenschein and Co Ltd 1902.

Liverpool Garden Suburb at Wavertree:

Design Culture in Liverpool 1880-1914: the Origins of the Liverpool School of Architecture by Christopher Crouch. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press 2002: p13, p178, p182. The arterial road Queen's Drive was begun in 1904; 6½ miles around and a minimum of 120 feet across, it was designed by James Alexander Brodie to ease traffic flow while bringing green space into the city; he had in mind that there would be more cars on the roads in future – how prescient that was! It wasn't part of Brodie's brief to build a garden suburb near it, but in 1910 the Co-Partnership Tenants Ltd put forward a plan to build such a suburb on land enclosed by Queen's Drive at Wavertree. Building began in 1910; was halted by World War

1; but continued afterwards.

19 September 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

***

ISABEL DE STEIGER'S ART WORKS: what and where she exhibited

AUGUST 2017 – comments by Sally Davis

This is a boring but necessary file of the raw data. When I went in search of paintings by Isabel, I looked through catalogues of the major exhibition venues in years from the early 1870s to the early 1900s. Google pointed me at some venues used by Isabel, that I'd never have heard of otherwise. Google also found me a few reviews of her work; usually just a pithy phrase, often without naming the painting! 1900 is a crucial date in Isabel's life as an art professional: in August of that year, a fire destroyed all the paintings she still had in her possession and all her preparatory work. I only know for sure of one work which she began after that date.

I'm sure the lists below are not complete. Entire galleries will be missing because I haven't discovered yet that Isabel exhibited in their shows. It's likely, too, that Isabel showed more works after 1900 than I've managed to come across.

LAYOUT

The exhibition galleries are in alphabetical order; which means that by far the most important is at the end – the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool.

The information from the catalogues is laid out thus: page number/catalogue number/price if I know it/medium if I've been able to find it out/title and further details.

THE BASIC ART DICTIONARY SOURCES were a good place to start but the entries contained errors and were not complete. Isabel would have been very annoyed at some of the things they said about her!

Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940 compiled by J Johnson and A Greutzner. Antique Collectors' Club 1976 p145.

Dictionary of British Art. Volume IV: Victorian Painters I: The Text. By Christopher Wood. Published Antique Collectors' Club 1995: p138.

THE INDIVIDUAL GALLERIES which, as I say, is almost certainly incomplete.

BRITISH FINE ART GALLERY

1882

I couldn't find a catalogue of this exhibition, so the only information I have is from a review which doesn't name the painting.

The Artist and Journal of Home Culture volume 3 1882 p207 issue of 1 July 1882 had a review of the first exhibition at this gallery, whose rooms were at 200 Regent Street. It was a new addition to London's smaller art venues, intended by its directors to be open for the display and sale of art throughout the year. The review didn't name any of the paintings in a show which the reviewer felt had "a leaven of more or less meritorious" work amongst a lot of mediocre or even bad stuff. The reviewer mentioned Isabel's one painting in the show, as one of the exhibition's best, "forcible in colour and French in technique". It was a "single figure" and I'm not going to speculate about which of Isabel's works it might have been; it might all too easily be one I've never heard of.

GROSVENOR GALLERY

No Grosvenor Gallery catalogue give prices for paintings which were for sale; interested buyers were asked to contact the gallery for further information.

In Memorabilia p159 Isabel mentioned some paintings in pastel that she showed at the Grosvenor Gallery: Phaedra; her portrait of Patience Sinnett; her portrait of Mabel Collins; and The Spirit of the Crystal. Works at the National Art Library indicate that there were two exhibitions with pastels in them at the Gallery, in late 1888 and early 1889. I haven't been able to find any copies of the catalogues of the first of those two exhibitions. I seem to be missing one of the four paintings Isabel mentions – one of the two portraits - so I suppose it was in the late 1888 show.

1889

I did find a catalogue of the second of the two: Grosvenor Gallery 2nd Pastel Exhibition 1889. In the list of exhibitors: p118. And in the list of paintings, just the one item:

p67 302 described only as Portrait.

1890

Grosvenor Gallery First Exhibition of the Society of British Pastellists

The Society had only just been founded. The catalogue's title page had a list of its current members; Isabel's name was not on it. In the list of exhibitors p96. In the list of works:

p52 225 Phaedra. With a sub-title (Isabel's quote marks) "The Pale Dark Queen with Passion in her Eyes" p80 361 The Jewel with The Spirit of Diamonds.

I'm not sure whether catalogue number 361 is The Spirit of the Crystal, or some other painting altogether.

As MANCHESTER ROYAL INSTITUTION which turns into the city art gallery in 1883
1880

I couldn't find a catalogue for the 1880 exhibition but I did find a review of it, in which a work by Isabel was mentioned. As there were over one thousand items in the show, even a mention for Isabel's painting was doing pretty well.

The Academy volume 18 1880 number 437 issue of 18 September 1880 p209: review of the exhibition at the Royal Manchester Institution. Isabel was showing one of her 'four 'Cleopatra' paintings; unfortunately, there's no clue here as to which one!

As MANCHESTER CITY ART GALLERY

I note from the catalogue to the 4th Autumn Exhibition 1886 that exhibitors were limited to a maximum of three works, and that works of "moderate size" would be given preference over larger paintings. Published Manchester: Henry Blacklock and Co of Albert Sq.

1884

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 2nd Autumn Exhibition.
Manchester: Blacklock and Co. List of exhibitors p79. List of works:

p14 128 £35 oil Eureka! Eureka!

1890

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 8th Autumn Exhibition.
Manchester: Henry Blacklock and Co of Albert Square. In the list of exhibitors: p59. In the list of works:

p22 239 £10/10 oil The Sunny South (Lyme Regis Bay).

1891

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 9th Autumn Exhibition.
Manchester: Blacklock and Co. In the list of exhibitors p53. In the list of works:

p39 466 £10 oil A Summer Song (Study at Boscastle).

1892

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 10th Autumn Exhibition.
Manchester: Blacklock. List of exhibitors p59. List of works:

p34 362 £50 oil A Song of the Greek Isles

p44 531 £100 oil The Princess Scheherazade.

NINETEENTH CENTURY ART SOCIETY

If it hadn't been for google I wouldn't have known about this particular venue. The Society seems to have come and gone in only a few years. There is information on its founder, the architect John Sulman (1849-1934) at adb.edu.au, the Australian DNB.

At www.19thc-artworldwide.org, the web pages of the London Gallery Project, there is some information on it including adverts from the Times. The Society's premises were at 9 Conduit Street, off Regent Street, and according to an advert in Times 31 May 1883 they were open for the display and sale of paintings at any time, not just during the short-lived exhibitions held during the Social season. The Times 12 December 1883 p2 advertised the Society's inaugural exhibition. Catalogues at the V&A show that Isabel was a member of the Society in the mid-1880s.

1885

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Autumn 1885. Members' list p59. In the list of works:

P5 28 Portrait of Mary Tynne Potter; which wasn't for sale
p18 172 £100 The Sorceress.

From p3: both Isabel's works were in the large gallery, which was all oil paintings.

I found a scathing review of this particular exhibition in Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art published by J W Parker and Son. Volume 60 1885 p612. The reviewer declared that he (or possibly she) saw hardly anything in the exhibition that could "merit more than a shuddering glance". He or she singled out Isabel's works as not being as bad as most, saying that they "possess merit"; but The Sorceress had "flesh...hard and crude" with "detail full of ill-distributed accents".

1886

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Summer 1886. Members' list p55; p3 for both her exhibits being oil paintings. And from the list of works:

P22 224 £6/6 Strada Tiberio Capri p24 253 £7/7 Villa Pompeiana.

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Autumn 1886. List of members p49; p3 for both the works being oil paintings. And from the list of works:

p13 112 £8/8 An Odalisque: Cairo
p21 204 £12/12 A Lonely Beggar in a Lonely Road: Capri.

1887

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Spring 1887. List of members p50; p3 for all three works being in oils. And from the list of works:

P10 85 £10/10 The Fairy Syren (sic) of the Water Lilies
p13 116 £90 Harmonia p20 205 £5/5 L'Amour de la Nuit - La Lune - Sur la Terrasse de l'Hotel;
Impression du Voyage

"19th" Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Summer 1887. This was the last that the National Art Library had in its collection, possibly the last that was held. List of members p57. In the list of works:

p57 271 £9/9 oil Old Court, Daventry, Northamptonshire.
p49 539 £6/6 charcoal drawing The Rock Syren (sic) Singing the Storm Song
p50 540 £5/5 charcoal and red chalk Head of Beatrice

PARIS SALON

Les Peintres Britanniques dans les Salons Parisiens des Origines à 1939 by Béatrice Crespon-Halotier. Paris: L'Echelle de Jacob for the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art. 2002. I had a look in this but p490 had no entry for Isabel.

Isabel's bête noir the ROYAL ACADEMY. I didn't look at the individual catalogues.

Royal Academy Exhibitors from 1880 to 1904, which doesn't list prices or whether the item was sold. Volume 1 A-D p312 just the one item:

1882 596 Mariamne.

Royal Academy Exhibitors 1905-70 E P Publishing 1977. Volume II p157 no entry for Isabel as 'de Steiger'. Volume VI Sherr-Z published 1982 p75 no entry for Isabel as 'Steiger, de'.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

None of these catalogues had a list of exhibitors, so I might have missed some works Isabel showed at this huge venue.

1879 which I think was the first ever

RAH of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Works of Modern Artists 1879. No named printer so I suppose the RAH does its own.

In the oils section two works by Isabel:

p23 307 £15/15 Cleopatra Personating (sic) the Goddess Isis p29 405 Portrait of Mrs Patterson; which wasn't for sale.

There were 1010 exhibits.

1880

RAH of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings and Wood Carving 1880. In the section on oil paintings, two works by Isabel:

p1 9 £75 Athyrtis, the Divine Daughter of Sesostris, Showing Herself at the Gate of the Temple p2 24 £75 The Dismissal of Hagar.

1881

RAH of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings and Art Workmanship 1881. In the oils section, one work by Isabel (her quote marks):

p28 308 £35 "The Three Valkyrie Maidens - Messengers of the Gods, proclaiming from a lone rock in the Northern Ocean to the sea-birds and the fishes the death of Balder (sic) the Beautiful".

1882

RAH of Arts and Sciences Catalogue of the Exhibition of Paintings, Sculpture, Architectural Drawings. In the oil paintings section one work by Isabel:

p19 164 £20 Semiramide.

ROYAL HIBERNIAN ACADEMY OF ARTS. I didn't look at individual catalogues.

Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts: Index of Exhibitors 1826-1979 compiled by Ann M Stewart. Volume 1: A-G. Dublin: Manton Publishing 1986. On p210:

1877 164 £20 Mansours

1882 434 £12/12 Morning Effect

|      |        |        |                                |
|------|--------|--------|--------------------------------|
| 1883 | 73     | £35    | The Valkyrie Maidens           |
| 1885 | 98     | £100   | The Enchantress                |
| 1887 | 296    | -      | Portrait of Miss Romola Tynnte |
| 1894 | 344    | £15/15 | A Garland of Roses             |
| 391  | £15/15 |        | Lavinia                        |

The entries don't make clear what media the works had been painted in.

Now known as the ROYAL INSTITUTE OF OIL PAINTERS but called the INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN OIL COLOURS when Isabel exhibited her one painting there.

1883-84

Institute of Painters in Oil Colours catalogue of its first exhibition, held at the Piccadilly Gallery. On pp3-4 there was a list of current members: all men, of course. There was no indication in the catalogue of which works were for sale; and no prices were printed. In the list of exhibitors: p46. In the list of works:

p35 60 The Greek Captive and her Nubian Slave.

ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY. I didn't look at individual catalogues.

Isabel was never an Academy member: The Royal Scottish Academy 1826-1916. Originally published 1917. The British Library's copy is Kingsmead Reprints 1975: p384 Isabel isn't listed.

The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibitors 1826-1990 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière. Volume 4: R-Z. Calne: Hilmarton Manor Press 1991. There are no indications as to whether the paintings were for sale; nor which medium they had been painted in. On p615 works by Isabel:

1883 393 Semiramis

543 The Fair Slave Enees-el-Jelees. Arabian Nights.

1884 548 The Valkyrie Maidens Proclaiming the Death of the Sun God Balder the Beautiful 1895 68 The Lorelei Maiden Singing to the Fishermen Below.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF ARTISTS BIRMINGHAM which changed its name spring 1885 to ROYAL BIRMINGHAM SOCIETY OF ARTISTS.

1883

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition. In the list of exhibitors: p80. In the list of works:

p27 162 £10 Abd-el-Rahman

p32 270 £25 Semiramis

1884

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition. In the list of exhibitors: p70. In the list of works:

p41 440 £20 The Veiling of Isis p52 645 £45 The Valkyrie Maidens.

P59 799 £6/6 watercolour drawing Fireside Harmony.

1892

RBS Artists 66th Autumn Exhibition. In the list of exhibitors: p73. In the list of works:

p36 313 £7/7 oil Au Jardin Hôtel du Cygne Montreux

p64 892 £15/15 watercolour painting A Garland of Roses.

1893

RBS Artists 28th Spring Exhibition. In the list of exhibitors: p66. In the list of works:

p54 637 £10/10 The Flight of Aurora

p54 639 £10/10 The Chariot of Venus.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS

Isabel was not a member of the Society - she was not in either of these two volumes: RSBA Exhibitors 1824-1892 and 1893-1910. Compiler Maurice Bradshaw, secretary general of the Federation of British Artists. Published 1973 F Lewis Publishers Ltd of The Tithe House, Leigh-on-Sea.

Exhibitors at The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917 compiled by Jane Johnson. Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First printed 1975; the V&A's copy is the reprint of 1993. On p130:

1879/80 21 £40 Cleopatra's Deadly Resolve in the Temple of Isis

1881 500 £7 A Dancing Girl.

Known in Isabel's time as the SOCIETY OF LADY ARTISTS, now the SOCIETY OF WOMEN ARTISTS

The Society of Women Artists Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière, compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 1 A-D p328:

1878 354 £16 Slave Girl of the Harem

298 £16 Consuelo

401 - Mrs Patterson

1879 768 £8 A Daughter of the Gods

1881 632 £5 Shatucha the Bedouin Girl (Egypt) ; which was a sketch

651 £8 Spanish Tambourine Girl

1887 267 £10 The First Blossom of Spring: Almond Blossom, Capri, Italy

I found some infuriating coverage of the 1878 exhibition in the Times Mon 18 March 1878 p4: a patronising report which began by noting with approval that in the 20 years since the Society was founded, women artists had come to accept that the 'great' subject matter of art was not and never would be their "calling". The review was careful to include only references to paintings which fitted this belief - landscapes and flower-paintings, for example - so that Isabel's portrait and her two works either genre or 'great' were not mentioned. The exhibition was at the Society's own rooms in Great Marlborough Street. 800 works were being shown, about half the number that had been submitted for selection.

The hiatus in exhibits by Isabel at the LSA between 1881 and 1887 started as a result of a letter by Isabel published in The Artist and Journal of Home Culture issue of July 1882). On Memorabilia p109 Isabel says that the LSA refused one work she submitted, the year after the letter appeared ie 1883.

Last but most definitely not least: the WALKER ART GALLERY LIVERPOOL where Isabel felt on home ground: both as a woman born in the city, and as an artist with acquaintances on the Corporation's Exhibition committees. The Walker was where she chose to show her very earliest works, in the early 1870s, before she even thought of herself as properly trained. In the next 25 years or so she showed more works at the Walker than anywhere else; including her only sculpture.

In the lists below, unless I say otherwise, Isabel's exhibited works are oil paintings.

1874

4th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Oil and Watercolours. In the list of exhibitors and still with an address in Egypt: p47. In the list of works:

- |     |     |        |  |
|-----|-----|--------|--|
| P3  | 6   | £13/13 | The Coming Squall - Meditt - Ramle Egypt   |
| 11  | £11 |        | title line left blank but there's a quote beginning next line down:"Basking in Heaven's serenest lightThose groups of lovely palm trees bright". |
| P12 | 220 | £11    | Philae Egypt. With a quote below, from Lalla Rookh:"The ruined shrines and towers that seemThe relics of a splendid dream" .                     |

1875

5th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors p47. In the list of works:

- |     |     |        |                               |
|-----|-----|--------|-------------------------------|
| P13 | 277 | £15    | Hagar in the Desert           |
| p16 | 342 | £10/10 | The Evening Meal, Ramle Egypt |
| p17 | 364 | £30    | Mansours Tent                 |
| p18 | 405 | £20    | On the Road to Aboukir.       |

1879

9th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p121. In the list of works:

- |     |     |      |  |
|-----|-----|------|--|
| p19 | 187 | £70  | Cleopatra Receiving an Unfavourable Oracle from the Priestessof Isis |
| p38 | 518 | £5/5 | A Daughter of the Gods   |

1880

10th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p82. In the list of works:

- |     |     |      |   |
|-----|-----|------|---|
| P35 | 494 | £125 | The Princess Scheherezada (sic) daughter of the Grand Vizier,thinking of the Story She is going to relate at Night. |
|-----|-----|------|---|

Arabian Nights

1881

11th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p121. In the list of works:

p64 1066 £6/10 An Eastern Dancing Girl

12th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p132. In the list of works:

p23 261 £10/0 Mariamne

13th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p135. In the list of works:

P16 149 £100 The Enchantress

p80 1416 £35 The Lorelei Maiden, (Isabel's quote marks) "Sitting on a Rock over the Whirlpool, singing to the Fishermen Below".

1884

14th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p179. In the list of works:

P20 266 £25 A Dream of Hermes

p74 1213 £15 Nature and Art

1885

15th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p124. In the list of works:

P75 1254 £10 (Isabel's quote marks) "Trust her not, she is fooling thee"

1886

16th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p115. In the list of works:

P12 93 £47/10 (Isabel's quote marks) "The Valkyrie Maidens (vide Robert Buchanan's Poem)" p65 1071 £31/10 (Isabel's quote marks) "The Lost Pleiad. Blind Merope - Hope Abandoned. Vide Edwin Arnold"

1887

17th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p109. In the list of works:

p66 1126 £25/10 A Legend of the Soul - Persephone Sinking into the Abyss of Hades. With this long quote:

"Persephone, wilfully straying from the Mansions of Heaven, falls under the power of the Hadean God, in other words Persephone typifying the Soul sinks into the profound depths of a material nature. Hermes Trismegistus".

1127 £6/6 Impression de Voyage

1888

[18th] Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1888. In the list of exhibitors: p7.
In the list of works:

p51a 1261 £100 Celebration of the Mysteries.

Again there's a long quote:

“Celebration of one of the Mysteries in the Temple of Isis. The Roman lady, having no Pass-word, is refused admittance by the Priestess. Roman Period.”

1889

19th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p135. In the list of works:

P54 in Room VI which is watercolour drawings

936 £15/15 pastel The Flight of Aurora

p43 in Room V which is all oil paintings

722 £10/10 The First Blush of Spring - Capri

1890

Missing its front cover but 20th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. In the list of exhibitors: p122. In the list of works:

p6 4 £25 oil Phaedra Meditating on her Revenge.

With this addendum, apparently a quote from the Epic of Hades: “The Dark Pale Queen, with Passion in her Eyes”.

21st Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures. Isabel was in the list of exhibitors though the page had lost its page number. In the list of works though again no page numbers have survived:

935 £15 pastel A Garland of Roses

1208 £20 pastel The Spirit of the Crystal.

1892

22nd Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures, again with page numbers missing. Isabel is in the list of exhibitors. In the list of works, again with no page numbers:

172 £10 oil Daffodils

679 £25 watercolour drawing An Avenging Angel

1085 £110 oil Andromeda Abandoned

1338 £2/2 wax-clay in one of the sculpture galleries: A Toadstool.

Isabel didn't exhibit any works at the Walker Art Gallery in the years 1893 to 1897. I'm not sure about 1898 to 1899 as I haven't been able to find a copy of the catalogues for those two years. Isabel didn't exhibit anything in 1900 – that year's exhibition started only a few weeks after the fire.

1901

31st Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Oil and Watercolours. In the list of exhibitors: p127. In the list of works:

P7 in Room I which is all oil paintings

39 £6/6 The Rose Garden, Clarens, Lake of Geneva

P71 in Room VIII which is all oil paintings

1107 £8/8 Sunset in the Marshes, Rhos Neigr Anglesea

There are few catalogues of the Walker Art Gallery exhibitions in the main London art libraries from after 1901. I couldn't find any paintings by Isabel in the one or two that I was able to look at.

And finally:

?1926 catalogue number unknown £150 oil Castles in the Air.

I have not seen the catalogue to the Walker's 1926 autumn exhibition so I can't confirm that Castles... was shown in it. Isabel certainly intended to display it there: on Memorabilia p280 she says so, and various pieces of paper stuck to the back of the frame show that she sent it to a firm of picture-framers in Liverpool to get it ready. Note that it was for sale: such a personal picture, I'm surprised she could contemplate parting with it.

18 September 2017

Contact me at:

See the full list of my biographies of members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Frank Dodd, was definitely a member of the Order of the Golden Dawn but was a special case. In September 1896, Samuel Liddell Mathers allowed Frank to join the Order despite the fact that Frank had gone to live in Brazil.

UPDATE MARCH 2014

In February 2014 I was contacted by Juanita Barral Dodd Farah, one of Frank Dodd's grandchildren, giving me lots of extra information, particularly about his early life, his wife and family, and the years of his retirement. As a result I've been able to make a big revision to this biography, based on the information she supplied. Many thanks are due to Juanita; and to her cousins.

One of the reasons that I started this research was because I wondered who had recruited whom to the GD. In most members' cases, I haven't been able to find out. However, in Frank Dodd's case I know exactly who recommended him as a possible initiate: writing to the GD high command from Rio de Janeiro in April 1896, Frank mentioned that his "friend Mr H C Morris" had written to him to tell him he had been accepted for initiation. H C Morris is Herbert Crossley Morris, who had been initiated into the GD in March 1893. Frank Dodd and Herbert Morris were about the same age and both were bank clerks working in London; though they may not have worked for the same bank (I don't know which bank Herbert Morris worked for). No doubt when Frank left for Brazil, he and Herbert hoped to meet again some day, but they probably never did: Herbert Morris died in 1898.

Frank Dodd never went through the GD's initiation ritual. Instead he signed and returned a written undertaking to keep the Order's rules. He chose the Latin motto 'Magna est veritas et praevalebit'. Mathers' left a note in the GD administration files that Frank could do his GD learning and exams by post - distance learning - but there's no evidence that Frank ever did so.

Identifying the correct Frank Dodd was a bit tricky but his grand-daughter has confirmed my guess. This is the right man: a Frank Dodd born in Wootton Bassett Wiltshire in 1871. His father was Edward Dodd, who had married Mary Jessop in 1868. Edward and Mary's family was astonishingly small by mid-Victorian standards: just Frank, and his elder brother Herbert. In 1871, they were living on the High Street in Wootton Bassett in the house next to the Royal Oak Hotel. Edward Dodd was working as the senior clerk to a firm of solicitors. Because Edward and Mary Dodd had such a small family, they could afford to invest more in their sons' education. This involved sending them away to school, so that on the day of the 1881 census Herbert and Frank were in Bristol, at the school at Redland Green (within walking distance of where I grew up) run by the Rev Henry Rudge and his sisters Caroline and Mary: quite a big school, employing two teachers other than Rudge himself, and having 23 pupils all aged between 9 and 15. Later in 1881, Herbert and Frank moved on from Rev Rudge's school to All Saints' School Bloxham, just outside Banbury in Oxfordshire. This school had been founded, in 1860, by the Rev Philip Reginald Egerton, who had seen a gap in the educational market: a lack of schools for the sons of the up and coming middle-classes. It was founded as a high church Anglican school, with the support of Oxford Movement grandees like bishop Wilberforce. From 1885, pupils at the school took the exams set by the newly-founded Oxford and Cambridge Examination Board; they were the best education available at the time, short of going to university. Frank did particularly well in those exams, and laid the ground-work for his subsequent career. The school's influence on him came out in other ways as well: its emphasis on the importance of doing your religious and civic duty stayed with him throughout his life; and he acquired an interest in the history of the Christian religion.

I've suggested that Edward Dodd could afford to pay for a good education for his two sons but they may also have been sent away because their mother was ill. Mary Dodd died in 1882 at the age of 38. Harriet Kirkland, the "companion" that was living with Edward and Mary on the day of the 1881 census may just have been keeping Mary company; but she may also have been nursing her.

Edward Dodd continued to live on the High Street in Wootton Bassett until he died in 1905 at the age of 79. Immediately after his wife died, his unmarried sister Eleanor moved in to keep house for him but by 1901 she had died as well and Edward Dodd was living alone but for one servant. By the day of the 1891 census he had left the job at the solicitors and was working for himself as an accountant; during the 1890s he also became the local registrar of births, marriages and deaths.

Herbert and Frank both went to London to work in offices when they left school. Late Victorian London had an insatiable need for clerks as companies and government bureaucracy expanded. On the day of the 1891 census both brothers were living as lodgers in a boarding house; though not the same boarding house. Herbert was living in Hammersmith, and Frank Dodd was one of three clerks (all male) boarding in the household of sisters Mary, Alice and Ellen Smith at 16 Elliott Road Lambeth. Herbert and Frank Dodd had both followed their father into the accounts side of office bureaucracy. Herbert was working as a book keeper; the census official didn't ask where he was working. Frank was working as a bank clerk; he too was not asked for any more details of his employment.

Was Frank already working for the British Bank of South America? Probably. The late 20th century work pattern was to change employers in search of promotion and more pay; but when Frank Dodd started work the typical work pattern was to remain with one employer for your full working life. If Frank had had any choice about which job he took, when he first started work, he might have chosen the British Bank of South America because it offered more chance of early responsibility and promotion - provided you didn't mind going to live in a country outside the British Empire. In 1895 an opportunity arose in Rio de Janeiro and Frank accepted it; a defining moment of his life. He arrived in Brasil on 11 August 1895.

THE BRITISH BANK OF SOUTH AMERICA

Firstly a quick history of its early years, from details at the website of University College London's archives, where its records now are. The bank had been founded in 1862 as the Brazilian and Portuguese Bank, changing its name to the English Bank of Rio de Janeiro in 1863. In 1891, at the end of a very profitable period, it changed its name again to one that indicated that its directors now had bigger ambitions: it became the British Bank of South America. It began to expand its operations into Uruguay and Argentina; and to open new branches in all three countries. The Bank's own records show that it was not quite so profitable after this period of expansion as it had been in its first decades - these were tougher times. I should say, perhaps, that the Bank's head office throughout its existence was not in South America, it was in the City of London.

The offer to Frank Dodd of work in Brasil was part of the Bank's expansion in the 1890s. Though Frank was not offered in 1895/96 the managership of any of the Bank's new branches (he was still only in his 20s), it was clear to him that he might expect promotion to that level at least, and soon, if he went. So he did.

BRASIL WHEN FRANK ARRIVED THERE

Ah, Brasil: coffee, the 1970 World Cup winning team (Pelé, Tostão, Jairzinho, Rivelino and the others), samba, Copacabana, The Girl from Ipanema...

Although Charles William Miller had laid out the first football pitch and refereed the first game, at the São Paulo Athletic Club in 1894, the only one of what I think of as the quintessentials of Brazil that Frank Dodd is likely to have known about, even at the end of his life, is the coffee.

Brazil had been a republic for seven years when Frank arrived: the monarchy had been overthrown in 1889. When the Portuguese royal family had fled to Brazil from the threat of being deposed by Napoleon, they had set up their court in Rio de Janeiro and Rio continued as the capital of the republic until Brasilia was finished, so during Frank's working life the city was where all foreign diplomats lived and worked. Rio was also more important in Frank's time than it is now as a business centre - that role has been taken over by São Paulo.

When Frank moved there, Brazil's economy was still based on agricultural produce, like it had been from its foundation as a colony of Portugal, but coffee had taken over from cotton and sugar as its main export, with most being grown in the states of Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, using the labour of recent immigrants (from Portugal and Italy for example) rather than slaves. In addition Brazil was growing tobacco and cocoa, and from shortly after Frank arrived in Brazil, rubber as well. There was some light industry, based on these agricultural products: textiles, clothes, food processing; and gems had been mined in the state of Minas Gerais for several centuries. Both agriculture and industry were concentrated in the south of Brazil. The north-east, where the original, colonial, plantations had been, was turning into a semi-desert and the vast country's interior was all but unexplored and not at all developed. Everywhere, infrastructure was almost entirely lacking.

The British Bank of South America (not called by that name yet, but I'm trying to keep this simple) had not been founded to lend money to Brazilian business, its purpose was to invest in and otherwise help British companies working in Brazil: coffee exporters in particular but also textile companies and railway companies including the company that built the all-important railway between São Paulo and its nearest port, Santos. Later it moved more into the financing of city infrastructure, making loans to the companies constructing São Paulo's water and sewage network (all British companies, I think). Like its rival British banks in South America, its senior employees and most of its junior employees were British. When Frank Dodd arrived he almost certainly spoke no Portuguese at all but that will not have hampered him during the working day: all business at the Bank was conducted in English; and the Bank's records are in English.

Because of political alliances between Portugal and Britain going back to Charles II and Catharine of Bragança, the British presence in Rio de Janeiro was well-established by the 1890s. An Anglican church had been founded in 1819 in Botafogo, the district between the Sugarloaf and the Corcovado; and the first person was interred in the Gamboa English cemetery in 1811. There were English-speaking schools and clubs for ex pat British residents. However, the diplomatic and business communities were from different classes; in the 19th century that really mattered, and the two groups didn't really mix. It was not until the years after World War I that efforts were made to get them to talk to each other.

Frank Dodd took up a post at one of the Bank's two branches in Rio de Janeiro. The Bank's programme of opening new branches was racing ahead of the number of experienced employees and by 1899 Frank was signing-off a set of accounts issued by the Bank at Rio de Janeiro, acting as "pro Manager" - that is, doing the branch manager's job in the absence of someone more senior; the other man signing off these accounts was also acting up, as "pro Accountant". Soon after this (I haven't been able to find out exactly when, but before 1910) he was appointed manager of the Bank's branch at São Paulo; where (I think) he met and married his wife Anna. This important promotion duly acted as a springboard from which Frank went on to even greater things: by November 1910 he had been recalled to the head office (then at 2a Moorgate in the City of London) and was chairing the annual meeting of one of the companies the British Bank of South America had invested in - the Cartagena (Colombia) Railway Company. The move back to London was probably in preparation for the retirement, at the end of 1911, of the Bank's senior manager in charge of its branches. Frank's immediate boss was promoted to take the retired man's job; and Frank took his boss's job and became company secretary. This job wasn't quite as far up the scale as it sounds - in a list of senior employees issued in March 1912, there were three men senior to Frank; however, it was the latest rung in a rapid rise for a man who was only 40.

Over the last 20 years or so the British Bank of South America had been comfortably profitable without requiring its shareholders to dig into their pockets to find more capital. In March 1912, however, Frank was called on to oversee a new share issue, to double the Bank's working capital to £2 million by inviting people to invest in 25000 new shares at £20 each. That year (and presumably other years until he took up a new post) he also presided over the paying out of dividends on shares in another of the Bank's pet companies, the Mogyana (Railway) Company. The new share issue was all taken up by keen investors; and in March 1913, the Bank moved into a grand new headquarters building at 4 Moorgate; the English Heritage website has some photographs of it.

Though it won't have seemed like it at the time, the move to the new building turned out to be the pinnacle of the Bank's history: the following year World War I stopped the programme of expansion and all City firms lost employees to volunteering and call-up. Because of restrictions on the number of pages allowed to newspapers, I haven't been able to follow Frank's working life during the first world war. I suppose he continued to work as Company Secretary. He was certainly in London in June 1919 when the president of Brazil, Dr Epitacio Pessôa, paid an official visit to Britain. Frank was amongst the many guests at the Mansion House when President Pessôa and his wife went to lunch with the Lord Mayor.

Underneath the glitter of that presidential lunch, all was not well at the British Bank of South America; and in February 1920 it was taken over by the Anglo-South American Bank. Anglo-South had been founded in Chile in 1889, as the Bank of Tarapacá, by John Thomas North. Most of its assets were in Chilean nitrates and it had done particularly well out of World War I when saltpeter was needed for munitions. Now flush with cash, it was expanding its operations in South America, not as Frank's employer had done by opening new branches but by swallowing other banks. Agreement between the two boards of directors was reached in three weeks, and agreed by Anglo-South's shareholders in not much longer. Although the two banks continued to keep separate accounts, and have separate boards, the British Bank of South America moved out of its still-new headquarters building to less fancy offices in Broad Street; two men from Anglo-South joined its board and one of them soon became chairman; and employees from Anglo-South started to outrank their British Bank of South America counterparts. The take-over ended any hopes of further promotion that Frank Dodd might have been cherishing. He returned to Brasil, where his first task under the new regime was to accompany Anglo-South's Mr L H Klek on a fact-finding tour of the British Bank of South America's branches in Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil's southern-most state, Rio Grande do Sul. I'm not sure, because I haven't found any good information on it, but I think Frank spent his last years at British Bank of South America back at its branches in Rio de Janeiro, probably as the Bank's most senior employee in South America.

Being taken-over by the Anglo-South American Bank was one of those things that looked like a good idea at the time; but even in 1920, the days of making profits from nitrates in Chile were numbered. The Haber process of converting atmospheric nitrogen to ammonia had first been demonstrated in Germany in 1909; the process was bought by BASF and went into mass-production in 1913. The circumstances of the first world war had hidden this development from British eyes but they should, perhaps, have been alerted to it by Haber's Nobel Prize, awarded in 1918. Neither British Bank of South America nor Anglo-South American Bank seem to have understood the implications of the Haber process; but during the 1920s the count-down was on for both of them.

If Frank Dodd was still working in London during World War I he will not have taken any active part in the founding of the British Chamber of Commerce in Rio de Janeiro in 1916. Back in Brazil in 1920, however, he was elected to serve as its second president; and spent two years as an active leader of it, expanding its sphere of influence amongst the business community (who hadn't all been enthusiastic about it at the start) and trying to build bridges towards the British diplomatic community. Times were hard. Brazil's economy had suffered badly during World War I and British businesses in Brazil had inevitably felt the effects. When Frank made his president's speech at the Chamber of Commerce's AGM on 3 February 1921 he tried his best to be positive, but he still worried about taxes and the threat of Communism. His efforts with British diplomats had had results: the Consul-General, Mr Errol MacDonell, attended the meeting, and so did several Embassy employees on the commercial side. In February 1922 even the ambassador, Sir John Tilley, was at the meeting and dinner at which Frank handed the presidency on to his successor. Tilley made a speech in which he mentioned how grateful he had been for Frank's help and advice when he had first arrived in Brazil to take up his appointment. Frank didn't serve as the Chamber of Commerce's president again but probably was a member of several of its sub-committees over the next few years: there was one on banking and finance which I imagine he was chairman of.

I can't find out when Frank Dodd retired. He reached the age of 65 in the early months of 1936. Despite the great financial crash of 1929 and the very difficult years after it, the British Bank of South America was still making a small profit. At its AGM in London in May 1936, the shareholders were promised a dividend of 2%. Time was passing, though: two long-serving directors had died since the last annual meeting. If Frank thought it was time to go, he judged correctly. There was no indication of anything wrong at British Bank of South America at this AGM, but there was big trouble at Anglo-South.

In 1931, with demand for Chilean nitrates in rapid decline, other banks had had to step in and prop up Anglo-South to the tune of £8½ million. (I know the figures are tiny in comparison, but does this sound familiar to anyone? - bank over-reaching itself by borrowing money to buy out other banks? Then all but going bankrupt? Plus c'est la même chose. Bankers never learn.) The £8½ million was the value placed by the proppers-up on the nitrate assets of Anglo-South, on the assumption that nitrate prices would go up eventually. The bailers-out had forced a new chairman on Anglo-South, with a brief to get the Bank out of trouble by whatever means; but economic circumstances had been against him. By mid-1936 it was understood that the price of nitrates from Chile would never recover. Unfavourable exchange rates had made Anglo-South's situation worse and at a meeting on 17 July 1936, its shareholders voted to allow the bank to be taken over by yet another South American specialist bank, the Bank of London and South America; the alternative was to allow Anglo-South to go bankrupt. As British Bank of South America was part of Anglo-South, it was forced to take part in the process of voluntary liquidation that followed: in August 1936, meetings of the shareholders of British Bank of South America and Anglo-South American Bank took place one after the other and voted to hand each Bank's assets to Bank of London and South America of 6-8 Tokenhouse Yard. British Bank of South America had always had a pension scheme for its employees, so Frank's pension was probably safe; but the end of his working life was coloured by the failure of his employer.

It must have been around the time of Frank's retirement that he made his longest-lasting contribution towards friendly relations between Britain and Brasil. In 1934, he helped to found the Sociedade Brasileira de Cultura Inglesa (Brazilian Society for English Culture). This still exists and has two modern functions: teaching English as a second language; and helping to arrange the visits of British artists and musicians to Brasil.

Most British people working abroad for a British company expected and planned for a return to Britain when they retired. Frank Dodd stayed in Brasil and began on a project he must have been planning and researching for many years: his book An Introduction to the Study of Christianity which was published, in English and in England, in 1938. In his preface, Frank made no great claims as a theologian and said that in any case, he hadn't wanted to write another theological tract. He wanted to write an introduction to Christian theology, for a very modern readership - the large group of adults who perhaps wanted to believe (or return to believing) but objected to most of the available works on the subject, as either too unquestioning of their subject-matter, or too hostile to it. Frank intended to persuade this group that such failures were due not to any fundamental flaw in Christ's message; but to the "imperfection" (as he called it) of all-too-many writers on theology. Frank was anxious to reach this group because as parents they would have an important influence on subsequent generations, through the choices they made about their children's education. As a man still a committed member of the Anglican community in Rio, but living in a country which was exuberantly Catholic with pagan-animist undertones, he was very-placed to advise them. He and his wife were very even-handed when it came to their own children, at least as far as baptisms went - all the children were baptised as Protestants and as Catholics.

The main body of the book was a history of Christianity, which Frank saw as having reached a peak of power and influence during the 13th century; from which it had been going downhill ever since, as a result of inappropriate priorities, and challenges to dogma which it had failed to counter adequately. The book's appendices were an interesting set and showed the breadth of Frank's reading. There was a set of short extracts from the Bhagavad Gita (for the purpose of comparing its dogma with Christianity's); and discussions on suffering and shame in spiritual development, the theology of the Albigensian heresy, and the Portuguese expeditions to the new world.

Summing up his argument at the end of the book, Frank still held that despite all the criticisms that could be levelled at the Christian faith, the essence of the story of Jesus and His message still held good. Frank then offered a religious theory for his times - the only one he thought harmonised with modern science: that God had chosen one human, who "on account of his superlative merits became the vehicle of the Christ Spirit" in a union between God and Man; thus facilitating other such unions. Frank ended by hoping not that he had convinced his readers to believe, but that he had convinced them to investigate the subject and reach their own conclusions.

The book suggests that Frank had had his own period of doubt as regards his religious faith. Perhaps it had come during the 1890s. Perhaps he had discussed religion and belief with his friend Herbert Crossley Morris, and had accepted the offer to join the Golden Dawn while looking for alternatives to Christianity. His book's inclusion of pieces from the Bhagavad Gita shows another alternative he looked at - not Hinduism, probably, but theosophy. As part of his book's summing up, Frank printed a long quote from Rudolf Steiner's essay 'Human Conscience', showing that his reading had taken in theosophy's descendant anthroposophy as well. However, in the end, none of the alternatives convinced him and he remained true to Anglican Christianity.

He and his family were important members of the congregation of Christ Church Botafogo in Rio, and later in life he was a friend of Daniel Ivor Evans (1900-62) whose Church of England bishopric included Argentina, Brasil and the Falkland Islands.

FRANK'S FAMILY

In 1904 Frank Dodd married Anna Cotching da Fonseca, to give his wife her full, formal Brazilian name which includes both parents' surnames. She was the daughter of an Englishman, William Mackrell Cotching, and his Brazilian wife Gertrudes da Fonseca. William Mackrell Cotching's family were from Bedfordshire just north of London, and were Wesleyan Methodists. William's father (James Walter Cotching) and his business partner had run a firm making and selling straw hats, in the 1850s; but in 1863 the firm had gone bankrupt and as a result William and his siblings had had to make their own way in the world. William Mackrell Cotching, like Frank Dodd, had made the decision to move outside the British empire in the search for work. He arrived in Brasil in 1875 and by 1892 was in São Paulo, working as company secretary of an English firm which did plumbing and gas fitting with equipment imported from Britain and the USA.

William Mackrell Cotching married into the Brazilian landed class. Gertrudes da Fonseca's family owned the Fazenda Cachoeira do Jica, an estate near Itu in the state of São Paulo and their daughters Anna and Victoria grew up there. They went to a local school run by nuns, the Colégio Nossa Senhora do Patrocinio, in Itu.

Frank and Anna had four children: Mary; another Edward; Gertrude, known as Pippa; and Sylvia, the youngest. The three eldest were born in Brazil; Sylvia was born in south London, in 1913.

I found on the web a few references to Mary Jessop Dodd who married Gilberto Ferrez, a Brazilian historian who made use of amateur watercolours and photographs to chart the development of Rio de Janeiro during the 19th century.

I found one item on Frank's son Edward, in the London Gazette: Edward William Cotching da Fonseca Dodd, who had worked for a telephone company in Brazil. He died, in the family home at Rio de Janeiro, in July 1960.

Frank's daughter Pippa married an English diplomat, an Eton-and-Oxbridge man - a real step up the social ladder. Frank and Anna were so pleased about this that they put a notice about it in the Times. Anthony Haigh and Gertrude Dodd were married in 1935. They had four children but were divorced in 1971.

Frank's last years, and those of his wife Anna, were coloured by illness and the need for constant nursing care. Frank had a stroke, which robbed him of the ability to speak. His daughter Sylvia had married Martin Barral López, a Spanish-born sculptor. They and their three children moved in with him.

Frank Dodd died at his home, Rua Barão de Mesquita 539 Rio de Janeiro, on 26 September 1955.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR FRANK DODD

FAMILY HISTORY INFORMATION on Frank's early life and his last years; on the family of his wife Anna Cotching da Fonseca; and the existence of Frank's book (which I didn't know about before). Sent to me in a series of emails February and March 2014 by Frank Dodd's grand-daughter Juanita Barral Dodd Farah, eldest daughter of Sylvia Dodd de Barral (1913-1979). Sylvia married Martin Barral López (1889-1982) in Rio de Janeiro. He had been born in Sepulveda Spain. Their three children are Juanita, Vivian Mary Barral Dodd Rumjaneck and Frank Anthony Barral Dodd.

ALL SAINTS' SCHOOL BLOXHAM and its founder Rev P R Egerton:

See wikipedia.

Frank and his brother Herbert at school: "Old Bloxhamist Society" details sent by registrar@bloxhamschool to Juanita Farah.

About the Cambridge University exams taken by Frank Dodd at school. All I could find was at archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com, posted 2005 a reference to a pdf file on the history of the Oxford and Cambridge Examinations Board from when it was established, in 1885.

Frank's initiation into the Golden Dawn; and confirmation of his employer:

FML GD Colln GBR 1991 GD2/3/1/17 is a letter dated 19 April 1896 from Dodd to the "Chiefs of the Order of the Golden Dawn in the Outer". The address for any reply is: "c/o the British Bank of South America" at Rio de Janeiro Brazil. The letter is annotated with a note in red by Mathers saying that he'd already had this problem crop up in the Paris temple the GD member Emile Adrianyi of Budapest. Mathers' note approved the sending of various documents to Dodd for him to sign and copy. Dodd could also do the exam work long distance.

FRANK'S ARRIVAL IN SOUTH AMERICA

Retrieved from the Serviço de Registro de Estrangeiros by Juanita Farah: he was on board the Danube, which reached Rio de Janeiro on 11 August 1895.

THE BRITISH BANK OF SOUTH AMERICA

Some of the Bank's records are at University College London though I should say, here and now, that I have not looked at them in search of Frank Dodd; I think I've got enough for this short biography via the sources I mention below. At www.aim25.ac.uk there are details of what's held in UCL's archives collection. It covers the period 1863 to 1927, not quite the full history of the Bank though it probably covers most of Frank Dodd's working life. There are three boxes and material includes letter books as well as accounts. All records are in English.

There's also information on the history of the Bank at www.ucl.ac.uk/Library/special-coll;

And in Britain and the Onset of Modernization in Brazil by Richard Graham. 1972. P96 and p117.

A history of the Anglo-South American Bank can be found via archiveshub.ac.uk. Its records are also at University College London.

Brazil in the late 19th century:

Some dates from www.facts-about.org.uk

At Wikipedia an economic history of Brazil written, I think, by Americans.

My own memories of my degree course in Latin American history; and my geography A level.

God is Brazilian: Charles Miller, the Man who brought Football to Brazil by Josh Lacey 2005.

BBSA

Via google to memoria.bn.br and related website memoria.org.br, which are newspaper/journal sites for publications in English covering 19th and 20th cent Brasil: Rio News; and Wileman's Brazilian Review (whose first issue was not until 1908 and so didn't cover the earlier part of Frank's career).

And the Times, always good for business news during the Golden Dawn period.

See the swanky new headquarters building at www.englishheritagearchives.org.uk. All photographs were taken in 1912, just before the workers moved in.

The Bankers' Magazine volume 93 1912 p289 news from the British Bank of South America that its sub-manager at head office, Henry Kimber Gregory, was retiring of nearly 39 years with the bank. William Herbert Hollis, currently Company Secretary, would take Gregory's job as sub-manager. Frank Dodd, currently "manager of the São Paulo branch" would take Hollis' job as Company Secretary.

The Bankers' Magazine volume 93 1912 p635 states that Frank Dodd was manager of the British Bank of South America's branch at São Paulo when on 31 Dec 1911 he was promoted to become Company Secretary.

Coverage of 1920s, but not before, from Brazilian American.

The demise of Anglo-South and British Bank of South America is covered well by the Times.

For the Haber Process and its effects on the trade in Chilean nitrates: wikipedia. And for the chemistry, my partner Roger Wright's copy of A Textbook of Inorganic Chemistry by J R Partington, p543. Published Macmillan and Co Ltd 1926 and given to Roger by his father.

THE DODDS and FRANK'S CHILDREN

Edward Dodd:

Frank's father Edward Dodd had been born in Lincoln but the Dodd family was a Wiltshire one: at www.gravestonephotos.com, there's a photo of GPR grave number 154514 in the municipal cemetery at Wootton Bassett. The grave has these people in it:

- Harriet Anne Dodd probably born 1828 died 1879
- Mary Dodd died 1882 aged 38, Harriet's sister-in-law
- Edward Dodd probably born 1826 died 1905, Harriet's brother
- Catherine Adelaide Dodd probably born 1831 died 1924, Harriet's sister

It does NOT have these people in it: Eleanor, sister of Harriet, Edward and Catherine; and Frank's brother Herbert.

THE COTCHING and DA FONSECA FAMILIES IN BRASIL

Fazenda Cachoeira do Jica, the da Fonseca family estate, at Indaiatuba, near Itu in the state of São Paulo. It now has a Brazilian equivalent to 'listed' status as "patrimônio cultural de Indaiatuba".

Anna's father was William Mackrell Cotching. That he was a member of a British mission to Brasil in March 1875 was mentioned in Gazeta de Notícias March 23, 1924; information sent by Juanita Farah.

Anna's brother Dr Eduardo Cotching da Fonseca: via google to www.srb.org.br in Portuguese, it's the website of Sociedade Rural Brasileira. He was one of its founders. Plenty of mentions on the web of the avenida in São Paulo which is named after him.

Coffee and Transformation in São Paulo Brasil by Mauricio A Font 2010 p342 the bibliography refers to a book Defesa Permanente do Café by Dr Eduardo da Fonseca Cotching, published in 1921.

ANNA COTCHING

Education: Thesis of Maria Iza Gerth da Cunha at website "Educação Feminina numa instituição total confessional católica Colégio Nossa Senhora do Patrocinio" sent to Juanita Farah by email by Clarice Caires, a researcher based in São Paulo. The thesis' Anexo 1 is a list of the pupils at the school 1859-1909.

I

Marriage of Frank Dodd and Anna Cotching da Fonseca took place in São Paulo on 2 May 1904. Information sent by Juanita Farah.

Frank and Anna's eldest daughter Mary Jessop Dodd:

A Guide to the History of Brazil 1500-1822 by Francis A Dutra. Published by ABC-Clio 1980 p605 has entries for Gilberto Ferrez and Mary Jessop Dodd Ferrez.

The Origins of the Carioca belle époque by Jeffrey David Needell. Stanford University Press 1982 pvii in the acknowledgements a reference to information and hospitality given to Needell by Gilberto Ferrez and his wife.

Pioneer Photographers of Brazil 1840-1920 by Gilberto Ferrez and Weston J Naef. Published by the Center for Inter-American Relations 1976.

Franz Frühbeck's Brazilian Journey by Robert C Smith and Gilberto Ferrez published 1960.

And at Amazon I found Aquarelas de Richard Bate (watercolours) with an introduction by Gilberto Ferrez and an English language version by Mary Jessop Dodd Ferrez. Rio: Galeria Brasileira 1965. At pt.wikipedia.org, in Port, I found a little about Bate: Richard Bate 1775-1856 was a businessman and artist. He went to Rio in 1807. The wikipedia article refers to Gilberto Ferrez as "historiador".

The reference to Frank Dodd's son Edward:

London Gazette 30 Dec 1966 p14189 is a series of legal notices about people who had recently died. Edward William Cotching da Fonseca Dodd's address was 539 Rua Barso de Mesquita Rio de Janeiro.

Pippa Dodd's husband Anthony Haigh. That he was known as Anthony rather than Austin is: personal communication from Anthony Haigh's son Geoffrey, sent via Juanita Farah February 2014.

Times 16 Oct 1935 p1a marriage notices: on 27 September 1935 at Christ Church Rio de Janeiro, Austin Anthony Francis Haigh to Gertrude (known as Pippa), 2nd daughter of Mr and Mrs Frank Dodd of 539 Rua Barrão de Mesquita Rio de Janeiro.

Snippet of Foreign Office List edition of 1963 p230: Anthony Haigh. Born 1907. Educated at Eton and King's College Cambridge. Joined Foreign Office 1932. Posted to Rio de Janeiro in January 1934. His next posting was to Tokyo, 1936; so Pippa went with him there.

On the end of his career: Who Was Who edition of 1986. Anthony Haigh retired after serving as Director of Education and Cultural and Scientific Affairs at the Council of Europe from 1962 to 1968. He was a son of P B Haigh of the Indian Civil Service. He and Gertrude were divorced in 1971 and he remarried, also in 1971.

FRANK'S RETIREMENT

Sociedade Brasileira de Cultura Inglesa. See wikipedia. That Frank was one of its founders: email from Frank's grand-daughter.

DANIEL IVOR EVANS

Who Was Who volume VI 1961-70: p355. Just noting that Evans' headquarters as bishop of eastern South America was Buenos Aires, not Rio de Janeiro.

FRANK DODD'S BOOK: An Introduction to the Study of Christianity London: George Allen and Unwin Ltd 1938.

Frank's death:

Times 28 Sep 1955 p1 death notice for Frank Dodd, husband of Anna; father of Mary, Edward, Pippa and Sylvia; and with 14 grandchildren. He'd been living in Brazil for 60 years.

Probate Registry: Frank Dodd of Rua Barão de Mesquita 539 Rio de Janeiro died on 26 September 1955. Probate granted in London 9 May 1956 to Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Company Ltd. Personal effects £13144/16/6 in England.

Original text 28 November 2012

Update 17 March 2014

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Emily Ann Drummond was initiated into the GD at its Amon-Ra temple in Edinburgh on 11 February 1895. She chose the Latin motto 'In deo confido'. One other person was initiated during the same ritual - Margaret Jane Dalziel Grant - and I think it's likely the two women knew each other beforehand.

Several months later, on 11 November 1895, Emily's elder daughter Edith Drummond was initiated, also at the Amon-Ra temple, and took the Latin motto 'Fideliter'. Emily MacLaren was initiated the same evening and was probably an acquaintance of both the Drummonds.

Despite attempting to give information on the lives of two GD members, this is still one of my short biographies. As I'm based in London, I'm handicapped in researching the lives of people living in Scotland, and the information below shows it. In particular, it's biased towards Emily's blood relations rather than her husband's family, as it was easier to spot them using London-based sources and the web. I'm sure there's far more information on William Drummond out there, but it will be in Edinburgh...I'd need to be on the spot to look at it, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

April 2016

A note on sources: there's a main sources section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources are listed at the end of each section.

This is what I have found on EMILY ANN DRUMMOND née MASON and her daughter EDITH DRUMMOND.

IN THE GD

Emily and Edith were very keen students, particularly of those aspects of the occult that leaned towards freemasonry. Study work and even passing exams were necessary to reach the GD's inner 2nd Order, where you were allowed to do practical magic. The Drummonds both reached that level, Emily being initiated in June 1896 and Edith in February 1897.

It's not clear how long Emily and Edith remained active members of Amon-Ra as its records have been lost. However, some sources that have survived indicate that Amon-Ra seems to have been riven with factionalism, which drove people away. The infighting often had a social-class-based edge to it. The creation of the Cromlech Temple - as a temple within the temple, with members hand-picked by Amon-Ra founder John William Brodie-Innes - was particularly divisive. Emily and Edith might well have been two of those hand-picked members, however: Emily's husband William Drummond was a legal colleague of John William Brodie-Innes and the two families may have been friends.

After the collapse of the original GD in London during 1903, several daughter orders were founded. Membership records of the two best-known - Stella Matutina and the Independent and Rectified Rite - still exist. The Drummonds didn't join either of them, probably because they met in London. In December 1910, John William Brodie-Innes founded another GD temple in Edinburgh, which lasted for a few years. Emily was dead by that time. Edith may have joined it but probably not: during the 1900s both the Drummonds had become involved in co-masonry.

Sources:

See the main Sources section below. And:

For strife in the Amon-Ra temple: Letters to Frederick Leigh Gardner from William Sutherland Hunter, who lived in Glasgow and worked in his family's flour-importing firm: 1 June 1897; 28 September 1897 by which time Hunter was keeping away from Amon-Ra's meetings so as to avoid having to take sides; and 17 January 1898. Warburg Institute; Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue reference NS73.

For John William Brodie-Innes' temples in Edinburgh: R A Gilbert's The Golden Dawn Companion p38; for full publication details see the main Sources section.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Definitely.

THEOSOPHY

The week before her GD initiation, Emily became a member of the Theosophical Society. The sponsors of Emily's application were the founders of the TS lodge in Edinburgh and its GD temple, Amon-Ra - John William Brodie-Innes and his wife Frances. TS lodge meetings were held in their house. In Bradford and Edinburgh nearly everyone who was in the TS was initiated into the GD as well: in both cities there was a small group of people with esoteric interests, many of whom knew each other in their daily lives as well as their leisure time. Not all of those who accepted the offer of initiation into the GD ever followed it up, but Emily was an active member of both societies in the late 1890s.

Usually it was TS members who joined the GD but Edith Drummond did it the other way round: she had been in the GD for three years when she joined the TS's Edinburgh lodge in April 1898. Her sponsors were not her mother, nor the Brodie-Inneses; they were Mary and George Simpson.

Emily and Edith sponsored a few membership applications in 1900: Emily sponsored Robert Forrest Sibbald, his other sponsor being Andrew Petrie Cattanach, who ran the TS library in Edinburgh and was a GD member. Emily and Edith together sponsored the application of Florence Laing. I assume that both Sibbald and Laing were friends of the Drummonds in Edinburgh.

The TS membership records show both Emily and Edith continuing to pay their yearly subscriptions until 1908. Then they both resigned on the same day, 11 March 1909.

CO-MASONRY

By the early 1900s both Emily and Edith Drummond became aware of the existence of co-masonry. Orthodox freemasonry - as represented for example by the grand lodges of England and Scotland - is a male preserve. However, at the end of the 19th century some lodges had been founded in France specifically to allow women to be initiated: this is co-masonry, which still exists, but which is still barely recognised by male freemasonry.

The first co-masonry lodge in the UK was founded by Annie Besant and Ursula Bright in September 1902. It was the Lodge of Human Duty, number 6, and seems to have met at Mrs Bright's home, 31 St James's Place in London. Emily Drummond was initiated into Human Duty lodge number 6 in April 1904. Even at the time Emily saw this initiation as the first step towards the founding of a co-masonry lodge in Scotland, and co-masonry lodge Christian Rosenkreuz number 18 was consecrated in Edinburgh in July 1905. The name will have been carefully chosen and has a GD connection, as in its early days, the GD's rituals were strongly influenced by Rosicrucian ideas and symbolism. Annie Besant led the consecration, as Inspector-General of Co-masonry in the UK, and Emily Drummond was one of the main celebrants. Emily served as Christian Rosenkreuz number 18's Worshipful Master in 1907.

Emily's freemasonry interests were very much influenced by Scottish freemasonry, which had always had a rather different focus to that of England. In 1908 a Mark Masons co-masonry lodge was founded in Edinburgh, largely as a result of her efforts; and she was prevented from founding a Rose-Croix chapter only by illness. She researched the history of the subject and wrote papers for lodge meetings, some of which were published in the magazine The Co-Mason. The first of these was on the Mark Master Mason ritual and was published when Christian Rosenkreuz number 18 added a 4th degree (a Mark degree) to its workings - a ritual used widely in Scottish lodges.

Emily's second article - The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite and Co-Masonry - looked at the history of the Rite from its first use in 18th-century France to its journey to Scotland via the USA. She had read articles by Robert Freke Gould and A E Waite's Studies in Mysticism and other works in the library of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Her article accepted without question the continuous descent of the basics of freemasonry from medieval stone masons' rituals; but that was a belief widely held at the time.

Emily's last paper was on The Symbolism of the Lodge and the Pillars. I couldn't find the full article in The Co-Mason, only a summary of it, and as I'm no occultist myself I'm not sure what exactly what Emily's argument was.

Edith Drummond shared Emily's interest in freemasonry. She and her mother worked together to help found Christian Rosenkreuz lodge number 18. Edith acted as the lodge's warden for its first three years before being installed as its Worshipful Master in 1908 or 1909 (my sources weren't quite clear which year). The installation of the lodge's warden took place on 27 December each year, a date chosen by Edith, who wrote up the reasons for her choice in her article St John's Day in Freemasonry. Edith had read widely on the importance of St John the Evangelist's day to Scottish freemasonry lodges in the 18th century. And she had exercised her powers of persuasion on the archivists of some Scottish lodges to let her see the lodge Minutes - documents not usually available to non-members. Her article argued that the decision to focus on St John's day was restoring to prominence a celebration that had fallen out of favour in the last century.

All the articles by Emily and Edith were very anxious to portray co-masonry as a serious, well-informed, legitimate inheritor and practitioner of freemasonry's traditions. Emily's article on the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite argued that co-masonry was an offshoot of the Rite's original form - a form which in addition to apparently not being hostile to women in freemasonry was also more overtly Christian in its tone than later revisions. She ended her article with a plea to male freemasonry to let women in. Women are still waiting, of course!

Such was Emily Drummond's importance to co-masonry in Scotland that her death in January 1910 left it reeling. Emily's paper on the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite was read out at the meeting of Christian Rosenkreuz lodge number 18 on 22 February 1910 - the first since news of the death had been made public - amidst general shock and concern about the lodge's future. There was much debate over the next few months about how co-masonry could honour Emily's contribution to it in Scotland. In the end, the decision was made to form a chapter of the Knights of the Rose Croix in Edinburgh and to call it St Ann, after Emily Ann Drummond. Rose Croix Chapter St Ann number 3 was inaugurated in January 1912. During the ceremony Edith Drummond was installed as its first MWS and she then installed its other officers for the coming year.

Edith Drummond took on her mother's mantle in Scottish co-masonry. However, sources are lacking for the contributions she made to it after 1912.

Emily and Edith Drummond were unusual amongst GD members in being drawn to co-masonry, but they were not quite the only co-masons the GD produced. Francis Drake Harrison, and Oliver Firth, both of whom were in the GD in Bradford for a short time, became co-masons. In 1911 Harrison was Grand Secretary of Co-Masonry in Britain. As such, he went to Edinburgh to preside over the inauguration of Rose Croix Chapter St Ann number 3. A E Waite mentions that at least before the first World War, there was a co-masonry lodge in Bradford.

Sources:

THEOSOPHY

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p248 entry for Mrs Emily Drummond. Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1898-February 1901 p203, p205.

Theosophical Society Membership Register April 1895 to May 1898 p241 entry for Miss Edith Drummond. Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1898-February 1901 p205.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume VII September 1890 to February 1891, editors Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Annie Besant. London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume VII issue of 15 December 1890 p344 for Edinburgh's library, which was in Andrew Cattanach's house at 67 Brunswick Street.

CO-MASONRY

The International Order of Freemasonry for Men and Women has a website at www.freemasonryformenandwomen.co.uk.

Its headquarters are in Surbiton. The website has a list of the current co-masonry lodges. The only lodge still working the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite is the Scottish Lodge number 884, founded in 1927 and despite its title holding its meetings in Surbiton. Human Duty lodge number 6 still exists - see the website. I couldn't see any reference to Christian Rosenkreuz number 18 at this website or anywhere else on the web. The omens are not good for its survival after - say - the first World War when so many things came to an end.

For the tangled and dubious history of Rosicrucianism its wikipedia page seems like a good place to start.

Women's Agency and Rituals in Mixed and Female Masonic Orders editors Alexandra Heidle and Jan A M Snoek. Boston and Leiden: Brill; in their Texts and Studies in Western Esotericism series. 2008: pp344-346, p354, p359.

The Co-Mason's issue of January 1909 was its volume 1 number 1. Published by Wadsworth and Co and the Rydal press of Keighley for its editor, A Bothwell Gosse of 13 Blomfield Road Paddington. On pp26-27 St John's Day in Freemasonry by Edith Drummond. On p28 news of Christian Rosenkreutz Lodge number 18 based in Edinburgh

The Co-Mason volume 1 number 2 April 1909: pp14-16 short article on Christian Rosenkreutz number 18 and Mark Master Masonry, by Emily Drummond.

The Co-Mason volume 2 issue of April 1910 was dominated by the death of Emily Ann Drummond: p61 obituary with a photograph of her on the opposite page. On pp84-87 was the Part 1 of Emily's article The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite; p100 about Edith's reading of it at the next Christian Rosenkreutz number 18 meeting.

The Co-Mason volume 2 issue of July 1910 pp123-127 Part 2 of Emily Drummond's The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite.

The Co-Mason volume 3 issue of April 1911 p84: news of the recent meeting of Christian Rosenkreutz lodge number 18, Edinburgh; and a short resumé of Emily Drummond's paper: The Symbolism of the Lodge and the Pillars, read at that meeting by Edith Drummond.

The Co-Mason volume 4 issue of April 1912 p100 St Ann chapter number 3 Edinburgh; and p101 its inauguration by F D Harrison.

Volume 4 was the last one I looked at. Volumes 3 and 4 had concentrated more and more on events in London, as if since Emily Drummond's death links between the English co-masonry lodges and the Scottish ones had been weakened. The Scottish lodges weren't sending so much information to the magazine for publication. By Volume 4 there had been a change of editor, too - another break with past sources of information.

Both Emily and Edith Drummond had read the works of Robert Freke Gould (1836-1915) on the history of freemasonry in Britain.

The History of Freemasonry... by Robert Freke Gould is one they are likely to have studied. It had originally been published in Edinburgh by T C and E C Jack. 3 volumes undated but British Library catalogue says probably 1886. There was a later edition published London: Blackwood Le Bas and Co circa 1903.

Ars Quatuor Coronati 2076 Volume 1 1886-88 p1 names R F Gould as one of the men who made the formal request to the United Grand Lodge of England to allow the lodge Quatuor Coronati 2076 to be set up. QC2076 was a forum for the study of the history and symbolism of freemasonry. Ars Quatuor Coronati was its Transactions... magazine, available to a large number of corresponding members as well as the elected members. It was not, I think, available to non-freemasons but I expect that the Drummonds could have got hold of copies in Edinburgh if they had wanted to.

Emily mentioned two specific works she had read while preparing her 'Scottish Rite' article: Studies in Mysticism and Certain Aspects of the Secret Tradition by A E Waite. London: Hodder and Stoughton 1906.

And a work Emily referred to as "the Philaletheans". I think she meant Long Livers..., a speculation on why some people live to over 100; with a dedication to the freemasons of Great Britain. Credited to Eugenius Philalethes, published originally London: 1722. Reissued as Bain's Reprints number 2 1892 with a long introduction by R F Gould in which he attempted to identify the original author.

EMILY DRUMMOND - BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Emily came from a 'railway family': one that took full advantage of the mid-19th century's railway boom; and whose members continued to work for railway companies into the second and perhaps the third generation. As railways were laid throughout the UK, work of every kind became available from navvying to engineering to management. The Mason brothers - John, Emily's father Charles, and Samuel Lack - were educated enough to make their careers in railway administration.

Charles Mason's working life did not follow the more typical 19th-century pattern of one man/one employer/one town. He changed employers and moved to new cities several times. He began in the late 1840s in Brighton, in the goods office of the Brighton Railway. In 1855 he left Brighton for Yorkshire, to work for the North Eastern Railway as superintendent of its York district. He moved to the Wirral only two years later to become general manager of the Birkenhead Railway. In 1861 he changed employers for the last time when he was appointed goods manager of the London and North West Railway, based at Euston Square. He had been promoted to assistant general manager by the time of his death in 1869.

Charles' brothers do seem to have stayed with one railway company, John in Birmingham, and Samuel Lack Mason in Edinburgh as an employee of the North British Railway. Samuel Lack Mason was the NBR's general manager from 1867 to 1874.

Emily Mason's mother was called Ann. I haven't been able to identify the marriage of Emily's parents for certain, but a good candidate is the marriage of a Charles Mason to an Ann Sykes, at Holy Trinity Church Hull in 1848. On the day of the 1851 census, Charles and Ann Mason were living in the Mickelgate district of York, with one general servant. Their first child, Emily's elder brother Charles Henry Mason, was born a month or two later. Emily Anne Mason, the future GD member, was born early in 1854, in York; but the Masons had moved to Birkenhead by the time the youngest of the family - Arthur John - was born in mid-1855.

By 1861 Charles Mason had changed job again and the family had moved to north London. On census day 1861, Charles and Ann Mason were at 16 Queen's Road Marylebone, living in comfortable style as they were able to afford a cook, a housemaid and a nursery maid. They had moved yet again by the end of the decade - probably when Charles Mason was promoted - to 22 Albert Road Regent's Park. That was where Charles Mason died, on the morning of Tuesday 14 September 1869; at the age of 46. Emily was 15.

The early death of the breadwinner in mid-Victorian Britain could plunge his widow and children into poverty. However, Ann Mason's later census entries say she had income from an annuity; and there was money enough for Emily's older brother Charles Henry to be trained as a solicitor. Charles Henry then went to work in the LNWR's legal offices in Liverpool; and in due course Arthur John also joined the LNWR's managerial staff, becoming superintendent of the important junction at Melton Mowbray. A railway family.

Emily's mother was an executor of her husband's Will; with her two brothers-in-law John and Samuel Mason. Though she had a pension, Ann Mason thought it best to scale down her household, now that she was a widow. She remained in London where Charles Henry was already doing his solicitor's training, but by census day 1871 she had left Regent's Park for 11 Oseney Crescent, between Kentish Town and Holloway. All three of her children were still living at home but Ann was managing with just the one general servant and the help of Emily who had left school by this time. Arthur John was still at school.

It must have been through her uncle Samuel Lack Mason that Emily met Scottish lawyer William Drummond. She married him on 16 December 1872, at St Luke's church Oseney Crescent.

Sources: freebmd; censuses 1861-1901; probate registry 1869.

Railway Times 1869 p921 issue of 18 September 1869: announcement of the death of Charles Mason of the LNWR. In his leisure time was very interested in art; and he was a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society.

The Railway News 1869 p323 issue of 25 September 1869: obituary of Charles Mason and a report on his funeral. He was very well liked by his colleagues: so many people from so many railway companies wanted to attend the funeral that the GWR laid on a special train to take mourners from London to Stoke Poges, where he had been born, and was buried.

At www.nbrstudygroup.co.uk are the web pages of the North British Railway Study Group. Samuel Lack Mason is in a list of its general managers.

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1702265: marriage of Charles Mason to Ann Sykes 6 March 1848 at Holy Trinity Hull. His father is John Mason; her father is Isaac Sykes.

The Railway News volume 110 1918 p302 I'm not sure of the context, but Emily's father and both her brothers are mentioned. Charles Henry is described as "chief solicitor" of the LNWR.

The Railway Gazette volume 84 1946 p627 issue of 7 June 1946 has a reference to a man who worked as assistant solicitor to Charles Mason at the LNWR.

EMILY'S HUSBAND/EDITH'S FATHER

I've found curiously little information on the career of Emily's husband William Drummond; despite the fact that it seems to have been a very successful one, ending with him as solicitor to the Edinburgh supreme court. I've also found it difficult to identify him amongst the many William Drummonds mentioned on the web and elsewhere; so I'm not sure whether his father worked; whether William had any siblings or who they were; or where he was educated.

I am able to say that William Drummond was born in 1831, at Crieff in Perthshire - a stronghold of the Drummond family - the son of James Drummond and his wife Helen, née Clements. I'm also able to say that he trained as a lawyer and was later a 'writer to the Signet' - a phrase which seems now to mean that the person so described is the Scottish equivalent to an English solicitor, but which possibly in the 19th century implied a more privileged position in the legal hierarchy.

Wondering whether Emily's interest in freemasonry had come from her husband, I tried to discover whether William Drummond was involved in Scottish freemasonry. Evidence was lacking, so I've no idea whether or not he was a freemason. He and his younger daughter Florence don't seem to have shared Emily and Edith's interest in theosophy.

Just noting here that William Drummond was over 20 years Emily's senior. Such an age gap between husband and wife was nothing unusual in the 19th-century and despite being so much older, William outlived Emily by several years.

Sources:

Familysearch Scotland-ODM GS film number 1040076 for the baptism of William Drummond on 27 March 1831.

Website www.thewss.co.uk, Society of Writers to Her/His Majesty's Signet, with some information on how the Society got its name. GD member William McNair Wallace was another Writer to the Signet by 1901.

The Society's modern website seems to be at www.powerbase.info.

Sources for Scottish freemasonry.

Scotland's grand lodge is at www.grandlodgescotland.com.

At www.scotsman.com there's an article from 23 November 2003 which mentioned that the Grand Lodge was considering putting its membership records online. I couldn't see any evidence on the web that that excellent idea had been carried out; there's certainly no way to access individual membership data on the Grand Lodge's own website.

The only source I came across on the web for names of Scottish freemasons has its limitations because it only includes famous ones:

www.lodge76.wanadoo.co.uk/famous\_scottish\_freemasons.htm compiled by freemason J S Donaldson.

EMILY'S FAMILY including EDITH DRUMMOND

GD member Edith Drummond was the eldest of Emily and William's three children: born 14 November 1873, in Edinburgh. Her sister Florence was born a year later; and her brother Charles in 1877 or 1878.

It seems likely from the evidence I have been able to find that William and Emily lived in the same house throughout their married life - 4 Learmonth Terrace in the St Cuthbert district of Edinburgh. Emily kept house at that address with a staff of four, at least as far as 1901, the last census data I can get at. On census day 1881 there was a cook, a housemaid, a parlourmaid and a nursemaid. By 1891 Emily's children were all at school and the nurse had been dispensed with, to be replaced by a man-servant who probably worked for William.

On census day 1891 Emily's mother was paying her daughter and grandchildren a visit. By now Ann Mason had left London and gone to live with Emily's brother Charles Henry and his wife Hannah, in Birkenhead. Ann Mason died, in Birkenhead, in March 1899.

Edith Drummond was described as still in education on census day 1891, at the age of 18. She had a longer, and most likely more thorough, education than her mother, though both women were capable of tackling the often impenetrable texts of western theosophy; and of studying the history and symbolism of freemasonry and writing articles about it. Edith's formal education does seem to have ended when she left school, however - she never went to university as far as I can discover. Like any woman of her social class in that era, she would not have been expected to work for her living (and didn't do so, as far as I know) so there was no need for her to train for a career.

On census day 1901, Emily and Edith were both at home, with William and Charles. Charles had followed his father into the law and was a Writer to the Signet by this time. Florence was visiting Scottish-born Janet Steel and her children, in Belsize Square in London.

Sources: census 1881-1901 but not 1911; Scottish Probate Registry 1899 - property held in Scotland by Ann Mason of Birkenhead.

Familysearch Scotland-ODM GS film number 6035516 for the births of Edith and Florence. I couldn't find details on Charles' birth at Familysearch.

DEATH OF EMILY

Emily Drummond died on 2 January 1910. Her obituaries give me the impression that the death was sudden, although one report did mention an illness that had begun some months before. I think she had expected to outlive her husband, for when she wrote her Will in June 1903, she bi-passed him to make her daughters Edith and Florence her executors.

William Drummond died in August 1915. He too had bi-passed the obvious executor (his son Charles) to put his estate in the hands of Edith and Florence. However, he had named a legal colleague, James Avon Clyde KC as a third executor. His estate was valued at about £25000. Assuming that he left it to his children, Edith and Florence's share of it might have provided them with a reasonable income in 1915 terms. Neither of Emily's daughters had married. Edith and Florence were in their forties in 1915 and probably didn't ever marry (though I haven't actually checked that out).

Source: Scottish census records for 1911 are not available on Ancestry, of course.

Scottish Probate Records 1910, 1915.

DESCENDANTS? AND WHAT (IF ANYTHING) HAPPENED NEXT.

Lacking secure identifications of Charles Drummond, and information on the lives of Edith and Florence Drummond after 1915, I don't know what happened next. Did Charles Drummond marry? Does Emily Drummond have descendants? Perhaps a reader will let me know!

When their father died, Edith and Florence Drummond were still living at 4 Learmonth Terrace. I would suppose that unless their financial situation became desperate, they continued to live there until they died.

Sources aren't good for this section:

Scottish Probate Records held by Ancestry didn't have entries for any of Emily and William Drummond's children. However, the records only go as far as 1936 and it's likely that all three children died later than that.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

16 April 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Thomas Appleton Duncan was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn on 20 March 1892 at its Horus Temple in Bradford, and took the Latin motto 'In limine non consistendum'. At the time of his initiation he was living at 47 Belmont Drive Newsham Park Liverpool. He didn't ever follow up his initiation by taking any of the exams required of initiates; further down this file I suggest why this might have been so.

Thomas Appleton Duncan's father, William Robert Duncan had been born in Scotland (in 1820) but was a priest in the Church of England. After graduating from Edinburgh University he went to St Bees in Cumberland, a theological college founded specifically for men with a vocation but whose families couldn't afford the high costs of sending their son to Oxford or Cambridge. St Bees had been founded by a bishop of Chester, and subsequent bishops kept up the interest in the college: William Robert was ordained in 1845 by the bishop of Chester at that time. It was part of the ordination that the bishop should find suitable work for the new priests, and William Robert Duncan was sent to be vicar of Matterthwaite, east of Keswick in Cumberland. In 1849 he married Elizabeth Hannah Stephenson, daughter of Appleton Stephenson, a solicitor from Whitby. Their family was a small one by mid-Victorian standards - two sons only. Thomas Appleton Duncan was born in 1850 in Whitby; and his brother, another William Robert Duncan, in 1853.

In 1854 William Robert Duncan the elder accepted a job about as different from that of a remote rural parish as you could find: he became perpetual curate of St Peter's Church Street, Liverpool, which was acting as the city's cathedral church in the absence of a building more suited to its escalating population (living in some of the worst conditions in Britain which is really saying something in the mid-19th century), rapid expansion and Liverpool's importance as a trading hub of the British empire. He stayed in this demanding and high-profile post for 47 years, until his death in 1898. So Liverpool was where Thomas Appleton Duncan grew up - not in the vicarage as I think it was occupied by another family, but in a series of rented houses in the new suburb of West Derby, to the north of the industrial and financial area of the city.

I do not know where Thomas Appleton Duncan went to school. The most well-known school in Liverpool at that time was Liverpool College, founded by the Liberal politician W E Gladstone and, from 1866 to 1900, run as headmaster by George Butler, husband of Josephine Butler the social campaigner. However, I can't find a list of its pupils on the web and it's just as likely that the Duncans sent their sons away to school, perhaps in Scotland, or in Yorkshire near Elizabeth Hannah Duncan's family. Thomas Appleton Duncan went to Oxford University, perhaps fulfilling a cherished dream of his father. He went to Keble College, as one of its first intake of students as it had only just been founded. He was 20 when he went up, so I think his family even waited a couple of years for the right college to come along. I imagine the expenses of students at the new college would be less than at one of the older ones with the long-established social diaries; but the choice of Keble may also indicate high-church leanings in the family. Keble had been named for Rev John Keble, leader of the Oxford movement, and theological teachings based on anglo-catholic ideas are what Thomas Appleton Duncan will have heard there. He graduated from Keble College in 1873.

I suppose Thomas Appleton Duncan's parents had always intended him to become a priest; but - having investigated his career in the Church of England - I do wonder how much say he had in the choice of career. The young men who later joined the Golden Dawn had less say about the kind of work they would do than you would suppose. Thomas Appleton Duncan was ordained priest by the serving bishop of Chester, Rev William Jacobson, at Chester Cathedral in 1875. His working life over the next 25 years, though, was rather fitful. It began typically enough with Thomas being sent out to learn his trade through a series of short-term appointments as a curate. His first was at Taporley, a village near Chester; he was there for just over a year, 1874-75. Then he was sent to location which he knew well but which was likely to be more challenging: from 1875-76 he was curate at St Margaret Belmont Road Liverpool. Belmont Road Liverpool L6 is a little way north of Onslow Road where the Duncan family lived in the 1880s. St Margaret's church was brand new - it was consecrated in 1873. The architects were William and George Audsley, who designed many other buildings in Liverpool. The church didn't have anywhere for its clergyman to live, so Thomas Appleton continued to live with his parents until he was moved on, to work as curate to his great-uncle, in the village of Nafferton in Yorkshire. The vicar of Nafferton was Rev James Davidson, who had married a Miss Boyes, the sister of Elizabeth Hannah Duncan's mother Ann. He had been the vicar of Nafferton from 1854. Thomas Appleton Duncan arrived as his curate in 1876 and stayed until 1885; but Rev Davidson continued as the vicar throughout and was still in the job at his death in 1906.

Thomas Appleton Duncan was 35 in 1885, when he left the job at Nafferton, still a curate not a vicar. Perhaps he had been offered appointments as a vicar but had turned them down. Perhaps he had never been offered a more permanent job. Either way, it's odd that nothing more permanent should have transpired from what was now over 10 years of experience. However, the next decade is even odder: he had no official job in the Church of England from 1885 to 1895, into which ten years his membership of the Golden Dawn and of the Theosophical Society both fall.

The Theosophical Society was founded in the USA in 1875. It took off in England after Helena Petrovna Blavatsky came to live in London in 1887. In 1888 Blavatsky's epic The Secret Doctrine was published, switching the focus of the TS from western occultism to eastern mysticism. The TS in England expanded rapidly over the next few years. It was organised rather like the freemasons were in England, with groups of people petitioning the TS headquarters in London to be granted permission to set up a new lodge. Once permission was granted, each lodge organised its own agenda - lectures (often with speakers from London); talks where one lodge member would take the lead on a particular subject; and sessions in which members would discuss the principles of theosophy, in particular the meaning of The Secret Doctrine which most members seem to have found more or less impenetrable.

When I was going through the TS Membership Registers as part of my research on the Golden Dawn it was obvious very quickly how much cross-over there was, particularly in the early 1890s, with people belonging to the TS first (usually) and then being initiated into the GD afterwards. This was particularly true with the GD's Horus Temple in Bradford, which had one group of members living in the Bradford area and a second group living in Liverpool. The actual nuts-and-bolts of how the members knew each other fascinates me but I haven't been able to find out much about it: it needs someone who lives in or near Bradford or Liverpool to do work in the local archives and with the local papers. I'm quite sure, though, that a lot of the members of Bradford GD knew one another through the TS branches in Bradford and Liverpool, which were all very active in the early 1890s; and that some members were acquaintances outside theosophy and magic, in the daily world.

You'll have gathered from my outline above, that TS lodges were founded by groups of people who already knew each other through a shared interest in theosophy. Unlike the GD, the TS was not a secret society - members gave public lectures advertised in the local press, and meetings of local groups were open to non-members. The group that founded the Liverpool Lodge in 1892 may have come together in the previous year or so, following up a public lecture (let's say) with a series of informal meetings; but there's also the possibility that some at least of the lodge's members had known one another much longer, perhaps since their schooldays. That's another thing I'd like to investigate but can't do very easily from London.

News of local TS lodges appeared in the monthly magazine Lucifer which was published by the TS in England at its headquarters in London's Regent's Park. The news item announcing the formation of the lodge in Liverpool listed the members who had been elected to its governing council. They included Robert and Agnes Nisbet; Joseph Gardner; John Hill; Robert Sandham; William Ranstead; James W S Callie; Jean Gillison; and Thomas Appleton Duncan, who was the lodge's first librarian. In between July 1891 and March 1893, all of the people I've named were initiated into the GD at the Horus Temple (Liverpool never set up a temple of its own), Thomas Appleton Duncan's initiation coming in the middle of the sequence. None of them ever advanced far with the studies of occult literature that were expected of any GD member who hoped eventually to start doing practical magic; and I think their willingness to try out the GD may have been to do with concern about the TS's future after Blavatsky's death (in May 1891). Once they were assured that the TS would continue, though without her guidance, they gave up on the GD.

From 1892 to 1894 Liverpool Lodge held meetings every Thursday evening in rooms at 62 Dale Street, in the business centre of the city near the docks. Thomas Appleton Duncan attended these regularly, and in 1893 he led a discussion on 'theosophy and Christianity'. A series of articles by him appeared in Lucifer in 1893 and 1894:

- The Christian Tradition in Relation to The Secret Doctrine
- Esoteric Teachings of the New Testament
- Some Cogent Reasons for Embracing Theosophy
- and the two-part article The Brotherhood and the Service of Man.

It's clear from the titles of these writings that Thomas Appleton Duncan was well-read in the basic texts of theosophy; even in The Secret Doctrine. He also seems to have read some texts by Christian writers who were also occultists. I think he was looking for common ground between Christianity and theosophy. However, in the last of the articles, he went a great deal further than that, declaring that it was the task of Eastern philosophy to complete the work begun by Christianity to bring about a brotherhood of all mankind.

One of the common themes I've found amongst Golden Dawn members was a searching after a philosophy of life that made sense in the era of Darwin, Lyall and increasing scepticism about the belief that the Bible was divinely inspired - that it was literally the work of God, channelled through certain privileged men. But Thomas Appleton Duncan was pushing at the boundaries of what a Church of England cleric should believe, and it was no wonder he didn't have, and didn't seem to want to have, a job in the profession he had been trained for. It would be interesting to hear Thomas Appleton Duncan's views on the Soul - that is to say, on the possibility of reincarnation, a subject which caused members of the TS a great deal of anxiety - what exactly were Blavatsky's teachings on the issue? - especially amongst those who had been brought up as Christian church-goers.

Thomas Appleton Duncan's article on the brotherhood of Man was his last for Lucifer. I think he was overtaken by events that challenged him to make up his mind in a way he might have wanted to avoid. Firstly, the TS was torn apart by the bitter arguments over W Q Judge's claims to have received messages from the Mahatmas who had only ever contacted Blavatsky before. The question divided lodges and friends within the TS. Members of Liverpool Lodge actually set up a committee to give support to Judge in the debate, and when Judge was censured at the TS European convention (in July 1894) many TS members resigned including all the members of Liverpool's pro-Judge committee and others who had been very active in Liverpool Lodge. So much for the brotherhood of Man. As I didn't find his membership details I don't know whether Thomas Appleton Duncan was one of those who left the TS at this point. As you might imagine, Lucifer didn't list the names!, though many years later, most of those who had resigned had a note to that effect written against their names in the TS's Membership Registers. Just as worrying to Thomas Appleton Duncan at this turbulent time may have been a paragraph in Lucifer's edition of April 1894: the Church of England in New Zealand was taking disciplinary action against a clergyman in Auckland on the grounds that he was a TS member.

The uproar within the TS caused Thomas Appleton Duncan to go back to the Church of England, at least for the next few years: in 1895 he took another appointment as a curate, at Saints Peter and Paul Steeple Aston, south of Banbury in Oxfordshire. During his two or three years there he may have come across Rev William Alexander Ayton, vicar of Chacombe to the north-east of Banbury. The Rev Ayton was a classical scholar, an occultist, and an alchemist with a laboratory in the vicarage basement. He had been a member of the Golden Dawn since 1888; but was terribly afraid of being found out by his bishop (the bishop of Oxford who was also Rev Duncan's immediate boss at this time) and Thomas Appleton Duncan may have been acquainted with Rev Ayton without being aware that they had interests and GD membership in common.

In 1897 Thomas Appleton Duncan moved to his last job as a curate, at Henbury, now swallowed by Bristol but then a village just outside it. Shortly after he arrived there, a year of deaths changed his future.

1898 began with the death of Rev William Robert Duncan, in February. He was 78, so although the death must have been distressing, it won't have been all that surprising. But in the summer of 1898 not only did Thomas Appleton Duncan's brother William Robert die (in his 40s) but so did William Robert the younger's son - the only grandchild - at the age of a few months. Then just before Christmas, a woman called Sarah Booth Hulme died just outside Stoke-on-Trent in Staffordshire. Six months later, in 1899, Thomas Appleton Duncan married Sarah Booth Hulme's daughter.

It was a not particularly pleasant fact of Victorian middle-class life that the young, or even the middle-aged, often had to wait for the old to die before they could afford to marry or were free to choose their own life-paths.

ELIZABETH HULME

I have tried to figure out how Thomas Appleton Duncan met Elizabeth Hulme, but I haven't come up with an answer. The Rev Duncan was never a curate in the Potteries area; Elizabeth Hulme spent her whole life until her marriage living in the few miles between Leek and Stoke-on-Trent. I have to fall back on the 'through mutual friends' explanation and I've no idea who those mutual friends might have been. The networks of relationships and acquaintanceships through which one person might meet another in Victorian England are fascinating but difficult to disentangle from this distance in time.

When Thomas Hulme married Sarah Booth, in Tunstall in 1849, they linked two families who had probably inter-married many times before, two families with branches all over the north midlands. Their family was a more typical one of its time than the Duncans' family was: they had eight children, with Elizabeth being the eldest, born in 1851. On the day of the 1871 census the Hulmes were living at Endon Bank Staffordshire. Thomas Hulme told the census official that he was a landowner and farmer; he employed 8 men and 2 boys. However, one source I've found on the pottery industry in Staffordshire says that he also owned a part-stake in a pottery and I think this must be true, because I don't see how the owner of a mere 272 acres could finance Dunwood Hall at Longsdon, which Thomas Hulme had built, next to the old Dunwood Lodge farmhouse, between 1871 and 1874. Dunwood Hall was designed by Robert Scrivener of Hanley to an L-shaped plan and in the Gothic revival style, with a three-storey entrance tower, big windows, lavish use of granite and wrought-iron, and a hallway laid with Minton tiles. Thomas Hulme's son Joseph Booth Hulme told the 1881 census official that he was the manager of a pottery; and in the 1890s he was a partner in the Sutherland Pottery at Fenton, on the south side of Stoke-on-Trent; going through several partners before retiring from the business in 1900. I think this pottery must be where Thomas Hulme was a partner, in the firm originally called Thomas Forester Son and Co.

In 1881 the Hulmes were living at Dunwood Hall, but the family seem to have moved out after Thomas Hulme's death, which occurred late in 1884. Sarah Booth Hulme had been left comfortably off - in 1891 she employed a cook and a housemaid - but she had moved to Lord Street in Basford, Stoke-on-Trent, which was nearer Joseph's work. Joseph and Elizabeth, both still unmarried, were the only members of the family still living with Sarah Hulme on the day of the 1891 census. To Elizabeth's lot had fallen the task of caring for her mother. She would be expected by the rest of the family and by society at large, to do that task until her mother died; by which time she might be elderly herself. Whether the carer had been left enough money to live an independent life was irrelevant.

Elizabeth Hulme waited only six months after her mother's death, before she married and left the district. This may have been out of financial necessity. I am not suggesting that she married for money, or for the status that being a married woman brought you; though many women living in a patriarchy do so. I am suggesting that she may, however temporarily, have had no source of income immediately after her mother died. After spending so many years looking after her mother would not have guaranteed that Elizabeth would be left anything to live on after her death, and when I looked in the Probate Registry I found that Sarah Booth Hulme's estate and effects were not finally settled until 1902 anyway - rather too long to be waiting on the expectation, with no money coming in in the meantime. So Elizabeth (aged 48) married Thomas Appleton Duncan (aged 49) without completing the expected one year of full mourning. On the day of the 1901 census, the Duncans were living at Annisfield House in Henbury; they had enough income to employ one servant who lived in. Thomas Appleton Duncan's mother, Elizabeth Hannah Duncan, had left Liverpool and was living next door to them, in the household of Thomas Horse at Rose Bank. This seems to have been just a temporary measure while the Duncans looked for a house where they could all live together. They moved to Laurel House, Langford in Somerset, a seven-bedroom ex-farmhouse with 2.5 acres of paddocks and gardens (as I was writing this little biography the house was up for sale), recently modernised when they moved in.

In 1906, Thomas Appleton Duncan's curacy came to an end and he took a post which was a kind of semi-retirement. He was given a license to preach when required in the dioceses of Bristol and Bath and Wells, but he was no longer required to do any parish duties. Elizabeth Hannah Duncan died at Laurel House in 1909 and by 1911 Thomas Appleton Duncan had retired completely. He was 60 by now, but many clergymen continued to work until they were much older, or died still at their posts. Had his mother's death finally released Thomas Appleton from the family need for him to work for the Christian church? He had put even Somerset behind him - he and Elizabeth were living in East Looe, Cornwall, on the day of the 1911 census - and he was free to investigate the borderlands where Christianity met theosophy (if he still wanted to) without the burden of family expectation. The Duncans moved at least once more, to Paignton in Devon, leasing the house called Wharncliffe, on Stafford Road, where Thomas Appleton Duncan died on 16 September 1922.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR THOMAS APPLETON DUNCAN

WILLIAM ROBERT DUNCAN, Thomas Appleton Duncan's father

At archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com a posting dated 2001 by Eunice Smith of Edinburgh who was researching members of the Duncan family. She gives W R Duncan senior's dates as 2 May 1820 to 11 February 1898.

Crockford's Clerical Directory edition of 1860 p177 William Robert Duncan of St Peter's Parsonage Liverpool. University of Edinburgh. St Bees Theological College. Deacon 1844; priest 1845 both by bishop of Chester. Became senior curate at St Peter's 1854; previously vicar of Matterdale in Cumberland. Crockford's Clerical Directory edition of 1900 volume 1 A-M p401 William Robert Duncan isn't in it.

St Bees Theological College: there's a short article at wikipedia.

Why wasn't William Robert Duncan ever vicar of Liverpool, only a curate? See www.archerfamily.org for the career of the Rev Canon Alexander Stewart reproduced from the Liverpool Courier of 31 March 1916. For most of the 19th century, Stewart's family owned the advowsons on three important rectories in the city of Liverpool: that is, the right to appoint and to pay the vicar or rector of the parish. In William Robert Duncan's time, the three rectories all had priests who were members of the Stewart family, the most senior and the most active being Rev Alexander Stewart, rector of Liverpool. Elsewhere at www.archerfamily.org there are details of Rev Stewart's career as a bureaucrat in the Church of England and the Poor Law. Essentially, Rev W R Duncan did the parish duties at St Peter's while the actual Rector was busy with other things and paying Rev Duncan an agreed but fixed salary.

At paperspast.natlib.govt.nz the New Zealand Herald volume XXI issue 6972, 22 March 1884 p1 column 3 adverts include one for the services as a music teacher of a Mr Pooley, now living in New Zealand after a spell as organist and choir master at St Peter's Liverpool. A series of testimonials includes one from Rev Alexander Stewart, rector of Liverpool and Canon of Liverpool Cathedral, and one from Rev William Robert Duncan, "Senior Curate of Liverpool".

At www.lan-opc.org.uk, which is the website of Lancashire Online Parish, a picture of the church that Rev W R Duncan worked in. St Peter's had been a parish since 1699 when it separated from Walton parish. The church was built for the new parish 1699-1704. The last service was held in the church in 1919 and the building was demolished in 1922.

Via www.medialinkuk.co.uk to a page showing inscriptions and some photos of monuments in Toxteth Park cemetery Liverpool. There's a monument for the Duncan family: M46 Duncan (C.K.451); the monument is decorated with a Celtic cross. William Robert Duncan senior's dates are given on it, confirming the dates I found via the web: born 22 May 1820; died 12 February 1898. Also in the grave is his wife Elizabeth, who died on 3 November 1909 aged 78. There are two more burials in the grave:

1 = Robert Charteris Duncan b November 1897 died Sep 1898, only child of W R Duncan (Thomas Appleton's brother) and E M Duncan.

2 = William Robert Duncan junior, who is described as an "Author" although I have not found any examples of his writing, looking on the web and in the British Library catalogue. Dates of birth and death are month and year only, the day of each is not given: born July 1855; died August 1898.

Thomas Appleton Duncan and his wife Elizabeth are not buried in this grave; I presume they were buried in Devon. Further elucidation of the people who are in the grave, from freebmd: Robert William Duncan married Elizabeth M Greenlaw in Kensington in 1896. Their son Robert Charteris Duncan was born in 1897 and died within a year.

STEPHENSON FAMILY OF WHITBY

At www.gravestonephotos.com number GPR246866, a photo of the Stephenson grave monument at St Mary the Virgin Whitby. In the grave are members of Elizabeth Hannah Stephenson's family:

Ann Clifton Stephenson 1825-30

Appleton Stephenson, father of Ann Clifton Stephenson; 1806-76. He must be Elizabeth Hannah Stephenson's father.

Ann Stephenson, Ann Clifton Stephenson's mother (actually she's her step-mother); 1803-73; Elizabeth's mother.

John Boyes Stephenson, Ann Clifton Stephenson's son (he must be Ann Stephenson's son; thus Elizabeth's brother); 1837-79

At genforum.genealogy.com a posting December 2002 by a descendant of the Boyes family who lived in Whitby in the 18th and 19th cents: Appleton Stephenson married Ann Boyes on 26 February 1829 in Whitby; he was a widower, she had not been married before.

THOMAS APPLETON DUNCAN IN CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Alumni Oxoniensis Members of the University of Oxford 1715-1886 Volume 1. Kraus Reprint Ltd 1965 editor Joseph Foster. On p394 Rev Thomas Appleton Duncan, elder son of William Robert Duncan of Whitby. Keble College. Matriculated 18 October 1870 at age 20. Graduated BA 1873.

Wikipedia on Keble College.

Ecclesiastical Gazette 1874 p56 a list of those ordained priest at Chester Cathedral on "Sunday, September 19" [1874] by the bishop of Chester; including Thomas Appleton Duncan of Keble College.

Crockford's Clerical Directory edition of 1900 volume 1 A-M p401 Thomas Appleton Duncan was currently curate of Henbury Bristol, to which he had been officially appointed in 1898. Keble College Oxford. BA 1873. Ordained deacon 1874; priest 1875 both by bishop of Chester. Curate of: Tarporley Cheshire 1874-75; St Margaret Belmont Road Liverpool 1875-76; Nafferton Yorks 1876-85. At that point there was the 10-year gap before he was appointed curate of Steeple Aston Oxfordshire 1895-98. I got the name of the relevant bishop of Chester from the list in wikipedia: William Jacobson, appointed 1865, died in office 1884.

Crockford's Clerical Directory edition of 1910 p432 Thomas Appleton Duncan's address is now Laurel House Langford Somerset. He had been curate of Henbury from 1897 to 1906. In 1906 made a Licensed Preacher able to preach in the dioceses of Bristol, and Bath and Wells.

Places Thomas Appleton Duncan was curate:

Via the web, //streetsofliverpool.co.uk/lost-churches-2/ has a picture of St Margaret Belmont Road, consecrated 1873, destroyed by fire 1961 and replaced with the current building.

Village website www.nafferton.net/our-village/history says that Rev James Davidson (Thomas Appleton Duncan's great-uncle) was vicar there from 1854 to 1906. His Christmas time Ship Teas were famous.

Steeple Aston is north of Oxford and south of Banbury. Saints Peter and Paul has important bells and a long tradition of bell-ringing. At the time Thomas Appleton Duncan was curate, there was a 14th piece of embroidery in the church; it's now in the Victoria & Albert Museum. Chacombe, where Ayton was vicar, is north-east of Banbury. Both parishes were the responsibility of the bishop of Oxford. might have met.

29 Nov 2012 I'm rather bothered as to the exact significance of the term "Licensed Preacher". At US website www.learnthebible.org which is NOT CofE, such a license is commonly issued now. It's a license to preach under certain restrictions usually about where. It's LESS than ordination which the website sees as a very serious commitment to do whatever and go wherever God requires.

At universalministries.com mention of it in connection with small, independent churches where such a license is often issued to volunteers rather than those paid by the church.

Couldn't see anything about licensed preachers in the CofE.

Where he lived when he was retired:

As at 3 Dec 2012 Laurel House Langford Somerset happens to be for sale with Debbie Fortune estate agents: from her website, it is circa 1900, stone built with stone fireplaces and some bay windows. Gardens, paddock - 2.5 acres altogether. At www.zoopla.co.uk it's on Bath Road Langton; 7 beds 2 reception, ex-farmhouse. Needs some work.

THOMAS APPLETON DUNCAN IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

The TS Membership Registers are at the TS headquarters building on Gloucester Place London. I looked at the registers which cover 1888 to 1900 and so missed some GD members who had joined the TS in its earliest years.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine published London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume XI covering September 1892 to February 1893. Volume XI no 66 issued 15 February 1893, in news section p517 a report on Liverpool Lodge, sent in by its assistant secretary, Gustave E Sigley, who was never a member of the GD; John Hill was the Lodge secretary but worked as a travelling salesman and was out of town a great deal. Recently the Lodge had had visits from TS member William Williams of Bradford Lodge; and Sydney Coryn (who is from London; both these men were initiated into the GD).

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XII covers March-August 1893, sole editor is Annie Besant. Published by the Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume VII no 67 issued 15 March 1893 p78 news section incl item on Liverpool Lodge sent in by its assist sec, Gustave E Sigley.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine published London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume XIII covers September 1893 to February 1894; again Annie Besant is the editor. P460-467 is Part I of a series by T A Duncan BA: The Brotherhood and Service of Man; seeing it p461 as the task of eastern philosophy to complete what Christianity had begun, by bringing about a brotherhood of Man.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine published London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume XIV covers March to August 1894. Volume XIV no 79 issued 15 March 1894 p 63-69 article by T A Duncan BA: Part II of The Brotherhood and the Service of Man.

There was nothing by Thomas Appleton Duncan in any subsequent issue of Lucifer. Lucifer ceased publication in about 1898.

THE HULME FAMILY OF LEEK STAFFS

On Dunwood Hall:

At www.british-history.ac.uk which is the website of British History Online, some info taken from the Victoria County History for Staffs, volume 7, on Dunwood Hall. Thomas Hulme, previously of Bank House Endon, bought Dunwood Lodge Farm in 1870 and built Dunwood Hall next to the farmhouse in 1871. It was designed (Gothic revival style) by Robert Scrivener of Hanley. The house still exists and is Grade II listed, retaining many of its original features including a central hall laid with Minton tiles.

Website //thecastlelady.wordpress.com has info on a lot of houses in Staffordshire and pictures of some of them but not of Dunwood Hall, unfortunately. Dunwood Hall is on the A53. Built to an L-shaped plan with a 3-storey entrance tower. The hall has a floor of Minton tiles; a granite and stone fireplace; and cast iron balustrades. There are gardens. This site is the only one that says that Elizabeth's father Thomas Hulme owned a pottery business. However, there's evidence that Joseph B Hulme owned one:

London Gazette 13 Jan 1893 p226 a list of dissolved partnerships includes that between Thomas Forester and J B Hulme. They had traded as earthenware manufacturers, at the Sutherland Pottery in Fenton (that's south-east of Stoke-on-Trent). Their partnership was dissolved on 31 Dec 1892. The debts of the partnership would be paid by J B Hulme.

London Gazette 4 Jan 1901 p117 another list of dissolved partnerships includes that of Joseph Booth Hulme and John J Christie. They had been trading as Hulme and Christie, earthenware manufacturers of Fenton. Their partnership was dissolved by consent on 30 June 1900. Christie would be carrying on the business, in partnership with Francis William Beardmore; as Christie and Beardmore.

The info above is confirmed by www.thepotteries.org which is an A-Z of Stoke-on-Trent pottery firms. The info on the website on the Sutherland Pottery Fenton was taken from Ceramic Art of Great Britain 1800-1900 by Llewellyn Frederick William Jewitt and Geoffrey A Godden. Published Barrie and Jenkins 1972; info from p51:

|            |   |
|------------|---|
| 1884-?1888 | as Thomas Forester Son and Co                       |
| 1887-93    | as Forester and Hulme                               |
| 1893-1902  | as Hulme and Christie                               |
| 1902-03    | as Christie and Beardmore                           |
| 1903-14    | as Frank Beardmore and Co. Nothing after that date. |

The firm originally produced china and earthenware: dinner, tea, dessert and toilet sets. When I was searching for details of the firm I found quite a lot of their products for sale on the web, with pictures.

Wikipedia has an article on T E Hulme (Thomas Ernest) the critic and modernist poet: 1883-1917, born at Gratton Hall Endon Staffordshire, a son of Thomas Hulme and his wife Mary. I presume his parents are Elizabeth Hulme's brother Thomas and his wife, so that T E Hulme is Elizabeth Duncan's nephew. Apparently, beginning in about 1907, T E Hulme began a process of translating works by Henri Bergson; Henri Bergson's sister was Mina, wife of the GD's Samuel Liddell Mathers.

The Short, Sharp Life of T E Hulme by Robert Ferguson 2002 p3 says of Thomas Hulme (presumably T E Hulme's father, not his grandfather) that he was a staunch Liberal; and that he went to church, at St Luke's, as a social duty not out of pious necessity.

I searched freebmd from 1922 to 1932 for the registration of Elizabeth Hulme Duncan's death but couldn't identify one I was sure was her. There were none that looked right in Devon during those years, so she may have moved away after her husband died.

4 December 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Joseph Dunckley, known as Joe, was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford Yorkshire in July 1891. He chose the Latin motto 'virtute et fide'. He did begin the work that initiates were expected to undertake, but then he seems to have dropped out.

DUNCKLEY AND DUNKLEY

Bear in mind that spellings of surnames were not consistent before the 18th century; and that in the 19th century, census officials didn't always ask people how their surnames were spelled - they just wrote down what they thought they'd heard, and you do get some very strange results. Joe's surname was spelled in a variety of ways during his lifetime, even by the officers at the registration office of births, marriages and deaths. R A Gilbert spells it with the 'c' in his book on the members of the Golden Dawn; and I think this must be the correct spelling in Joe's case, though Dunkley without the 'c' is the more common spelling.

While I was trying to identify Joe Dunckley on the mid-19th century censuses I got the impression that most people with the name Dunckley or Dunkley lived in the east Midlands, especially Northamptonshire but also Leicestershire and Hertfordshire, so that's probably where the tribe originated. However, a group of Dunckleys and Dunkleys had been living around Warwick since the late 17th century; and when helping the census official complete the forms, Joe Dunckley was very consistent in saying that Warwick was where he had been born.

Joe Dunckley was also consistent about his age, which gave me a year of birth around 1832. Despite this, I haven't been able to identify the right Joseph Dunckley on the 1841 census, which means that I don't know who his parents were. On wikipedia I found a few details of a Henry Dunckley, born in Warwick in 1823. I was hopeful that Henry might turn out to be an older brother of Joe, but I now think that he probably wasn't. Henry Dunckley was from a family of Baptists and trained as a baptists minister before becoming a journalist with an interest in social issues. Seeing that Henry and Joe do have the same spelling of that tricky surname, they may be related in some way; and Joe's branch of the family may also have been Baptists. At genforum.genealogy.com there's a comprehensive family tree of Dunkley's (that is, without the 'c') and a series of postings from 1999 to 2010 about Dunkleys who were born in Warwick but who lived in Bradford Yorkshire before emigrating to Australia. From looking at the forenames of this group of Dunkleys, I don't think Joe Dunckley was related to them either.

I have to admit failure with Joe Dunckley on the 1851 census as well. In fact, the first certain information I have on him is the registration of his marriage to Hannah Stephenson, in Bradford Yorkshire in 1853 (in which he's spelled Dunkley without the 'c'). By the time he was 21, then, Joe had already left his home town to work in the industrial West Riding. Joe and Hannah had at least three children: Rebecca, born in 1855 (and registered as Dunckley with the 'c'); George born 1861 (and registered as Dunkley without the 'c'); and Joseph born 1864 (and also registered as Dunkley without the 'c'). However, I think that at least one other child was born to them, possibly several - for example in the five-or-so years between Rebecca and George - only to die in their infancy.

The 1861 census was my first certain sighting of Joe Dunckley: he, Hannah and Rebecca were living at 25 Park Road, in the Little Horton district of Bradford, near Hannah's family. Joe was working as a boot and shoe maker and Hannah was also working, as a worsted weaver. Bradford was the centre of the English woollen industry and women, even married women, were employed in large numbers in its mills. Women working in factories was a tradition by the 1860s; and of course for most of the women so employed, it was a financial necessity - their contribution to the family budget was important, and relied on. In due course, Hannah's daughter, one of her sons, and at least two of her grand-daughters, also worked as worsted weavers.

Joe Dunkley was a very unusual member of the Order of the Golden Dawn: a man with a trade, who worked with his hands; and with a wife who also worked, at a machine-loom in a factory. They were a working-class couple. Even most members of the GD in Bradford worked in offices or as tradesmen, and their wives either helped with the family business or didn't work at all.

Something went wrong for the Dunckleys during the 1860s, and according to the information he gave subsequent censuses, Joe never worked as a shoemaker again. In 1871 he told the census official he was a porter: that is, he was doing heavy lifting work, unskilled manual labour, possibly even as casual rather than regular employment. He didn't say where he worked. Hannah told the census official that she worked at "domestic duties" - that is, she was no longer working for money but housekeeping at home (which was hard enough, of course). This might have been because Rebecca and George were working as worsted weavers and able to help out with the family finances (they were both still living at home). However, I noticed an error about George on the 1871 census: the census official wrote down his age as 14, when in fact he was only 10. That people's ages are written down wrongly is a commonplace of 19th century censuses; but supposing the Dunckleys deliberately said that George was older than he was, because they needed him working rather than at school? George's handwriting on the 1911 census is very shaky, and someone else completed the form for him; perhaps he was taken out of school early and sent to work, and never was very good at writing. If his age on the 1871 census is not a mistake but a deliberate piece of misinformation, he might have been needed to go out to work because Hannah was ill and no longer able to work as a weaver herself. Working in a woollen mill was a health risk: the ceaseless noise of the machinery made you deaf; and the fluff in the air killed many employees slowly, by choking their lungs. Hannah Dunckley was dead by 1878.

It's possible that Joe Dunckley and Hannah left Bradford, at least for a few years during the 1870s: I can't find a death registration for Hannah in Bradford; and Joe's second marriage, to Mary Ann Abbott in 1878, took place in Lambeth. Mary Ann Abbott was from Cornwall; Joe could have met her in Bradford, but it's more likely that he met her where he married her. I can't find Joe and Mary Ann anywhere in the UK on the day of the 1881 census, either. I wonder where they had gone? Rebecca was still living in Bradford. She had had her share of tragedy during the 1870s: she married William Asquith in 1877 but her husband died shortly afterwards aged only 24. On the day of the 1881 census she was living with her aunts, the Stephenson sisters (spelled Stevenson with a 'v' by the census official - surnames with more than one spelling seem to be a feature of this biography!), at 31 Park Lane Horton. There were four aunts: Mary Ann, Martha, Priscilla and Elizabeth and this was a working woman's household: Elizabeth, who may have been an invalid, was keeping house for the others, and all the others were worsted weavers. A couple of months after census day Rebecca married again, a man called William Lowe; I haven't been able to find her or him on any census afterwards so perhaps they emigrated.

By 1891 Joe Dunckley was back in Bradford and he didn't move away again. He and Mary Ann were living at 19 Greaves Street, Little Horton. Joe was working as a warehouseman; and Mary Ann was keeping house - of course, she had no weaving skills. George Dunckley had married Ada Wood in 1883; so that only Joe's son Joseph was still living at home.

Joseph junior had been able to finish school: he was working as a clerk in the office of a cabinet maker - more work with the brain than work with the hands, and considered by the Victorians as definitely a middle-class occupation. Later that year, Joseph married another office worker, Ellen Rawson.

On the day of the 1901 census, Joe Dunckley was still working at the age of 69. He had changed his job and I think the change meant a step up for him, or at least a recognition that he was getting too old for the heavy-lifting stuff: he told the 1901 census official that he was a wool-combing machine minder. He and Mary were living at 20 Little Horton Green by this time; and they were still at that address in 1911. Someone (not Joe) wrote on the 1911 census form the words "Old Age Pension": which means that Joe had at last been able to retire, courtesy of the Liberal government's Old Age Pensions Act which came into force in January 1909. In being eligible to receive this first ever British governmental pension Joe was one of half a million people who had met some strict conditions: they had to be over 70, of good character (who was supposed to decide that?) and be earning less than £21 per year (which even then was a very low wage).

Now I am going to speculate: based on the details written on the 1911 census form by George Dunckley's children; and information I subsequently found on the web, I'm going to suggest that three generations of Dunckleys, and their relations-by-marriage the Stephensons (or Stevensons), all worked at the same woollen mill. I may be quite wrong about this, but here is my argument:

George and Ada Dunckley had six children but only three were still living at home on the day of the 1911 census: Bertram, who was working as a "stuff warehouseman"; and Alice and Annie who were weavers, proud to be specialising in a kind of weaving work known as "Italian lining". I looked up "Italian lining" on the web and found several articles from the late 1890s describing it as if it were a new product, and saying that it was only made in two places: Saltaire; and the mill run by Alfred Priestman and Co. Both are in the Bradford area but Saltaire is on the northern edge of the city on the way to Bingley; while Alfred Priestman and Co's premises were at Brick Lane Mills on Thornton Road, within a short walk of Little Horton. I don't think it's stretching belief, for me to suggest that Alfred Priestman and Co was where the Dunckleys and the Stephensons were working. The tradition of working for Alfred Priestman and Co was begun by the Stephenson sisters, took in Rebecca and George Dunckley, and then Joe Dunckley though he never worked a machine in the factory - he had joined the firm too late to have the skills.

I've already said that Joe Dunckley was an unusual man. He could definitely write and read but his education as a child was likely to have been basic, and biblical. He had a spirit of enquiry, however, that was not satisfied by being educated within such limits, and later in his life his reading, the talks he attended and one person that he met, ended with his joining the Theosophical Society - which will have given him some intellectual challenges.

When I was working through the Membership Registers of the Theosophical Society it quickly became obvious that the TS was a good source recruitment for likely members of the Order of the Golden Dawn, particularly in the early 1890s. This was particularly true of the Bradford, where members of the TS joined the GD in such numbers it almost looked as though they had decided to do it altogether, as a group. Reading through R A Gilbert's book (see below) and issues of the TS magazine Lucifer, which was published for most of the 1890s, it was clear that the members of the Bradford TS knew each other well. The Clayton, Pattinson, Midgley, Firth and Spink families were the lynchpins of the group in the early 1890s; but most of the people who joined the TS and/or the GD in Bradford had ties outside the common interest in theosophy: one of the Spink sisters married one of the Firth family; Joseph Clayton's daughter, two sisters of Joseph Dunckley junior's wife, and Robert Steel were all teachers working for the Bradford School Board; several members were local doctors; several more were freemasons; several members worked in the woollen mills, possibly the same woollen mill...it goes on. Joe Dunckley was an important member of the group, because - along with Thomas Pattinson and William Williams - he had been (to quote an article from 1896 in Lucifer) an "old and loyal" friend of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. When the Bradford Lodge of the Theosophical Society was formed, in 1891, even the group of friends that had founded it had to go through a formal process of application, with two sponsors: Joe's sponsors were Thomas Pattinson and William Williams. And it was natural that a theosophist with such a pedigree should be elected to its governing council.

Although members of the TS in Bradford seemed so keen to join the Golden Dawn as well, most of them don't seem to have stayed members for long. I think there were two main reasons for this, both connected with the work required of GD members who were serious enough about their initiation to want to reach the stage of actually doing some practical magic. The work was intellectually demanding; there was a lot of it to get through; and there were exams. A lot of people who were initiated had never done that level of intellectual work. They had no idea how to set about it, and no training in the concentrated attention required. It was not his fault, but Joe Dunckley will have been one of them. The magical work of the GD was also all in the western occult tradition: that was what the Order had been founded to do. If your preference was for eastern esotericism, the GD was not the right place for you; and most of Bradford's group of theosophists soon realised that.

A group led by Pattinson, Williams and Joe Dunckley split off from Bradford Lodge to form Athene Lodge in 1893. Then the TS worldwide was torn apart by a dispute about who if anyone should have access to Blavatsky's Mahatmas now that she was dead. The dispute and its outcomes led to many theosophists not renewing their membership of the TS in London. If he had any views on this bitter debate-cum-power-struggle, which led to the American lodges breaking away from the rest of the world, Dunckley was able to be broad-minded in its aftermath: in 1896 a group from the independent American TS, led by Katherine Tingley toured Europe as part of a new theosophical crusade (they even called themselves The Crusaders). Some English theosophists refused to meet them, but when the group arrived in Bradford, Joe Dunckley was among those who went to the Pattinsons' house to have tea with them.

It might have been possible for Bradford to support two theosophical lodges had it not been for the wider dispute, which became very public late in 1895. As it was, both lodges struggled for members and direction. They amalgamated in 1902 and the lodge set up in that year still exists.

Joe Dunckley doesn't seem to have been an active member of the reconstituted Bradford Lodge, though he continued to be a member of the TS in London until 1909. 1909 was another year in which a lot of TS members dropped out following the election of Annie Besant as the TS's president, a post she was going to hold for life. She had never made any secret of her preference for Hindu mysticism rather than Buddhism. Many members didn't want the TS to go in that direction and Joe Dunckley may have been one of them - he sent in a formal resignation from the TS in February 1909. However, he might just have decided to call it a day because of his age: he was now 77 and perhaps not in good health.

Joe Dunckley died in 1912; despite a life of physical labour and with its share of grief, he had managed to make it until he was almost 80.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I don't think the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived either, but there's a history of the TS in Bradford on the web now (though originally written in 1941) at www.ts-bradford.org.uk/theosoc/btshisto.htm in which people who also joined the GD are mentioned and the relationships between them brought out very well. The History was last updated in April 2012 with a full list of members, at least up until 1941.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR JOSEPH DUNCKLEY and the DUNKLEYS

The Great Fire of Warwick 1691 by Michael Farr, published by the Dugdale Society 1992 p456 refers to a Samuel Dunckley.

Deep Roots, Living Branches: A History of Baptists... by Alan Betteridge published 2010 p66 has a reference to people called Dunckley living in Warwick in 1698.

The Dunkley family at genforum.genealogy.com, postings 1999-2010 about the Warwick/Bradford branch who went to Australia. Mention is made in one of the postings to members of this family working in the woollen mills in Bradford. The forenames mentioned in the postings at genforum are Henry, James and John. A Henry Dunkley baptised 1818 in Warwick married Emma Hill in Bradford Yorkshire in 1839; they had a large family, all of whom emigrated to Victoria. A John Dunkley and his family went to Australia in 1856.

ITALIAN LINING - ALFRED PRIESTMAN AND CO

The Art Journal volume 47 1895 p25 a snippet that was part of an article on new textiles. Italian lining is nothing to do with Italy, despite its name. It was made at the Saltaire Mills; and also by Alfred Priestman and Co of Brick Lane Mills Bradford.

America's Textile Reporter volume 12 1898 p879 snippet saying that Italian lining was used to line worsted coating.

The Annual Monitor...Obituary of the Members of the Society of Friends in Great Britain and Ireland issue of 1911 p134 obituary of Alfred Priestman. He'd been born in Malton Yorkshire in 1831, a son of Joshua and Jane Priestman, of a noted Quaker family. He had founded Alfred Priestman and Co with his brother John, in Bradford in 1851 and been active in it until retiring in 1889. He'd been a life-long Liberal, peace and temperance campaigner. He'd been chairman of Bradford's local School Board from its formation.

By 1900 the Priestmans were running several woollen mills in Bradford; and Alfred's brother John had a separate business:

Journal of the Society of Chemical Industry volume 22 1903 p852 mentions a current firm H B Priestman and Co of Brick Lane Mills.

Labour Gazette volume 25 issued by the Ministry of Labour 1917 p549 lists A Priestman and Co Ltd of Brick Lane Mills Bradford.

Who Owns Whom 1979 p354 Brick Lane Mills were still operative but as I R A Ickringill and Co Ltd.

Stationary Steam Engines of GB: Volume 10 The National Photographic Collection, by George Watkins. Landmark Publications 2005. This book gives the location of Brick Lane Mills as Thornton Road Bradford; there are a lot of other industrial companies in that road.

John Priestman seems to be more well-known than Alfred, eg at www.gracesguide.co.uk a website on British Industrial History, which has an entry for John Priestman and Co (Bradford), registered as a company in 1892, but nothing for Alfred.

Histories of Manningham, Heaton and Allerton by William Cudsworth. Published Bradford: W Cudsworth 1896 by which time John Priestman is dead. p59 John Priestman had owned the Ashfield Mills, also in Brick Lane. They are now run by his son Edward. P2 John Priestman had in his later years lived in a house called Whetley, in Manningham. I noticed streetmap has a Whetley Road near Thornton Road which is the B6145 out of Bradford town centre.

The records of John Priestman and Co are now in West Yorkshire Archive; they cover up to 1971.

Wikipedia on the Old Age Pensions Act 1908. Asquith as prime minister; Lloyd George as chancellor of the exchequer.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

I went through the Theosophical Society Membership Registers for the years from 1888 to 1901. They are held at the TS headquarters building in Gloucester Place London W1.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume X March-August 1892, edited by Annie Besant. Volume X no 55 issue of 15 March 1892 p80 news section has a report sent in by John Midgley on the annual meeting of Bradford Lodge which had been held on Wednesday 10 February [1892]. Midgley named the Lodge's officers for the coming year: Oliver Firth would be president with Thomas H Pattinson as his vice-president and John Midgley himself doing both treasurer and secretary. The other council members included these people who all joined the Golden Dawn at one time: Frank Harrison, Joe Dunckley, Thomas Wilson, Mrs Pattinson (Eliza) and Mrs Firth (Florence). The lodge's official contact at TS head office was Isabel Cooper-Oakley.

Found on the web, and purporting to be Lucifer volume XI no 1 but issued in April 1896 and so cannot be that volume number: I'm confused about this but the content seems genuine enough: coverage of the visit to England of a group of American theosophists led by Katherine Tingley; p132-33

11 December 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Edward Jonathan Dunn who was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford Yorkshire in September 1889. He took the Latin motto 'altiora peto' (of which a little more below). He did start out on the learning necessary to make progress in the Order, and took one of the exams; but then let the work lapse for several years before resigning formally during 1894.

Edward Jonathan Dunn was based not in Bradford but in York. He was descended on both sides from farmers in the Vale of York, the kind of people who in Tudor England would have been referred to as yeomen: the backbone of the rural community, by late Victorian England under considerable pressure from developments in farming and transport technology elsewhere.

I've been very lucky with Edward Jonathan, to find a family history website at www.stableshistory.co.uk, based on original documents put together into a dossier by Edward Jonathan's grand-father William Stables and handed on in due course to Edward Jonathan's sister Annie Maude. All my potted history of Edward Jonathan's family comes from this and I refer you to it for more information on his relatives.

William Stables' youngest daughter Charlotte married Jonathan Dunn in June 1861. Jonathan Dunn owned farms at Stillingfleet and Kelfield, villages south of York near where the River Wharf flows into the River Ouse; and also some land further east at Beswick, north of Beverley. He farmed his own land - that is to say, he didn't rent it all out to tenant-farmers. He kept up with developments in farming via his membership of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, to which he was elected in 1870.

Jonathan and Charlotte Dunn had three sons and three daughters: George William, born 1862; Charlotte Elizabeth (Lottie) born 1863; Annie Maud born 1865; Edward Jonathan born 1867; Harold Stables born 1869; and Emily Blanche born 1870. The family moved backwards and forwards between two farm-houses that were on their land, Stillingfleet House, and Kelfield Lodge just north-east of Kelfield village. The family were Methodists, and in due course Jonathan and Charlotte's sons were sent away to Wesley College near Sheffield. Wesley College had been founded in 1804 with the intention of giving an education based on the principles of Methodism but also including a thorough grounding in the Classics, the kind of Latin-and-Greek education available at the older public schools. Edward Jonathan was a pupil at Wesley College on the day of the 1881 census.

Under normal circumstances, a younger son would not expect to inherit the family land; and in fact Edward Jonathan never did so. However, the oldest son George William, never farmed the family land either, according to the Stables family history he went to Australia and died there, around 1895. The youngest son, Harold, also left the farm: he went to train with Edward J Hasselby, who ran his own business as a pharmacist. Edward Hasselby was living in Hastings by 1891 but he had been born in Goole Yorkshire and was probably well-known or even related to the Dunns. By 1891, Edward Jonathan was the only one of Jonathan Dunn's sons still to be living at home. Although the census official didn't note down any occupation for him, he won't have been able to be idle. He would have had to have been helping his father run the various farms, and - at the same time and on-the-job (the normal way, at that time) - learning the rudiments of surveying and land valuation which became his occupation later. What the census official probably had in mind, in leaving the occupation/source of income box blank, was that Edward Jonathan was not a waged worker in the sense that the census meant. The Dunns were comfortably off at this point, employing a cook as well as a housemaid and the men who worked outdoors on the farm. But Jonathan Dunn died in 1892, aged only 58. Charlotte and Edward Jonathan took over the running of the farms between them.

Edward Jonathan Dunn joined both the Theosophical Society and the Order of the Golden Dawn, though I am not sure in which order because his membership record at the TS didn't give the date on which he had joined. This absence of a joining date usually denotes someone who had been a member from the earliest days of the TS in England, in the mid-1880s, before its record-keeping had become systematic; so I'll assume Edward Jonathan conforms to that, though he does seem rather young. He may have joined the TS because of its early interest in western occult traditions; it wasn't until Colonel Olcott and Helena Petrovna Blavatsky went to India in the early 1880s that their thinking veered towards eastern esotericism. In the mid-1880s, the only place the TS held any formal meetings was at its headquarters in Regent's Park London. I suggest that Edward Jonathan did go to London and meet some of the TS members, because someone put him in touch with a group of men living in Bradford who were interested in eastern and western esotericism; and the 'someone' is most likely to have been William Wynne Westcott, who was a member of the TS by the mid-1880s and also knew Thomas Pattinson of Bradford through freemasonry and the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia. Perhaps I should say here that Edward Jonathan Dunn never became a freemason himself.

There is one other route by which Edward Jonathan Dunn might have met occultists and theosophists in Bradford: in 1828 one of his mother's aunts had married a man called John Midgley. A younger John Midgley was an important figure in the TS's Bradford Lodge in the 1890s and was also initiated into the Golden Dawn. However, I haven't been able to prove that Edward Jonathan Dunn and John Midgley were related, however distantly; and they may not have known each other until they met through their common interest in esotericism.

Edward Jonathan was initiated into the GD's Horus Temple very soon after Westcott and Mathers gave Thomas Pattinson and his fellow occultists in Bradford permission to found an offshoot temple there. However, Edward Jonathan soon seems to have decided to concentrate on theosophy. Before I leave go of his brief flirtation with the GD, I just want to say a word about the motto Edward Jonathan chose. 'Altiora peto' - which can be translated as 'I seek higher things' - expresses the kind of noble sentiment which is typical of GD mottoes and was chosen by another GD initiate several years after Edward Jonathan had resigned. There's no real need to seek for any deeper reason why a new recruit might opt for it. However, 'Altiora Peto' was also the title of a novel published in 1883 whose author was Laurence Oliphant, an Englishman who was for a time a member of a community called the Brotherhood of the New Life, founded in the USA by Thomas Lake Harris. Thomas Lake Harris had started out as a Christian preacher but his views had rapidly become too unorthodox for Christianity to contain them: as a poet and millennialist visionary, he argued that Mankind was on the threshold of moving up to a new level of existence. His writings were much discussed by members of the Golden Dawn in the early 1890s, though some members seem to have misunderstood Harris' view that relations between man and wife should be mystical rather than sexual. Edward Jonathan could certainly have come across Harris and Oliphant through the GD. However, he also had a sister with very utopian views (see below) and she may have brought Oliphant's book to his attention.

Having decided that his spiritual way forward was via theosophy rather than western occultism, Edward Jonathan got together a group of like-minded friends and gained permission from the TS's London headquarters to found a lodge in York. He was the new lodge's first secretary, and one of the busiest sponsors of new members in the period 1892 to 1895, starting with his younger brother Harold who was recruited despite giving an address in St Leonard's-on-Sea (Sussex); and Harry Banbery, who was living at Toynbee Hall in London's East End (see the Sources section below for more on Toynbee Hall). Harold Dunn and Harry Banbery probably didn't attend many meetings but Edward Jonathan also recruited members who lived in York itself who could commit themselves to attending meetings regularly, leading discussions and giving papers. I haven't been able to discover very much about how York Lodge was affected by the split that developed in the TS worldwide, in 1894-95, over who if anyone should now be receiving messages from Blavatsky's Mahatmas, now that she was dead. I could see from the TS Membership Registers that recruitment of new members fell noticeably after 1895; but that was true throughout England. Edward Jonathan was a member of Blavatsky Lodge in London around 1898, and Bradford Lodge around 1910, but this may just be because of changes in his own life rather than the demise of York Lodge.

Although theosophy was an important leisure-time pursuit for Edward Jonathan he had also become a member of the Yorkshire Dialect Society by 1899. This effort to collect local words and phrases before they were lost to history began in 1894 with a speech by the remarkable Professor Joseph Wright. Wright (1855-1930) had been born in Idle on the outskirts of Bradford. Completely self-taught while working as a mill hand for Titus Salt amongst others, he eventually became an academic at Oxford University. The idea of an English Dialect Dictionary was entirely his and he even paid for its publication himself when none of the publishing firms would take it on. The YDS, which still exists, contributed 350,000 words and phrases to the dictionary. Volunteers would go out into the villages and note down Yorkshire usage in the same way composers like Grainger and Vaughan Williams went out into rural areas to hear and write down old folk songs.

The farmhouse at Kelfield must have seen some pretty lively debates, in the 1890s, for Edward Jonathan's sisters also had intellectual interests, although none of them joined either the TS or the GD. Emily Blanche submitted some literary criticism to the radical women's magazine Atalanta that won her one of its readers' scholarships in 1894. Charlotte Elizabeth - Lottie - joined the Fabian Society in 1894 and the Sanitary Institute in 1895 (the SI was more about legislation and social work practice than plumbing and sewage; it renamed itself the Royal Society for Public Health in 1910). I wish I knew more about Lottie: around 1898 she left her family and went to join another experiment in social engineering, the Whiteway House colony, which had just been founded near Stroud in Gloucestershire. This was not a Brotherhood of the New Life; the only such community in the UK was in Glasgow. The Whiteway House colony was trying to put into practice the philosophical ideas of Tolstoy, as published in his A Confession of 1879 and other works. Lottie was in her mid-30s when she left Kelfield, and knew her own mind, but this was still a very unusual thing for a single, middle-class woman to do in the 1890s. In 1899 she married one of the colony's founders, the crusading Quaker journalist Samuel Veale Bracher, who was 12 years her junior. As far as I can tell, they did not have any children; which may have been intentional. Annie Maud's husband was also far younger than she - in 1900 she married Arthur Drover, who ran his own fruit-farm at Great Baddow Essex. They adopted a daughter, Phyllis.

Despite his being surrounded by so much revolutionary thinking, Edward Jonathan Dunn's own life continued on a course that was outwardly conservative, perhaps dictated by his awareness that he was his mother's only support in the running of the farms. On the day of the 1901 census only Charlotte Dunn and Edward Jonathan were still living at Kelfield Lodge. It was a very reduced household - apart from the Dunns there was one housemaid and a poultry boy. It wasn't for another three years that anyone else came to join them at the farm: in the summer of 1904, Edward Jonathan Dunn married Ella Mary Browne.

I haven't been able to find out anything much about Ella Mary Browne's father, George Walter Browne; but I think he must be the man of that name who published two short plays and a book of poetry, around 1880. George Walter Browne and Ellen Phillis Wilberforce were married in York in 1878. They quickly had three daughters: Edith in 1879 and Ella Mary in 1880, both born in York; and Millicent 1882 who was born in Hammersmith. I couldn't find any publications by George Walter Browne after the poetry of 1880; and I could only find Ellen and her daughters on subsequent censuses. On the other hand, I couldn't find a death registration for George Walter Browne that I was satisfied with. I can only say that he was definitely dead by 1906 when Ellen Browne married again; and that Ellen Browne and her daughters had moved back to York by 1891, so that was where Ella Mary grew up.

It's likely that Edward Jonathan met Ella Mary through her sister Millicent, who joined the TS's York Lodge. Ella Mary didn't join the TS until after she was married. Both Ella Mary's sisters were earning their own living in 1901, as teachers; but Ella Mary was away, outside the UK, on the day of the 1901 census, so I don't know whether she worked before her marriage. She does seem to have gone to live at Kelfield Lodge after she and Edward Jonathan were married; but she had always lived in cities and had no experience of running a farm; I think this was an important factor in the decision-making of the next few years.

Edward Jonathan's marriage came at the beginning of three traumatic years for the Dunn family, with very happy events coinciding with tragedies almost to the day. In 1905 the birth of Edward Jonathan and Ella Mary's first child, Alfred, came within three months of the death of Edward Jonathan's literary sister Emily. In 1906 the death of Edward Jonathan's brother Harold came just before the birth of Edward Jonathan's second son, who was named Eric Harold to commemorate him. A few months later, Ella Mary's mother married again, but her new husband, Alfred Waddington, died late in 1907. And in 1907 the question of the future of the Dunn family farms became an urgent one, when Charlotte Dunn's first cousin, Richard Skilbeck, came back from Australia to claim the bride he had been denied fifty years before. Charlotte Dunn married Richard Skilbeck in September 1907 and returned with him to his ranch at Koroit, Victoria.

The farm based at Kelfield Lodge still exists, but the Dunns had all left it by the time of Charlotte's second marriage: Ella Mary and Edward Jonathan had decided that for Edward Jonathan to make a new career from his skills at land valuation was better than carrying on at the farm in difficult times. They may have seen Charlotte's decision to remarry as a blessed release. By 1911 they were living in Bilton Lane Harrogate; Harrogate had a very active TS lodge. In 1917 they were founder-members of Bradford's Minerva TS Lodge, with Fanny Isabel Clayton who had also been a member of the GD. Then they moved to Middlesbrough where Edward Jonathan Dunn worked as a Valuer for the Inland Revenue, from offices in Midland Bank Chambers Albert Road. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors in 1912.

Readers may have noticed a sad theme in this potted history of the Dunn family. Charlotte Dunn lived until she was nearly 80, dying in October 1922 at Koroit; but her husband and three of her children all died young. Three of Edward Jonathan's siblings didn't reach 40, and although he did live long enough to see his two sons as teenagers, he didn't escape the family fate entirely; he outlived his mother by less than four years, dying on 6 March 1926 aged 58.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I don't think the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived either, but there's a history of the TS in Bradford on the web (though originally written in 1941) at www.ts-bradford.org.uk/theosoc/btshisto.htm in which a lot of the same people who joined the GD are mentioned. The History was last updated in April 2012 with a full list of members at least up to 1941; both Edward Jonathan and Ella Mary Dunn were members; though Ella Mary seems only to have joined after she married.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR EDWARD JONATHAN DUNN

FAMILY HISTORY OF THE STABLES, SKILBECKS AND DUNNS at www.stableshistory.co.uk. It's compiled by T B Dunn from The Notices of the Stables Family, handed on to him by Annie Maud Drover. The Notices are based on title deeds, entries in family bibles - the sources couldn't be better. Seen 7 December 2012.

The story of the second marriage of Charlotte Dunn was told to T B Dunn by Annie Maud Drover: Richard Skilbeck had wanted to marry Charlotte, but their mutual grandfather Richard Skilbeck, who was Charlotte's guardian until she reached 21, forbade it on grounds of consanguinity. Richard went off to Australia and settled at Koroit in Victoria; in due course he became a wealthy landowner there. He died in 1924 at Koroit. In December 2012 I looked up Koroit on the web and noticed quite a few burials of people called Skilbeck; so it looks as though Richard Skilbeck had been married before when he came back to England for Charlotte.

At www.visitkoroit.com.au there's a booklet Koroit Heritage Trail, with drawings of some very nice buildings from the mid-19th century onwards. The town also has a botanical garden and is connected to the rest of the world by train; so Charlotte wasn't going miles into the Outback. R Skilbeck is mentioned in connection with two houses in the town. The first you reach when taking the Heritage Trail is Old Hillcrest, built in 1910 (for Charlotte). The next notable building beyond it is The Pines, Skilbeck's first house at Koroit, built c 1860 but much altered since.

Wikipedia on Koroit: the name is from the Aborigine tribe whose land it is on.

JONATHAN DUNN

A reference to the house at Stillingfleet still being a residence of Jonathan Dunn, is in Bulmer's Directory for 1892 transcribed at www.genuki.org.uk: Stillingfleet House, Stillingfleet-with-Moreby.

Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England 1879 piv in a list of members, Jonathan Dunn of Kelfield Lodge York.

The Farmer's Magazine 1871 p315 he had been elected to Royal Agricultural Society within the previous year.

EDWARD JONATHAN DUNN IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

For details of his membership, such as they were: Theosophical Society Membership Registers for the period 1888 to 1901, held at the TS headquarters building in Gloucester Place London W1.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XIV covering March-August 1894 with Annie Besant as editor. Published London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume XIV no 82 issued 15 June 1894 p347 news section: Annie Besant had been on a lecture tour of northern England. She had given a talk at York Lodge on 11 May [1894]. E J Dunn is named as York Lodge's secretary; he'd probably organised the talk.

Toynbee Hall still exists, on the site where it was built, which is now in the London borough of Tower Hamlets: www.toynbeehall.org.uk. The germ of the idea came into being in 1873 when the Rev Samuel Barnett and his wife Henrietta refused an easy parish in favour of an East End one. They developed the idea that the future political and social elite of the Empire should spend time in the East End meeting the general population and building up an understanding of how the poor lived that would influence their professional lives; and that they should pay to do so. Toynbee Hall opened in 1884 as a charity with the twin aims of ending poverty and extending social inclusion (two ideals just as relevant today) and was named after the Barnetts' colleague Arnold Toynbee.

ALTIORA PETO AND THE BROTHERHOOD OF THE NEW LIFE

For further information on Thomas Lake Harris and Laurence Oliphant, see A Prophet and a Pilgrim by Herbert W Schneider and George Lawton. New York: Columbia University Press 1942. Schneider and Lawton used Oliphant's novel in preparing the biography: p563.

The other GD initiate who chose the motto 'altiora peto' was Eliza Augusta Vennor Morris, in 1899. It's possible that she and Edward Jonathan Dunn knew each other during the 1890s, not through the GD but through the Theosophical Society.

Transactions of the Yorkshire Dialect Society volume 1 no 21 1899 issued by the Society; p71 presumably in a list of members: E J Dunn of Kelfield.

THE DUNN SISTERS

Atalanta volume 7 1894 p353 gives a list of scholarships awarded. £20 for each of the next two years had been given to Emily Blanche Dunn of Kelfield Lodge.

Wikipedia on Atalanta magazine: it was founded especially for young women readers by L T

Mead, who was also its first editor. It was published from 1887 to 1898. It quickly made a name for itself with high-quality articles and fiction writing eg by F Hodgson Burnett, R L Stevenson, H R Haggard. It developed a tradition of literary criticism by both professional writers and by its readers. It encouraged its readers to aim high and take up (middle-class) careers eg in medicine and the civil service. Its editor 1894-96 was A Balfour Symington, who had been appointed by Meade.

Fabian Society (GB) list of members for the year 1894 p7 includes "Miss Lottie E Dunn" of Kelfield Lodge York.

Journal of the Sanitary Institute volume 15 1895 p78 Lottie Dunn has been a member since January 1894. From wikipedia: what is now the Royal Society for Public Health was called the Sanitary Institute from 1876-1909; it was an important influence on public health legislation, social work practice etc.

See wikipedia for Tolstoy's political and spiritual radicalism, based on his reading of Schopenhauer.

ELLEN BROWNE AND HER DAUGHTERS

Via familysearch to the registers of SS Martin and Gregory York: marriage of George Walter Browne to Ellen Phillis Wilberforce took place on 5 March 1878; both parties were 21. The baptisms of Edith 1879; and of Ella Mary in 1880 were in those registers; but the baptism of Millicent (1882) was not.

I think this is the correct George Walter Browne: details from the British Library catalogue and via googlebooks.

Hearts and Homes: A Comedy in 1 Act published York: Johnson and Tesseyman 1875.

Thalia: An Original Comedy-Drama published 1878 but there were no details of the publishing firm, so it may have been privately printed.

A Fairy Voyage and Other Poems published London: Remington and Co 1879. This volume is listed in Reilly's Mid-Victorian Poetry (published 2000) p63; it's the only item by this writer.

I couldn't find anything else published by this person; nor anything more about him in the normal places you would expect to get information on authors. I checked freebmd and familysearch for a death registration: couldn't find any with the full name 1881-1900; there might be one as only George Browne but I couldn't see one that convinced me, 1881-85.

EDWARD JONATHAN DUNN AS A SURVEYOR

London Gazette 3 October 1913 p6900 civil service promotions include E J Dunn to Junior Valuer Inland Revenue; by an Order in Council issued 10 January 1910.

Chartered Surveyor magazine issued by Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (RICS) p1923 p26 Edward Jonathan Dunn's current business address is Midland Bank Chambers, Albert Road Middlesbrough.

Transactions of the RICS 1924 p27 Edward Jonathan Dunn had been elected a Fellow of the RICS in October 1912.

13 December 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

William Arthur Dunn was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in December 1892, taking the Latin motto 'Vi superum'. At that time he was living at 46 Wandle Road Croydon. He did the study necessary to progress further, and was initiated into the 2nd, inner Order on 17 March 1894, but resigned from the GD a year later, in June 1895.

It's been hard to find out much about William Arthur Dunn, because he spent relatively little of his life in Britain. I found an obituary, which is the basis of this biography, but the obituary knows more about the last two decades of his life than the three.

William Arthur Dunn was born in 1866 in Hackney, then a suburb north of the City of London. His family emigrated to Canada while he was a child: they are not on the census of 1871, so they must have been in Canada by then. It means that I have no idea who his parents were, I don't even know their names, or whether he had any siblings.

Perhaps William Arthur Dunn came from a musical family, because he showed early promise as a musician and in 1879 (he was only 13) was appointed organist at Christ Church cathedral, Hamilton Ontario. At some point before 1885 he returned to England to take his music studies further. In February 1885 he became a student at the Royal Academy of Music, being recommended to the RAM by Joseph Percy Baker, also an organist and secretary of the Royal Musical Association. During the time he was a student, he was living in Hackney again - perhaps with relatives, or as a lodger in a district his family knew.

In 1887, he married Alice Dixon. On the 1891 census she is described as having been born in the Dalston district of Hackney, so perhaps their two families had known each other for a long time. Aged 21 when they married, both William Arthur and Alice were very young - Victorian couples usually married later in their twenties, so they could set themselves up financially. They then had two sons in quick succession: Hubert Arthur in 1887 and William Reginald - known as Rex - in 1888. This probably explains why, on the day of the 1891 census, William Arthur Dunn's main source of income was a job as a book-keeper. As far as I can see, he didn't work as a full-time musician while he was living in London.

William Arthur and Alice had begun their married life in Harringay, north London, but had moved to Wandle Road Croydon by 1891. There, William Arthur was offered work as a musician and he may actually have been paid for it, which must have pleased him: from 1892 to 1902 he was working as organist and choir master at the Unitarian Free Christian Church of Croydon, where the vicar was the Rev John Page Hopps, known at the time for his attempts to bring together Unitarianism and Spiritualism. Once they had established themselves in Croydon, firstly William Arthur and later Alice got involved in the Theosophical Society (TS).

In my biographies of Herbert and Sidney Coryn (both TS members who went on to join the GD) I've talked quite a bit about how active they were in recruiting new members to the TS. William Arthur Dunn was one of those new members. He applied to join in July 1891 and Sidney Coryn and his sister Frances (also active in the TS but never a GD member) were his sponsors. Sidney Coryn was just setting up a new TS lodge in Croydon, and William Arthur became one of its members, serving as its correspondence secretary in 1892-93, with Sidney as its president. Croydon Lodge was very active. There was a programme of fortnightly talks - one in September 1892 was on Medieval and Modern Sorcery, which may have been the trigger which led William Arthur to want to join the GD. There were also regular study evenings during which the members considered theosophical works like Helena Petrovna Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine and Annie Besant's Seven Principles of Man. In 1893, William Arthur moved over to join Brixton Lodge instead, and served 1893-94 as correspondence secretary there at the same time as he was studying to be a magician of the GD. As well as being active in his local lodges, William Arthur also volunteered at several of London's Lotus Groups - the TS's equivalent to the Christian Sunday school - conducting their children's choirs.

It's likely that William Arthur was kept fully informed about the dispute that arose in 1894-95 in the TS, between William Quan Judge on the one side, and founder-member Colonel Olcott and Annie Besant on the other; because both Herbert Coryn and Sidney Coryn played big roles in it. I've dealt with the intricacies of the dispute in their biographies. In this biography I'll just say that although it was fought out on other issues, the argument was about the direction of the TS after Blavatsky's death (she had died in 1892) and who would be its leader. William Arthur Dunn did not take an active role in it. But when William Quan Judge lost the dispute, in 1895, and was censured by senior figures in the TS including the GD's William Wynn Westcott, William Arthur Dunn was one of the many people who resigned from the TS and had no further involvement in it. His resignation from the GD - coming at the same time - may have had the same cause. However, there may have been more personal reasons for cutting back on his involvement away from the family.

Alice Dunn had not been involved with the TS during the years in which her husband was very committed to it; but she joined it in January 1895 even as the Judge dispute was hotting up. I can't help wondering if her interest in theosophical issues had grown because she - and he - knew she was ill; because Alice died in the spring of 1896, aged only 30.

As well as his grief, William Arthur will have had to deal with the practical problems of being a working widower with two small boys. If he had been a wealthier man, he could have employed servants to take care of the house and children; or sent the boys away to school. The usual solution for a less well-off man would be for a female relative to move in to run the household and look after the children - but William Arthur may not have had many relations living in England. Perhaps someone was despatched from Canada to come to his rescue, but I don't actually know how William Arthur managed over the next five years.

One thing that he does seem to have done in late 1890s is get more involved with one particular local church: in 1897 a theosophical magazine mentioned that his having something to do with the English Labour Church movement - though unfortunately my source didn't say exactly what he was doing there. The Labour Church movement was a loose group of essentially independent local congregations, mostly led by people brought up as Nonconformists but who now felt that the leaders of Nonconformism were a bit too close to the Establishment and not worried enough about social issues. The nearest Labour Church to where William Arthur Dunn was living was Croydon's Brotherhood Church, founded by Rev William Jupp, who had been raised as a Calvinist and then spent time as a Congregationalist minister before coming under the influence of the writings of Ralph Waldo Emerson and Walt Whitman. It seems to be a moot point exactly how Christian the beliefs of an average Labour Church congregation were. Though most people who attended Labour Churches believed in immanentism (see the Sources section at the end of this biography) that wasn't just a Christian doctrine, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine was based on it too (so William Arthur Dunn would have been very familiar with the concept). Labour Churches tended not to have a minister, just a chairman for their meetings. And many of them had close ties with the Independent Labour Party and the Social Democratic Federation. So this was pretty radical stuff that William Arthur was getting himself involved with. However, in the end it didn't satisfy him and he returned to theosophy, committing himself to a revitalised idea of it coming out of the United States - universal brotherhood.

Universal brotherhood was the clarion call of Katherine Tingley, who began to rise to eminence after William Quan Judge died in 1896. As early as the summer of 1896 she and a group of companions - they called themselves 'Crusaders' - visited England as part of a world tour in which they gave talks explaining their vision and raised money for a theosophical community Mrs Tingley was setting up on land at Point Loma, just outside San Diego in southern California. William Arthur Dunn doesn't seem to have taken any part in the social events organised in 1896 for the Crusaders - it was too soon after Alice's death - but Herbert Coryn was involved in them and between 1896 and 1898 was one of universal brotherhood's most vocal champion in England. In 1898, Katherine Tingley became leader-for-life of the TS in the USA; its name and its constitution were changed to make universal brotherhood their central feature; and Herbert Coryn emigrated to America to work for the Universal Brotherhood and Theosophical Society in New York. In 1900, Coryn went the whole hog and moved to Point Loma.

So William Arthur Dunn would have known a great deal about what was going on at Point Loma, and what Mrs Tingley and her supporters were trying to achieve there. By 1900 he had made up his mind: in that year, he travelled to California and installed Hubert at least, if not Rex as well, at Point Loma to continue their education there. He had not returned to England by the day of the 1901 census but he did come back for a time, to tidy up his affairs, before moving to Point Loma himself in 1902. He may have travelled out with Sidney Coryn, who also emigrated to the USA in 1902 (though Sidney never lived at Point Loma, he and his family settled in San Francisco).

What was Point Loma like? It seems to have had elements of university, of religious retreat and of township. People lived there full-time, but they were not tied to it, people came and went. Mrs Tingley never supposed that it would be self-sufficient, but it had a farm, orchards, a bakery and kept bees and residents were expected to contribute labour to all of these, whatever else they were qualified to do. There was a school for the children of the residents. The centrepiece of Mrs Tingley's vision for Point Loma was the Raja-Yoga College, which taught residents how they could live a life based on theosophical principles. However, later there was also a College of Antiquity, which trained people to teach theosophy; and a lecture-extension scheme explaining theosophy to people who knew nothing about it; and a publishing business producing journals and booklets. To pay for all this, residents did pottery and work with cloth - Point Loma's batik work became very well-known and it also had a business making school uniforms. There was a hospital and sanatorium, where Herbert Coryn worked in addition to being one of Point Loma's GP's.

For William Arthur Dunn, one of the main attractions of Mrs Tingley's ideas must have been the emphasis she placed on music and music-making as a part of everyday life: by 1913 Point Loma had an orchestra, a chorus, a string quartet and presumably lots of informal groups, and was also training up composers, one of whom was William Arthur's son Rex. The Isis Conservatory was the centre of Point Loma's musical life. Moving to Point Loma enabled William Arthur to give to music all the time he'd had to give to being a book-keeper when he was living in London.

Immediately on settling at Point Loma for good, he joined the Conservatory's teaching staff. In 1904 he took charge of all the community's choral work and in the same year Mrs Tingley appointed him head of the Isis Conservatory and conductor of the orchestra.

It's a pity, but I haven't found any musical compositions by William Arthur Dunn, either in the British Library or mentioned on a website anywhere. I've found more by his son Rex.

In January 1906, William Arthur Dunn married again. His second wife was another resident of Point Loma, Ethelind Wood. Ethelind had come to Point Loma with her father, Lorin Francis Wood, who had founded Point Loma's hospital and worked there with Herbert Coryn. In 1900 she had been the first person to graduate from the Raja-Yoga College. Point Loma's junior school was founded the same year with Ethelind as its only teacher; in 1906 she was its headmistress. She could sing, and was sufficiently confident to sing solo at concerts: in 1905 she gave the first performance of a song written for her by Rex Dunn, the earliest composition by him that I could find any reference to. William Arthur and Ethelind did not have any children, but they adopted one child, possibly more - Point Loma had always taken in orphans.

I haven't found a specific reference to William Arthur Dunn going with Mrs Tingley, the orchestra and chorus, to a theosophical peace conference in Sweden in 1913; but if he was the orchestra's conductor he must have done so. After the peace conference, the whole group went to Holland where Mrs Tingley gave some lectures and the musicians some concerts. One of the pieces they played when they visited Arnhem was an Ode to Peace, with music by Rex Dunn and words by Katherine Tingley and another Point Loma resident, the Welsh poet and fantasy writer Kenneth Morris (whose brother Ronald had been in the Golden Dawn). Hubert was studying to be a theosophy teacher, at the Raja-Yoga College. In 1917 Hubert married yet another Point Loma resident, but he and his wife Emily left Point Loma in 1919.

William Arthur Dunn fell ill early in 1921 and died on 10 August, at Point Loma.

Ethelind Dunn stayed at Point Loma at least until 1929. She got married a second time, to Edwin Lambert.

HUBERT DUNN

I couldn't find any mention of him on the web so I don't know where he and Emily went, or what happened to them after they left Point Loma.

REX DUNN

Rex became a composer. He was rather feted at Point Loma. He was given the commission to compose the Ode to Peace; and had several of his works played during a recital by Dame

Nellie Melba in 1917, at her special request. He stayed on at Point Loma for several years after his father died - but then sound came to the movies.

By 1929, Rex had moved to Hollywood and was composing music for Warner Brothers. Imdb has got a comprehensive list of his film scores. The list covers 1929 to 1948; however, Rex didn't get his name on any film credits until the late 1940s. As well as composing, Rex did some conducting, and also some adaptation of scores already in existence for Warner Brothers' purposes. The most notable of Rex's adaptations was the score of the 1929 version of The Desert Song, from original music by Sigmund Romberg. The film had very high production values - not only sound, but also several sequences in technicolour, and Myrna Loy at the outset of her long career.

Rex Dunn died in 1959.

--

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR WILLIAM ARTHUR DUNN

The main one is his obituary, published in Point Loma's journal The Theosophical Path volume 21 number 4, issue of October 1921 p407. The Theosophical Path was edited by Katherine Tingley.

ONTARIO

Wikipedia on Christ Church Hamilton: the church is on James Street North. The diocese of Hamilton was created in 1875. Its first bishop was Canadian-born Thomas Brock Fuller (1810-84).

WILLIAM ARTHUR DUNN'S MUSICAL TRAINING

By email 16 April 2012 from the Choral Library, Royal Academy of Music, quoting the RAM's Student Register. William Arthur Dunn started at the RAM in February 1885 aged 19; he was living in Hackney at that time. He had been recommended as a potential student by Mr Percy Baker.

PERCY BAKER:

Macmillan Encyclopedia of Music and Musicians by Albert Ernest Wier. Published Macmillans 1938. On p104: J Percy Baker "English organist and writer on music" 1859-1930.

International Music Journals by Linda M Fidler and Richard S James. Greenwood Press 1990. Via google to p384 which is quoting the Proceedings of the Royal Musical Association volume 100 1973-74. On p7 there is an article by J Percy Baker FRAM on the RMA's first 50 years; at the time the article was written, Baker was the RMA's Secretary.

In British Library catalogue a few musical compositions by him: hymn settings, songs, piano pieces. And some books including: A Compend of Musical Knowledge for...Degree Candidates 1914.

MEMBER OF THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register January 1889-September 1891 p238 entry for William Dunn. Application dated 3 July 1891, sponsors Sidney Coryn and (Sidney's sister) Frances Coryn. Subscription paid 1893-95; handwritten note across his record - "W G Judge". Address during membership: 46 Wandle Road Croydon.

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p241 membership application of Alice Dunn of 46 Wandle Road Croydon dated January 1895. Sidney Coryn is one of her sponsors.

William Arthur Dunn's obituary said that he was a personal student of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky; the date of his joining the TS suggests differently, and the assertion is also contradicted by this:

At www.theos-world.com, journal Theosophy World issue of February 1999. Contains an article: 40 Years at Headquarters: the Theosophical Society (the American one, that is), Point Loma California. By Iverson L Harris. It was originally a talk by Harris, given at Blavatsky Lodge in London on 10 May 1973. Harris had lived at Point Loma until 1946. During the talk Harris gave a list of 13 people originally from Britain, who'd played a large part in the development of the community at Point Loma. He divided the list into two: those who had known Blavatsky - which included Herbert Coryn; and those who hadn't - which included

WA Dunn. Hubert Dunn was also on the list.

WILLIAM ARTHUR DUNN AS A THEOSOPHY ACTIVIST: APPEARANCE IN LUCIFER

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine was published by the TS in London and was the most important British theosophical magazine during the early 1890s.

Volume XI September 1892-February 1893, editor Annie Besant. Published London: Theosophical Publishing Society 7 Duke Street Adelphi London WC. Volume XI number 62 issued 15 October 1892: p169 news section. Report on Croydon Lodge which now had 35 members and assocs. It had been formed in July 1891. Thus far it had confined itself to lectures each fortnight but now it was going to have a series of study evenings: a group had been formed 27 September [1892] to study Besant's Seven Principles of Man and Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine. On 6 September [1892] Jessie Horne had given "an interesting lecture on Yoga"; and p170 W R Old had lectured on Medl and Modern Sorcery, on 20 Sep [1892]. Report prepared and sent to Lucifer by William A Dunn as Croydon Lodge's correspondence secretary.

7 April 2013: Jessie Horne was the sister-in-law of Sidney and Herbert Coryn. She was secretary of Brixton TS Lodge.

WILLIAM ARTHUR DUNN'S ONLY PUBLISHED WRITINGS ON THEOSOPHY; all in Point Loma's The Theosophical Path, which Katherine Tingley edited and which is on the web at www.scribd.com and via googlebooks:

- * Volume 21 1921 an article which may be by him (the snippet wasn't clear on that): Thought-Power of Ancient Egypt.
- * Unnumbered volume covering July to October 1932 p228: Executive Thought.
- * Volume 54 number 4 April 1933 p538: Constructive Tendencies of Thought, which may be a Part II of the article published 1932

LABOUR CHURCH MOVEMENT

At www.scribd.com there's full text of Theosophy the US-based magazine: volume XII number 1 April 1897 p30 says that "Brother Dunn" of Croydon had come to the notice of the Labour Church movement. There was no more information on what about him had caught the Labour Church's eye.

My modern source for the Labour Church movement is via www.escholarship.org/uc/item/8v38w3wj, a site run by University of California. There's an article by Mark Bevir of the University of California at Berkeley, published originally in the Journal of British Studies volume 38 number 2 April 1999: the Labour Church Movement 1891-1902. Besides giving the details I've used in the biography, Bevir makes two points that I think are important:

1) p7: the Labour Church was one of many attempts to reconcile Darwin (I'd say Lyell as well) with belief in Christianity. Those who attended Labour Churches (I don't think you can call them followers) emphasised the importance of immanentism: that God is in the world, not above/out of/beyond it; and that Evolution of species could be taken as evidence of this (not a denial of it).

2) p13-29: the Labour Church flourished only briefly - by as early as 1902 it was running out of impetus, for a number of reasons that Bevir details.

Via google I found a larger work by Mark Bevir: The Making of British Socialism published 2011; on p254 says Rev William Jupp founded “a free religious movement in Croydon” around 1890 which merged with the Brotherhood Church in the district around 1892.

CROYDON’S UNITARIAN CHURCH

For John Page Hopps see:

www.le.ac.uk/litandphil/presidents the website of the Leicester Literary and Philosophical Society.

And www.croydonunitarians.org.uk/history/html

He appears in Lucifer but after Dunn had left the TS:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XXI September 1897 to February 1898, edited by Annie Besant and G R S Mead. Publishing details as above. In Volume XXI number 124 issued 15 December 1897 there’s advance notice p292 of the International Spiritualist Congress which would be held in London 19-24 June 1898. On the first evening J Page Hopps would lead a religious service.

A bit more on Hopps from The Great Secret and its Unfoldment in Occultism by a CofE Clergyman. London: George Redway 1895. Anonymous author is widely thought to be Rev Charles Maurice Davies, whose wife Jane Anna was in the Golden Dawn. On p307 in a Postscript to the book, author says that he attended a spiritualist conference held in London either in 1894 or 1895 after many years spent out of spiritualist circles. P309 Rev John Page Hopps was the preacher at the opening session of the conference. Author describes Hopps on p312 as had being more successful in his efforts to link spiritualism and Unitarianism than the author had been trying to put spiritualism and Anglicanism together.

Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research volume XI 1895 p613 shows that John Page Hopps was an associate member, at Oak Tree House, South Norwood Hill. W A Dunn was not a member of the Society during the period I checked this out, between 1882 and 1900.

THEOSOPHICAL COMMUNITY AT POINT LOMA

Via googlebooks to an advert for a replacement for W A Dunn at Croydon’s Unitarian Church: Musical Times volume 43 1902 p687 in the jobs’ column, there was one for an organist/choirmaster at the Free Christian Church in Croydon. Salary £30, apply to the vicar.

My best source for Point Loma:

The Point Loma Community in California 1897-1942: A Theosophical Experiment. By Emmett A Greenwalt 1955: Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. Greenwalt used Point Loma’s own archives, local government records from San Diego, local papers, and accounts of Point Loma by people who had lived there.

Another modern source is:

The Dawn of a New Cycle: Point Loma Theosophists and American Culture by W Michael Ashcraft. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press 2002.

For Kenneth Morris:

Lloyd Alexander, Evangeline Walton Ensley and Kenneth Morris: A Primary and Secondary Bibliography by Kenneth J Zahorski, Robert H Boyer. In the Masters of Science Fiction and Fantasy series. Boston Mass: G K Hall and Co 1981.

ETHELIND WOOD DUNN

The History of Woodstock Connecticut volume 3 by Clarence Winthrop Bowen. Published American Antiquarian Society 1930; p100 in list of noted people born in the town; Susan Ethelind Wood b 1881 daughter of Lorin Francis Wood MD. She married 1 January 1906 William Arthur Dunn. No biological children but adopted Gertrude Wood Dunn who was born 25 December 1906. William Arthur Dunn's DOB is given as 12 February 1866; there's no source for the information but it might have come from Ethelind herself.

Via google to The Theosophical Path couldn't see a volume number but it covers 1929 p89 Ethelind is Mrs Lambert now and has become director of the Raja-Yoga College.

The Dawn of a New Cycle: Point Loma Theosophists and American Culture by W Michael Ashcraft. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press 2002. P99 is the basis for my account of Ethelind Wood; her second husband was Edwin Lambert of Boston.

Familysearch did not have records of the marriage of William Arthur Dunn to Ethelind Wood; nor of William Arthur Dunn's death. I've noticed it's not very good on California information.

HUBERT ARTHUR DUNN

Via web to Tingley's Plea to Abolish Capital Punishment addressed to the Governor of California at Sacramento and dated 2 April 1914. Hubert Dunn is first on list of signatories.

Via googlebooks to The Theosophical Path volume covering January 1917-February 1918. On p214 there's a short report on a ceremony on 11 December 1917 at Point Loma in which twelve residents married including Hubert Dunn and Emily Young.

Hubert = son of W A Dunn of the Isis Conservatory of Music. Hubert was a student of divinity at Point Loma's School of Antiquity, training to be a teacher

Emily = daughter of H B Young and his wife. Emily had been a student at the Raja-Yoga School for several years.

The Dawn of a New Cycle: Point Loma Theosophists and American Culture by W Michael Ashcraft. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press 2002. P100 about Hubert and Emily leaving Point Loma 1919.

WILLIAM REGINALD DUNN called REX

At www.worldcat.org: the Ode to Peace was published by the Aryan Theosophical Press at Point Loma in 1914. Music by Rex Dunn, words by Kenneth Morris and Katherine Tingley.

Via googlebooks to The Theosophical Path January-June 1922 p197-98: a translation of an article originally in Dutch and originally published on 27 August 1913 in Nieuwe Arnhemsche Courant.

The Point Loma Community in California 1897-1942: A Theosophical Experiment. By Emmett A Greenwalt 1955: Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. On p106: Nellie Melba's visits to Point Loma. Greenwalt's sources for them are the San Diego Union 8 March 1917; and The Theosophical Path volume XII April 1917: p429.

REX COMPOSES FILM MUSIC

See www.imdb.com for what looks like a pretty complete list of the films which have his music in. Imdb gives full DOB as 28 October 1888 in Croydon; DOD is 25 May 1959 Los Angeles.

Film Composers in America: A Filmography 1911-70 by Clifford McCarty 2000. On p14 a reference Rex Dunn and others as "staff composers" at Warners at the time of the transition to sound ie 1928-31. Warners' music archives are now at the University of Southern California, which is on the site once occupied by the Point Loma community.

Sigmund Romberg by William A Everett and Geoffrey Holden Block 2007. On p262 in the chapter Romberg in Hollywood, Rex Dunn named as the adaptor of music by Romberg for a film of the play The Desert Song.

Dunn did some music for one early film by Howard Hawks: Award-Winning Films of the 1930s by John Reid 2004; pp58-59: film is The Dawn Patrol, 1930 by First National Pictures of New York. I can't understand why it's listed in this book as author says it wasn't a good film and didn't win any awards!

7 April 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

James Madison Durand and his wife Theodosia Durand were initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 28 February 1894. They chose mottoes which probably reflected an interest in the Kabbalah: his was 'Judah', her's was 'En hakkore'. The Durands were not intending to stay in London: they moved to Paris and became members of the GD's Ahathoor temple there. They were both initiated into the GD's inner, 2nd Order in June 1895. Later, both their GD records were marked 'away'.

This is one of my short biographies. I'm sure there's more information on the Durands out there somewhere, but it will be in France, the United States, possibly even in México... This is what I have found out about JAMES MADISON DURAND and his wife THEODOSIA DURAND, née Moore, without doing all that exciting but expensive foreign travel.

Sally Davis

March 2016

IN THE GD

Two other people were initiated in the same ceremony as the Durands - George Rowell and Mary Eliza Haweis. George Rowell was an anaesthetist and I don't suppose the Durands had met him before, but they may have known Mrs Haweis. Mary Eliza Haweis, née Joy, had been born into a family of artists. She was not a painter herself, however, so much as a writer about dress, interior design and (good) taste. Magazine articles by her were published regularly in the USA. I imagine the Durands did at least know her name and may even have been introduced to her by 1894.

Once initiated, the Durands began to race through the study programme necessary to be eligible for the GD's inner, 2nd Order. They were not always discreet. When teaching some of their new acquaintances numerology, especially its use in the Kabbalah, they said they had got their knowledge by being members of a secret cult - which was strictly against the rules of the Order. They got carried away, I suppose.

Their friend Max Dauthendey said of them that they regarded their trip to Europe as necessary for their spiritual as well as their artistic well-being: you can see their initiation as GD members as a part of that experience.

Sources:

For the Durands as members of the Ahathoor Temple: R A Gilbert The Golden Dawn Companion p39.

For Mary Eliza Haweis, see ODNB volume 25 p873. The Durands may have known some of her books:

1877 The Art of Beauty

1879 The Art of Dress

1881, reprinted 1889 The Art of Decoration

1882 Beautiful Houses.

The German author and painter Max Dauthendey learned from the Durands at least that the GD existed - though he may not have known its name:

Max Dauthendey: Poet-Philosopher by Herman George Wendt. Volume 2 part 1 AMS Press 1966 p38 footnote 23.

There's a page on Dauthendey in wikipedia: 1867-1918.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

They were interested in the Kabbalah, probably from before they joined the GD. They were not members of the Theosophical Society; at least, not in England; and James Madison Durand was not a freemason as far as I can see.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

No, not of either of them.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

JAMES MADISON DURAND

I haven't been able to identify him for certain but I feel he must be a member of the Durand family of Newark New Jersey, skilled artists, engravers and jewellery-makers. Perhaps he was a grandson of James Madison Durand 1813-95 who was a partner in Newark's silversmithing firm Baldwin and Durand from 1845-52 and also (in 1838) the founder of jewellery-makers Durand and Co.

I found several men named James Madison Durand on Familysearch, but wasn't convinced that any of them were the GD member. The one who looked least unlikely was the son of Elias and Susan Durand, born in 1843. BUT there was a snag about him: in 1865 he married Catharine Kelly. I suppose she could have died and he married Theodosia as a second wife. This James Madison Durand died in May 1899 and is buried in Irvington, Essex New Jersey. He fought in the Civil War. Since I found out about the artists' colony (see below for that) I'm less convinced by him even than I was before. Perhaps the GD member is someone else altogether, and doesn't appear in Familysearch's records at all.

Sources:

American Spoons, Souvenir and Historical by Dorothy T Rainwater and Donna H Felger. P386 describes the Durand family of New Jersey as descended from Dr Jean Durand, a Huguenot born in La Rochelle in 1667.

There's plenty on the web of the jewellery-making industry of Newark New Jersey and its importance to the local economy. For example see via google Proceedings of the New Jersey Historical Society volume 62 1944.

For Cyrus Durand, engraver of bank-notes, see via archive.org in The Illustrated Magazine of Art volume 3 issue of 1 January 1854: pp267-270.

Some family history information on James Madison Durand 1813-95 at //freepages.genealogy.rootsweb.ancestry.com~silversmiths. He married Electa Baldwin. Their son Wallace Durand (1846-1921) became manager of Durand and Co.

The Durand family's house at Maplewood: www.durandhedden.org, There's an exhaustive book of Durand genealogy by Dr Alvy Ray Smith, founder of Pixar Animation Studios, a descendant of John Durand of Derby Connecticut. It's at: //alvyray.com/Durand/Final\_Fall\_Newsletter\_Durand\_Hedden.pdf which is the issue November/December 2003 volume 22 number 1 of the Durand-Hedden House and Garden Association. BUT I couldn't find a likely James Madison Durand in it.

At eragem.com information on an exhibition of Newark's jewellery, with a reference to Tiffany and Co setting up a branch of their silver department in Newark in 1896.

See the gravestone of the James Madison Durand who died in 1899 via www.findagrave.com: There's no mention on it that he had been married but at Familysearch there's a record of his marriage to Catharine Kelly.

THEODOSIA DURAND née MOORE

I've found even less about Theodosia than about her husband, and virtually nothing about her background except the sparse (and conflicting) details on various US census forms. The censuses do seem to agree that Theodosia Moore was born in November 1863 in Quincy, a small town in northern California. Her parents had clearly come to California from elsewhere but different censuses gave different details for where they had been born: her father (whose forename I don't know) was born in either Illinois or Ohio; her mother Anna was from the deep south, born either in Alabama or in Mississippi.

Sources such as they are:

NARA Census returns 1920 and 1930 seen at Familysearch (more details below).

California Deaths Index 1940-97 seen at Familysearch: gives full date of birth and her original surname.

EDUCATION

JAMES MADISON DURAND

Unknown, especially as I'm not even sure who the right man is.

THEODOSIA MOORE DURAND

Unknown until we get to her training as an artist: one source says she was a graduate of the Government Fine Arts School in Paris.

Source for Theodosia Moore Durand:

Website www.askart.com's database of artists.

MARRIAGE

James Madison Durand and Theodosia Moore had got married by the time they joined the GD. Perhaps the trip to Europe was their wedding trip. I haven't found any information as to when and where the ceremony took place. I wonder how they met?

THE ARTISTS' COLONY

I've said above that the Durands saw their trip to Europe as essential for their spiritual and creative growth as artists. Surely, though, they can't have expected that the growth should take the form it eventually did. Out of discussions they had with the people they met in England and France arose the idea that a group of them should find some land and set up a kind-of purpose-built community on it, growing their own food but having plenty of time to work as painters, sculptors, poets - anything creative. All members of the community were going to be equal - except for the servants that the creative men and women were going to bring with them to do their housework and childcare for them while they worked on the land and at their art. Originally the group was going to settle in Switzerland; later on, South Carolina was put forward as a possibility; but in the end, the idea of going to México was the suggestion that was acted on.

Sources for this artists' colony are few and far between and I haven't found any evidence for who was in the group apart from the Durands and Max Dauthendey. However, the group's plan did get as far as an article-cum-manifesto which appeared in art magazines in the USA and France, early in 1897. James Madison Durand was named in the articles as the person those wanting to join the colony were to contact; and he probably wrote the version of the manifesto that was sent to the magazines.

The Durands did go to México, probably early in 1897. Max Dauthendey and his wife left Europe a few months later, intending to join them. However, on the journey from Vera Cruz to México City Dauthendey decided that he was never going to write great German poetry in a tropical climate. He sought out the Durands, to tell them he no longer wanted to join the colony; but had trouble finding them as they had not sent him their address. Perhaps other artists wanting to join the colony had the same trouble Dauthendey had, in actually making contact with the Durands once they had gone to México. I think it's more likely, though, that when it came down to it, those people who had got so excited about the idea, got cold feet when it came to moving to México and living on the land in a group. Dauthendey's biographer couldn't find any evidence that the colony had ever become a reality; and I haven't found any mention of such a colony (though I've only looked on the web and not, of course, in México or even the USA).

The Dauthendeys went home. The Durands, however, may have stayed in México. If they were living in México it would explain why they seem to disappear from the historical record in the USA and the UK, from 1897 until Theodosia reappears (as a widow) in Washington State in 1919.

Sources:

Max Dauthendey: Poet-Philosopher by Herman George Wendt. New York: Columbia University Press 1936. Particularly p24, p30, p38-39 footnote 32.

The appeal-cum-manifesto:

French-language version in La Plume volume IX pp10-15.

English-language version in The Arena volume 17 December 1896-June 1897. Editor: John Clarke Ridpath: pp642-51 The Foundation of a Colony of Self-Supporting Artists: Appeal. On p651, a short letter James Madison Durand was reproduced; written November 1896 from Boulevard Raspail, Paris - the same address the GD had for the Durands when they were members of the Ahathoor temple.

The magazine The Arena was founded by Benjamin Orange Flower and was published between 1889 and 1909 by the The Arena Publishing Company of Boston. All its issues can be reached via its wikipedia page so you can read the full Appeal for yourself - an interesting document though some members of the colony were clearly going to be more equal than others and it all seems rather impractical to me!

Another sceptical assessment of the colony's chances, from 1897, via www.newspapers.com to The Courier of Lincoln Nebraska; Saturday 24 April 1897 p5. The report states that the Appeal had appeared in The Arena's issue of March 1897.

A modern mention of the Durands and the colony, probably in connection with Dauthendey though I couldn't see the context from the snippet:

The Image of Mexico in Germanic Imaginative Literature by Karl W Obrath. PhD Thesis, University of Cincinnati 1975 p178, seen online. I would have liked to read more about this than the snippet I could see using google; but there isn't a copy of the full text online or in any English library.

WORK/PROFESSION

JAMES MADISON DURAND

Assuming him to be an artist I found the same problem with him as with Theodosia Durand. Perhaps - given his probable family background - he was not so much an artist as a designer.

THEODOSIA MOORE DURAND

I found several references to Theodosia as an artist, specifically as a painter and teacher of painting. In this, she seems to have wanted to emphasise her French art training - the few reports there are of her, in newspapers and magazines, always call her "Madame" Durand. However, as with her husband, so with her, I haven't found any images or references to specific art works they did, on the web, not even on the many 'art auction' websites. Where has their work gone? If James Madison Durand was a designer rather than an artist, his work wouldn't necessarily appear on the web or even be acknowledged as his, of course.

Theodosia Durand is in askart.com's artists' database, with some details of which exhibitions had works by her in them, though the website has nothing at all shown by Theodosia - at least, not in the USA - before 1918. Several sources mention her as teaching art at the University of Washington, but she doesn't appear on any of its staff lists before 1919, when she was Assistant Professor in the fine arts department. She might have been teaching there before as a freelance staff member, I suppose.

In 1918 she exhibited, for what seems to be the first time, at the annual show of the San Francisco Arts Association - paintings done on cement. Perhaps this encouraged her to cut loose from teaching. By the day of the 1920 census, she had left the University of Washington and moved to San Francisco, where she was living with her mother Anna Moore.

From May 1921 there's a mention of sketches Theodosia had done of traditional pottery making in Mexico. They were on display when a landmark exhibition of modern Aztec and Maya crafts opened on the campus at Stanford University.

A newspaper report from October 1921 shows Theodosia leading a revolt against the hanging committee of the San Francisco Art Association. This year she had been one of quite a few artists who had been invited to submit her work for the annual show; but then had it all rejected. Theodosia accused the committee of favouring a small group of San Francisco-based artists; and announced that she and other artists who had been rejected were looking for a gallery in the city, in which to hold a rival exhibition to the official show. The head of the hanging committee denied favouritism; of course! Later, Theodosia was allowed to join the SFAA, exhibiting paintings in oils in 1925. She was a member of the San Francisco women artists' group - perhaps there was a feeling, in 1921, that the SFAA committee also had a bias against art by women - and as late as 1939 she had work shown at the Golden Gate Exposition, though she was no longer living in San Francisco by that time.

By 1930, Theodosia's mother had died, and she herself had moved to Santa Rosa. In 1926, she had exhibited at the California Industries Expo, held at San Diego. She became a member of the San Diego Fine Arts Society, and it was as a member of that group that she exhibited at the Golden Gate Expo. Though I'm not sure she ever lived there permanently, the 1940 census shows Theodosia as one of the guests at a hotel in San Diego so she made regular trips there. The 1940 trip was probably in connection with her work The Picnic, which was one of the runners-up in that year's Uzzell Award.

Theodosia's The Picnic was the latest work that I could find mention of. There are very long gaps in her career when she didn't show any works at all; and she never seems to have been very prolific.

Sources:

About the importance of the Durands' trip to Europe:

Max Dauthendey: Poet-Philosopher by Herman George Wendt. Volume 2 part 1 AMS Press 1966 p38 footnote 23.

Theodosia Durand is in www.askart.com's database of artists, with the best details of her career. <http://www.artprice.com>:

Artists in California 1786-1940 by Edan Milton Hughes is probably where askart.com got its information from. Published San Francisco: Hughes Publishing Co 1986 p139.

At stanforddailyarchive.com The Stanford Daily volume 59 number 46 4 May 1921 short report on the opening of the Maya-Aztec Applied Arts Exhibition.

Via www.newspapers.com to San Francisco Chronicle issue of 22 October 1921 p3:

Catalog of Copyright Entries 1926 Part 4: Works of Art New Series: p108 has one work by her. On p385 catalogue number 6361, probably the same work as that on p108.

At history.sdvag.net a history of the Arts Guild of San Diego: chapter 3 covers what are considered its golden years - 1929-39. The members who exhibited at the Golden Gate Exposition, 1929, include Theodosia.

Arts Magazine volume 15 issues 1-6 1940, p17 1940 Uzzell Prize.

And as a teacher of art.

Washington Educational Directory issued by the State of Washington 1919 p72 Madame (sic) Durand is listed as "Assistant Professor of Fine Arts".

At www.mocavo.uk there are several University of Washington Seattle Handbooks from the early 1900s. I searched for her at mocavo but there was only one response: 1919, the same entry as appears in the Washington Educational Directory.

I suppose that she might have been working at the University for much longer before 1919, but employed as a freelance teacher.

Seen 19 July 2013 at www.bbc.co.uk/yourpaintings - 212,055 paintings now in public collections, though not necessarily on display. There's nothing in that database by either of the Durands; but I hadn't really expected there to be.

For where they were living:

Familysearch didn't have any census entries after the middle of the 19th century for the James Madison Durand who died in 1899. Nor for Theodosia Moore Durand until 1920.

1920 via Familysearch to NARA census information for District ED225 Sheet 6b: San Francisco Assembly, District 30: Anna E Moore 78 and widowed; and her daughter Theodosia Durand, also a widow. Both women described themselves as white; and able to read and write. The address was rented.

1930 via Familysearch to NARA census information for District ED49 Santa Rosa, Sonoma County: Theodosia Durand is head and only member of household. I presume Anna Moore has died by now.

1940 via Familysearch to NARA for a hotel in central San Diego, where Theodosia Durand was one of the guests.

ANY PUBLICATIONS?

No, and no articles in art magazines on any work by either of them, as far as I can see.

ANY PUBLIC LIFE/EVIDENCE FOR LEISURE TIME? Bearing in mind, of course, that most leisure activities leave no trace behind them.

Again, no.

FAMILY

Apart from people I've already mentioned, no. I don't think that James Madison and Theodosia Durand had any children.

DEATH

JAMES MADISON DURAND

If I have picked the right man with that name, he died in 1899.

Source: the gravestone of the James Madison Durand who died in 1899 via www.findagrave.com: There's no mention on it that he had been married, just a reference to his part in the Civil War.

THEODOSIA MOORE DURAND

Theodosia died in hospital at Modesto California on 15 March 1949.

Source:

Via Familysearch to the California Deaths Index 1940-97: it also gives her exact date of birth and her surname before marriage.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

26 February 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

John Hugh Armstrong Elliot (known as Hugh, not as John) was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 6 October 1894. He chose the Latin motto 'nobis est victoria'. He did the work necessary to progress further and was initiated into the GD's 2nd, inner order on 2 March 1896. Hugh married early in 1896 and shortly afterwards his wife, Eleanor Blanche Elliot (known as Blanche, I think, not as Eleanor) was initiated, on 17 February 1896, taking the Latin motto 'prospice'. She took rather longer to reach the 2nd order but was initiated into it on 12 January 1900.

Blanche's younger sister Lucy Margaret Bruce was initiated into the GD's daughter order Stella Matutina (SM, founded by Robert Felkin) in March 1907; though she was never in the GD itself. Blanche's cousin Archer Henry Corbet was also a member of SM; initiated in March 1906. And a man who was probably related to Hugh Elliot through a series of marriages joined the SM, in 1910: George Hender Geach.

ELEANOR BLANCHE BRUCE

Blanche's father was Robert Bruce (born 1821) third son of John Knight Bruce and his wife Sarah who at that time lived on the estate John had inherited from his mother at Llanblethian Glamorgan. I presume Robert Bruce was named for the great king of Scotland but that has made it hard to find the man on the web. He later got the nickname 'hurricane' applied to him but I couldn't discover why, amongst all the web references to hurricane bob as storm-force winds and destruction of property. Of course, those words might sum him up rather well!

Robert Bruce joined the 94th regiment of Foot in 1838. In 1851-53 he was in South Africa fighting the Kaffir Wars. By 1857 he was colonel of the 2nd Foot regiment. Around 1860 he was stationed in Corfu, which at that time was in the British Empire. For a few years from 1864 he was in a semi-retirement, on half pay, but in October 1878 he was promoted to lieutenant-general and appointed commander of the government's troops in Scotland, a post he held until his retirement in July 1881.

In 1857, Robert Bruce married Rachel Frances, daughter of Richard Corbet of Adderley in Shropshire, and his wife Eleanor. Robert and Rachel Frances had seven daughters, but no sons. The daughters were: Constance Mary born 1858; Isabel born 1859 or 1860; Augusta Rachel born 1861; Amy Gertrude born 1863; Eleanor Blanche the GD member born 1864; Janet born 1866; and Lucy Margaret born 1871 or 1872. The Bruces kept moving and so their daughters were all born in different places: Constance Mary's birth was registered in central London; Isabel's on Corfu; Augusta Rachel's at Market Drayton (the nearest registry office to Adderley); Amy Gertrude's at Kensington; Eleanor Blanche's at Chelsea; Janet's at Clifton Bristol; and Lucy Margaret's in Scotland. However, the family stayed in Scotland during the 1880s, appearing on the censuses of 1871 and 1881 at Arngask, near Perth. They were probably living in the same house on each census day but the census officials heard its name differently, so it's called Glendouglas House in 1871 and Glendenglie House in 1881, though the proper spelling may be Glendouglic.

Like most girls of their class at that time, the Bruce sisters didn't go to school, they had governesses, with all the limitations on their education that that implies. An English governess called Martha Buckland was living with the Bruce family in 1871. With Robert Bruce's pay as a senior army officer, and income from Rachel Frances' dowry, in 1871 they could afford to pay for Miss Buckland; a cook; a lady's maid; a nursemaid; and two housemaids. On the day of the 1881 census only four of the daughters were at home but the number of domestic servants employed was no less - a lady's maid, a cook, a housemaid and a kitchenmaid. However, this time there was no governess living-in. Blanche was at home that day and it's likely (though I can't prove it of course) that her education was considered by her parents to be over: Arngask is rather a remote community and I find it difficult to believe that the Bruce's had a governess who only came in during the day.

Quite when the break-up happened I don't know, but the census records from 1891 show the Bruce family scattered to the four winds. Robert Bruce was still living at Arngask, the house being called Glendouglic Mill this time; but he was on his own there except for a housekeeper and a general servant. Constance Mary had married Francis Charles Gore in 1879 and was living in London. Amy Gertrude had married Thomas Edward Erskine in 1888 and may already have been living in the USA. Later, her husband held two appointments as consul-general for the British Government - at St Louis around 1910, and in New Orleans in 1916. Augusta Rachel and Lucy Margaret were in the Arngask district but were not living with their father - that was still very unusual for unmarried daughters in 1891. They were at Lingo House at Carnbee; with one general servant. Isabel and Janet were visiting a Miss or Mrs Buchanan, at 4 Grosvenor Crescent Edinburgh. And - and this may be the cause of the break-up - Rachel Frances Bruce was a private patient at the Royal Asylum for the Insane at Morningside in Edinburgh.

Mental breakdown, dementia, psychotic episodes - three of the great 'unmentionables' of Victorian Britain and not much more mentionable today. Rachel Frances did not stay in the asylum for the rest of her days; but the fact that she had been there at all was something no member of her family was likely to admit in public. Perhaps Isabel and Janet Bruce were in Edinburgh to visit their mother; but it would be just as Victorian to act as if she had gone on a holiday, and not go to see how she was being treated, or how she was progressing, despite being nearby.

On census day 1891 Blanche was far away from Morningside, in Westbury-on-Trym, Bristol visiting Rev David Wright and his wife Emily. The Wrights were probably family acquaintances from when the Bruces were living in Bristol (around 1866 when Janet was born there).

The Bruce family never did get back all together living in the same house: Robert Bruce died on 14 October 1891. Although they kept their contacts in Scotland, over the next decade there was a tendency for the women Robert left behind to move to England; and - in general - to keep largely separate households. England must be where Blanche met Hugh Elliot.

THE ELLIOTS

This section is based on part of Lettsom: His Life, Times, Friends and Descendants, a biography of physician and social campaigner Dr John Coakley Lettsom (died 1815). The book was written by James Johnston Abraham at Hugh Elliot's instigation and using family papers Hugh had inherited. It was published in 1933 by William Heinemann's medical department, of which Hugh had been - possibly still was - managing director.

John Coakley Lettsom married Ann Miers, daughter of a wealthy tin-plate manufacturer, and they had eight children though only three survived their father. The youngest child, Eliza Lettsom, married John Elliot in 1804. The Elliots could trace their ancestry back to 17th-century Pembrokeshire, but the man Eliza Lettsom married was living in west London, where he owned Elliot and Co and managed its brewery in Pimlico. John and Eliza Elliot lived next to the brewery in Pimlico Lodge. They had 15 children. Of their eight sons, six continued a family tradition of entering the army. They all went to India to serve in regiments stationed in Madras; four died there, two managed to live long enough to come home. The daughters all married, creating a wide network of in-laws and cousins in the next generation, including - though I haven't worked out how - a Mrs Georgina Hargreave.

Hugh's grandfather was the eldest son of John Elliot and his wife Eliza: John Lettsom Elliot, born 1804. When his father died in 1839, he took over the running of the brewery and was also a director of the Hand-in-Life Fire Insurance Company. Wanting to expand the brewery and take some of the financial strain off his own family, in 1837 John Lettsom Elliot invited James Watney and Charles Lambert to invest as partners. In 1849 their involvement was reflected in a change of company name, to Elliot, Watney and Co. However, in 1850, John Lettsom Elliot decided to retire from managing the firm. James Watney and in due course his two sons took over, buying Elliot out in 1858; and 'Watneys' is how the brewery is now known.

Both John Lettsom Elliot and his father (who had been a Fellow of the Royal Society) moved in literary and scientific circles. In 1824, John Lettsom Elliot was one of the group of male acquaintances who founded the Athenaeum Club, a club that prides itself on its spirit of intellectual enquiry. In due course Hugh Elliot became a member of the Athenaeum Club, probably recommended to the other members by John Lettsom Elliot.

Early in his retirement, John Lettsom Elliot wrote two comic plays. But essentially, after 1850 he settled down to a life of wealthy leisure, disturbed only by financial and other crises in his family.

He was married twice. His first wife was Marie Antoinette des Jardins, the daughter of a French couple who had fled the revolution. They married in 1829 and had five sons: John Elliot the younger (Hugh's father) and four sons who continued the family tradition of serving in the army in Madras. Marie Antoinette Elliot died in 1846. In 1863 her widower married Harriet, widow of the 6th Earl of Guilford, whom he had probably known for many years through connections her family and the Lettsoms both had in the West Indies. When Harriet died in 1874 John Lettsom Elliot moved into rooms in The Albany, Piccadilly. He was still living there in 1891, with an elderly housekeeper to look after him. He died in 1898.

The Elliot family had a motto that - now I know something about them - doesn't seem all that apt to me: fortiter et recte (strong and upright). Hugh Elliot might have wanted to choose it as his motto when joining the Golden Dawn. However, he couldn't do so: no two members of the GD could have the same motto at the same time, and Annie Horniman had already bagged it. It fitted Annie Horniman to a tea.

Hugh Elliot's father John Elliot was known as 'the younger' to distinguish him from his more well-known father. He went to Winchester College and then University College Oxford, but John Lettsom Elliot retired from the family firm while he was still an undergraduate and in any case probably never intended that his son should join the business. John Elliot the younger qualified as a barrister at the Inner Temple in 1855. Whether he practised as one I am not sure: I found some indications that he did, at least at first; but in 1891 John Lettsom Elliot said his son had never done so.

THE ARMSTRONGS

Hugh Elliot's mother was Charlotte Georgiana (sometimes seen as Georgina or Georgianna) Armstrong, daughter of Lt-Colonel George Craven Armstrong. She had been born in Bengal, where her father was an officer in the 47th Bengal Native Infantry. Lt-Colonel Armstrong retired in 1853 and the family returned to Britain. Charlotte Georgiana and John Elliot the younger married in June 1859. Hugh was their eldest child, born in 1861. He and his sisters Harriet Alice (1863), Florence Ethel (1864) and Evelyn Gertrude (1867) were all born in Kensington. In 1868 the family moved to Teignmouth to be nearer where John did most of his legal work. The evidence I found about John Elliot's career suggests he was working at least at this stage, on the western circuit of the English court system which covers court sessions at Exeter, Plymouth and Devonport. Hugh's siblings Francis (1868) and Winifred (1876) were born in Devon.

The Elliots ran a fairly modest household in Teignmouth, with three servants in 1871 and a cook, housemaid, parlourmaid and nurse in 1881. John Elliot and Charlotte followed the Elliot family tradition when it came to a choice of school for Hugh: like his father, his grandfather and (I think) his great-grandfather, he was sent to Winchester College. However, Francis was sent to Wellington College in preparation for the army career followed by the younger sons of Elliots in at least the past three generations.

Hugh was destined to follow his father into the law, so - again like his grandfather and father - he went to Oxford University. He was an undergraduate at Magdalen College where he studied jurisprudence. He graduated in 1884, at the beginning of five years during which death broke up the Elliot family in much the same way that illness and death broke up the Bruce family around 1891. The break-up began with the death of John Elliot the younger, in Teignmouth, in September 1884 at the age of only 54. Charlotte Elliot opted to leave Devon for the south-east and moved, with her daughters, to Folkestone. The crisis was not as bad as it could have been, because John Lettsom Elliot stepped in to give financial and presumably other help to Charlotte and her children. Despite the death of his father, therefore, Hugh was able to continue doing the work and passing the exams necessary to qualify as a barrister. In May 1887 Hugh was called to the bar (the last stage in becoming eligible to start work) at the inn of court his father had been a member of, the Inner Temple. As if she had been hanging on for this important rite of passage, Charlotte Elliot died later that year, in November 1887 in Folkestone. And this difficult period was ended by the death of Hugh's youngest sister, Winifred, in 1889 at the age of 13.

By February 1888, Hugh Elliot was working as a barrister. He had joined the chambers in King's Bench Walk in the Temple that George Cope Cope was already working in. The Copes and the Elliots had been friendly for a long while and it's possible (I haven't found any certain evidence for it) that the firm where George Cope Cope's father was a partner - Cope, Rose and Pearson of George Street Westminster - were solicitors for the Elliots' family firm. George Cope was initiated into the GD in 1895, about six months after Hugh Elliot, who was probably the man who recommended him to the GD hierarchy.

By 1891, Francis Elliot had joined the army and followed the path taken by many of his uncles and great-uncles: he was in India as an officer in a native infantry regiment in Madras. Hugh's sisters Harriet Alice (I think she's called Alice) and Florence Ethel (she's definitely called Ethel) married serving officers; though Ethel's behaviour wrecked her husband's army career.

Harriet Alice Elliot had married Gerald Burrell Geach of the 4th Dragoon Guards in 1889. They had one child, Charles Leonard Elliot Geach, born in 1891. Geach's regiment was sent to India and like nearly all the Elliot soldiers, he never came back: he died of typhoid at Murree in July 1899. By 1901 Harriet Alice and Leonard had returned to England. A George Hender Geach joined Stella Matutina in 1910. As Geach is such an unusual surname, he must have been a relation of Gerald Burrell Geach - not a close one, though, as Gerald Burrell Geach had no brothers.

OSBORNE v HARGREAVE - the career of Ethel Elliot

Florence Ethel Elliot is the Mrs Osborne of the sensational 1891 slander case Osborne (plaintiff) v Hargreave (defendants). The press had a wonderful time with the case, it was a gift: an upper-middle-class woman accusing her cousin and her cousin's husband of calling her a thief; with the plaintiff's sister accusing one of the defendants of being involved in an improper relationship with one of their side's witnesses. Coverage appeared in newspapers as far away as New South Wales and California, some of which is now in newspaper archives on the web. I won't give a blow-by-blow account here, I'll just sum it up. I've drawn most of my understanding of what went on in the trial, and the even more amazing sequel, from the Times, which had at least three columns' coverage throughout the trial's five days of evidence. It helps to know that in between the accusations and the trial, Ethel Elliot married her fiancé Captain Clarence Arthur Osborne.

The basic debate in the case was whether Ethel Elliot had stolen some jewellery from Mrs Hargreave while staying with her in Torquay in February 1891; and had sold it to the City jewellers Spink and Son for £550 while calling herself Mrs Price. As plaintiff, Ethel was arguing that she had not; as defendants, Mrs Hargreave and her husband Major Hargreave had said in so many words that she had. Both sides in the dispute agreed that the theft and the sale had taken place. But was Ethel Mrs Price, and therefore the thief? For five days a series of witnesses gave evidence one way or the other, until the trial was halted by an anonymous letter containing new evidence, while Hargreaves' barrister was summing-up of their side of it. A two-day adjournment was called. When the trial resumed, the barristers for Ethel's side told the judge that the Hargreaves had been right: evidence had been found at the Bank of England which linked Ethel beyond all doubt to the spending of the £550. A warrant was issued for Ethel's arrest on charges of larceny, and also of perjury (for what she'd said during her time as a witness in the slander trial) but she had fled the country. Brought back in February, she was arrested at Dover and in March 1892 was sentenced to nine months' hard labour; hardly any of which she served as she was pregnant and ill - her eldest daughter Phyllis was born three or four months later.

Hugh Elliot had played his part in this hugely embarrassing episode and gave evidence during the slander trial, on Thursday 17 December 1891. Hugh had first found out what the Hargreaves were saying about Ethel on 9 March 1891, when a mutual friend, Mr Engelhart, called on him at his chambers. Mr Engelhart had come straight from Spink and Son, where he had been showing members of staff a photograph of Ethel and asking if she was Mrs Price. What Mr Engelhart told him caused Hugh to leave work immediately and take Mr Engelhart home to repeat it all to Ethel, and to Alice Geach who was with Ethel at the time. Ethel denied everything, and in order to prove that the Hargreaves were being outrageous, Hugh, Mr Engelhart, Alice and Ethel went to Spink and Son the following day to see what the staff said when confronted with Ethel in person. At first Mr Spink didn't want to commit himself outright - he ummed and aahed. Hugh lost his temper, telling Mr Spink in no uncertain terms that this was a legal - perhaps a criminal - matter and he must be sure. So Mr Spink retorted that if Hugh wanted certainty, Mr Spink was prepared to say that yes, Ethel Elliot was the Mrs Price he had bought the jewellery from; and he would thank Mr Elliot to behave like a gentleman, however angry he was.

Not a helpful intervention. The question of who had urged Ethel to bring the slander action against the Hargreaves wasn't gone into during the trial, but it's likely that Hugh was one of those who had done the urging, together with Captain Osborne. As it turned out, this too was not a helpful intervention. The evidence from the trial, though, is clear: neither Hugh nor Captain Osborne dreamed that Ethel might be guilty; they continued to believe in her innocence until they found out about the evidence unearthed at the Bank of England: a £50 note, counter-signed 'Ethel Elliot' in a shop in Bond Street; one of the notes Mrs Price had obtained as a result of the transaction with Spink and Son (it's not actually quite as simple as that, but that's the damning evidence in a nutshell).

Some other things came out in the evidence of Hugh and John Lettsom Elliot to the slander trial, suggesting to me that Ethel and her siblings had all inherited their great-grandmother Eliza Lettsom Elliot's inability to make her outgoings match her income. Eliza had had to disappear abroad several times to avoid her creditors and no doubt that's where Ethel got the idea from - when in real trouble, leave the country. During the trial both Hugh and John Lettsom Elliot were asked to explain the family's finances. They sounded pretty chaotic to me but the extent of John Lettsom Elliot's financial support was made clear: he was paying Hugh an allowance of £400 a year; giving each of Hugh's sisters £40-50 a year to double the income they had from money their mother had left them; and he owned 27 The Boltons, Brompton, the house that Hugh, Ethel and Evelyn had moved into in 1890, so they had no rent or mortgage to pay.

You will have gathered, I think, that I don't have much sympathy for the Elliots. If life is a 100-metre race, people like them have a start of 30 or 40 metres over the majority of the population by virtue of wealth they have not earned. And even that is not enough for some of them: they take it as their due, and want more. However, I do see that in Hugh Elliot's case at least, the featherbedding may have come at some cost: I don't think he wanted to work as a barrister. He did what was expected of him by those who paid his bills, but when he had the chance, he moved into another kind of work. 1894 seems to have been a watershed year in this, perhaps the year he was offered work at William Heinemann Limited.

From about 1894 until 1929 and possibly even later, Hugh was working in publishing rather than in the law. The Law Lists from 1894 to 1911 do suggest he may have been doing some work on the Court Service western circuit; but on the census of 1911 he described his source of income as "publisher", not mentioning any work as a barrister. It wasn't until 1929 that he hired chambers again, in Crown Office Row, Temple and even then it's possible he was only living in them, not working from them. The Law Lists give Hugh's address as Crown Office Row from 1929 until his retirement in 1939.

The information collected for 1891 census involved asking where people were on the night of Sunday 5th to Monday 6th April. Ethel Elliot and Captain Osborne had actually married earlier that Sunday, and had left for the continent on their honeymoon. Osborne v Hargreave was at a very early stage and the Osbornes could afford to go away for a few weeks: Hugh and Captain Osborne were still trying to find a solicitor willing to take the case on in the face of the problematic evidence from Spink and Son. Two or three solicitors' firms had already turned them down. Perhaps they should have taken the hint.

So only Evelyn and Hugh were at home on the evening of census day. Evelyn took over from Ethel and acted as mistress of the house in The Boltons until she married Marcus George Yunge-Bateman in 1894. Evelyn probably met her husband during the brief period when Charlotte Elliot was living in Kent: he worked as a GP and council medical officer in Folkestone. Hugh also moved out of 27 The Boltons in 1894.

There had been a certain amount of rallying round the flag before Ethel's criminal trial in March 1892: even Mrs Hargreave was in court to plead for leniency. Whether the two sides ever trusted each other again afterwards, goodness knows. Even though I haven't found any evidence that Ethel was ever caught stealing anything else, it won't have been easy for family members to forget what had happened. Years after, Osborne v Hargreave and its consequences continued to come back and haunt them. A number of novels were based on it, and two very successful plays. Mrs Dane's Defence, by Henry Arthur Jones, had its first night at Wyndham's Theatre in October 1900 and ran for 209 performances there before going on tour. Then in 1922 John Galsworthy's play Loyalties ran for a whole year at St Martin's Theatre. Both plays were filmed as well. More immediately and personally, the Elliots will have been hit hard financially: they had to both sides' legal fees and these would have been high, as some of the most senior barristers in the country had been hired. Captain Osborne paid a heavy price personally too - his army career became untenable and he left it and got work as a stockbroker in the City. In 1901 he and Ethel were living in style in Sloane Street with their children: Phyllis who had spared Ethel most of her prison sentence, Betty, Margot and Bryan. I have found one piece of evidence, though, to suggest that they divorced later.

HUGH ELLIOT IN PUBLISHING

Hugh Elliot worked for two publishing firms, William Heinemann Ltd and the much less well-known Rebman and Co. He seems, at least in the 1900s, to have worked for both of them at the same time, though he must have committed more hours to William Heinemann Ltd as they were by far the bigger firm. William Heinemann founded the famous publishing firm in 1890, after many years working for the music publisher Trübman. Heinemann had lots of friends in literary and artistic circles including George Bernard Shaw (who knew several members of the GD), Arthur Symons and Whistler; and was soon publisher for Stevenson, Kipling and H G Wells. Hugh Elliot knew William Heinemann well enough to be described as a friend in a biography written soon after Heinemann's death in 1920. Through William Heinemann he will have been acquainted with all those famous novelists, but he was not their editor; he was managing director of the company's medical list.

The editors of W B Yeats' letters call Hugh Elliot the owner of Rebman and Co; but GD member A E Waite describes him as a partner in the firm and I think that's more likely. The firm was named for Francis J Rebman, presumably because he had the idea for it. I'm not sure how he and Hugh met; probably through Hugh's work at William Heinemann. Rebman doesn't seem to have lived in England until the 1890s; he had been born in Germany but was a US citizen by the time Rebman's was founded in 1894. Although in its later years it published a few occult books, the firm was founded to publish medical texts - these medical connections must have made Hugh something of a specialist in the law covering the publication of medical books. Though still living in Edinburgh when the firm was founded, GD member Dr Robert Felkin also had some kind of stake in Rebman's - perhaps a shareholding - and it published a couple of his works.

HUGH AS A FREEMASON

Hugh Elliot became a freemason while he was still only in his twenties: that's rather early in a man's working life, in general, although freemasonry does seem to have been very active amongst Oxford and Cambridge university undergraduates at that time. The lodges Hugh was a member of were all connected to Oxford University. By 1889 he had been initiated into St Mary Magdalene craft lodge, number 1523; and Oxford and Cambridge Universities craft lodge number 1118. Hugh seems to have been more committed to St Mary Magdalene 1523 - he served his year as Worshipful Master in 1889. He didn't serve as an officer at the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Lodge 1118 and I gather the lodge did suffer from a high turnover of members. However, from the GD point of view the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Lodge 1118 is very interesting: when I looked through a list of its members, several names rang a bell. The Rev Hugh Reginald Haweis joined the lodge in 1867; he wasn't a member of the GD, but his wife Mary Eliza was. In 1870 a Colonel Stephen Babington became a member; although I can't trace the exact relationship, he's likely to be a relation of GD member Anna Mary Babington. In 1876 Robert Roy was initiated into the lodge: he was a very senior and active member of Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia and one of the first people William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers invited to join the GD. And in 1882 Hugh's college friend the Rev Henry William Wynne ffoulkes became a member. Again, ffoulkes never joined the GD but his wife did - she was the poet Louisa Florence ffoulkes (known as Florence, not Louisa) who became a close friend of Hugh and was related to Blanche.

In October 1889, Hugh joined the relatively newly-founded craft lodge Quatuor Coronati 2076, which was set up with the purpose of bringing rather higher academic standards to the study of the history of freemasonry. He was a corresponding member, meaning that he would receive its journal and be welcome at its meetings (held in London); but would not be eligible to serve as a lodge officer. He was initiated into Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia in 1890, probably through his acquaintance Robert Roy. In 1902-03 he served a year as its Celebrant (equivalent to a freemasons' lodge's Worshipful Master); although he had not served the previous year as the Celebrant's deputy so something had gone a little wrong with the normal procedures.

Craft masonry is only one of several different kinds of freemasonry practised in England, and by 1885 Hugh had been initiated into one of the other kinds, the Ancient and Accepted Rite. The AAR's equivalent to a craft lodge is called a Rose Croix chapter; Hugh joined the Oxford University chapter, number 40, probably recommended by Henry ffoulkes who was a member by 1880; and so was Oscar Wilde whose wife Constance joined the GD. After they had left Oxford, both Hugh and Henry ffoulkes changed chapters, to the Oxford and Cambridge chapter 45, which met in London in the AAR's office building at 33 Golden Square. Oscar Wilde and Robert Roy were members of this chapter; and so was the Earl of Euston, brother of GD member Lady Eleanor Harbord. Henry ffoulkes was more committed than Hugh to the AAR: by 1900 he had reached its 31<sup>o</sup> level - only 81 AAR members could be at this level at any one time. Hugh, however, reached only as far as the 30<sup>o</sup> level, to which access was not restricted (but it didn't cost so much, either!)

Although he kept up his lodge memberships, for business and other reasons, the freemasonry side of the occult doesn't seem to have given Hugh quite the satisfaction he was looking for. In 1894 he joined the Theosophical Society, remaining a member until 1904, through a particularly difficult period in the TS's history, in which two factions fought bitterly over the direction the organisation would take after the death of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky.

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY AND THE GOLDEN DAWN

As I work my way through my GD members' list in more or less alphabetical order, Hugh Elliot is the first biography I've done of a large group of GD members who were all members of the TS as well; and who all give as their address for TS correspondence the house lived in by John William Brodie-Innes and his wife Frances, in Royal Circus Edinburgh. I have to say that I don't understand what's going on here; though it may have to do with the split in the TS worldwide, which was at its most bitter during 1894-95 with most of the fighting going on at its London hq. Until the split left the TS in London desperate for new members, all new applicants to join the TS had to have two sponsors who were already members. Hugh's two sponsors were John and Frances Brodie-Innes; and his TS record says that he was a member of the TS's Scottish Lodge, which met at the Brodie-Innes' house in Edinburgh. However, as far as I know, Hugh Elliot never lived nor worked in Edinburgh; and neither did most of the people who gave the TS the Brodie-Innes's house as their address. Hugh's acquaintance with them was almost certainly through John Brodie-Innes, who had been called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1878 and practised in England for several years before moving back home to Scotland to become an advocate in the courts in Edinburgh. Though why the TS's journals and newsletter couldn't be sent to Hugh in London, I do not know: unlike the GD, the TS was not a secret society, quite the reverse.

It seems that when he joined the TS, Hugh Elliot already knew Florence ffoulkes as well as her husband (though curiously, Henry Wynne ffoulkes was not a member of TS or the GD). Hugh and Florence jointly sponsored a great many new TS members over the next two or three years. Four of the acquaintances they sponsored also joined the GD in due course: John Valentine Lacy who knew Henry ffoulkes' cousins the Vibarts; George Cope Cope (as I've already mentioned); and Ida Bennett were three of them. And in due course, in February 1895, they sponsored Blanche Bruce; perhaps already engaged to be married to Hugh. Blanche's address at that point was 78 Cheyne Court Chelsea; but she too became a member of the TS's Scottish Lodge. Her sister, Isabel Bruce, also joined the TS in December 1897. Perhaps Isabel had never met the Brodie-Innes's: she first address she gave the TS was one in Bideford, Devon; but later she asked that letters be sent to her through the Pioneer Club in London. Mary Eliza Haweis was also a member of the Pioneer Club, which organised talks during the London social season on a wide range of subjects, everything from spiritualism and theosophy to women's rights.

A pamphlet called 'Introduction to Theosophy' was reviewed in the TS's main journal, Lucifer, in 1889. The pamphlet's author was just named as "Mr Elliot". Especially given the spelling of 'elliot', Hugh could have been the author; although obviously the pamphlet pre-dates his official membership of the TS by several years.

It was odd that Florence ffoulkes, Hugh Elliot and Blanche Bruce should choose to join the TS at such a turbulent time in its history, because they were three of the very few people to do so. Perhaps they found out very quickly how much the daily business of the TS was being affected by the split - lodges closing down, far fewer talks being given and discussion groups ceasing to meet. The GD may have come as a welcome relief to all three - its splits were several years ahead. Despite the two jobs he was now doing, Hugh was able to commit himself more to the GD than Blanche, who got pregnant very soon after they married - their only child, Lettice Ann, was born at the end of 1896. Getting used to having a husband and running a married couple's household, while being pregnant after only a few weeks of marriage, was not ideal way to begin your life as a wife, but I have noticed it was quite common amongst the married women of the GD. In Blanche's case, she had a couple of changes of address to negotiate in the early years of her marriage. She and Hugh began their married life at 7 Smith Square Westminster; but by 1901 they had moved to Chelsea, to 26 Cheyne Row, where they employed a cook, a housemaid and a nursemaid for their daughter. So many quick changes of circumstance hampered Blanche's ability to do the study required of GD members who wanted to progress into its inner, 2nd order, and she took four years to complete the work.

'Lettice' is an unusual name. I saw evidence on the web of a Lettice Corbet, alive in the 17th century, and I suppose that Blanche and Hugh named their daughter after her. On the day of the the 1901 census, Lettice had gone on a visit and was staying with her great-aunt, Rachel Frances Bruce's sister Clara Corbet, at 36 Norham Road Oxford. Four years of age seems rather young to be paying visits without your parents but a sick-nurse was a member of Blanche and Hugh's household on census day, so someone was very ill. The fear of their only child catching whatever the illness was, had caused Blanche and Hugh to send Lettice away, accompanied only by her own nursemaid, Elizabeth Bickerstaff. Lettice was not with her parents on the day of the 1911 census either; she was at boarding-school at The Hall, Harpenden. The education of women in the professional and landed gentry classes had moved on a fair amount since Blanche's own childhood: there were more schools to send their daughters to; and parents' expectations had moved a little way beyond the 19th-century concept of 'accomplishments' being all that was necessary for young women of their class. However, Blanche and Hugh's choice of school was no intellectual powerhouse. At The Hall Harpenden, though Latin, maths and science were taught, there were no resident teachers for those subjects immediately before World War 1; the resident teachers taught French, English and gardening, suggesting that the curriculum favoured those subjects more. All the girls had to learn singing, art and needlework but they could only learn a musical instrument if their parents were willing to pay extra. An advert for the school (probably from around 1914) emphasised the small number of pupils at the school, which ensured more individual attention; and its healthy situation and large grounds where pupils could play tennis and croquet and some field games.

THE ELLIOTS AND YEATS

Both Hugh and Blanche knew GD member W B Yeats well enough to take a small part in his attempt to set up a Theatre of Beauty, to put on plays and masques; an idea which emerged during 1901 from talks Yeats been having with his friends on 'musical speech'. Blanche and Hugh must have been two of those friends, and the GD's greatest female magician Florence Farr was another.

Florence commissioned Arnold Dolmetsch to make a psalter for her to play while she recited poetry by Yeats in a manner that was more than speech but less than singing: chanting is perhaps a good description. She first tried the method out during a performance of the play Beloved of Hathor in November 1901 (Beloved of Hathor was co-written by Florence Farr and Olivia Shakspear) and in the following years she used it in performance in the UK and on tour in the USA. Inspired by Yeats' arguments and probably by hearing Florence Farr in performance, Blanche began to try the chanting technique. Blanche did not have the theatrical talents and training that made Florence Farr such a promising actress and exciting ritualist: Yeats told his friend Lady Gregory that Blanche had "never learnt voice production". However, Yeats thought Blanche had a feel for poetic language and had brought her own qualities to her performances: "her own little lilt", he said, which was "extraordinarily impressive and poetical". She had - not exactly stage presence but something special about her, Yeats thought: "She is a really beautiful person too and that helps things".

In March 1903 Hugh and other GD members including Pamela Colman-Smith signed a circular Yeats had prepared to raise some money for the Theatre of Beauty. Nothing more was heard of the scheme, though, and I don't think that Blanche would have performed in public, even if the Theatre of Beauty had been able to find funding for some masques.

AFTER THE GOLDEN DAWN

I won't go into the wrangling that caused the evolution of the GD into two daughter orders between 1901 and 1903, because neither Hugh nor Blanche Elliot were actively involved in it until the end of the process. They did both stop paying their annual subscriptions to the TS during this time - like many others, they may have not wanted to follow the route the TS in Britain and Europe was now taking (towards Hinduism) now Annie Besant was in charge. In addition, Hugh may have had to concentrate his efforts on helping William Heinemann Ltd stay afloat at the time: in 1899 William Heinemann married Magda Stuart Sindici, who led her much older husband a fine dance, alienating his friends, spending money like it was going out of style and making a series of disastrous investments on the Stock Exchange. Within two years they had separated and she went to Paris, but while she was demanding William Heinemann's full attention, the firm he'd founded suffered.

In the spring of 1903 those people who were still GD members found themselves having to follow either A E Waite towards the mystical side of magic; or Robert Felkin keeping to the magical side. Hugh Elliot went with Robert Felkin, his friend of several years and fellow investor in Rebmans and Co, into Stella Matutina (SM), which began to meet in the basement of Felkin's house at 47 Bassett Road north Kensington. No administrative papers from SM exist now. There are lists of new members but the names of the GD members who were in at the start, and the list of people who acted as its officers have been lost. R A Gilbert believes that Hugh was SM's Cancellarius in its early years. I think Blanche was a member too, as she recruited two of her relations. Her sister Lucy joined SM in 1907 and Lucy and Blanche's first cousin, Archer Corbet, became a member in 1906. Archer was the son of Rachel Frances Bruce's younger brother, the wonderfully-named Rev Athelstan Corbet. It's likely, though, that the Elliots had ceased to be active members of SM before the Felkins emigrated to New Zealand in 1916.

After the war, John William Brodie-Innes revived the GD's old Edinburgh-based temple of Amen-Ra. By 1921 there was a branch of it in London. Hugh Elliot was the London branch's imperator, with Carnegie Dickson as its cancellarius - son of George Dickson, a GD member in Edinburgh in the 1890s.

THE REST OF LIFE

Florence ffoulkes' husband, Hugh's fellow undergraduate and freemason Henry Wynne ffoulkes, died in 1904. So did Florence's father. As a result Florence never committed herself to either of the GD's daughter orders. She had to leave the vicarage just outside Nottingham where Henry had been the rector, of course. She chose to move to London, perhaps so that she could be near her friends the Elliots, now she was alone. In 1911, Blanche's relations Archer Corbet, his wife Anne Maria and their newly-born son John Vincent were living in Florence's house at 4 Nevern Square, Earl's Court while she was staying with her mother and sister in Ascot.

Francis Rebman left England and returned to the USA in 1906. Rebmans and Co did continue for a few years. Hugh and Robert Felkin were left as its major players though they may not have agreed on its future direction: Robert Felkin was wanting to expand the firm's publishing specialisms to feature more books on esotericism. Rebman's was a small firm, operating on very little capital; to expand its operations would require investment and energy and Hugh was probably unwilling to commit more of either of those things to it. And then the case about Bloch's book came long.

In 1909 Rebman's was prosecuted under the Obscene Prints Act, after publishing a medical work whose title in English was The Sexual Life of Our Time. The book was typical of the type of text Rebman's specialised in: a handbook for doctors, originally in German, by Professor Ivan Bloch of Berlin. It was unfortunate, then, that a member of the public saw some copies and complained to the police about their content. The police went to Rebman's offices and impounded all the copies they could find. Hugh Elliot and Robert Felkin decided to fight the case, and hired a barrister with expertise on what was considered obscenity. At the case's initial hearing, a magistrate ordered that all copies be destroyed, despite agreeing with Mr Bodkin (the chosen expert) that it was a textbook not pornography. Rebmans appealed against the decision and the legal fees began to rise. In the long run, Bodkin seems to have made his point about Bloch's book: its publication was allowed and it became a standard work on the subject of human reproductive health. But the cost of defending it in court was too much for Rebmans: by 1911 it had been bought out by William Ryder and Hugh's connection with it had ended.

I believe Hugh continued to work for William Heinemann Ltd, or to advise it, even after William Heinemann died in 1920, and probably into the 1930s. He and Blanche didn't have the kind of income they could have expected if he had been a successful barrister; but Hugh was probably happier in the work. The Elliots were living carefully in 1911, possibly because of the costs of Rebmans' legal case, coming with at the same time as fees for Lettice's schooling: on census day that year, Hugh and Blanche were living at 6 More's Garden (More's Garden is a big block of flats on Cheyne Walk) and only had one servant living-in. They continued their policy of moving on fairly quickly, however, and were no longer at that address in 1925.

Because they only had a daughter, Blanche and Hugh Elliot were spared parental involvement in the first World War. The war years were, nevertheless, punctuated for them by the deaths of relatives of Blanche. Blanche's mother Rachel Augusta and her sister Clara died within three months of each other at the beginning of 1916. Blanche's sister Amy's husband died a few months later; perhaps the Elliots didn't know him very well, as he and Amy had been living in the USA, probably since the 1890s. It wasn't all death and mourning, however: in February 1917, Lettice Elliot married Flight Sub-Lieutenant Michael Birkbeck of the Royal Navy. Blanche and Hugh's only grandchild - a son this time, James Birkbeck - was born at the end of that grim year.

This is all very speculative, but a passing reference in the biography of John Coakley Lettsum made me wonder whether Hugh and Blanche had separated, possibly around 1929 when the Law Lists show Hugh with an address in the Temple for the first time for many years. The author of the biography of John Coakley Lettsum says that Hugh was living in chambers in the Temple while the book was being prepared (which was 1932-33). It's not common - at least, I don't think so - for married couples to live above the legal chambers. That they were separated might explain another snippet of information that puzzled me: when Blanche died early in 1947, her death was registered in Bath. She might have moved there to escape the Blitz, or just been there on a visit, or in a hospital; but the two pieces of information have made me wonder. Perhaps by the 1930s Hugh Elliot was closer to Florence ffoulkes than to Blanche: when Florence died in July 1936, Hugh was one of her executors.

Hugh retired from work as a barrister in 1939 or 1940, and moved out of the Temple; he died in December 1948, at home at 10 Wilbraham Place Sloane Square.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

ELEANOR'S FATHER ROBERT BRUCE:

New Annual Army List, Militia List and Yeomanry Cavalry List 1879 p116.

Modern English Biography by Frederic Boase, 1965. Volume IV supplement to the original Volume 1.

Neither of those mention Robert Bruce's period in Corfu. The sources for that are the birth registration of Eleanor Blanche's elder sister Isabel Bruce; and a letter written by Edward Lear:

At www.spectator.co.uk, issue of 2 June 2012, article Old Man of Corfu - Happy 200th Birthday, Edward Lear. The article mentions a letter written in Corfu by Lear in 1862 in which he relates a funny incident. He was working painting when he stopped to watch a march-past of British troops. "Colonel Bruce" gave him a salute and Lear waved back, forgetting he'd got his hands full of paintbrushes. The paint went all over his beard and could only be got off with turps.

BLANCHE'S SISTERS

CONSTANCE

There's a photograph of Constance Gore in full court dress, on the web, taken on 4 June 1914 in as she was about to go to Buckingham Palace to present her acquaintance the Countess Soudes to Queen Mary. The website is lafayette.org.uk/gor5766a.html which shows records of The Lafayette Studio of 179 New Bond St. At homepages.roots.web.ancestry.com there's a Vans family archive. Constance married barrister Francis Charles Gore 1846-1940; he was the senior solicitor at the Inland Revenue. They had three sons and one daughter. Further details at website www.thepeerage.com <http://www.thepeerage.com>

ISABEL

Isabel's birth registration: www.C5d.co.uk/militarybirths.php is a list of babies born to troops stationed in the Ionian Islands which were owned by the British from 1818 to 1864.

AUGUSTA RACHEL

Blanche's sister Augusta Rachel Bruce probably caused as much consternation as pleasure in the family when she got engaged at the age of 46. In some respects it was an excellent (though belated) marriage, but her groom-to-be was a full decade her junior. She married Sir Stewart Blakeley Agnew Patterson of the Indian Army political department in January 1908. They lived in India, on the north-west frontier amongst other places, until the late 1920s when Patterson was appointed a government advisor and they returned to live in Roehampton.

Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry 1969 edition volume 2 p71 gives details of her marriage.

There are references to her husband, Sir Stewart Blakeley Agnew Patterson KCVO, CSI, CIE at www.npg.org.uk; and www.bl.uk.

AMY GERTRUDE

Website www.thepeerage.com gives details of her marriage in 1888 to Thomas Edward Erskine. Family web pages at www.tribalpages.com a list of people named Erskine, with DOBs and DODs and places of both; but with no indication as to the sources of the information. Plantagenet Roll of the Blood Royal: Mortimer-Percy Volume by the Marquis de Ruvigny and Ranieval published 1911 P227.

Official Manual of the State of Missouri issued by its Secretary of State 1909 p508 has Thomas Edward Erskine in a list of foreign consuls resident in St Louis Missouri. The same information appears in the 1913 edition p511.

London Gazette issue of 28 January 1916 p1125 in a Foreign Office bulletin dated 16 January 1916: Thomas Edward Erskine was appointed HM Consul-General for the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida; with official residence in New Orleans.

LUCY MARGARET

Website www.strangehistory.net posted 5 March 2013 mentions a mystic, "Miss Lucy Bruce" who lived on Iona. But a reply to this posting says that Blanche's sister is NOT that person.

THE ELLIOTS

Lettsom: His Life, Times, Friends and Descendants by James Johnston Abraham. Published London: William Heinemann Medical Books Ltd 1933.

Via the web, for sale at abebooks and elsewhere:

A Letter to the Electors of Westminster, from an Aristocrat written by John Lettsom Elliot 1850.

Three to One: A Comedy in Two Acts 1850

Five to Two: A Comedy in Three Acts 1851.

John Lettsom Elliot's two marriages, via familysearch:

1 = England-EASy GS film number 413277: 16 July 1829 at St James Westminster. John Lettsom Elliot born 1808 to Marie Antoinette des Jardins.

2 = England-ODM GS film number 1042324: on 10 February 1863 at St James Westminster: John Lettsom Elliot to Harriet Countess of Guildford (correctly Guilford) daughter of Henry Warde.

GEORGE CRAVEN ARMSTRONG

London Gazette p434 in the middle of a long list of army promotions; unfortunately I couldn't see the date of the issue. Promotions to Lieutenant-Colonel included that of George Craven Armstrong of the Bengal Native Infantry (NI).

Via nationalarchives.gov.uk to a list of Begnal Army service files held at the India Office. File IOR/L/MIL/10/25/403 is George Craven Armstrong's: 47th NI, retired December 1853.

See also GEORGE CARLYON ARMSTRONG Charlotte Elliot's brother: DNB Supplement issued 1912; and elsewhere. Newspaper magnate and Tory party wheeler-dealer.

GERALD BURRELL GEACH

At www.geach.net there are details of the descendants of Charles Skally Geach 1833-64 and his wife Harriet Georgina Burrell.

London Gazette 1 August 1882 p3582 list of promotions in the 4th Dragoon Guards.

Via www.newspapers.com to Guardian issue of 19 July 1899 p14 death notice for Captain Gerald Burrell Geach of 4th (Royal Irish) Dragoon Guards.

GEORGE HENDER GEACH

At desturmobed.blogspot.co.uk pages on Lesser-Known Writers, the page on Eleonora Frederika Adolphine Sgonina, who married George Hender Geach in 1915. Blogger has probably got the information from: Peter Geach: Philosophical Encounters by P T Geach and H A Lewis 1991 p1. Peter Geach is George and Eleonora's son.

ETHEL OSBORNE

Osborne v Hargreave and its sequels:

The short account in the New York Times of 23 December 1891 is easy to get to via the web.

The reports in the Times appeared on the following days: the slander trial 16 December 1891 to 23 December 1891; Ethel's appearances in the dock as a criminal on 5, 6 and 8 February 1892; 10 March 1892. The Times was anxious to assure its readers that at no time when on remand in Holloway did Ethel have to mix with the rest of the prisoners; she was kept in the infirmary. And she was allowed out after serving only a few weeks of her sentence, on health grounds. The grounds might have been justified but never let it be said that there isn't one law for the rich and another for the poor in England.

The Quarterly Register of Current History volume 1 1892 editor is Alfred S Johnson p499 describes Osborne v Hargreave as the greatest sensation since the Tichborne case.

A later account of the trial appears in: Famous Trials Re-Told: Some Society causes célèbres by Horace Wyndham. Published Hutchinson and Co. Via the web I saw a publication date of 1925; however the BL's copy is date-stamped "26MAY43". Pp117-128.

Some Piquant People by Lincoln Springfield. Published T F Unwin Ltd 1924 pp65-66 re Osborne v Hargreave as providing some plot for Mrs Dane's Defence and Loyalties. He spells Elliot with two t's. Further details of both plays from wikipedia.

Evidence that the Osbornes may have been divorced is from a form of words on the Will of Ethel Osborne at the probate registry: she is described as a "single woman". However, I couldn't find certain evidence of any divorce proceedings.

EVELYN YUNGE-BATEMAN

The Lancet volume 1 1894 p1043 in a list of marriages: on 16 April [1894] Evelyn Gertrude to Marcus Yonge (sic) Bateman of Folkestone, MRCS, graduate of Cambridge University.

That Evelyn's husband's name is Marcus Yunge Bateman see General Medical Council lists: 1st registered 1887; MRCS; Licensed by the Society of Apothecaries of London 1887; Diploma in Public Health Cambridge University 1892.

FRANCIS RIVERSDALE ELLIOT

Hart's Annual Army List 1891 p861 Francis Riversdale Elliot es a 2nd Lieutenant with date 3 March 1888.

By the time of John Lettsom Elliot's death in 1898 he's a major-general: probate registry entry for John Lettsom Elliot: Francis and Hugh are joint executors.

HUGH ELLIOT AND WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD

William Heinemann: A Memoir by Frederic Whyte. Published NOT by William Heinemann Ltd but by Jonathan Cape 1928: p298. And see also his page on wikipedia.

HUGH ELLIOT AND REBMANs

Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume III covering 1901-04 p328 footnote 3 for Hugh's address at that time and his connections with the two publishing firms.

Shadows of Life and Thought: A Retrospective Review in the Form of Memoirs by Arthur Edward Waite. London: Selwyn and Blount of Paternoster House EC 1938 p173-74 has something on Rebman and Co, particularly Felkin's involvement; but Waite is talking about 1908.

Another man involved with Rebman and Co is mentioned by Waite but not by name; I think the anonymous man is Hugh Elliot. It's Waite who says that Rebman and Co were taken over by William Ryder.

HUGH AS A FREEMASON

QUATUOR CORONATI LODGE 2076

Ars Quatuor Coronati 2076 Volume II 1889 unnumbered pages at the end of volume list all current full and corresponding members. On [p11] as corresponding member number 272 John Hugh Armstrong Elliot of 6 King's Bench Walk, Temple, with joining date October 1889. As member of lodge 1523 where he was currently WM; and of lodge 1118.

ST MARY MAGDALENE LODGE 1523

Typescript history of the lodge, at Freemasons' Library: St Mary Magdalene Lodge 1523: 1875-1975 by T L Dewhurst. Published London 1975.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LODGE 1118

The History of Oxford and Cambridge University Lodge number 1118 1866-1966 by E W R Peterson MA. Pp31-39 and pp44-49.

Oxford and Cambridge Lodge 1118 and R A Chapter: Notes from the Minute Books compiled by Horace Nelson. No publication details but preface [p6] dated 31 December 1925. P9-12, pp14-20.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE

Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Degrees from the 4° to 32° Inclusive under the Supreme Council 33° of the Ancient and Accepted Rite [in the British Empire etc etc]; plus a List of Members. I looked at the issues of 1880, 1885, 1888 and 1900.

Issue of 1880 p40; and p113 where Hugh doesn't appear in the list of current members.

Issue of 1885 pp80-81, pp127-128.

Issue of 1888 p47 restriction on numbers and list of members at 31° level.

Issue of 1900 p219.

SOCIETAS ROSICRUCIANA IN ANGLIA

Transactions of Societas Rosicruciana Metropolitan College 1890-91 p1-2 meeting of 10 April 1890 - Hugh is one of the candidates for membership of SRIA's metropolitan college.

Transactions 1902 p2 meeting of 10 April 1902 p4 Elliot formally elected celebrant for April 1902 to April 1903 despite not having done the deputy's job in 1901-02.

HUGH IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Legal career of his sponsor John William Brodie-Innes: The Scots Law Times volume 2 1912 p53.

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p108 entry for Hugh Elliot. Application February 1894, subscriptions paid 1894-1904.

Theosophical Society Membership Register March 1895 to June 1898 p113: the only new TS member to be sponsored by Hugh and Blanche Elliot applied to join in 1896. He was Robert H Godwin, about whom I know nothing; he was never a GD member.

Hugh as possible author of a pamphlet on theosophy:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume V September 1889 to February 1890, editors Blavatsky and Annie Besant. Published Theosophical Publishing Co of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. In the original Volume V issue of 15 November 1889 p259.

BLANCHE IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p248 entry for Eleanor Blanche Bruce “now Mrs Elliott” (sic). Application February 1895, yearly subscription paid 1895-1902. In Theosophical Society Membership Register March 1895 to June 1898 p209 December 1897 application of Isabel Bruce.

THE GOLDEN DAWN

Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73. Letter from Hugh at 7 Smith Square, to Frederick Leigh Gardner 26 December 1896; declining to sign the petition to reinstate Annie Horniman.

BLANCHE'S PERFORMANCE POETRY

Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume III 1901-04 p262 in letter Yeats to Lady Gregory 27 November 1902 p2364 though he spells her surname as ElliotT.

THE THEATRE OF BEAUTY

Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume III covering 1901-04 p328. There's a lot on Yeats' part in The Theatre of Beauty, see for example W B Yeats: A Life. Volume 1 The Apprentice Mage by R F Foster. Oxford and New York: Oxford University Press, paperback edition 1998. The index has it in under 'masquers' not under 'theatre of beauty'. Chapters 10 pp257-259; Chapter 11 pp290-91; and note 38 p587.

AFTER THE GOLDEN DAWN

STELLA MATUTINA'S Amoun Temple

RAG's Golden Dawn Companion Wellingborough: The Aquarian Press 1986 p41, p166.

AMEN-RA TEMPLE

Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73. Letter from Mabel Curtis Webb dated 5 December 1921.

HUGH ELLIOT AS A BARRISTER

Oxford Historical Register 1220-1900 p671 John H A Elliot attended Magdalen College Oxford. Graduated with a degree in Jurisprudence 1884.

Called to the bar: Times 8 May 1887 p10.

Law Lists 1887 to 1940.

MORE'S GARDEN CHEYNE WALK

Seen Nov 2013 at www.bonhams.com/auctions/20716/lot/603 due to be sold 26 Nov 2013: a first edition of Charles Morgan's My Name is Legion published by Heinemann's Ltd 1925. Signed by the author 1925 and giving 6 More's Garden as his current address.

In A City at Risk: A Contemporary Look at London's Streets published Hutchinson 1970, author Simon Jenkins on p164 describes More's Garden as “an ugly block of flats called, with massive presumption, More's Garden”.

LETTICE ANN ELLIOT

The Hall Harpenden: information on the teachers from the 1911 census. Rest of the information on the school from website www.harpendenhistory.org.uk which is run by the local history society. It has a page on Harpenden Hall including a prospectus for The Hall Harpenden school which the society dates to just pre-1914.

Lettice's marriage:

Via web to www.flightglobal.com which houses the archive of Flight and Flight Global magazine. Flight magazine issue of 18 January 1917 p74.

For information on Michael Birkbeck's family see www.william1.co.uk/w194.htm which seems to be a list of the descendants of William the Conqueror; includes the Carringtons and the Legge-Bourkes. No sources are given for the information in it.

HUGH AS EXECUTOR OF FLORENCE FFOULKES

Times 3 November 1936 p29 legal notice under the Trustee Act 1925.

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Frank Tate Ellis was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in September 1888. He chose the Latin motto 'Nova vita'. However, he was about to leave the country and he never took an active part in the Golden Dawn. As early as 1891, a note was added to the GD administrative files saying that he was no longer a member.

I'm sorry I'm not able to describe Frank Tate Ellis's life in greater detail, but to do so would require spending several days if not weeks in Birmingham and Durham, examining original records. It would also require my overcoming some deeply-held prejudices against what Frank did for a living. Despite my views, however, I do think he was one of the GD's most remarkable members: in the 1880s, from a worker's cottage on the outskirts of York to Jerusalem, was a long way.

Frank Tate Ellis was born in 1861, the son of Francis Ellis and his wife Hannah, née Cartwright. Both Francis and Hannah had moved to Acomb from villages a little further from York: Francis from Beningbrough, Hannah from Rufforth. Francis had been a widower when Hannah had married him, so she had taken on the care of his three children from his first marriage: William, John and Wilstrop (the odd forename was his mother's surname). Frank was Francis and Hannah's first child. They had two more, Joseph and Mary Jane.

For about 40 years, Francis Ellis worked as a porter. He mentioned his employer to the census official in 1891; the writing was difficult to read but I think it says "NER Goods". The North Eastern Railway was formed in 1854 by the amalgamation of several railway companies operating between the Humber and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. York was the NER's hub and the magnificent station building that you see today is one Francis Ellis would have known - it was opened in 1877. The house in Front Street that Francis was living in in 1851 and continued to inhabit until his retirement might have come courtesy of the railway company. I'm not sure what Francis' eldest son did for a living - William had left home by 1871 but the remaining four sons divide into two groups: John became a bricklayer and Joseph followed his father to work for NER; but Wilstrop left York to take up an apprenticeship with a grocer in Hull and later ran his own grocery and drapery business, and Frank also went away, to college.

It seems that Frank was the most studious of all the Ellis sons; and perhaps the most devout. On the day of the 1881 census, he was in Durham, training to be a teacher. He was a student at college called the College of the Venerable Bede when it was founded (in 1838) but known by the time Frank was a student there as Durham Training College for Masters. It was one of the Church of England's training colleges for future schoolmasters in elementary schools. Frank was 20 on the day of the census, and would certainly not have gone there straight from school; the College only accepted young men of 18 or over. His most likely route to the college was via what was normal training for teachers in the 1870s, whereby some older pupils at any school were chosen learn how to teach on the job, by teaching younger pupils. By the time he was taken on by Durham Training College for Masters he might have had six or seven years experience as a pupil-teacher and then a school-master. Frank must have showed an aptitude for his work that was better than most other teachers; and have fulfilled the other important requirement of students at the College, of being a practising Anglican; to be chosen to have further training in this way.

Durham Training College for Masters taught young men while St Hild's College did the same for young women. The training lasted two years, with examinations at the end of each year by Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools, which will have included being observed taking lessons as well as written papers. All students studied a core curriculum: study of the Bible and of the Church of England prayer-book; English grammar and composition; English history; geography with a focus on the British empire; music; arithmetic; algebra; and - looking ahead to their later careers - school management. In addition there were some optional subjects: Latin, Greek, French and German. Some information I found about Frank from the 1890s indicates that he studied Greek at least, in addition to the basic set of subjects. By the time Frank began at the College, it was training the men (and St Hild's the women) who would in future head the nationwide local authority-run schools set up by the 1870 Education Act. All the students had to agree to work (I couldn't find out for how long) in schools that were part of the 1870 scheme when they graduated - and graduated probably is the right word, because only a few years later the College became part of Durham University and started teaching degree courses.

If Frank went to the Durham Training College when he was 18, on the day of the 1881 census he must have been about to take his second-year exams. There are, therefore, about seven years unaccounted for before he applied for the job that changed his life. I haven't been able to find any information on where he worked. However, the evidence of his involvement in freemasonry suggests he may have taken a job in a school in the Baildon district of Bradford until, in 1888, he accepted the job of headmaster of Bishop Gobat School, which was in Jerusalem.

Frank may have been influenced in his decision to apply for the job at Bishop Gobat School by the death of his mother Hannah in 1887, which might have cut his closest family tie. Perhaps he was even fulfilling a wish of hers in taking the job. He wrote later about how thrilling it was for him as a devout Christian, to be living in the city where Jesus' death and resurrection had taken place. But he may not have ever left England before setting out to take up his post, and although the CMS had a widespread presence in Palestine, Frank would still be doing something that even most well-travelled Britons never did - taking up permanent residence outside the British empire; in another, Muslim empire.

FREEMASONRY AND THE GOLDEN DAWN

It was in this context that Frank agreed to be initiated into the Golden Dawn. He was a freemason by this time, a member of Baildon Lodge number 1545. Thomas Henry Pattinson and Oliver Firth were also members of the lodge and either of them could have passed Frank's name to the GD hierarchy as a suitable member, though a recommendation by Pattinson would have carried more weight with William Wynn Westcott at least. Westcott and Pattinson were members of Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia from which most of the early GD members were drawn. Pattinson became one of the founding members of the GD's Horus temple at Bradford. Frank may also have known two other Bradford residents who were initiated into the GD in due course: Joseph Clayton had had a very varied employment career but in the 1880s he was running a confectioner's shop in the Bowling district of town. In the evenings, however, studied the bible and the Kabbalah, and had taught himself some Hebrew and some Latin. Joseph's daughter Fanny Isabel was an elementary school teacher in Bradford.

Frank will have been well aware that he couldn't be an active member of the GD from Jerusalem, but he might have hoped he'd be able to do some of the study that the GD's founders expected of its member. He didn't do so, though.

In the same month as his GD initiation, Frank also joined the freemasons' lodge Quatuor Coronati 2076, as a corresponding member. The lodge had been founded as a forum for the study of the history of freemasonry. Corresponding members were entitled to receive the lodge's journal. They were also welcome at its meetings if they were in London, a comforting thought to someone about to go and live abroad for an uncertain period of time. It's possible that Frank did attend a conversazione held by Quatuor Coronati 2076 in November 1895 at the Holborn Restaurant; though he returned to England very rarely after he moved to Jerusalem. He kept up his membership until around 1900 before letting it drop.

FRANK'S FIRST MARRIAGE

I know hardly anything about it! Except that his first wife's name was Dorothy Forster. I haven't been able to find a record of the marriage using freebmd or familysearch, so I'm fairly sure that it took place in Jerusalem. Frank must have therefore gone to Palestine as a bachelor and there are two possible scenarios: that he and Dorothy were engaged when he accepted the job in Jerusalem and she joined him there when he had got himself settled in; or that Dorothy already lived in Jerusalem and Frank met her there. If Dorothy did live in Jerusalem, it was not as a missionary with the CMS: I don't remember seeing her name in a list of CMS workers I used. Scenario one is more likely, I think. The marriage lasted three years at the very most: Dorothy died, in Jerusalem, in April 1891.

FRANK'S SECOND MARRIAGE

In 1894, Frank married Charlotte Low in Jerusalem. It's the most startling marriage I've discovered amongst the GD members, because Charlotte was from a level of society several rungs above that of Frank's family. She was a descendant of William Makepeace Thackeray through a couple of families in the landed gentry; and her father, John Alves Low, was for a time an officer in the royal artillery in the North-West Provinces of India, where Charlotte was born between 1864 and 1866 (I haven't been able to find a record of the birth). The rigid class divides of previous centuries were beginning to break down in the late 19th, but more at the top of the scale than nearer the bottom, and a marriage between the landed gentry/officer class and the lower middle class was very unusual.

I found Charlotte, her mother Jane, and a younger sister (Augusta) living in Somerset in 1871. By this time John Alves Low had retired from the royal artillery but he was not living with his wife and children. In the decade between 1871 and 1881 Augusta Low died and Jane and Charlotte moved to Guildford, where John Low was still not living with them on the day of the 1881 census. It makes me wonder if Jane and John were, in fact, discreetly separated.

In 1880, the 14-year-old Charlotte Low had made clear her missionary ambitions in a letter to the CMS magazine for young people, the CMS Juvenile Instructor. Perhaps she took after her mother in this respect: I can't find any information at all about Jane Low after 1881 - where she was living, where and when she died - but I noticed a Mrs Low in a list of missionaries working for the CMS in Palestine in the 1880s, and that might be her. Charlotte Low was working as a missionary with the CMS in Palestine by 1891, having answered the CMS's cry for women recruits of a particular kind. All charities could always do with more money than they've got, and CMS was no exception; for this and other reasons I spell out more clearly below, the CMS asked unmarried women volunteers to come forward to go to Palestine and take a few pupils into their own homes for Bible and other study. Such in-the-home teachers would have no official status; and the volunteers would have to pay their own living and other expenses. The only women who could possibly answer such a call would be those with a private income; so Charlotte must have had one, however small it was, because she was one of those (few) who answered the call. Like the others, she will have been hampered at the outset by being unable to speak any Arabic; but like the others, she learned it. She will also have had to struggle against the attitudes of local men to their women - that there was no reason why they should be educated. Charlotte could have continued this informal teaching scheme after she and Frank were married. She might even have had more room to carry it out, in the headmaster's house. However, she would also have found herself with other duties, to do with her husband's job.

I have not found any evidence that Frank had any children.

JERUSALEM

I shan't write a history of Jerusalem during Frank Tate Ellis' time living there. That would take too much time and too many words. I'm going to concentrate on a few issues, beginning with what the CMS was doing there and what part Frank played in its work. Then I'm going to give a quick description of what life in Jerusalem might have been like for him. And I'll mention some important events in the history of the city which will have made a difference to him.

When I began my research on Frank's life I rather supposed that the CMS would be working to convert Muslims to Christianity. That is what they would have liked to have done; and what they set out to do when they began sending missionaries in the 1850s. However, after their first mission in the Turkish empire (in Constantinople) had aroused local fury, the Turkish authorities issued a set of guidelines making it almost impossible for them to do the work they wanted to: Christian missionaries were forbidden to debate; or to hold meetings explaining Christianity, either in public or in private; or to do anything that the local authorities saw as denigrating Islam. In addition, it seems that in its enthusiasm to save souls, the CMS had overlooked an important fact of the Turkish empire: anyone converting from Islam to another religion was breaking the law and might face the death penalty. And in Palestine the CMS faced other problems: the Church of England had a separate organisation which attempted to convert Jews to Christianity. The majority of Jerusalem's population being Jewish, and most of the rest being Muslims, the CMS workers in the city and surrounding villages were left having to focus all their efforts on followers of the ancient Christian churches of Palestine. The Turkish authorities did not really care about that, of course, but it caused debate back in Britain and probably meant the CMS didn't receive as many charitable donations they might have done.

Bishop Gobat School was one of many such schools that had been founded in Palestine by Samuel Gobat, who was consecrated second Anglican bishop of Jerusalem in 1846 after a long spell as a missionary in Ethiopia. All of the bishop's schools had been taken over by the CMS in 1875-76. Their expenses were not paid from the CMS's funds but by charitable donations made for that purpose and (if I've understood this right) paid directly to the schools. Frank's salary will have reflected the fact that the school's employees were expected to have a vocation and not be working solely for the money; and that the school was funded by donors who wouldn't want to see any evidence of extravagant expenditure. However, in addition to what was probably a modest wage, he had a house provided on the school premises. Perhaps the CMS made it clear to Frank that it was desirable for the headmaster to be a married man; his wife - for no extra pay - could take on the role of school matron, and together they could set an example of Christian marriage to the pupils.

Frank was almost certainly Bishop Gobat School's only British employee. Most teachers and other staff in CMS schools were local people. A list of CMS employees from the early 1900s shows only five British laymen (rather than clerics) working for them in Palestine. I wonder whether Frank could speak Arabic when he arrived in Jerusalem? I would guess not, though lessons may have been provided once he'd started work. I'm not sure how much actual teaching Frank did; probably not much. His role was managerial and when he was offered the job I'm sure he saw it as a promotion. It was he who prepared the school's annual report to be sent to the CMS's head office in London; who attempted to balance the books; and who supervised on the spot the long-term plans that CMS head office wanted carried out. These plans included a big reorganisation of its resources and buildings, which Frank had perhaps campaigned for: even before he had arrived in Jerusalem the school was full, and its rooms crowded. In 1898 its older pupils, their baggage and their teachers moved out to other buildings, creating a separate high school which in due course became Jerusalem's English College. Frank stayed in charge of what had been the lower school, in the buildings on Mt Zion that had been built for the school when it was founded.

Frank had to play his part in trying to raise the funds that kept the school going from year to year. An article he wrote for a boys' book on missionaries almost certainly had fund-raising in mind; but also, possibly, future missionary recruitment. Frank gave his schoolboy readers an account of daily life at the school, trying to make it seem like the British prep schools his readers might know (and he could not have known from personal experience): the pupils were all boys and all boarders; they had lessons all the morning; followed by lunch and a break - for cricket (no football here) Frank said, or help with the washing-up; more lessons in the afternoon; and homework in the evening. There were differences of course: English was a second language to the boys, who all spoke Arabic at home; they ate the local food, not a typically English diet; grace before meals was an Arabic hymn; and some pupils were taken out of school and not allowed to return when their relatives found out what they were learning. I know it was not Frank's fault that he had all the prejudices of his age and background, but he made quite a point of telling his readers firstly that the pupils were "not black as many people think"; and secondly that they had to be taught how to use a knife and fork. With a passing reference to the restrictions CMS was working under, Frank explained that the school was not in the business of training missionaries - at least, not as such; he just hoped that when they left the school and returned to their home villages, their style of life would encourage their neighbours to come forward for conversion. He did not say that most of the pupils had been Christians to start with and he may have given his readers the wrong impression - which might even have been intentional: after all, schoolboys are most unlikely to have known that the CMS was forbidden to seek converts amongst the Muslim population. One source I found did say that occasionally the school might take in Muslim children but it was under very specific circumstances: from time to time CMS schools had dumped on them (by Muslim men) the children of a widow that they were about to marry, as they didn't want to go to the bother and expense of bringing them up. The widow having no say in the matter, apparently.

The CMS had missions all over the world, so no one area could expect to have too much personal attention from members of the CMS hierarchy. It must have been very pleasant, then, for the CMS's workers in Palestine to receive a boost in the shape of a visit from Ernest Graham Ingham, who had taken the job of Home Secretary of the CMS in 1897 after surviving 15 years as the bishop of Sierra Leone. He and his wife arrived in Jerusalem in April 1910, as part of a world-wide tour of inspection of CMS missions. They stayed with Frank and Charlotte at the headmaster's house, and Frank undertook to show them Jerusalem.

I give details of where Frank took Bishop Ingham and his wife partly because I have so little information about Frank's life, and partly because I expect Frank gave the Inghams a standard set of walks that all his visitors were likely to want to follow. The Inghams had timed their visit to coincide with Easter and with a conference of CMS workers in Palestine. Ingham must have begun his stay with a tour of the school compound and perhaps even sat in on some lessons. He mentions in his account of his time in Jerusalem that despite having 90 pupils and a shortage of space, the school coped very well - which must be down to Frank's management. The Inghams' first full day in Jerusalem was Easter Sunday, and Bishop Ingham's first priority was a formal call on the Anglican bishop of Jerusalem, bishop Blyth. That duty done, Frank took his guests to Christ Church Mt Zion, where Bishop Ingham preached the Easter Day sermon. After the service, Frank led the Inghams to the archaeological site dug by the Palestine Exploration Fund and said by the PEF's archaeologists to be the Green Hill Without The City Wall. They paused there while Ingham read aloud, from his Greek-language New Testament, St Luke's account of the crucifixion; and all three prayed. This first guided walk finished with a visit to the Garden Tomb. On the morning of the following day, Easter Monday, Frank took the Inghams on a tour which included Solomon's Temple; the Dome of the Rock; the Al-Aqsa mosque - where the bishop admired the Turkish carpets on the floor - and the building known as King Solomon's stables. Then they went to Bethesda and Gabbatha and the house thought to be Pontius Pilate's home and office headquarters, where the Roman official had washed his hands and allowed Jesus to be condemned. The next port of call was a spot where they could all look down seven feet below the current street level to an exposed stretch of the supposed Via Dolorosa; before the three ended their long walk at the Tower of Antonia. Then, I think, Frank had to go back to work, because beginning on the Tuesday, the Inghams made two trips out of town to visit CMS workers elsewhere: a one-day visit to Bethlehem and Olivet; and a two night stay at Jericho. They didn't take Frank with them on either trip. The CMS's spring conference began in Jerusalem at the end of that week. The Inghams attended its first session and then spent the weekend doing more devotional sight-seeing before leaving Jerusalem on Tuesday 5 April, to travel by train and boat to Cairo.

The support shown by bishop Ingham was a welcome break from the normal aggravation of living in the Turkish empire. Frank arrived in Jerusalem just before an event important in the economy of the city: he will have had to make the journey from the port of Jaffa by cart or on the back of a mule but in 1892 the two cities were finally connected by rail. Almost at once Jerusalem saw an increase in the number of people prepared to visit the city and businesses such as hotels and the provision of guides to the biblical sites soon sprang up. The increased visitor numbers were a two-edged sword for the CMS however: Christian pilgrims from Britain - perhaps supporters of the CMS already - could watch the missions at work and meet the workers; but the CMS's relationship with the rulers of Jerusalem will have been further strained.

No Christians were given much favour by the Turkish authorities in Jerusalem, but the CMS's missionaries complained continually about the attitude of the Turkish-appointed governor and his staff towards them personally. The CMS wanted to carry on their missionary work unthreatened. The authorities in Jerusalem were not prepared to give any special protection to a group of people whose opinion of Islam and Muslims was so scathing. The situation for all British residents of Palestine was made worse by British actions in Egypt and the Sudan: British people were taking the brunt of local hostility to what was going on there and the Turkish authorities were naturally concerned about where the increasing British involvement was going to end.

The control of the Turkish empire over its constituent parts was in slow decline in any case, and safety especially on the roads could not be guaranteed. In his article in Boys and Boys Frank mentions in passing an incident where some travellers were set upon and robbed at the gates of his school; if the travellers had been British I think Frank would have said so. He was also lucky to escape with his life on a trip out of the city. In April 1893, it being the school holidays, Frank and two acquaintances decided to make a trip to visit the Dead Sea and Jordan. The two acquaintances were a Mr Noel, who was staying at a hotel in the city; and an unnamed English woman - perhaps it was Charlotte Low - it's not clear from my source whether the woman was a resident or another traveller. As was usual on such a trip, they took what they considered were adequate precautions: together with mules, donkeys and a horse for Mr Noel, they hired a "dragoman" - a local guide - some more local men to take charge of the mules and run the camp, and a native soldier. Despite their guard, at least one of whom was armed, their convoy was attacked on the way back from Jericho. About 15 shots were fired, and the soldier, the dragoman and one of the mule handlers ran off and left Frank and his companions to the mercy of the bandits - perhaps they were all part of the plot. One shot killed the donkey Frank was riding on, but he managed to scramble clear unhurt while Mr Noel tried to protect the woman and her donkey with his horse. The bandits seized the mules and while they were leading them and all their baggage away, Frank and his two companions were able to get back to Jericho and take refuge in an inn. They made it safely to Jerusalem the following day where their story was soon all over town. Edward Herbert Fison, of the Suffolk fertiliser-making firm, had only been in Jerusalem 10 days, but he heard it, and wrote a letter to the Times about it, the point he was making being that attacks like that were happening fairly often around Jerusalem. I shouldn't imagine that Frank, Mr Noel and the unnamed English woman were attacked because they were British, or because Frank worked for the CMS. They were attacked because their impressive convoy made it look as though they had things worth stealing, to people who were desperately poor. And that was the problem in Palestine.

Not all Frank's expeditions out of Jerusalem ended in robbery on the high road. On another occasion, in September 1895, he made it to Caesarea and back without mishap. While he was inspecting the ancient town, he copied out a Greek inscription he noticed on a marble slab. A translation of the inscription by Dr A S Murray of the Palestine Exploration Fund was published in 1896.

Ex-pat communities are small and the world of the British in Palestine was a very small one indeed as the country lacked the usual group of locally-based businessmen and official British representatives (although it did have a Consul). If British residents felt beleaguered, it was not surprising. The German presence in Palestine was far more important than the British one, reflecting as it did a political alliance between the ancient Turkish empire and the newly-constructed German one ruled over by Wilhelm II (kaiser bill). When Frank arrived in Jerusalem, it won't have taken him much time to notice the extent of German charitable work in the city: there were several hospitals including one for children and one giving shelter to lepers; there was a school run by a German order of deaconesses; and there was an orphanage; all financed and most run by Germans. The Germans had control of the Hospital of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem, a privilege bestowed on them by the Turkish emperor. And there were German colonists in Palestine: farmers in the area around Haifa and Jaffa; and another group (mostly craftsmen) in Jerusalem itself, who called themselves the Templer Society, Protestants so extreme they had been ejected from the Lutheran community in Germany. The Templers were in Jerusalem to prepare for the Second Coming, but they were waiting they had built their own small village around Emek Refaim street in the district now called Moshava. In October 1898 the German presence in Jerusalem was given an enormous boost by a visit from the emperor and empress of Germany with an entourage that required 1500 pack mules and as many carriage horses to move and feed it. They had come to Palestine directly from a state visit to Constantinople. After taking three days to travel by road (not by rail) from Jaffa, Wilhelm II and empress Viktoria Augusta entered Jerusalem on horseback almost as if they were a victorious army, before camping on German-owned ground in the city. On Monday 31 October 1898 they were present at the consecration of the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer; perhaps Frank had a view of at least part of the day's festivities as the new church was on Mt Zion, near his school. The day after, the imperial visitors moved on to Jericho, the Dead Sea and the River Jordan before making their way north to the Lebanon.

The visit completely upstaged the consecration a few days before of the Anglican Collegiate Church of St George the Martyr. In the Times, the new Anglican church was given one paragraph on one day, while the visit of the rulers of Germany occupied its columns for several weeks, indicating how threatening the newspaper's owners thought the visit was. The new Anglican church was the pet project of bishop of Jerusalem George Francis Popham Blyth (uncle of GD member Lilian Blyth-Praeger). Bishop Blyth had been appointed in 1887 and in his early years in-post, he had done his best to take control of all missionary work in Jerusalem. The CMS had fought him tooth and nail and the dispute had ended up going before the archbishop of Canterbury - who confirmed the CMS's independence. Relations amongst the two Anglican camps living in Jerusalem were therefore bad; but it might have given them all pause to have the importance of Germany in the Turkish empire paraded before them so ostentatiously at a time of increasing tension between the two nations which even people living abroad must have been aware of.

In 1908, CMS workers must have been astonished when some of the restrictions under which they had been working were lifted by a new constitution for the Turkish empire which allowed freedom of conscience amongst other civil liberties. CMS missionaries now had freedom to seek converts even amongst Muslims; and could claim recourse to the law if necessary. In theory. It was still up to local governors to choose to implement the new constitution; or to drag their feet.

It still behoved the CMS to tread very cautiously. And unfortunately the new constitution coincided with a particularly troubled period for the CMS's finances: Frank and all other headmasters of schools in Palestine were told that they had to find more money locally and that the CMS's work at the elementary level would be reduced. Frank managed to survive these cuts, obviously, as Bishop Gobat school continued in operation.

The new freedoms had only been in place a few years before the first World War began, with the Turkish empire entering it on the side of Germany. Although I haven't been able to find out much about the lives of British residents of Jerusalem at this time, it must have made their situation as undesirable aliens even more precarious. As far as I know, Bishop Gobat school continued in operation throughout and Frank continued to do his job as well as he was able in circumstances that by 1917 comprised (according to a Times correspondent and I'm not sure how much he or she was to be trusted) devaluation of the currency and shortages of basics like bread. Charitable funds coming from Britain to pay his wages and the school's upkeep had in any case been in decline since around 1900; the CMS was curtailing its overseas commitments by that time because of a lack of donations. So the war years will have been a particularly difficult time for Frank and Charlotte; they may have had good cause to be concerned for the safety of themselves as well as their pupils.

If the inhabitants of Palestine were hoping to avoid the war being fought over their territory they may have been disabused of that idea by early 1916, when there was fighting in Sinai that was kept a secret from Britain but which residents of Jerusalem might have heard rumours of. With new commander General Allenby in charge, an advance into Palestine from Egypt by an army including troops from France, Italy, the West Indies and India as well as the UK began at the end of October 1917. By mid-November Allenby's troops were moving towards Hebron and Jerusalem and perhaps the planes they had with them could be seen bombing the retreating Turkish troops and doing reconnaissance flights over the hills. Frank and the other British residents must have feared the worst while at the same time longing for a British victory. However, I couldn't find any evidence that the Turkish authorities took out their peril on foreign residents, and it seems that Allenby's strategy was to avoid an all-out assault on all those religious buildings so important to so many faiths, if it was at all possible - he concentrated on cutting off access to and from Jerusalem by road and rail. There was fierce fighting in the hills to the south-west of Jerusalem at the end of November and into December, but on 8 December 1917 the city's last lines of communication were cut and on 9 December - a Sunday - the mayor of Jerusalem surrendered the city. Allenby and his senior officers entered Jerusalem - on foot - on 12 December. A military governor was put in charge to get the city back on its feet and repair damaged infrastructure, and at last CMS workers in Palestine could feel that their lives there would be protected. Not their work, though: the price of their safety under British rule was the loss, in the long term, of all they had been working for: on 2 November 1917 Foreign Secretary Balfour had confirmed in a letter to the 2nd Baron Rothschild that the British government would support the idea of Palestine as a Jewish homeland. Bishop Gobat school continued in operation until 1948, but closed down after the British left.

Frank himself continued as headmaster of Bishop Gobat's school for a decade under British rule, until he retired in 1927. He was awarded the MBE to commemorate his long service and the contribution he had made to raising the standards of education in Palestine.

One of the drawbacks to even the most exciting job outside Britain was that you would probably not be able to get back in time or at all to be there at weddings and funerals; you would, inevitably, become estranged from your family. Frank's father Francis had retired at some time between 1891 and 1901. He went to live with his son Wilstrop Ellis, his wife Elizabeth and their family, above Wilstrop's grocery business in Witherwick, Hull. He lived on until he was 85, dying in 1915; but he and Frank will have had to say what was likely to be their last goodbyes many years before. Frank at least had nephews and nieces, and by that time great-nephews and great-nieces, living in England; but he had probably never met them. Charlotte's father was still alive and living in Britain; but I've said in my account of her childhood that she seems hardly to have known him. Making decisions in 1927 about his retirement, Frank and Charlotte chose to stay in Jerusalem, where their friends and their lives' work were. They moved to a house in the German district of the city but unfortunately Frank didn't enjoy a long retirement, perhaps he was already ill. He died in the English Mission Hospital on 5 March 1928. Even then, Charlotte chose to continue her missionary work rather than retire to England. She may have spent a few weeks in England in 1932, after her father finally died at the age of 92; but she died in Jerusalem in 1938. Frank and both his wives are buried in Jerusalem's Protestant cemetery.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

FRANK BECOMES A TEACHER

Frank is listed amongst the current students at the "Durham Training College for Masters" on the day of the 1881 census.

For more on the college, which still exists although in a very different form, see www.hildbedesrc.co.uk/alumni/college-history. The College's records are now at Durham Record Office.

Some contemporary information on the College, including the subjects that were taught, is in Our Schools and Colleges: Volume I Boys by Frederick Shirley de Carteret-Bisson. London: 1879: p482.

Frank's employer from 1888 to his retirement:

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY records are now at the Cadbury Research Library at the University of Birmingham.

I used Handbooks of the Church Missionary Society Missions: The Palestine Mission published in London by the CMS in 1910, probably as part of a fund-raising effort. In the last few pages, all the CMS's missionaries are listed. The author of the Handbook is not named. He or she exhibits all the imperialist, racist and religious prejudices of his or her age. It's no wonder CMS missionaries in Jerusalem were not welcome.

At www.ampltd.co.uk is the website of Adam Matthew Publications who sell research collections. They have a set of microfilm CMS archive SIX: Middle East Missions. Reel 45 G3PO original papers from 1895: as headmaster of Bishop Gobat school, Frank was responsible for producing its annual report.

At website

//web.mac.com/tariq.khan/familytree/Other\_Documents\_files/Jerusalem%20cemetery.html are some details of Frank's working life in Jerusalem.

Frank's article on Bishop Gobat School:

Seen at ufdc.ufl.edu the University of Florida digital collections: Boys and Boys: A Missionary Book now in the Baldwin Library, University of Florida. Published London by the CMS 1896: Boys of Palestine pp40-48.

Just confirming that he was never ordained as a Church of England clergyman: Crockford's 1880 P315 and 1895 p 418: he is not on the current staff lists.

Bishop Ingham's visit:

Via archive.org to the full text of From Japan to Jerusalem by the Rt Rev Ernest Graham Ingham, one-time bishop of Sierra Leone, now Home Secretary of the CMS. Published London: CMS 1911. Chapter XXVI: pp210-222.

FRANK AS A FREEMASON IN THE 1880S

Baildon Lodge number 1545: Celebration of Diamond Jubilee 1935: Historical Sketch 1875-1935 by Henry Riding. Printed Baildon 1935.

IN QC2076: v Ars Quatuor Coronati number 2076 volume 1 1886-88; unnumbered endpages in the list of current members: Frank's name appears on p[11] as corresponding member 170. Mention of a "Mr T F Ellis" which might or might not be Frank appears in Ars Quatuor Coronati number 2076 volume VIII 1895: p1-2. Ars Quatuor Coronati number 2076 volume XIII 1900 no longer has Frank as a corresponding member.

GENERAL INFORMATION ON MISSIONS IN PALESTINE

British Interests in Palestine 1800-1901: A Study of Religious and Educational Enterprise by A L Tibawi. Oxford University Press 1961

BISHOP BLYTH

Information on George Francis Popham Blyth's career is in Lilian Blyth-Praeger's Notes on the Yorkshire Branch of the Family of Blyth of Norton Lees published by The Pan Press 1912.

FRANK'S WIVES

For general information about the missionary work done by women in Palestine and the problems they faced: Tibawi op cit.

DOROTHY FORSTER ELLIS died 1891 aged 26.

I was hampered in my search for her on the web by the existence of Walter Besant's novel, Dorothy Forster.

I did find three women with the right name born around 1865 on the 1871 and 1881 censuses; but they all seem to have been married in the 1880s, not to Frank Tate Ellis.

At Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica 1902 p88 is a description of Dorothy ForsterEllis' tombstone in the Protestant Cemetery in Jerusalem; she died on 14 April 1891.

CHARLOTTE LOW ELLIS 1865-1938

Her name appears in www.william1.co.uk/W130/htm as a grand-daughter of Augusta Ludlow Shakespeare 1809-92. Augusta was the daughter of John Talbot Shakespeare and his wife Amelia daughter of William Makepeace Thackeray. John Alves Low (born 1840) is a descendant of Augusta Ludlow Shakespeare; possibly a grandson (I couldn't work out the exact relationship).

John Alves Low married Jane Hooper daughter of Lt William Hooper RN; they are Charlotte Low's parents, no other children are mentioned on this website.

Plantagenet Roll of the Blood Royal: Mortimer-Percy Volume p532 Charlotte Low is in this volume because of her mother Jane Hooper, who married Capt John Alves Low on 6 October 1864. This volume confirms the existence of Charlotte's younger sister Augusta. It was hard to read the snippet but I think Jane Hooper's parents were William Hooper RN and Elizabeth née Bramston. Jane Hooper's brother, the Rev William Hooper had quite a lot of coverage: Sanskrit scholar at Oxford; then Church of England clergyman working firstly in New Zealand but in Allahabad by the 1880s. Author of a hebrew-urdu dictionary. He was married twice and had children who must have been Charlotte's closest relations apart from her father.

Both those family history say that John Alves Low was a naval officer. This isn't correct:

In the India Office in January 2014 I was hampered in my search for J A Low and Charlotte's likely birthplace by the fact that all India Register issues between 1861 and 1890 were at the conservators.

India Register 1860 2nd edition, military indexes for Bengal, Madras and Bombay ALL have no record of an officer J A Low. So at that time he must have been stationed somewhere else.

London Gazette 3 September 1867 p4911 in a list of promotions in the Royal Artillery: John Alves Low to be 2nd Captain as of 19 August 1867.

India List January 1891 p368 Capt J A Low is on the Bengal retired list: date of retirement was 30 September 1869. Definitely of the Royal Artillery.

J A Low had a very distinguished elder brother: see wikipedia on Sir Robert Cunliffe Low 1838-1911, Indian Army, Afghan war (the second one, I think).

For Charlotte herself:

Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor 1880 p84 a letter from her, aged 14, written at Vale Terrace Guildford, where she was also living on the day of the 1881 census.

Proceedings of the CMS issue of 1919 plxii confirms that Charlotte started working for the CMS as a missionary in Palestine in 1891.

Handbooks of the Church Missionary Society Missions: The Palestine Mission published in London by the CMS in 1910; no author given. The call for women missionaries with a private income: p23,p33. Bishop Gobat school: p33. Local hostility towards Christian missionaries: pp36-38. Details of staff in Palestine 1900-01: p24 and Appendix 1 pp60-63 a full list of all who had worked for the CMS in Palestine, to date. The Mrs Low who might be Charlotte's mother is listed as having worked for the CMS from 1884 to 1887; at which point perhaps she died, in Jerusalem.

EDWARD HERBERT FISON'S LETTER appeared in Times 6 May 1893 p6.

THE INSCRIPTION AT CAESAREA: via archive.org to Gleanings in Archaeology and Epigraphy issue of 1 January 1919, editor Warren J Moulton: pp86-87 as one of a series of short reports, item 4: A Caesarean Inscription with a photograph of the marble slab on p87 which might have been taken by Frank. Dr Murray's translation of the inscription was published in Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Exploratory Fund 1896 but the Gleanings... report is making some corrections to Dr Murray's translation.

THE GERMANS AND JERUSALEM

For the Templar Society in Jerusalem see wikipedia and at www.timesofisrael.com, posted 6 April 2013 article: A German Colony in Jerusalem.

The visit of Wilhelm II and Viktoria Augusta in 1898: Times 3 October 1898 apparently quoting a long and hostile article in a Russian newspaper, giving a full itinerary. Also Times 8 October 1898 etc. The paragraph on the consecration of bishop Blyth's St George church is in the Ecclesiastical Intelligence column of 25 October 1898 p11; several items below the news that the Times thought most important that day.

ALLENBY'S CAMPAIGN

The short report on the collapse of the Turkish economy: Times 2 October 1917 p5 and it may be pure propaganda! On Saturday 13 October 1917 p5 the Times quoted a report in an Italian newspaper saying that the Roman Catholic bishop of Jerusalem was being held prisoner by the city's Turkish authorities. On Monday 15 October 1917 p7 they were obliged to say that Saturday's report was completely untrue!

I followed Allenby's campaign through the Times online, beginning on Thursday 2 November 1917 and continuing until Friday 14 December 1917. The Times had a reporter, W T Massey, at Allenby's headquarters but he could only pass on what he had been told. The Times quoted War Office statements several times but again, these were censored. The reports were short, usually accompanied by a map showing the latest position of the advancing troops; no details were given of casualties.

The Balfour Declaration: see wikipedia or the original letter which is now in the British Library.

FRANK'S RETIREMENT AND DEATH

Times 3 June 1927 p17 in the King's Birthday Honours' list.

Edinburgh Gazette 7 June 1927 p658 gives the same MBE information.

Times 7 March 1928 p18 Frank's death "in Jerusalem on Monday" merited a paragraph.

Website www.khanskinfolk.com is a database created in 2002 and copyright Israel GenWeb Project, giving details of who is buried in the Protestant Cemetery in Jerusalem.

27 January 2014

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

William Henry ELPHICK who was initiated into the Golden Dawn in April 1896 and chose the motto 'Gradation'. His address at that time was 2 Napier Road, Amersham Vale, New Cross Gate south London.

Another failure! Trying the census data for 1891, 1901 and 1911 I couldn't find anyone that I thought might be him though I did get the impression that 'Elphick' was a common surname in Kent so perhaps that was where he grown up. I found two pieces of information that might refer to him:

The first I found in the British Library India Office family history section. A book listing men serving in the Indian Medical Service had details of a Henry William Elphick who joined the service in 1889 and died in 1906 (for full details see the end of this biography). IF this was the GD member it would certainly explain why I couldn't find the man on the UK census. He might have been offered GD membership during one of those long home-leaves that you got when you served the imperial government overseas. But I worried about his forenames being the wrong way round.

The second was a publication I found in the British Library catalogue: the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge (SPCK - it had a big publishing business) published a book by a man called William Elphick (no Henry at all this time) called The Loveliness of God: Some Meditations on the First and Greatest Commandment. But the publication date was 1946 - too late, really, for someone old enough to join the GD in the 1890s; though it could have been written by a son of such a man.

So I decided that I couldn't say that either reference was to William Henry Elphick of the GD. That person remains a mystery.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

The India Office reference:

Roll of the Indian Medical Service p1889 Henry William Elphick born 10 July 1865. University College London. Member Royal College of Surgeons 1888. Member Royal College of Physicians 1888. MB London University 1888. Surgeon Indian Medical Service 1889. Major September 1901. Put on half pay 1905 and died Rugby 20 May 1906.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

A man whose name R A Gilbert transcribed as Mahomet Eusouf was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in March 1890. The motto he chose was transliterated in the GD records as 'Amaidwar'. My Eastern cultures and languages expert Roger Wright cautiously suggests that 'amaidwar' was a Hindustani word, (Hindustani is the ancestor of modern Hindi). At the time of his initiation he was living at 3 Vernon Chambers, Southampton Row London WC1. Mahomet Eusuof did none of the work that GD initiates were required to do to make progress understanding western esotericism, and was no longer a member of the GD by September 1890.

When I began my work on the GD members, I decided that I would not try to find out who Mahomet Eusouf was, particularly as he was a member for such a short time. The words 'mahomet eusouf' were obviously a rendering into English of a language from India or the Middle East. Without making any effort I could think of five other ways of spelling 'mahomet', and Eusouf too has plenty of other spellings. I doubted that I would be able to identify the man for certain. However, when Roger Wright began work putting my GD biographies onto our website, he got intrigued by Mahomet Eusouf. He started hunting the web himself for a likely candidate and prodded me to make more of an effort. As a result, we came up with two men whose name could be transliterated as Mahomet Eusouf. They were both born in India but had connections with Britain.

The one Roger Wright found did sound the most promising: the nawab Sir Mohammed (I've also seen it spelled Muhammad - this is the sort of problem that put me off looking) Yusuf of Jaunpur, who was an important political figure in the United Provinces of India (now Uttar Pradesh) and the Muslim League in the 1930s. However, he turned out to have been born in 1890; so no way was he the GD member.

We fell back on the man that I'd found. I'm still uncomfortable about the identification, but we couldn't find anyone else who fitted the necessary criteria, so I give a short biography of him below.

My candidate is the man whose name was written down as Mohammad Yusuf when he registered as a bar student at the Middle Temple in October 1889. At that time he was 18 years old. He was Indian and was from Patna (in Bihar) where his father, Maulvi Jelaluddin (another source gives the name as Mouline Jelaluddin), was a land-owner and a Pleader in the local courts. An official source from much later in his life says that he was born a British citizen; and he must have been a Christian too - or was he? - as he was baptised as Maurice Yusuf though he was always called Mohammad.

Maurice or Mohammad Yusuf (I'm going to stick with Mohammad) was registered as a Middle Temple student again in 1891; and a third time in 1905. He never completed the bar formalities that are required to be called to the bar; but that was because he never had any intention of working as a barrister.

I suppose it must have been while he was doing his first session studying at the Middle Temple that Mohammad Yusuf moved into Vernon Chambers Southampton Row - very convenient for all the Inns of Court - and met someone who was a member of the Golden Dawn. I've tried to think who this GD member must be; but I can't come up with any names. Several barristers did become GD members, but I think that none of them were initiated this early. Like my questions about much of his life - his religion, for example, though I suppose he started out as a Muslim - it I fear it will remain unanswered.

During the years around 1891 that he was in England, Mohammad Yusuf also spent some time taking courses at Emmanuel College Cambridge University. He didn't finish a degree there, but this wasn't necessary for the career he was going to follow, and I assume it was never intended that he should do the full three years and graduate. He was in England to try to get into the Indian Civil Service (ICS); entry was based on your passing a series of exams. In June 1892 he won one of two prizes (worth £20 each) awarded to ICS students at Cambridge University. And in that July he took and passed the final ICS exams, winning two more prizes for his papers in Hindustani and Arabic. Soon afterwards, he began his ICS career by being sent to work in Burma. There's some discrepancy between the different sources as to the date of his first day at work, but he was probably in Burma by mid-1893.

Employees of the Indian Civil Service appeared in the India Office List. Like a British GPO directory, the List was issued each year with details of ICS employees' past and current postings and a place in the seniority list indicating when they might hope to be promoted. The name of the man I've cautiously identified was spelled in the List in two different ways: for nearly all his appearances it was spelled as Muhammad Yusuf; but the last time he appeared it was spelled as Mohammad Yusuf. I'm going to spell it the first way, the Middle Temple way.

Given that he was a native Indian rather than a member of the British ruling class in India, I think Mohammad Yusuf managed quite a glittering career. He was officially offered a job with the ICS as early as 1890. He worked in Burma for four years, as an assistant magistrate and collector of taxes, before being moved on to do the same work in Bengal in January 1896; this was a promotion but being moved on was a fact of ICS life anyway. He was promoted and moved on again in October 1903, and spent three years as a district and sessions judge in Assam before being moved back to Bengal again.

In 1905 Mohammad Yusuf spent a few months in England, studying at the Middle Temple again in order to do the bar exams in constitutional law and (English) legal history. He passed those in June 1905 and returned to India to join the judicial department of the high court in Calcutta. He continued to work in Calcutta's high court for the rest of his career, being sent back to England once more, in 1913, back to the Middle Temple to take the exams in criminal law and procedure, and Roman law and jurisprudence. Having passed those exams he returned to the Calcutta high court and by 1918 was third in seniority there, behind two British-born ICS employees. They both retired in the early 1920s so that in his last India Office List entry as an ICS official he was the most senior employee in the Calcutta high court system. Then, in 1927, he too retired.

Mohammad Yusuf did not stay in India after his retirement; in fact there's good evidence he might actually have left the country for good - taking leave that was due to him, possibly - before the official retirement date. He came to live in England; because he had married an English woman and their son was already living here.

In March 1893, Mohammad Yusuf married Lizzie Grace Cargill (who may have been known as Grace rather than Lizzie) at Brighton registry office. Two family history websites (see the Sources section for details) both give details of the marriage and more information on both families. Though they each spell his 'yusuf' name slightly differently! One of the two ICS officers who were senior to Mohammad Yusuf in the India Office Lists during his time in Calcutta was a James Dudley Cargill; Lizzie Grace was his elder sister. Their parents were Richard Cargill and his wife Eliza, née Pasley. Richard Cargill was originally from Southwell in Nottinghamshire, and Eliza was born in London. They had moved to Brighton where Richard Cargill ran a pharmacy business at 32 Marine Parade, though he had retired by census day 1891 and had moved to 63 Middle Street. James Dudley Cargill was at Emmanuel College Cambridge, doing his ICS exam work, in 1889 and 1890, when Mohammad Yusuf was also a student there; despite the enormous differences in their backgrounds they became friends; James Dudley invited Mohammad Yusuf to meet his family... Their working lives as ICS officers ran in parallel - Cargill always slightly ahead on grounds of being a little older and English - though Cargill was never in Burma, only in Bengal and Assam.

Mohammad Yusuf, Lizzie Grace's son Zain Maurice Yusuf was born in 1894 in Basein Burma but was living in England by 1919. They had joined him in England by 25 August 1926, when all three of them changed their surname by deed poll, from Yusuf to Dean. In addition, Mohammad Yusuf swapped his surname so that it became his first name: after the deed poll he was known as Yusuf Maurice Dean. Why 'dean' I have no idea, but the decision to change the surname from 'yusuf' to something unmemorably English may have been to help their son and his wife (Zain had married an Englishwoman in 1919). Zain Maurice Dean had recently qualified, in England, as a doctor and surgeon. He was still living in England and registered with the General Medical Council in 1957.

The newly renamed Yusuf Maurice Dean died in a sanatorium in Linford, Hampshire on 3 May 1928. Lizzie Grace Dean died in 1946.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR MOHAMMAD YUSUF

EARLY LIFE/ICS TRAINING

Via the web to hosted.law.wisc.edu a list of South Asians at the Inns: Middle Temple, posting information reproduced from the Middle Temple members' list known as Sturgess volume II; posted on web July 2010. Mohammad Yusuf appears in Sturgess volume II p674. Whereas most barristers in this list have an address in England, there isn't one for Mohammad Yusuf.

Training at the Middle Temple and at Cambridge University: Times issues of 20 June 1892; 25 August 1892; 21 June 1905; 13 January 1913; 2 April 1913.

For general information on the training of barristers, see website www.middletemple.org.uk, its document The Role of the Inns of Court in the Provision of Education and Training for the Bar; though it's a modern document, not a history of the subject, so there's nothing specific about courses taken by those training for the ICS.

ICS CAREER

India Office Lists for 1913; 1918; 1926, 1928.

MOHAMMAD YUSUF AND LIZZIE GRACE CARGILL

Website archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com has details posted in 2003 by Jonathan Gentry of Toronto who is a descendant of Lizzie Grace's cousin.

Website freepages.genealogy.rootsweb.ancestry.com is the page for the Pasley family of London, Sheffield and Nottinghamshire; information posted by Kit Withers who I think is a descendant of Mohammad Yusuf and Lizzie Grace. Withers says that Zain Maurice Yusuf married Elizabeth Mary Clarke in 1919; and that James Dudley Cargill married Albina Benvenuta Comba in Calcutta in 1893.

THE CHANGE OF NAME BY DEED POLL

London Gazette 27 August 1926 p5679 for Zain Maurice Yusuf, from now on Zain Maurice Dean. And p5680 for the man baptised Maurice Yusuf but generally known as Mohammad (sic) Yusuf. He will in future be known as Yusuf Maurice Dean. Both changes of name by deed poll are dated 25 August 1926.

GD MEMBER'S SON ZAIN MAURICE DEAN

General Medical Council Registers issue of 1931: Dean, Zain Maurice formerly Yusuf, now of 9 Stanstead Grove, Stanstead Road Catford SE6. 1st registered with the GMC May 1925. MRCS 1924. LRCP 1924.

Medical Register part 1 issued by GMC 1957 p525 he's still in the list.

Copyright SALLY DAVIS

19 October 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

William Muir Farquhar was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in October 1891, taking the Latin motto 'Vitam peto'. He thought better of the idea very quickly, and sent in a letter of resignation in February 1892.

THE FARQUHAR AND FISHER FAMILIES OF ABERDEEN

In 1860 Thomas Farquhar married Charlotte Fisher, uniting (probably not for the first time) two of Aberdeen's prominent families. For at least a couple of generations the men in both families had worked in the professions - the church, the army, medicine and the law. Thomas Farquhar's father Alexander was a Church of Scotland clergyman and schoolmaster; Charlotte's father, Andrew Sandilands Fisher, had died by 1860 having reached the rank of captain in the 72nd Regiment, the Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders. Charlotte's mother Mary Ann, had been born a Davidson so it's quite likely that William Muir Farquhar was a distant cousin of GD member Alexander Gordon Davidson, who had been born in Aberdeen; although I haven't been able to find proof of any relationship between them.

Thomas and Charlotte married in Hampshire but it's likely that they had grown up round the corner from each other in Scotland: by 1851 Thomas was in India, but his family were living in Rubislaw Terrace in the Old Macher district of Aberdeen; Charlotte's family were living in Albyn Place.

Thomas Farquhar had studied medicine at King's College Aberdeen and passed his MD exams in 1846. He had joined the East India Company's medical service in 1847 after a year at Edinburgh University gaining his LRCS. Arriving in India in 1848 he was sent to the Punjab, where he met and became friendly with the Company's most senior administrators there, the brothers Henry and John Lawrence. He spent short times serving with the 1st Brigade Bengal Artillery and the 3rd Regiment of Infantry before being sent to Agra in the mid-1850s to take charge of the vaccination programme there. He distinguished himself during the city's cholera outbreak in 1856 and also during its siege in 1857. During his time in Agra, Thomas Farquhar was working alongside an assistant surgeon he had known during the Sikh or Punjab war of 1848-49: Thomas Saumarez Lacy. Through Dr Lacy he must have met a remarkable man known to the British as John Clement Lacy. J C Lacy was baptised in Agra in 1859, but he was over 30 by then and was a convert - he had been born a Hindu Brahmin. J C Lacy was the particular protégé of one of Thomas Saumarez Lacy. J C Lacy's son John Valentine Lacy grew up in Edinburgh and became a member of the GD, though not until long after William Farquhar had left it.

Once the Mutiny had been quelled, Thomas Farquhar was able to take a long leave in Britain, during which he married Charlotte Fisher. He also gained promotion from assistant-surgeon to surgeon.

William Muir Farquhar, the elder of their two sons, was born in Amritsar, early in 1863, while his father was stationed with the 1st Regiment Native Infantry. However, a few months after William's birth, Thomas Farquhar's friend Sir John Lawrence became viceroy of India and appointed him his full-time physician, one of the select band (less than 20 men) who formed the viceroy's personal staff. It was inevitable, under those circumstances, that Thomas should be asked to contribute to a commission of inquiry into the health of the British army in India. When the inquiry's findings were published, his views were challenged at length and in detail by Florence Nightingale. However, Nightingale's attempts to establish a Crimean War-style nursing service in Indian hospitals came to nothing when her plan was vetoed by Lawrence, a decision Thomas Farquhar's opinions must have influenced.

William Farquhar's early childhood was thus spent around the viceregal household (Lawrence and his wife had 10 children) in Calcutta, but when John Lawrence retired as viceroy in 1869, Thomas Farquhar retired too. The Farquhar family returned to Scotland in time for William's sister Mabel to be born in Aberdeen in 1870; Herbert was also born there, in 1876. On his retirement, Thomas bought a small estate at Auchronie in rural Aberdeenshire, but he and his family lived for most of the time in Aberdeen. They were living at 16 Rubislaw Terrace Aberdeen on the day of the 1881 census. William, now 18, was still at school and at home on census day but later that year he went to Cambridge University where he was a student at Pembroke College.

William Farquhar had been educated for a career in one of the professions; once he had graduated, in 1884, it just remained to choose which one. Perhaps his choice had been made already: he become a clergyman, like his grandfather Alexander Farquhar. From the little evidence that I've found, I'd say that William's decision was based on strong and perhaps rather conservative religious convictions. He was ordained as a Church of England priest in 1887 under the auspices of Frederick Temple, bishop of London. As a churchman Frederick Temple was rather difficult to pigeonhole: he held the view that science and religion could co-exist in the modern world; and was neither Evangelical nor High Church. A former teacher at Rugby School, he held Liberal political opinions and believed in the benefits of educating the working classes. He was a temperance campaigner and a passionate advocate of missionary work. If Temple chose William Muir Farquhar for ordination out of what was probably a long list of applicants, perhaps we can think of William as sharing those views at least to some extent. However, William won't have had an easy ride as he trained for the priesthood: Temple's zeal, and his long working hours (15-hour days - sounds almost modern) set very high standards for new priests to follow.

Part of the reason for Frederick Temple's long working hours was the almost impossible task facing any contemporary bishop of London, of trying to keep up with the relentless expansion of London into all the surrounding counties. Housing was being built over the diocese at an incredible speed and its parishes - many of them unchanged from the one-church-per-village organisation of the Middle Ages - couldn't accommodate the vast numbers of new parishioners. A programme of subdividing parishes and building new churches was under way. It was a mammoth task of finance and organisation, but for the right men there were jobs on offer in very crowded and busy parishes, each of them full of newcomers to the district and needing a whole infrastructure of church activities to help create some kind of community feeling. Marylebone was a fine example of how things had had to change: a process that ended in 1890 had divided the medieval parish of St Mary le Bourne into 26 new ones, several of which William Farquhar worked in.

Once ordained, William's whole career in the Church of England was spent in or near west London, with several years as a curate, moving from parish to parish fairly rapidly, being followed by a permanent appointment. He began work in 1886 at St Stephen's Paddington, on Westbourne Park Road, and stayed there until 1890. As curate, he had no right to live in the vicarage and so rented rooms at 23 Sutherland Place, a couple of streets from the church. Then he was moved on to St Philip's Buckingham Palace Road, a church building only completed in 1888 to serve a parish that was created in 1890 out of part of the older parish of St George's Hanover Square. St Philip's church had been built with money supplied by the Duke of Westminster on land owned by the Grosvenor family and it's possible that the Duke had some say in William's appointment. William lived elsewhere on the Grosvenor estate, at 107 Eaton Terrace where Mrs Amelia Kibblewhite rented out rooms; and was living there during his short period as a GD member.

After about 18 months at St Philip's, William was moved again in 1891, to St Paul's Lisson Grove, possibly the oldest building he'd worked in so far - it had been built in 1836. Then in 1895 he made a big step-up to spend three years as chaplain of St Marylebone, the original church of the old St Mary le Bourne parish. For two of those years he had a second job, as organising secretary of the Church of England Young Men's Society. The extra income may have been welcome just then as in 1894 he had got married, to Jane Layland.

The parish of St Marylebone may have been carved up into 26 daughter parishes by 1890 but the original parish - now confined to the area between Oxford Street and Euston Road - still had more influence in the Church of England than any of them, having more wealthy and socially- and politically-important residents. Perhaps one or several of those residents brought William to the attention of a new bishop of London, when in 1898 the parish of Hanwell in Middlesex needed a new rector. The Rev Mandell Creighton had taken the post of bishop of London in 1897 following Frederick Temple's appointment as archbishop of Canterbury. The bishop of London had been the patron of Hanwell since the Reformation. Creighton offered William Farquhar the job there. In doing so, he would have taken account of the fact that it was a parish known for its Evangelical traditions.

I've gone a bit over time before stopping to consider the question: why did William drop out of the GD? Why was he a member for such a short time? I think the answer lies with his work; or, rather, with the beliefs he almost certainly held that had made him choose that particular line of work.

I do wish I knew more about the circumstances that led to William Farquhar being offered membership of the GD: who suggested it and under what circumstances. Some of the circumstances were that the chance to join the GD came during a year of more than usual uncertainty in his life: he had had to change jobs again, and at the beginning of the year his father had died. But as to who invited him into the GD, I don't know. He certainly didn't come to the GD from either of its two main areas of recruitment at the time: theosophy, and the freemasons. That being so, I've no idea who recommended him to the GD's two powers-that-be, Samuel Liddell Mathers and William Wynn Westcott; or why William decided to accept the offer of initiation that they made him. He may have had the GD described to him as a Rosicrucian organisation - that is, a society of followers or admirers of Christian Rosenkreuz who (if he existed at all) lived an exemplary Christian life in 17th century Germany. Reading the Pledge Form which all members had to sign when they joined, he will also have been pleased to find it saying, "Belief in a Supreme Being, or Beings, is indispensable. In addition, the Candidate, if not a Christian, should be at least prepared to take an interest in Christian symbolism". However, he may soon have become alarmed by the rituals he was expected to take a part in and the subjects he was expected to study as a new initiate.

I've suggested that William Farquhar's views were on the Evangelical side of the Church of England. To Evangelicals, ritual in a church service was akin to the the worship of idols; instead of concentrating on the word of God, ritual expressed belief through drama - something even primitive tribes could manage. In addition, by 1890 the original, Rosicrucian-influenced rituals of the GD as envisaged by Westcott and his friends were being taken in new directions, with symbolism coming in from Ancient Egyptian religion in particular and invocations of beings that were not Christian. And then there was the tarot and astrology and alchemy and the Qabalah, subjects all initiates were supposed to study if they wanted to reach a level of learning where they could do practical magic. All of those subjects had been studied in past centuries by devout Christians who had considered them as ways of gaining greater understanding of the Divine; as alternatives to the Bible. However, the origins of one of them were unquestionably Jewish and the rest might have been rather too pagan-sounding for a Church of England curate with Evangelical leanings. In any case, for Evangelicals there was no alternative to the Bible: they believed that all the answers they would ever need would be found in it; to look for answers anywhere else was to doubt God's word.

I suggest, too, that William began to worry what bishop Frederick Temple would say if he got to hear what was expected of members of the GD. Temple doesn't sound like a man who would be tolerant in those circumstances, and William owed him his current job and future prospects. So he sent William Westcott a letter of resignation and he was probably right to do so.

The death of Thomas Farquhar led to the cutting of his family's ties with Aberdeen. At some point during the 1890s, probably quite soon after Thomas' death, William's mother Charlotte and his sisters moved to England. By 1901 they had settled in Petersfield. His brother Herbert probably emigrated: I haven't found any evidence of his being in the UK after 1891. For a few years, William kept up an interest in Aberdeen's local history by being a member of the New Spalding Club, an antiquarian group that his father had also been a member of. However, he seems to have let his membership lapse after 1898. And unlike his father, he didn't marry into another Aberdeen family: his wife had no Scottish connections.

Jane Layland (usually known as Jennie) was a daughter of Thomas and Jane Layland. She was born in 1868, in Liverpool, where her father was in business as an architect and surveyor. For a few years in the 1870s the Laylands lived at Stone House in Wallasey, but in 1879 Thomas Layland died, aged only 45, leaving his wife with six daughters and two sons all under 14; and having to manage on a restricted income. Jane Layland elected to move back into Liverpool; on the day of the 1881 census she and her children were living at 28 Great George Street.

In 1884 Jennie's eldest sister Frances made what her contemporaries would have considered to be an excellent marriage; and the family's focus moved from Liverpool to London. Fanny married Francis Barratt, a member of a wealthy Cornish family. In 1895 her husband added her surname to his own and became Layland-Barratt. He served as Liberal MP for Torquay from 1900 to 1910, during which time (1908) he was made a baronet; and under war-time conditions as MP for St Austell from 1915-18. He retired from Parliament at the 1918 general election but was an important figure in the National Liberal Federation until his death in 1933. Once married, Frances embarked on a career as a novelist and poet; and during World War One she worked for the Order of St John of Jerusalem (which runs St John Ambulance) earning a CBE. On census day 1891 Jennie and her younger sister were visiting the Barratts at their London home in Sussex Gardens Chelsea; while their mother was staying in Clacton.

I'm not sure how William met Jennie Layland but Jennie and her mother were living in Highbury, north London, by 1894. William and Jennie were married at St Mary's Islington in June of that year, spending four years of married life in Marylebone before the move to Hanwell.

The earliest evidence for the existence of the village of Hanwell is from the 10th century. In the centuries that followed, its main importance had been as a stop on the main route from Westminster to Oxford. By the 19th century, however, the westward march of London was beginning to engulf it: the Middlesex County Lunatic Asylum was built in the parish in 1831 and there were also two private mental hospitals in the area when the Farquhars moved there. Several London boroughs had their out-of-town cemeteries near the village. And a group of Poor Law Boards had built a boarding school for paupers there, the Central London District School; if the Farquhars had arrived in Hanwell a few months earlier than they did, they might have encountered Charlie Chaplin, who was at the school from 1896 to January 1898.

As early as the first decades of the 19th century, the land around the village was being built on and in 1841 the parish had enough wealthy parishioners to employ George Gilbert Scott to rebuild St Mary's church, giving Scott one of his earliest commissions. But by the end of the century the parish was overflowing - literally, as there was not enough room in St Mary's for all the new residents of the village who wanted to attend its services. St Mark's chapel was built as a temporary solution, but it was clear that the old Hanwell parish would have to be subdivided. It's possible that Rev William was sent in as someone who knew how to cope with the ecclesiastical and social results of that process, which culminated in the formation of the parish of St Mellitus in 1908 and the reduction of the original parish to more manageable numbers of parishioners. The process finally ended in 1922, when the Church of England sold the old rectory and provided William and Jennie with a smaller house. There had been calamities along the way: William's mother Charlotte had died in 1919; and in 1912 St Mary's church was badly damaged by fire.

Regulations had been in place since the 1890s for Church of England clergymen to retire; but William Farquhar took his religious vocation so seriously that he was still working as rector of Hanwell in his early 70s. He may have thought it his duty to die in harness, but he did eventually retire, in 1938, possibly on health grounds. He and Jennie moved away from Hanwell, to a house called Waysland, on Banbury Road in Blewbury near Didcot. William died in October 1939, at the Acland Nursing Home, a private hospital in Oxford. He had no children.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

THE FARQUHAR FAMILY AND WMF'S FA THOMAS FARQUHAR IMS

Seen at histfam.familysearch.org June 2014, a part family tree of Surgeon-Major Thomas Farquhar of Auchronie based on information published in Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae: the Succn of Ministers in the Ch of Scotl from the Reformation by Hew Scot. Published in 9 volumes Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd 1915. Data on the Farquhar family is in volume 6 p235-236 and p253.

Via www.mocavo.co.uk to Genealogies of an Aberdeen Family 1540-1913 p97.

Roll of the Indian Medical Service 1615-1930 compiled by Lt-Col D G Crawford. London: W Thacker and Co 1930; p133 and for Thomas Saumarez Lacy the same volume p684.

India Register 1849 2nd edition p197.

India Register 1851 2nd edition p74.

India Register 1854 2nd edition p173.

India Register 1857 p214.

India Register 1859 2nd edition p213.

India Army and Civil Service List. 1861 issue p221

India Army and Civil Service List 1862 p233g.

India Army and Civil Service List 1864 p233k.

India Army and Civil Service List July 1865 p62.

India Army and Civil Service List January 1870 p241.

India Army and Civil Service List July 1871 p63.

Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Sanitary State of the Army in India Volume 1 HMSO 1863.

Florence Nightingale on Social Change in India, part of The Collected Works of Florence Nightingale, edited by Lynn McDonald. Waterloo Ontario: Wilfred Laurier University Press 2001-12; 2007. Section on British Library additional Manuscripts 45752 f222, Notes on Sir Bartle Frere and Thomas Farquhar for John Sutherland, compiled by Nightingale around 27-28 August 1867.

Florence Nightingale and the Health of the Raj by Jharna Gourlay. Aldershot and Burlington Vermont: Ashgate 2003.

Dr Farquhar's Notes on Miss Nightingale's Questions Relative to Sanitation in Algeria and India.

36-page pamphlet published London India Office: 1872 with co-authors William Tilbury Fox and Thomas Farquhar: Scheme for Obtaining a Better Knowl of the Skin Diseases of India. There was also a revised edition, published London: 1877, now with co-authors W Tilbury Fox, Thomas Farquhar and Thomas Colcott Fox: Epitome of Skin Diseases with Formulae etc. And a 3rd edition, published London: H Renshaw 1883.

Via archive.org to Aberdeenshire Epitaphs and Inscriptions by John A Henderson FSA Scot. Printed by subscription in Aberdeen 1907; p15.

Via archive.org to Cartularium Ecclesiae Sancti Nicholai Aberdonensis which is a guidebook to St Nicholas Church Aberdeen; published 1888 by the Spalding Club.

Seen via genesunited, Aberdeen Evening Express 6 January 1891: an obituary of Thomas Farquhar.

British Medical Journal of 17 January 1891 p152 obituary of Thomas Farquhar.

Wikipedia on John Lawrence, first Baron Lawrence, more familiar as Sir John Lawrence.

Via google to Oxford Dictionary of National Biography online: John Laird Mair Lawrence.

JOHN CLEMENT LACY

The East and West: A Quarterly Review of the Study of Missions volume 3 number 11 1905. Published by Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, at 19 Delahay St Westminster. On pp357-8 a short review of A Brahman Convert: A Memoir of Dr Lacy of Agra, by (his son) Rev B J Lacy of Cawnpore.

William Farquhar's MOTHER CHARLOTTE FISHER

Hart's New Army List 1839 p124 Andrew S Fisher.

Familysearch Scotland-ODM GS film number 991250. Marriage of Andrew Sandilands Fisher to May (properly Mary) Ann DAVIDSON 26 October 1837.

Via genesunited to Aberdeen Journal of 11 July 1860: marriage notice of Charlotte's brother Charles Basil Fisher to Anne daughter of Thomas Hogarth Esq.

WILLIAM FARQUHAR'S CAREER IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1889 p423.

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1891 p436.

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1910 p487.

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1939 p435.

Wikipedia for Frederick Temple and Mandell Creighton.

Via www.newspapers.com to Guardian 20 May 1896 p6: recent ecclesiastical appointments.

St Stephen's Paddington 1886-90 see www.ststephenschurch.info.

St Philip's Buckingham Palace Road 1890-91; St Paul's Lisson Grove 1891-95: and St Marylebone parish church: see www.homepages.gold.ac.uk prepared by John Henley an expert on Middlesex parish records: a list of Anglican churches in Westminster and Middlesex covering 1890-1905.

See also for St Philip's church's later history: www.russianchurchlondon.org.

Belgravia and Knightsbridge Through Time by Brian Girling 2013 for pictures of Eaton Terrace in the late 19th century: it's a lot more down-market than you'd think!

The name of William's landlady: PO Directory 1891 street directory p314. Unfortunately, Mrs Kibblewhite wasn't at home on the day of the 1891 census; so I haven't been able to find out who William's fellow tenants were.

At booth.lse.ac.uk the Charles Booth online archive: B256 pp66-79 is record of an interview given by an employee at the Mission 16 March 1899; the Mission's offices were at 109 Eaton Terrace.

On Hanwell and St Mary's Hanwell: wikipedia.

And www.british-history.ac.uk with information from the Victoria County History project's A Hist of the County of Middlesex volume 3 published 1962; editor Susan Reynolds: 230-33.

JOINING THE GOLDEN DAWN

The Golden Dawn Scrapbook: The Rise and Fall of a Magical Order by R A Gilbert. York Beach Maine: Samuel Weiser Inc 1997 p23.

MARISCHAL COLLEGE AND THE NEW SPALDING CLUB

Via archive.org to University of Aberdeen Marischal College. Selections from the Records volume III which is an index to volume II; compiled James F K Johnstone. Published by the New Spalding Club Aberdeen 1898. On p6 in a list of the Club's members between 1894 and 1898.

Some information on Marischal College is at www.abdn.ac.uk.

The three Spalding Clubs: a short article on wikipedia.

There's a list of all three clubs' publications at www.royalhistoricalsociety.org/spaldingclub.pdf.

Via archive.org to Hectoris Boetii Murthlacensium at Aberdonensium Episcoporum Vitae Volume 12, a life of William Elphinstone, bishop of Aberdeen 1431 to 1514. Printed in Aberdeen by the New Spalding Club 1894. Author is James Moir. William Farquhar is in a list, probably of members of the Club but possibly of subscribers to the set of volumes as well.

Via www.mocavo.co.uk to Memoir of Thomas Thomson, Advocate p5 "List of Members" for 1903.

WILLIAM FARQUHAR'S WIFE JANE (JENNIE) LAYLAND

Via google to www.whistler.arts.gla.ac.uk University of Glasgow website for their Correspondence of James McNeill Whistler project. Letters from Thomas Layland are in the collection.

Francis Barratt, later Layland-Barratt: via www.mocavo.com to Armorial Families p810.

Marriage of William Farquhar and Jane Layland via newspaperarchive.com to The Standard of London, issue of 6 July 1894 p1 marriage announcements. And see also wikipedia.

Frances Layland-Barratt's publications. British Library catalogue has

- 1886 The Shadow of the Church (which is fiction)
- 1889 Doubts are Traitors: the Story of a Cornish Family
- 1892 Beatrix Cadell: An Episode in the Life of a Man of the World
- 1900 The Queen and the Magicians, and Other Stories
- 1914 Poems
- 1934 Ann Kembal. A Novel
- 1935 Lycanthia
- 1936 Joy Court. A Novel

There's a portrait of Frances see www.bbc.co.uk/arts/yourpaintings: done c 1900 by Valentine Cameron Prinsep and now at Torre Abbey Historic House and Gallery.

27 June 2014

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

http://pws.prserv.net/Roger\_Wright/

***

Louisa Florence ffoulkes (who was called Florence not Louisa) was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 20 March 1895. She chose the Latin motto 'In hoc signo vinces'. She was initiated into the GD's second, inner Order only 15 months later, in August 1896 - she had worked hard at the learning necessary to reach that higher level initiation.

Although Florence ffoulkes was born on South Island New Zealand, her roots were Welsh and English. Like several other GD members, she was involved in a web of family and business relationships stretching from Pembrokeshire to Liverpool and Manchester. She was distantly related to GD member Charles Chase Parr; and GD member Blanche Elliot was Florence's first cousin once removed (I think that's right): their grandmothers were sisters.

THE JEFFREYS FAMILY

Louisa Florence Jeffreys was the daughter of Charles Jeffreys and his wife Clara Ellen, née Parr. She was born probably in 1854, probably in Christchurch though I haven't been able to confirm the date or the place.

The work of Tee Corinne and Caroline Palmer and an online exchange of information between them has made this section really easy for me and I'm very grateful to them both. Artist and art historian Tee Corinne had compiled a book tracing the families of George Meares and Louisa Maria Jeffreys, who married in 1837. Caroline Palmer was researching the history of the gardens at Glandyfi House; you can see her results at www.parksandgardens.org. Both were using original documents now in the National Library of Wales.

People called Jeffreys were landowners in Denbighshire in the 17th century, but it's easier to begin my tale of the family with Florence's great-grandfather Edward, who lived in Shrewsbury in the early 18th-century. Edward worked as a lawyer, but made a comfortable fortune from investments in lead and silver mines in North Wales, enough to buy a small landed estate with mines on it, at Glandyfi on the Dyfi River. Edward's second grandson, George, inherited that land in 1811 when his elder brother died childless (dying childless is a recurring theme in this family history). George married Justina Scott, probably in 1814. Glandyfi Castle - not a medieval remnant but a gothic-revival style seven-bedroomed house with some unusual, octagonal rooms - was built as George and Justina's marital home. Justina was the adopted daughter of Edward Scott and his wife Louisa Maria widow of Count Louis de Saumaise. Louisa Maria had inherited her father Lewis Anwyl's estate at Bodtalog near Tywyn in Merioneth, and Justina had grown up there. The Scotts entertained a series of literary guests at Bodtalog including Thomas Love Peacock who began visiting them in 1810. Living in London after Louisa Maria's death in 1812, Edward Scott also came to know Shelley, Mary Godwin and John Stuart Mill. Justina inherited her adopted parents' interest in Welsh language and culture; in 1824 she bought an early volume on the history of Welsh poetry and the tradition of The Bard, which her grand-daughter Florence must have known about and probably inherited.

George and Justina had a large family including two sons, Edward (born 1818) and Charles Alured (born 1821). As Edward was going to inherit the estate, Charles was sent to train for a working life as a solicitor, articulated to Isaac Gilberts of Bala and Samuel Edwardes of Denbigh. When he qualified, in 1847, he also had an address in London. However, he doesn't seem to have spent many years in practise; probably because early in 1851 he married a woman from a wealthy family.

THE PARRS OF WARRINGTON

Members of the Parr family of Lancashire had been based in Liverpool as businessmen from early in the 18th century but their rise to wealth began in the 1780s when Joseph Parr, Thomas Lyon and Walter Kerfoot founded what was later known as Parr's Bank or the Warrington bank (now - as a result of many mergers - part of the Royal Bank of Scotland). Joseph Parr and Thomas Lyon were brothers-in-law and were already in business together in Warrington as sugar-boilers; but it was not long before the bank took over as their main source of income. Under the leadership of Joseph's son Thomas, the bank expanded steadily and began buying up other banks. In the wake of the early companies acts, Thomas Parr presided over the bank's conversion from a partnership to a limited company in 1865 and was elected the company's first chairman. He and his fellow partners were paid £100,000 each for the extinguishing of their partnership interest in the firm - in 1865 that really was serious money.

In the early 19th-century, Thomas Parr began to buy land around Warrington, concentrating on the village of Grappenhall. In 1830 he built a house there, Grappenhall Heyes; a project no doubt conceived as a statement in stone of the family's new wealth, but perhaps also as a distraction from his grief - in 1827 his wife Clare had died in childbirth, though her only child had survived.

Florence ffoulkes' mother Clara Ellen Parr was the child that survived. In 1833 her father married Alicia, daughter of Philip Charlton of Wytheford Hall in Shropshire. Thomas and Alicia had one daughter and several sons so that Clara Ellen grew up the slightly odd-one-out in a large family. She spent a lot of time with her aunt Eleanor - her mother's sister - who had married Richard Corbet of Adderley in Shropshire. Aunt Eleanor Corbet also had a large family including two daughters a few years younger than Clara Ellen: another Clara (born 1835); and Rachel Frances (born 1834) who in due course became the mother of GD member Blanche Elliot.

CHARLES AND CLARA ELLEN

I think Clara Ellen Parr and Charles Jeffreys married at Adderley. They may even have met there, through the Corbets. They began their married life in a house called Dyfi Bank, but also known as Voelas Hall, a rather mundane-sounding ex-mill or factory on the Glandyfi estate. They seem to have taken in some at least of the young children of Charles' elder sister Louisa Maria, whose husband George Meares had died in 1849. However, Charles and Clara Ellen decided not to stay in north Wales, they chose instead to emigrate to New Zealand's south island, to the brand-new colony of Canterbury. Land at Canterbury was being sold at £3 per acre to suitable middle-class applicants; and ships being organised for their trip to the colony; by the Canterbury Association, a joint enterprise between the New Zealand Company and the Church of England; though of course a colony of middle-class people could never have functioned without people who could build and maintain infrastructure like roads and houses for them, so assisted passages were also offered to suitably-skilled working people. Charles Jeffreys bought some land at Canterbury; my sources disagreed about how much but it was at least 100 acres; and one source said that Thomas Parr helped out by settling the Canterbury Association's bill, perhaps thinking of it as a good investment as well as a late addition to his daughter's marriage-portion.

I couldn't find out when Charles Jeffreys' purchased his plot; but I think the emigration plan was hastened if not begun by a tragedy typical of the time but no less sad for that: at the end of 1851 Clara Ellen gave birth to a daughter, Emily Clara; but the child died after only five months. Even decades later, Clara Ellen felt her loss acutely enough for her younger children to be very aware of what had happened. She even named her third daughter after the first one - Emily - which must have been a particularly difficult burden for Florence's younger sister to live with. Perhaps there was something in Clara Ellen's continuing grief which encompassed unacknowledged feelings about the death of her mother, whom she had never known. Like many people so bereaved in the 19th century, she became interested in spiritualism, in the hope of making contact with her own special dead.

Charles and Clara Jeffreys went to New Zealand on the Tasmania, the last-but-one boat chartered by the Canterbury Association before it was wound up in 1852. The crew mutinied while the ship was taking on fresh water at Madeira; perhaps Charles Jeffreys was one of the passengers who helped Captain McMillan put the mutiny down. The voyage continued without any further trouble and Charles and Clara Ellen disembarked finally at Lyttelton - the port of entry to the Canterbury colony - on 15 March 1853. It seems to have always been part of the plan for at least some of Louisa Meares' children to join them when they had got themselves settled in and found the money for their passages, and in due course at least two of Louisa Meares' sons went to New Zealand.

Charles and Clara Ellen's land was just outside the very newly-founded settlement of Christchurch. They named their acres Bryndwr Farm and gave the local landmarks Welsh names - it was a home-from-home on the other side of the world. They ran it as a sheep farm - very rapidly there were more sheep than people on the farmland of the Canterbury Plains.

A very important fact about the Canterbury Association and its colony in New Zealand was that it was the brainchild of people who were nearly all involved in some way in the Oxford Movement, the high church faction within the Church of England. I was not brought up as a Christian so I find doctrinal disputes within the Church of England rather arcane and baffling. See wikipedia for a short introduction to what the Oxford Movement wanted and how it acted. And thank heaven for an article by Rev Michael Blain on what the founders of the Canterbury Association had in common. The Rev Blain describes the typical member of the high church faction around 1850 as "conservative (nearly always), rural-based (usually)...unselfconsciously loyal to the teachings of the Book of Common Prayer". Many were from landed aristocracy and most of whom knew each other through Eton, Oxford University and politics both local and national. The majority of these well-connected men only lent their names to the Canterbury Association; they had no need to emigrate themselves. But their names were likely to, and intended to, attract the kind of emigrant who agreed with them on social and political as on religious issues: comfortably-off, unquestioningly devout, followers of high church practice (of which more in a minute) rather than the austere, bible-based though equally fervent people who were in the Church of England's Evangelical faction. Charles and Clara Ellen Jeffreys must have been members of the high church faction. These beliefs, shared with the majority of middle-class settlers in the colony, formed the basis for Florence's own beliefs, character and aspirations and remained with her most of her life.

Florence Jeffreys may have been born at Bryndwr Farm, and she certainly lived there until around 1870. But then she and her sister Emily (born in 1858) returned to England and they may never have gone back.

I find it a bit curious that Charles Jeffreys should choose to settle in New Zealand when, by the time he emigrated, it must have been fairly clear that he would inherit the estate at Glandyfi in the end. His elder brother Edward had married Jane Coram in 1841 but by 1851 they still hadn't had any children. Perhaps Charles wasn't prepared to wait - he might die first, after all - and after the death of her infant daughter, Clara Ellen wasn't prepared to stay. A new start seemed preferable, so they left. However, between 1853 and 1868, the situation changed, or rather, didn't change: Edward Jeffreys and Jane still didn't have children; and Charles and Clara Ellen had two daughters, Florence and Emily, but no sons. Early in 1868 George Jeffreys' death was imminent and he wrote a Will in which he acknowledged that he wasn't going to have any grandsons. I won't go into the details - Tee Corinne has put them on the web if you're interested in the legal aspects. I'll just say that George Jeffrey's heirs were (in order) his son Edward; then his son Charles; then Edward's daughters if he had any (which he didn't); and then Charles' daughters - Florence and her sister Emily. The complexities of the Will, and the fact that he was named as one of the trustees of its provisions, would probably have required Charles Jeffreys to return to England in any case. But by 1868 Florence and Emily were teenagers and decisions needed to be made about their futures. Perhaps it was just a question of education: Florence's religious education had been very well seen to; but Christchurch had no school even for boys until 1881, and I imagine governesses were in similarly short supply; so any further schooling Charles and Clara Ellen thought Florence and Emily should have, would have to be done elsewhere. Charles and Clara Ellen may also have decided that they did not want Florence and Emily to marry in New Zealand, now it was so likely they themselves would need to return to Wales and take up residence at Glandfyi when Edward died. Charles, Florence and Emily at least, and probably Clara Ellen as well, therefore returned to England in 1870. They may have been at sea on their way when Charles' mother Justina died in 1869. Charles and Clara Ellen did go back to Bryndwr Farm, for a few years; but Florence and Emily remained in England.

On the day of the 1871 census, Florence and Emily Jeffreys were at Victoria House Ladies' School at Leamington Spa. The school was run by Mrs Ann Gawthorpe, whose three daughters were amongst its pupils that day. There were three teachers, one born in Germany, one born in France, and one who taught music - giving a clear indication, I think, of where Charles and Clara Ellen thought their own daughters' education was lacking. The first girl on the list of pupils was Margaret Louisa Bradley. Florence later described Margaret (Daisy) as her "first-found friend" and dedicated two poems to her. Perhaps Mrs Gawthorpe's school was approved of by the Oxford Movement, because Margaret Bradley's family lived in the privileged group where the Church of England met Oxford University and the main boys' public schools. Margaret's father, Rev George Granville Bradley, had taught at Rugby School before moving on to be headmaster at Marlborough College. In 1871 he had just been elected Master of his old college University College Oxford. Florence and Margaret shared an interest in poetry - Margaret is better known as the writer and poet Margaret Woods - and for Florence it must have been a real thrill to read Tennyson with someone who knew him personally; and Matthew Arnold with someone whose father had been taught by Matthew's father Thomas. She might, though, have felt very much the country bumpkin when in the company of Margaret and of her family if she visited them.

I don't know where Florence and Emily Jeffreys spent the next decade. There was plenty of time for them to return to Bryndwr after Charles and Clara Ellen had decided that their education was complete. Charles had to make another trip to England in 1873 following the death of his sister Louisa Maria Meares; he returned in due course to New Zealand, and could have taken his daughters with him then. If they stayed in England, they had a rather limited choice of relations with whom to make their home. They will never have known three out of their four grandparents. They may have reached England in time to at least to meet Thomas Parr, but he died in 1870. From later information, I think Florence at least got to know her cousins the Corbets and the Bruces. However, I would suppose she and Emily spent most of their time with their uncle and aunt, Edward and Jane Jeffreys, and may have been with them at Glandfyi when Edward died there early in 1880, and their father inherited it.

HENRY FFOULKES

Charles and Clara Ellen Jeffreys are not on the 1881 census anywhere in the UK; I suppose that they were still on their way from New Zealand. Neither Florence nor Emily was at Glandyfi though Jane Jeffreys had left it and moved to Pembrokeshire by census day. Emily was at Plumpton Hall, Whepstead in Suffolk, visiting William R Bevan and his family: he had three daughters who were about Emily's age and were perhaps friends of hers. Florence was in London, at 245 Brompton Road in lodgings that seem rather temporary. Also living in lodgings in the Brompton area of west London on that day was Henry William Wynne ffoulkes, a student at the newly-founded Guildhall School of Music. I think that Florence and Henry were engaged by this time, and were waiting for Charles and Clara Ellen to arrive so that the legal preliminaries could be signed off and they could marry: they were married on 23 July that year at St Mary Abbott's Kensington.

The ffoulkes family owned Ereiffiad (Eriviat in English), an estate at Henllan, a few miles north-west of Denbigh. They could trace their ownership of Eriviat back at least to a John Wyn ap Fowk who began to use 'ffoulkes' as his surname in 1572, but I'll begin my account of them with Florence's husband's grandfather, John Powell ffoulkes, who married Caroline Mary Jocelyn. John and Caroline Mary had the usual large family, including four sons, three of whom were Henry Powell (born 1815), Edmund Salusbury (born 1819) and William Wynne (born 1831). In many ways, the ffoulkes's were like the Bradleys, although they were not so wealthy or so influential and consequently not quite so much at the privileged centre of things: John Powell ffoulkes' brother Rev Henry was a fellow and then Principal of Jesus College Oxford; and his sons Henry and Edmund were also clergymen, Henry becoming archdeacon of Montgomery and canon of St Asaph cathedral; and Edmund being another priest-academic and fellow of Jesus College. And when the Oxford Movement began, the ffoulkes's became high church; Edmund - a friend of John Henry Newman - even left the Church of England for Roman Catholicism, though he returned later.

It was through Henry Powell ffoulkes that Florence's husband was related to GD member Marian Charlotte Vibart, though it's possible that Florence's family had also known Marian's mother's family from way back. In 1861 Henry Powell ffoulkes had married Jane Margaret, daughter of Edward and Frances Lloyd of Rhagatt in Merionethshire. (This could be described as a marriage 'out': the Lloyds were in the opposing faction of the Church of England, the Evangelicals). Jane Margaret's sister Eliza had already married Meredith James Vibart. Marian Charlotte Vibart was their elder daughter.

Florence's husband was a son of the youngest of John Powell ffoulkes' sons, William Wynne ffoulkes, the one who didn't become either a clergyman and/or an academic. He practised as a barrister, working in the courts of Cheshire and living in Chester; though he was also known for his interest in archaeology and was a member of the Society of Antiquarians. He was married twice. His first wife was Elizabeth Benedicta, daughter of Rev Richard Coetmor Howard of Conwy. They married in 1854. Henry William Wynne ffoulkes was the elder of their two sons, born in 1855. However, Elizabeth Benedicta died a few days after giving birth to her second son, Piers, in March 1858. Both Henry and Florence therefore had a background which included the death of a mother as a result of childbirth; and children growing up with a step-mother and half-sisters and brothers. The background was more immediate in Henry's case than in Florence's; but I bet Florence's mother talked about it more.

Left a widower with two infant sons, William Wynne ffoulkes was quick to find another wife:

in 1859 he married Hester Mary Heywood. He went on to have two more sons and two daughters. Hester Mary was the daughter of yet another vicar. She had grown up in Devon, but her father's family were from Liverpool, where they owned the bank Arthur Heywood Sons and Co, an ancestor of Martin's Bank. The Heywoods were related by marriage to the Gladstones; and they were very wealthy indeed. However, very little of the wealth was passed over to Hester Mary, and Henry ffoulkes grew up in Chester in a family that was comfortably off but not rich.

As was typical of the time, Henry ffoulkes' education was dominated by family influence. He was sent to Denstone College (then known as St Chad's College), which been founded by a relation of Henry's step-mother - Sir Thomas Percival Heywood son of Benjamin, one of the partners in Arthur Heywood Sons and Co. The school took its first pupils in 1873. From it, Henry went to Trinity College Oxford, graduating in 1880. He will have been at school and then an undergraduate while his uncle Rev Edmund ffoulkes was taking the long walk back from Roman Catholicism to the Church of England; in 1878 Rev Edmund was rewarded for recanting by being appointed vicar of Oxford University's own church, St Mary the Virgin.

Henry's being a Guildhall School student in 1881 is a little puzzling. Perhaps he was thinking of pursuing a career in music; though I haven't found any information to suggest he was ever a professional musician. But if he was thinking of following other male members of his family into the Church of England on the high church end of its spectrum, some musical knowledge might have been helpful: the sung Eucharist service is a high church idea. He may just have wanted to study the subject for interest's sake and this brings me to the question of how he and Florence lived and what their sources of income were in the next few years. It was not until 1886 that Henry ffoulkes was ordained as a deacon, so he and Florence must have had income from sources other than the Church of England. Florence, at least, received income from the trust funds set up in grandfather George Jeffreys' Will; and after her parents took possession of Glandyfi they might have been able to give her a share of the income from the estate. I suppose Henry ffoulkes was not a pauper either: when he died his personal effects alone were worth £7000 in contemporary money-values so perhaps he too benefited from a trust fund income.

Henry ffoulkes' uncle (and probably god-parent) Canon Henry Powell ffoulkes had always taken a particular interest in him - he took charge of the marriage service when his nephew married, for example, although it was not held in his church. He must have been delighted with Henry ffoulkes' decision to become a clergyman, though he won't have been around to be present at Henry's ordination service - he had died the year before it took place. As for Florence - 'thrilled' is the word that comes to mind but I'm not sure that it quite covers the feelings she had, as shown in her poems. It was another 'given' of the high church position that the role of Church of England priest was a sacramental one; their ordination set those who chose that vocation apart from ordinary humanity. Florence's poems show her revelling in her husband's role and seeing it as lifting her onto another level as well as him, through the sacrament of marriage that had joined them together. There was a role for her, too, as the wife of a parish priest, and I think she needed this, to give her Christian belief a practical outlet, and possibly to help her fill the void where children should have been in her life: in a painful repeat of the fate of Edward and Jane Jeffreys, the years were going by and still she and Henry had no children.

1887 was such an important year for Florence. Her first volume of poetry was published -

Short Poems in Light and Shade - and was well-received, on the whole. And Henry ffoulkes was ordained as a priest by the Rev George Ridding, bishop of Southwell in Nottinghamshire, who had also helped find Henry his first long-term appointment, as curate of St Mary Nottingham. Henry and Florence had taken up their posts at St Mary in 1886 and they stayed there for five years. At some point in those five years Henry came to the attention of Henry R Markham Clifton of Clifton Hall, an estate on what was then the edge of the city of Nottingham. Markham Clifton was patron of the rectory of Clifton-with-Clapton, on the estate. In 1891 he offered Henry ffoulkes the job of rector there, which Henry accepted. Markham Clifton died in 1896 and the Clifton estate was inherited by a distant cousin, Sir Hervey Jukes Lloyd Bruce. Bruce had estates in Ireland and didn't live at Clifton a great deal. He seems to have been happy with the way Henry ffoulkes was doing things - the high church way - and Henry ffoulkes continued in post: so that Florence was living most of the year in Nottingham when she was a member of the Golden Dawn.

The income of Clifton rectory was a good one - £465 per year in 1904. Having income from other sources as well, and no children for whom to plan and save, Florence and Henry were comfortably off. At some point in her life before 1911, Florence went travelling to Muslim countries where Arabic was spoken. I'm hazarding a guess that the trip took place during the 1890s; and that she went to the Middle East rather than North Africa. Two such devout people would surely have wanted to see the places where the Christian story had taken place, and where various archaeological expeditions were digging to find the locations of some of the events mentioned in the Bible - the Palestine Exploration Fund had been set up (in 1865) for just this purpose. The trip had a considerable down-side: Florence was shocked by the cruelty to animals she saw on her travels, and later wrote a set of poems pleading with Muslims to treat their animals well. Her memories of the trip were not all negative, however: she wrote a poem commemorating a night spent under the desert stars, communing with her God. Florence also made at least one trip abroad without her husband, around the time of the 1891 census when she's not listed anywhere in the UK. On that day, Henry ffoulkes was paying a visit to his father William Wynne ffoulkes and his step-mother Hester Mary, at Old Northgate House Chester. Charles Jeffreys, Clara Ellen and Emily were at Glandyfi Castle. Perhaps Florence was travelling with her husband's relations, GD member Marian Vibart and her parents - they aren't on the 1891 census either.

FLORENCE, HENRY AND THE OCCULT

As early as 1882 - he had only just graduated - Henry ffoulkes became a freemason. He was initiated into the Oxford and Cambridge University craft Lodge number 1118. One later GD member (Robert Roy), and the husband of one (Rev Haweis, husband of Mary Eliza Haweis), were already members of this lodge. And in 1891 Hugh Elliot was initiated - perhaps recommended as suitable by Henry; Hugh Elliot would become a GD member and marry Florence's cousin Blanche Bruce. Lodge 1118's rules in its early years were that two-thirds of the members at any one time had to be Oxbridge graduates. The number of new recruits in any year was low and there was always the problem of members moving on as they left the UK to run the Empire. The lodge was not based in either Oxford or Cambridge, but in London at the Freemasons' Tavern.

There are other kinds of freemasonry, and both Henry ffoulkes and Hugh Elliot were initiated into the Ancient and Accepted Rite. Membership of the AAR is by invitation only and modern candidates are still expected to state their belief in Christianity, and the Trinity of Father, Son and Holy Ghost; that may have been its greatest appeal to Henry. The AAR's equivalent of a craft lodge is called a Rose Croix chapter. Henry ffoulkes was a member of Oxford University chapter number 40 by 1880; Hugh joined it a few years later, probably at Henry's recommendation. Oscar Wilde was also a member; his wife Constance joined the GD. After they left Oxford, Henry ffoulkes and Hugh Elliot joined the AAR's Oxford and Cambridge chapter 45; like the craft lodge with the same name, for the convenience of its members it met in London, in the AAR's masonic hall and offices at 33 Golden Square. Robert Roy was a member of this chapter, too. Henry ffoulkes was more committed to the AAR than to his craft lodge: in 1898 he reached the AAR's degree level 31°. There could only be 81 members at this level at any time; and initiation was quite expensive.

When Henry ffoulkes wanted to attend a lodge or chapter meeting, and especially when he served as Worshipful Master of Oxford and Cambridge University craft lodge 118 in 1894, he would have had to make regular trips to London. If Florence went up to London with him on these occasions she could have used the time to go to meetings of the Theosophical Society (TS), or the Golden Dawn. She might also have gone to meetings of the Society for Psychical Research: Florence was not a member herself, but her mother Clara Ellen had joined in 1884, very soon after it was founded.

I've said that 1887 was a high-point for Florence: a year to be proud of, on her own and her husband's behalf. However, it seems to have been followed almost at once by a period of doubt about her faith; about whether she was up to shouldering the burden of the priest's wife, of setting an example of Christian piety in the parish; and about the ability of the Church to address the practical problems (not the theological ones) of the age - which she will have seen daily in her visits to her husband's poor and sick parishioners. There may have been an element in this uncertainty about how to live with her continuing childlessness. (I am assuming that Florence would have wanted children.) Florence's high church upbringing would have taught her that it was the duty of a woman of sincere belief to submit to God's will, in the matter of childlessness as in others; I imagine that knowing that was so, didn't make the submission any easier for her.

In 1887 the TS's main journal, Lucifer published a letter by Florence which she had called "Let every man prove his own work" (sic). Although Florence was not at this time a TS member, she had obviously started to read some at least of theosophy's main texts and had begun to buy the magazine regularly. Lucifer's editors, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Mabel Collins, chose to print her letter as a contribution to the ongoing debate between theosophy on the one side, and the various factions calling themselves Christian (as the editors put it) on the other. Florence's letter (dated 25 October 1887) says that she had come to the conclusion that theosophy should seize the day and shine "a penetrating and illuminating ray of light upon the terribly harrowing and perplexing practical problems of our age". Florence was convinced that it was a peculiarly Christian duty to address these problems, but she felt that the Christian churches weren't trying hard enough: surely, she argued, a heaven-born religion, with all its learned believers, must be able to find solutions to those problems and "carry out the will of Christ in a Christian land". But as the Christian churches were failing in their duty, perhaps theosophy could do the job.

Florence's letter was followed by a long and detailed response on theosophy, altruism and human misery; uncredited but in that case probably by Blavatsky. Florence responded to the editor's comments, and in a second letter gave a more personal reason for her anxiety, declaring, "I desire very strongly to obtain conquest over self" but saying that theosophy seemed to be asking her to pay a dreadful price for it: to "sacrifice any iota of my belief in the power of Christ". And did the study of the occult require her to give up prayer?

This really is the nub: it's very obvious from Florence's poetry, how important prayer was to her; how often and how earnestly she prayed and how much comfort she derived from it. Regular prayer was woven into the pattern of her days. Prayer was, I think, more important to her than parish work, attendance at the services, taking holy communion... It was a private place - just her and God - where she could discuss all her uncertainties. Theosophy seemed to be demanding that she abandon that comfort - or what had been that comfort, but somehow was no longer, now she was having doubts.

Florence's letter, and Blavatsky's response, provoked so many replies that there wasn't room in subsequent issues to print all of them. Although the letters that were published warned Florence that any serious student of the occult must accustom themselves to solitude, their writers also (mostly) agreed that no, you didn't have to cut yourself off from Christ to involve yourself in the occult. Florence wasn't reassured though, quite the reverse: in February 1888 Lucifer published her poem Questions. In it she sees herself as "Two eyes" that are "looking and longing for light"; and a heart that is "breaking with pain and grief" as it tussles with temptation yet again and feels that it has been abandoned when it's in most need. At the high - or low - point of the poem she cries "Is our Great God, but a God of stone?" Florence had not cut herself off from God; He had cut himself off from her.

Had Florence discussed her troubles with Henry? She had the utmost respect, as well as the greatest love for him: he was her friend - they shared jokes; he took her seriously; he urged her on as a poet and many of the poems published in 1887 were dedicated to him. But after all, he was a paid representative of the God whom she was finding so indifferent and of the Church that she felt was slacking in its duties. What if she asked her husband for his priestly help in this crisis and only ended up undermining his belief as well as her own? It seems from her writings during this difficult period that Florence didn't confide in Henry as much as she would have liked to: she was "Weary and mournful, sad and alone" as she struggled.

Florence didn't have any further correspondence with Lucifer. Poems she published many years later indicate that she didn't completely abandon Christianity, and that she continued to find joy and comfort in the Church of England's sacraments. But she joined the TS in 1893 and remained a member until 1904; and she joined the GD (her husband didn't join either). Some of her later poems show her trying to weave together some theosophical ideas with some Christian views she held particularly dear, to make a synthesis that she could live with. Joining the Golden Dawn must have been a part of this process. She might actually have found the GD easier going than the TS: initiates into the GD were expected to believe in the One God, though there were no specific instructions on how they were supposed to go about it.

Florence recruited some new members to the TS, acting as their joint sponsor with Hugh Elliot. John Valentine Lacy (1894, a friend of the Vibart family) and Ida Bennett (1896), went on to join the GD as well. In 1894 Florence and Hugh were also joint sponsors to Augusta Brooke Meares. Augusta was the wife of Florence's cousin George Brooke Meares (eldest son of Louisa Maria Meares née Jeffreys). Later, because of a big drop in members, only one sponsor was needed by the TS so Florence was sole sponsor of Blanche Viola Laing, the wife of George Dawson Laing who ran a wine and spirit merchants based in Nottingham. Neither Augusta nor Blanche Viola went on to join the GD.

During the 1890s Florence's life followed a pattern. The continuing struggle with her beliefs.

Parish duties. Poetry. Study of theosophy and texts set by the GD. Discussions on theosophy with Nottinghamshire-based friends like Blanche Viola Laing and possibly Augusta Mary Salmond. Travel. Visits to friends and relatives. Getting away to London sometimes and attending GD rituals and TS meetings. There were some inevitable low points: Henry's step-mother Hester Mary died in 1895. And some high points: fellow GD members Florence's cousin Blanche Bruce and Florence's TS friend Hugh Elliot were married in January 1896. And in July 1899, Henry officiated at the marriage of his brother Piers to Katharine Mary Baker.

Piers ffoulkes had taken much less time than Henry to make up his mind to become a Church of England clergyman. He'd probably decided by the time he went to university because he went to Keble College Oxford, which had been founded to commemorate John Keble whose 1833 sermon started the Oxford Movement. After spending time as a curate in Durham and Jarrow, Piers had been appointed rector of All Saints Odd Rode, in Cheshire just north of Kidsgrove. Katharine Mary was the daughter of one of Piers' wealthiest parishioners, George Barrington Baker of Rode Hall (who in 1900 added his wife's surname to his own, to become Baker-Wilbraham). Florence might have been rather envious of her sister-in-law's religious certainties: Katharine Mary's unstinting work as a parish priest's wife gained her quite a reputation in the diocese of Chester and she never seems to have suffered from doubt. However, Florence and Katharine Mary did have something in common: Katharine Mary and Piers, too, had no children.

On the day of the 1901 census Florence and Henry ffoulkes were out of the country. So too were Clara Ellen and Emily, perhaps travelling with them; though Charles Jeffreys was at Glandyfi.

Henry ffoulkes' father William Wynne ffoulkes died in January 1903. And just over a year later, on 28 January 1904, Henry ffoulkes died. He, and presumably Florence as well, were on a visit to Piers and Katharine Mary at Odd Rode at the time; and Henry was buried there a few days later. Was the death sudden? You would think so, with a man aged only 49. However, he might have been ill for a while: I noticed that William Wynne ffoulkes had named his sons Piers and John as his executors, not Henry, as if Henry might not be up to the many tasks and travel involved; though there may have been other reasons for his being left out, of course.

If ever a few weeks were going to test Florence's faith to its furthest limits, it was the following few. She didn't have any time at all to take in the loss of her husband, before Charles Jeffreys died, at Glandyfi, on 19 February. She might have been expecting him to die soon - he was 82 - but his death did more than deprive her of her father, it brought into sharp focus decisions that she and her sister would have to make about the future - decisions I'm sure she would rather have made with Henry to advise her. Charles Jeffreys had named Clara Ellen as sole executor of his Will; but it would have to be Florence and Emily who had to decide about the estates he had owned at Glandyfi and (still, apparently) at Bryndwr, Christchurch, which were now theirs. Were they going to keep them? And try and run them? Or should they sell, and face the clearing of the house and the moving of their mother (nearly 80 herself) to a home somewhere else?

Florence and Emily took two years to make their decision, which was to sell the land they had inherited. Women of their class weren't trained for estate management; and times for land-owners were beginning to be rather hard (they would get much worse after 1911).

.Florence would have had to move anyway, when her husband's successor at Clifton rectory took up his post. And the money from the sale of the estates could be invested in shares and government stocks to provide an income for them and Clara Ellen without so much hard work on any of their part. The land was sold, divided into lots, during 1906.

Emily Jeffreys - the daughter named after a dead child - had never married and had always lived with her parents. She and Clara Ellen moved to south Ascot, to a house named Loretto; near to London but not in the big (and dirty) city. They had certainly moved in by 1911 and probably did so in 1906. Florence chose not to move in with them but leased her own house an easy trip away, in London, at 4 Nevern Square near Earl's Court station.

This time of loss and grief and life-changing decisions easily explains why Florence did not keep up her membership of the TS after 1904. She had taken no part in the arguments that had caused the evolution of the GD into two daughter orders over 1900-03, and she did not join either A E Waite's Independent Rite or Robert Felkin's Stella Matutina when they were formed in 1903. It's possible she joined Stella Matutina later, however: Blanche and Hugh Elliot, Blanche's sister Lucy Margaret Corbet and Blanche's cousin Henry Archer Corbet were all members of SM.

I think that in 1904 Florence turned to Hugh Elliot for the help that she could not have from Henry ffoulkes. Henry's brother Rev Piers was Henry's executor, but I think Florence didn't know him as well as Hugh. Hugh was a barrister but Florence probably didn't need legal advice so much as someone to discuss the wider implications of the decisions she and her sister would have to make. From this time on, Hugh was her legal advisor and she made him one of the trustees of the fund set up to give her an income; and one of the executors of her Will. Piers ffoulkes and Katharine Mary were only her in-laws; Blanche and Hugh were her relations and friends. On the day of the 1911 census, Florence was living for a while with her mother and sister; she had let 4 Nevern Square to Henry Archer Corbet and his family.

Life wasn't completely grim for Florence during the period 1904 to 1906. In January 1905 she applied for a patent! - for a device that would make some kind of improvement to women's hats. The fashion was for particularly heavy, large and exuberantly decorated hats at that time; perhaps she'd invented something to help relieve the pressure on the wearer's neck. I couldn't find an illustration of the device she had invented without buying a rather expensive copy of the HMSO patent office issue for that year. She did not gain herself a new income: her application seems to have been rejected.

It might have been as a result of Florence's decision to set up home in London that she came to the notice of one of Queen Victoria's distant, impoverished relations, the Princess of Hanover, who lived in England as an exile. It's not clear from the evidence I've seen whether Florence actually met the Princess - who by the 1900s was spending winters abroad - but the Princess read some of Florence's poems, and either wrote to her or spoke to her about how much she liked them. Florence and the Princess did have some things in common despite their very different social status: the Princess was childless - her only child had died aged only a few days - and she was actively concerned in fighting cruelty to animals as a patron of the RSPCA. Perhaps it was through encouragement from the Princess that Florence decided to write some poems addressed to Muslims, about the treatment of animals that Florence had witnessed in Muslim countries. Florence's volume To the Arabs: Allah's Message was published in 1911 and apparently it had an endorsement of some sort by the Princess. Florence had put a great deal of thought and work into the project, aside from writing the poems: she seems to have studied the Koran to understand its teaching on the subject; and she'd had her poems translated into Arabic. But what puzzles me is - who was the reader the volume was addressed to? Perhaps there was a group of people intending to distribute it in Muslim countries. I haven't been able to find a copy of Poems to the Arabs - I only learned of its existence because it was advertised in Florence's next book of poems.

In 1912, Florence published a larger and more orthodox book of poetry, her Poems of Life and Form. The book got rather a savaging from a young Australian poet in The Poetry Review: beneath his snide comments there was a relevant criticism - he thought the poetic forms Florence was using were outdated. Some work by the up-and-coming Rupert Brooke was printed in the same volume. I found the contrast between Brooke's work and Florence's uncomfortable, being used to modernist poetry; I was almost inclined to agree with the reviewer.

It's impossible not to be hurt by negative reviews and if Florence learned about what had been said of her work in The Poetry Review I imagined the cut it made was deep. She published only one more small poetry volume, all sonnets, and all for a charitable purpose: The Living Way was printed in 1918 to raise money for the Sacramental Society of Inner Light, an organisation which brought together the blind and the sighted. I suppose she must have been a member of the Society; but I haven't been able to find any information about it at all. I imagine its members must have studied or tried to live up to the (high-church) sacraments, because Florence writes one poem about each of them. Her tone is both reverential and celebratory; which suggests to me that the poems might have been written as early as the 1870s, before Florence's crisis of belief began; or that they were very recent restatement of her belief in Christianity.

The house at Nevern Square was Florence's home until her death but she may have taken refuge in Ascot during the first World War to avoid the bombing. There were other reasons for spending time there too: Clara Ellen Jeffreys was in her 80s, and she died in 1915. Although Florence and Clara Ellen had lived apart for so long, they were always close: several of Florence's poems are dedicated to her and others reflect events in Clara Ellen's life, including the death of her infant daughter. Emily was Clara Ellen's executor, probably because Clara Ellen had left her the house called Loretto. Emily lived there until her own death only five years later and in the same year (1920) Florence's TS friend Blanche Viola Laing also died.

On Clara Ellen's death, Florence had chosen not to live with her sister. I don't think they were close and Florence's closest friends were still in London so she returned to 4 Nevern Square.

At the beginning of the 1920s Piers Ffoulkes became ill and had to retire from his post as rector of Odd Rode. He and his wife moved to the Deanery Cottage in Chester, where Katharine Mary nursed him until he died in 1927. Katharine Mary became a very active figure in the charitable efforts of the diocese of Chester. And illustrating the difference in expectation between a woman born around 1854 (Florence) and one born in 1871 (Katharine Mary) she also gained a qualification by study and exam - the Lambeth Diploma, which enabled her to teach theology. She encouraged like-minded women to move into Deanery Cottage until she had gathered around her a group of women who wanted to share an almost convent-like life of prayer and contemplation. Florence didn't join this group. She no longer had Katharine Mary's single-minded religious devotion. She also had other ways of reaching God.

Florence died on 20 July 1936 at 4 Nevern Square, aged 82. Her friends, GD members Blanche and Hugh Elliot both survived her.

I'll leave Florence ffoulkes in the desert, sensing that divinity is all around her: the poem is 'Silence. Night in the Desert', published as part of her collection Poems of Life and Form in 1912. The capitals are hers.

Alone! Alone! And not the faintest sound
Breaks the sweet slumber of the silent night;
Alone! And in the fervent, calm moonlight
I stand, and gaze upon the scene around.
The rock beneath my feet is desert bound,
The stars, in myriads, glistening in the height
Lend their sweet touch to the supreme delight
My Being claims with Nature, silence crowned.

Alone I dream! Till sense with wings is fraught,
I learn that in the past, ere Sunlight shone,
Or WORD was uttered by th'Eternal ONE,
E'en then, beyond the pale of backward thought,
In silent stillness of All-Conscious Rest,
Mused the Omniscient GOD - Unmanifest.

If you want to read more about Florence as a poet, follow this link.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR LOUISA FLORENCE FFOULKES

THE JEFFREYS OF GLANDYFI, Florence's father's family

Glandyfi Castle and the estate, after Florence:

Birmingham Post 20 April 2007 when Glandyfi Castle last sold. There's a left-over mining village in the grounds; croquet lawn; tennis courts; and woodland incl a lot of interesting trees eg Wellingtonia. Article says Charles Jeffreys had a house blt f himself in NZ during 1870s but returned to Engl on inheriting Glandyfi in 1880.

At www.telegraph.co.uk of 3 July 2011 had an article on Glandyfi Castle wh is up f sale again, incl its contents. The Jeffreys family sold the estate in 1906.

At www.thefreelibrary.com, article posted 2012 about the opening of Glandyfi Castle as a luxury guest-house.

Caroline Palmer's garden research is at www.parksandgardens.org Record ID 4311 and includes some family history. In 1906 the estate was sold in lots. The castle and 370 acres were bt by Lewis Pugh Evans Pugh. He then sold the castle and 43 acres to Maj Robert Spurrell but contd to live at Glandyfi Castle.

EDWARD JEFFREYS founder of the family fortunes:

Carmarthenshire and Ceredigion by Thomas Lloyd, Julian Orbach and Robert Scourfield. New Haven Connecticut and London: Yale University Press 2006: p471-72.

Shropshire Archives have the wills of Edward Jeffrey dated 4 July 1795; and of his son Robert Jeffrey dated 18 February 1801. Robert's Will sets up a trust for his eldest son Edward Jeffrey and his heirs. Robert's other children were: George; William; Richard; Sarah; and Elizabeth.

GEORGE AND JUSTINA JEFFREYS

Justina's adopted parents, Edward and Louisa Maria Scott:

At welshjournals.llgc.org.uk an article on Edward Scott and his literary circle.

The Letters of Thomas Love Peacock 1828-66 by Thomas Love Peacock and Nicholas A Joukovsky. There are actually two volumes of letters; 1828-66 is volume two. Oxford: Clarendon Press 2001 p471.

Keats-Shelley Memorial Bulletin issue 36 1985 pix, p47.

Welsh Minstrelsy by Thomas J L Prichard, published 1824. On p319 list of subscribers to this publication included Mrs Jeffreys of Glandyfi.

Tee Corinne's postings on the family of George and Justina Jeffreys are at: genforum.genealogy.com/jeffreys/messages/447/html beginning with one by Tee Corinne from October 2003. The postings include the full text of the Will of George Jeffreys, which was signed on 10 February 1868. Without this posting I would not have realised that - in due course - Florence and her sister Emily Jeffreys inherited Glandyfi Castle. Caroline Palmer's contribution to the exchange was more information on Justina Scott including her correct surname. Tee Corinne is the author of this family history book: Ancestors and Descendants of George Meares and Louisa Maria Jeffreys: Wales, New Zealand, India and Florida. Published Wolf Creek/Pearlchild 1997. I saw its publication details on the web, but haven't been able to see inside a copy. The British Library doesn't have a copy of the work but gives Tee Corinne's dates as 1943-2006; I presume she was a descendant of George and Louisa Maria Meares herself.

Details of where George and Justina Jeffreys are buried are at lineone.net/~dyfival1/histegfurn/htm, which is a history of the Glandyfi valley.

EDWARD JEFFREYS, CHARLES' ELDER BROTHER

Gentleman's Magazine volume 170 1841 p313 a list of recent marriages.

Handbook for Travellers in North Wales published by John Murray 1868. On p171 Glandyfi Castle is now described as the seat of E Jeffreys esq.

CHARLES JEFFREYS

The Legal Observer... volume 33 1847 p519.

The Law Times volume 9 1847 p44, p157.

Law List for 1847 and 1858: he isn't listed in either of them.

The house called Dyfi Bank or Voelas Hall: see lineone.net/~dyfival1/histhouses.htm

THE PARRS OF WARRINGTON, Florence's mother's family

Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry 1852 edition, volume 2 p1005 traces the descent of Florence's mother from a late 17th-century John Parr who married a daughter of Roger Hesketh of North Meols. GD member Charles Chase Parr was also descended from this John Parr. Clara Ellen's father was Thomas Parr born 1792; and his first wife Clare Ellen, daughter of Rev Croxton Johnson of Wilmslow. Thomas and Clare married in 1825. Clare died in childbirth in 1827 but the child survived. In 1833 Thomas married Alicia, daughter of Philip Charlton of Wytheford Hall Shropshire.

The GD's Blanche Elliot, wife of Hugh Elliot, is a grand-daughter of Clare Ellen Johnson's sister Eleanor who married Richard Corbet of Adderley in Shropshire.

Parr's Bank, also known as The Warrington Bank.

The bank has now been swallowed via NatWest by RBS and the bank's archives including Parr family papers from the 18th and 19th centuries, are at the RBS Group headquarters in Edinburgh. At heritagearchives.rbs.com there is a summary of the history of Parr's Bank Ltd. : Parr archive held at RBS. Two books were quoted as additional sources: 200 Years in Warrington 1788-1988, a private publication by Nat West Bank in 1988; and The Westminster Bank Through a Century by T E Gregory, published by the Westminster Bank 1936. Warrington Library has Parr family records 1600-1900 and Lyon family records 1566-1860.

Via web to www.thornber.net/cheshire/htmlfiles/grappen.html the website of Craig Thornber who is a descendant of Eliza Stott. Stott appears on the 1881 census working at Grappenhall Heyes as a nurserymaid to the family of Florence's half-first-cousin, Joseph Charlton Parr.

For more information on land owned by the Parr family, go via nationalarchives.org to a list of documents now at the Cheshire and Chester Archives.

Grappenhall Heyes house at Warrington, built by Thomas Parr:

See Cheshire and Chester Archives.

And www.ghwalledgarden.org.uk.

The Parrs and the bank after Thomas Parr:

See Craig Thornber's website; he uses Burke's Landed Gentry 1894 edition.

Cheshire at the Opening of the 20th century by Robert Head. Pike's New Century Series published Brighton 1904 by W T Pike and Co.

And wikipedia for its merger in 1918 with the ancestor of NatWest.

CHARLES AND CLARA AND THE MEARES FAMILY IN NEW ZEALAND

Annual Report of the National Library of Wales 1961 In January 2004

Posting by Tee Corinne at archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com/th/read/MCMURDO/2004\_01/1073337809.

A posting in response was sent by Nigel Callahan December 2004 gives information that Charles Jeffreys was in the UK in 1870: see his website at www.llangynfelyn.org, it's a history of the parish.

See wikipedia for an introduction to the Canterbury Association.

Rev Michael Blain's article is at anglicanhistory.org/NZ/blain\_canterbury2007.pdf: The Canterbury Association (1848-1852): A Study of its Members' Connections: pp1-8.

Lists of the middle-class passengers on the Canterbury Association's ships to New Zealand can be found at freepages.genealogy.rootsweb.ancestry.com/~nzbound/cbyassoc.htm.

On Bryndwr Farm: Place Names of New Zealand by Alexander Wyclif Reed 1975: p56.

For the subsequent history of Bryndwr Farm see //christchurchcitylibraries.com.

Indirect evidence that Charles Jeffreys still owned Bryndwr Farm in 1904:

Bye-Gones Relating to Wales and the Border Counties volume for 1903-04: p301 issue of 2 March 1904.

THE WYNNE FFOULKES FAMILY - Florence's husband

At histfam.familysearch.org, family history information from volumes 4 and p381 of volume 5 of Jacob Lloyd's 6-volume (1881-87) History of the Princes, the Lords Marcher and the Ancient Nobility of Powys Fadog.

The house Eriviat - Ereiffiad in Welsh - still exists, see www.eriviathall.co.uk

JOHN POWELL FFOULKES, Henry's grandfather

Medieval History of Denbighshire by John Williams of Wrexham published 1860: p213.

HENRY POWELL FFOULKES, Henry's uncle; and the connection through LLOYD to GD MEMBER MARIAN CHARLOTTE VIBART

Crockford's Clerical Dir 1882 p369.

Gentleman's Magazine volume 211 1861 issue of November [1861] p558 marriage of Henry Powell ffoulkes to Jane Margaret Lloyd.

Information on the descendants of James Meredith Vibart 1753-1827 can be seen at //archives.rootsweb.ancestry.com

For more on the Lloyd family see Frances Power Cobbe: Victorian Feminist, Journalist, Reformer by Sally Mitchell. Charlottesville and London: University of Virginia Press 2004. Jane Margaret's sister Mary lived with Frances Power Cobbe.

EDMUND SALUSBURY FFOULKES, another uncle of Henry ffoulkes

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1882 p369 with a gap between 1849 and 1876.

ODNB volume 19 p459 has an entry for Edmund's son Charles John ffoulkes 1868-1947 which gives information about his father.

One of Edmund's sons eventually inherits Eriviat: The County Families of the UK better known as Walford's County Families. Published annually; this is the 60th edition 1920; volume 1 p476.

WILLIAM WYNNE FFOULKES Henry's father

Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries London issue of 1856 p24 as one of the two local secretaries for Cheshire.

Death of Henry's mother:

Solicitors' Journal and Reporter issue of 10 April 1858, birth announcements: on 22 March [1858] to wife of William Wynne ffoulkes, a son, at Stanley Place Chester.

Gentleman's Magazine and Historical Chronicle issue of 1858; death notices p566: in list of deaths on 28 March [1858], Elizabeth wife of William Wynne ffoulkes, at Stanley Place Chester.

His father's second marriage:

Gentleman's Magazine and Historical Review volume 7 p418.

Connections between Hester Mary Heywood and the Gladstones, through Hester Mary's aunt Anna Maria Heywood:

Via www.lan-opc.org.uk the Lancashire Online Parish records project: marriages at St George Derby Sq Liverpool 1813-65: p72 and p73.

Anna Maria Heywood's husband: at www.martinsbank.co.uk a page originally published in the Martin's Bank Magazine winter 1948 about the early days of Arthur Heywood Sons and co.

1881 census: William Wynne ffoulkes and wife Hester Mary were staying at Anna Maria Heywood's house just outside Liverpool.

FLORENCE'S HUSBAND HENRY WILLIAM WYNNE FFOULKES

Their marriage:

The Denstonian 1881 is the magazine of (Denstone College) St Chad's College. On p78 issue of 23 July [1881]: marriage announcement, Henry ffoulkes to Florence Jeffreys. There was also an announcement in the Times of 23 July 1881.

Henry ffoulkes in the Church of England:

Crockford's Clerical Directory issues of 1888, 1895, 1902, 1904.

Patronage of the rectory at Clifton: see www.nottingham.ac.uk account of the descent of the estate at Clifton; and information on Sir Hervey Jukes Lloyd Bruce.

HENRY'S BROTHER PIERS FFOULKES

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1902 p462.

Odd Rode village website at www.oddrode.net.

At www.rodehall.co.uk/history: some information on the Rode Hall estate and the Wilbraham family.

Via www.newspapers.com to the Guardian of 2 August 1899 p10 marriage announcement Katharine Mary Baker to Piers ffoulkes.

Katharine Mary Baker:

See www.thepeerage.com which uses information from Burke's Peerage 107th ed.

Supplement to the Edinburgh Gazette issued 1 April 1920 p966.

The Official Year-Book of the National Assembly of the Church of England 1933 issue p76.

Times 27 March 1937; 29 March 1937.

Times 27 March 1937 and 29 March 1937.

HENRY AND FLORENCE IN THE OCCULT

Henry and craft freemasonry:

The History of Oxford and Cambridge University Lodge number 1118 1866-1966 by E W R Peterson MA. Pp31-39, pp40-49.

Oxford and Cambridge Lodge 1118 and Royal Arch Chapter: Notes from the Minute Books compiled by Horace Nelson. No publication details but [p5] in his Preface Nelson explains that this book is a development of the history compiled for the Jubilee years of the lodge (1918) and of its chapter in 1924. Preface [p6] dated 31 December 1925: pp14-20; pp25-26.

Ancient and Accepted Rite:

For the entrance requirements: Beyond the Craft by Keith B Jackson. Original edition 1980. I used the 6th edition, 2012, to which Jackson has added details of several orders left out of the 1st edition. Hersham Surrey: Lewis Masonic, an imprint of Ian Allan Publishing Ltd. See www.lewismasonic.co.uk

Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Degrees from the 4° to 32° Inclusive under the Supreme Council 33° of the Ancient and Accepted Rite [in the British Empire etc etc]; plus a List of Members. I looked at the issues of 1880, 1885, 1888 and 1900.

Issue of 1880 p40; p113 to confirm Hugh Elliot was not yet a member.

Issue of 1885 pp80-81, pp127-128.

Issue of 1888 p47, p50, p57, p84.

Issue of 1900 p219 both Henry ffoulkes and Hugh Elliot are still members of Oxford and University chapter 45.

Via google to cat.llgc.org.uk National Library of Wales catalogue. The NLW has documents on the ffoulkes family and the estate at Eriviat. Catalogue number NLW MS11983C is press cuttings covering 1834-1904 including one listing the hymns sung at the burial of Henry Wynne ffoulkes at Odd Rode in 1904.

For more on Mary Augusta Salmond see Florence's poetry file.

FLORENCE AND THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register September 1891-January 1893 p219 entry f L Florence ffoulkes. Subscriptions paid 1893-1904.

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 for Florence as a sponsor of new members; always with Hugh Elliot as co-sponsor except p124 Blanche Viola Laing.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine published London: George Redway of York St Covent Garden. Volume I September 1887-February 1888 edited jointly by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Mabel Collins. Volume 1: pp159-160 and pp162-69; pp226; pp228-29; p326; p328; p485.

BLANCHE VIOLA LAING née Wadmore

Her husband's business: census information and London Gazette 11 February 1879 p 689 notice announcing the ending of part'p of George Dawson Laing and John Lysander Laing; trading in Walsall as Laing Brothers, wine and spirit merchants.

On the Wadmores: www.theweald.org and The Wadmores of London by Blanche Viola's son

John G Laing, published 1953.

John G Laing inherited paintings from Blanche Viola's father:

At www.bonhams.com items in Marine Sale 2012 include A Margate Hoy off Grays Essex by John Cleveley the 2nd (1747-86). Provenance includes James Wadmore of London and John Grosvenor Laing of Nottingham.

Richard Parkes Bonington: Young and Romantic catalogue of an exhibition at Nottingham Castle 2002: p32 access number NCM-1962-142.

Blanche Viola's brother-in-law John Lysander Laing emigrated to New Zealand and died there: via paperspast.natlib.govt.nz to the New Zealand Herald 5 October 1918 p1 and 7 October 1918 p10.

CLARA ELLEN AND THE OCCULT

Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research London: Trübner and Co of Ludgate Hill: p317, p327. Volume II 1884, Volume XI 1895 p614 and Volume XV 1900-01 p497 all show Mrs Jeffreys still as a full member at the Glandyfi Castle address.

FLORENCE'S PATENT:

In October 2013 Amazon and quite a few other book-selling websites had copies of the patent application by L F Wynne-ffoulkes (she didn't usually hyphenate the ffoulkes' surnames); application number 18568 published HMSO 1 January 1905. The application was for improvements in ladies' hats. Searching the web for lists of current patents issued by the UK patent office, I couldn't find a patent with Florence's name on it.

--

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

GD MEMBER FLORENCE WYNNE FFOULKES AS POET AND LYRICIST

Florence ffoulkes, Stanley Jast and Aleister Crowley were the GD members who wrote most poetry. Of those three, only Florence ffoulkes and Crowley had volumes of poetry published during their lifetime.

I do not 'get' poetry. Consequently, so as not to expose my ignorance and do Florence ffoulkes less than justice, I shall not do a 'lit crit' of the poems she wrote. Instead I shall talk a bit about the influences on her poetry; the kind of poems she wrote; and the other women poets she knew. I'll start, though, by saying that Florence's poetry has been almost completely forgotten since her death. She doesn't come off well in Catherine Reilly's Late Victorian Poetry 1880-99 because she had only published the one volume by 1899; Reilly's researchers also got some of the biographical details wrong. But she's also not included in volume 240 of the Dictionary of Literary Biography (2001) which was dedicated to Late 19th and Early 20th Century British Women Poets and rescued quite a few other writers from oblivion. It's a pity.

Perhaps I should say here that Florence didn't put dates on any of the poems she published.

SHORT POEMS IN SUNLIGHT AND SHADE

This volume was published in 1887, when Florence was in her early 30s, though it may contain poems that had been written many years before. Unlike in Florence's later books, in this early work some of the poems are dedicated to particular people though only by initials so I haven't been able to identify all the people referred to; and there are quotes above a lot of the poems from a variety of sources of inspiration, giving some clues as to the poets Florence admired and other works that inspired her to write. From some of the dedications, I cautiously deduce that Florence may have begun writing poetry while at school in the early 1870s, under the influence of a fellow-pupil who became a much better-known author than Florence: Florence's "first-found friend" Margaret Louisa Bradley, known as a writer by her married name of Woods.

Tennyson brought Florence and Margaret together. There are quotes from several of his works above poems in Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade and Florence's title for one poem, Past and Present, is a quote in itself, from Tennyson's The Miller's Daughter. Idylls of the King (The Last Tournament) and Nothing Will Die are quoted by Florence. However, the work that influenced her most was In Memoriam, a series of verses written while Tennyson was struggling to recover from the death of his friend Arthur Hallam; one of the poems in Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade is even called In Memoriam.

Surely it is not at all surprising that friends at a girls' school in 1870s England should read Tennyson. It would be more surprising if would-be poets had not read his works. However, Margaret Bradley's family knew Tennyson personally. Perhaps Florence even met Tennyson through Margaret's family, if she went to stay with the Bradleys during the holidays - holidays the Bradleys often spent on the Isle of Wight, where Tennyson lived.

To judge by the number of quotes from Tennyson above Florence's own poems, he was Florence's favourite. However, several other poets are quoted by Florence above her own poems. A very religious girl from a high church background, Florence also read the works of the 17th century poet George Herbert. A quote from Herbert's The Church Porch is above Florence's poem Heart Strife. The title of Florence's poem The Desire of the Moth for the Star is another quote, this time from Shelley's To----. To---- is a second title that Florence bestowed on a poem of her own in conscious homage to a great poet. Florence's To---- has above it a quote from Wordsworth's Ode - Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood. And though there must be many poems called 'spring', Florence's own poem Spring quotes Christina Rossetti's poem of that name.

Tennyson. Shelley. Wordsworth. Christina Rossetti. All poets still widely appreciated today. Florence's poems, however, also quote from poems by two men and one woman whose poetry has suffered quite as much as Florence's own since their deaths:

Hamilton Drummond, whose Sir Hildebrand and Other Poems was published in 1882;

Louisa Sarah Bevington, of whom more below; and Frederic Myers, whose long poem St Paul was enormously popular during the 19th century but is completely unknown now. Frederick Myers became a convinced spiritualist, although not an uncritical one - he was one of the founders of the Society for Psychical Research. Florence was not a member of the SPR but her mother was. Myers' book Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death was published in 1903 and Florence definitely read it; a quote from it is above one of her later published poems.

Although extracts from poems she admired feature most in Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade, Florence also chose quotes from a wide range of other works including Jessie Fothergill's novel First Violin; Deuteronomy chapter 4 verse 29 in which Moses urges the Israelites to keep the Commandments even after he's no longer there to check; the translation by Walter Herries Pollock of the French writer Musset's Nuits; the Life of George Eliot; and an issue of the Proceedings of the Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society.

Florence's friend Margaret Bradley didn't need encouragement to start composing her own poems: biographies of her suggest that she always intended to be a writer. However, Florence probably did need encouragement. I was going to suggest that the example of Christina Rossetti may have inspired her; but it might equally well have deterred her. Florence's husband, Rev Henry Wynne ffoulkes, was her most important supporter in her poetry writing: two poems in Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade are dedicated to him and he seems to have been the inspiration behind the basic idea of Florence's Poems of Life and Form. That might mean that Florence didn't start writing poetry on a regular basis until after she and Henry were married, in 1881. Florence's mother, Clara Jeffreys, also urged her on. Florence's A New Year's Wish was dedicated to her and the saddest poem in this early volume, the one called In Memoriam, is words of spiritual comfort for a woman whose infant child has died - as Clara Jeffreys' eldest daughter had done, aged five months.

The theme of poems dedicated to particular people runs through Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade and some of the dedicatees are easy enough to identify: "H" is husband Henry; C.J. is Clara Jeffreys; "L.S.B." is Louisa Sarah Bevington. Two poems are dedicated to Margaret Bradley, one as still unmarried - "M.L.B." and one after her marriage (1879) as "M.L.W." However, I've been defeated in my attempts to figure out the other dedicatees, "H.B." - who may be a child - and "E and A". It's a pity about E and A especially, as Florence dedicated her poem Gold Must be Tried by Fire to them. The poem's title refers to One Peter, chapter 1 verse 7, about the testing of Christian faith, but the phrase has an alchemical ring about it and I really would have liked to know who those dedicatees were.

In the tradition of George Herbert, many of Florence's poems in Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade are spiritual in nature, if not Christian, and that is how they were seen by reviewers in the Cambridge Review and the Saturday Review. The Saturday Review was edited at that time by Walter Herries Pollock, whose translation of Musset Florence had read; perhaps they knew each other. The Saturday Review described the poems as having a "refreshing unaffectedness of utterance". The Cambridge Review was less generous, saying that Florence's metaphors suffered from an "innocent banality" and that there was "a certain charm" in her poetry's "immaturity" - definitely a touch of praising with faint damns.

SWEET EYES

The Saturday Review said that Florence's work had a "sweet tunefulness"; and the Nottingham Daily Guardian (Florence and her husband lived just outside the city) thought that some of the poems in the volume would be good set to music. So it's not surprising that the songwriter Mary Augusta Salmond should set to music one of Florence's poems. This was not a new work, written specially for the purpose. Although the sheet music calls the song 'Sweet Eyes', the words are Florence's poem "To L.S.B." from Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade.

Mary Augusta Salmond was a few years younger than Florence. She was the daughter of a barrister and had married Walter Salmond, an army officer and mining engineer. In the 1880s and 1890s they and their five children lived near Mansfield in Nottinghamshire, so it's possible that Mary Augusta and Florence knew each other. However, they needn't have met for Mary Augusta to use words by Florence for her first published song - the earliest in the British Library catalogue, that is - Mary Augusta may just have bought a copy of Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade. Mary Augusta composed a small number of other songs over the next 20 years; the latest work by her in the BL catalogue is an anthem, published 1909. However, 'Sweet Eyes' was the only poem by Florence that Mary Augusta used. She set poems by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Coleridge and Kingsley but the only poet whose works she used more than once was Helen Marion Burnside; Mary Augusta used several of Burnside's poems for compositions she called 'plantation songs'.

QUESTIONS

Florence's poem Questions was published in Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine in its issue of 15 February 1888. It's the only poem she published in its own right, rather than as part of a larger volume. I've talked in my other file about the crisis of faith that Florence was going through at this time, which led to her joining the Theosophical Society and being initiated into the Golden Dawn. Here I want to print the poem and say that clearly, Florence found it a great deal easier to express doubt in poetry than in prose.

What can we do in temptation's hour?
How shall we conquer its fiery power?
How can we master it - standing alone,
Just on the threshold of things unknown?

Strong is its power as Death and Hell,
Led by its lure, even angels fell!
Dazed by the glare of a rising light

How shall poor mortals see aright?

Tempted we were in the morning of life,
With earth's simple joys that are ever rife,
To idly bask in the sun's warm beam
And to care no jot for a holier dream.

Tempted again in the heyday sun,
To choose fair paths and in gardens run,
Claiming as ours, all joy - all love,
Flowerets of bliss from the Heavens above.

Temptings come now, in life's later prime,
Deeper and stronger than in past time,
To feed with fuel the inward fire,
The passionate dream of the Soul's desire

Two feet are creeping on paths unknown,
Weary and mournful sad, and alone;
Two eyes are looking and longing for light,
Two hands are locked in a desperate fight.

A heart is breaking with pain and grief,
A soul in strong agony cries for relief;
Echoes no kindred chord above?
Stretcheth no Hand in responsive love?

Is our Great God, but a God of stone?

Are we - His people - dazed and alone?
Is there no Ear that can hear us cry?
No Christ, - to succour us e'er we die?

The italics are hers. Florence always used a great deal of extra emphasis in her poems - phrases in italics, exclamation marks, words in capitals - as if her feelings at particular points in the writing demanded more than just the words. Her reviewer in The Cambridge Review actually criticised her for that and hoped that as she gained confidence, she wouldn't need to do it any more; but she never gave it up.

Over twenty years passed between Questions, and Florence's next publication. A lot happened in during that long period: she had reached some kind of resolution to her crisis of faith; her husband and her father had both died; she and her sister had inherited the family lands in North Wales but had decided to sell them rather than take up residence and run the estates.

TO THE ARABS. ALLAH'S MESSAGE

I haven't been able to find a single copy of this work. I didn't even know it existed until I was working through Poems of Life and Form and noticed an advert for it in the unnumbered pages at the back. It was a pamphlet, published in 1911 with poems by Florence and translations of them all into Arabic. It was being circulated not like a normal volume of poetry but like a religious tract. It had an introduction by Princess Frederica of Hanover, so Florence may have been asked to write the poems by the RSPCA, of which Princess Frederica was a patron. I did find one other reference to To The Arabs, via the web; apparently some of Florence's poems had been set to music for it.

POEMS OF LIFE AND FORM

One set of poems later published in Poems of Life and Form had been in print already. In 1908 Occult Review published Florence's The Seven Principles. The principles were theosophical, and Florence wrote one sonnet for each: Sthula Sharira; Prana; Linga Sharira; Kama Rupa; Manas; Buddhi; and Atma. In her introduction, Florence explained that she had been trying to give as clear an outline of each principle as she could manage, while keeping within the sonnet form. She urged her readers to use the sonnets as a basis for expansion on the "Dominant Chord" the sonnets are giving them. The sonnets could have been written at any time between the early 1890s and 1908, but it's likely that they had been written since about 1895: since Annie Besant had taken charge of the Theosophical Society in England, she had led it away from the Buddhism that was favoured in the 1880s and early 1890s, and towards Hinduism, her own preference. The sonnets show Florence keeping up her reading, and following where Besant was leading. I have to say I thought the sonnets looked a bit odd, on the printed page. There are a lot of exclamation marks and words in capital letters and I wonder if Florence wasn't thinking of the poems as something to be read aloud in a ritual context - a concept she would have been familiar with both from high church services and from Golden Dawn rituals, but not from theosophy as the TS dealt with theory only, not practice.

Florence clearly saw rendering these basics of theosophy as a set of sonnets as a real test of her poetry-writing skills, and the idea of poetry as challenge runs through Poems of Life and Form. It seems that someone - almost certainly Florence's husband Henry - had challenged her to write poems in as many of the old forms of poetry as possible. Florence had picked up the gauntlet and her struggles with these unfamiliar forms had become quite a joke between her and her challenger - she wrote the leg-pulling she was getting into some of the poems. Preparing the results for publication, she arranged the poems in groups according to their form. The old forms she was using - some of which were first used in the time of the troubadours - included the triolet; ballade; rondeau; villanelle; kyrielle; sestina; and lai (which is not the same, apparently, as a lay).

Poems of Life and Form differed from Short Poems in Light and Shade in several ways. There were fewer devotional poems, and some of those that are included in the volume are more theosophical than Christian in tone. The sources for the poems are more wide-ranging.

One set is based on Greek myths Florence may have heard discussed if she and Henry ever went to stay with Margaret Woods - Margaret's husband was an Oxford University classicist. In one poem, Sleep, there's a reference to God as "the Holy Architect", a concept of the deity Florence must have picked up from her husband, who was a freemason. There are two ballads written as if told by working men, with Florence perhaps trying to catch the lilt and dialect spoken by her husband's parishioners in rural Nottinghamshire. The ballad is an old poetic form but My Pal: A Modern Epic is right up-to-date in its theme: an ex-soldier remembers a comrade who died while they were both stationed in the Middle East.

One noticeable difference between Short Poems in Light and Shade and Poems of Life and Form is that Poems of Life and Form has hardly any dedications or quotes above the poems. Although, as a result, there are no dedications to Florence's husband, his presence - alive and later dead - is marked in many of the poems, in jokes, and in poems on love and on loneliness.

It is so sad that the only review I could find of Florence's Poems of Life and Form was a sneering one by the young Australian poet James Griffyth Fairfax, in Poetry Review. I think Florence's publisher, Methuen, made a mistake sending the Poetry Review a copy. The magazine was a new one, still on its first volume and anxious to make a name for itself. Its editor, Harold Munro, made no bones about his intention to wage "a just and righteous war against formalism...and all kinds of false traditionalism". Poems of Life and Form might have been put together to encompass all that Munro was against, though that does not excuse Fairfax's description of Florence's volume as containing "no more poetry than a Bradshaw's Railway Guide".

Munro wanted Poetry Review to be in the vanguard: in the same issue as the review of Florence's book, Munro published a set of poems by Rupert Brooke including The Old Vicarage Grantchester; and announced his intention of reviewing Aleister Crowley's The Winged Beetle when the magazine had room. Modernism was on its way, and even to me, Florence's poems did look dated - not so much in their form but in their use of language. But it's up to the poet to decide how she wants to write poetry; and if she doesn't want to follow fashion why should she?

After a review like J G Fairfax's Florence couldn't be blamed for never publishing anything again; and she did only publish one more small volume.

THE LIVING WAY

This is a tiny volume, as it had to be, being published in 1918 with paper in short supply. Once again, Florence had been asked to contribute some poems to raise money for charity. This time, the charity was the Sacramental Society of Inner Light. Florence's set of seven poems, all written with the same rhyming scheme, either show her returning to her high church roots with a vengeance, or were written many years before she allowed them to be printed. The seven are meditations on the high church sacraments: baptism; confirmation; the eucharist; penance; orders (that is, men in holy orders); matrimony; and unction (which Roger tells me is particularly high church). The language Florence uses is old-fashioned - she was probably consciously imitating the Book of Common Prayer and the King James Bible.

Between 1918 and her death in 1936, Florence published nothing more.

I'll end by printing a couple of extracts from Poems of Life and Form.

Firstly, a poem about trying to write a poem:

A rondelet!
How shall I build, in form and tune,
    A Rondelet?
I'faith, I very much regret,
I cannot lop, and trim, and prune
My words, so that I can commune
    A Rondelet.

Secondly a set of three rondelets, headed "Song passes not away":

Had I but wings,
Soon I would soar, and take my flight,
Had I but wings,
To realms wherein the glad lark sings,
Thence I would rise, far out of sight,
Into the pure, etheric Light,
    Had I but wings.

Oh, give me rest,
Morpheus, thou bounteous god of sleep,
Oh, give me rest;
Take me to regions, fair and blest,
There may I lift the Veil, and peep
Into the vast and mystic Deep,
    Oh, give me rest.

Take thou my heart,
I give it utterly to thee,
Take thou my heart;
My soul is thine, where'er thou art,
And what I find to love in thee,
That shall I love eternally,
    Take thou my heart.

And the last poem in the book, a quatrain, expressing some rather un-Christian beliefs:

I am a fighter, battling for the Right,
I love our Master, and His striving Men;
When death shall call me unto Heaven's Light,
If God so wills - I would return again.

TWO WOMEN POETS FLORENCE KNEW

Louisa Sarah Bevington

Florence's poem "To L.S.B." begins "Sweet eyes! Which gaze in mine with tender glow". The whole poem is addressed to a special 'other' and there actually isn't anything in it that indicates the 'other' was a woman, it could have been a man. However, such strong emotions expressed for a woman friend were not unusual in Victorian England and I'm assuming that Florence's poem is addressing its dedicatee personally; and that she knows her personally, she hasn't just read Bevington's work.

On the face of it, it wasn't an obvious friendship and I can't think how they met unless one of the two - most likely Florence as Louisa Sarah's work was published first - wrote to the other in praise of her work. Louisa Sarah was several years older than Florence and they came from very different backgrounds. Louisa Sarah was the eldest of the eight children of Alexander and Louisa Bevington, Quakers who lived in Battersea. No high church upbringing in a remote colony there, quite the reverse - Louisa Sarah's father encouraged her to study science, which led to her meeting Herbert Spencer, inventor of 'social Darwinism'. In 1881 at Spencer's request, Louisa Sarah published an article in the Fortnightly Review defending science against critics who accused it of lacking any moral principles.

Louisa Sarah's first volume of poetry, Key Notes, was published in 1876 under the pseudonym Arbor Leigh, a clear reference to Elizabeth Barrett Browning's Aurora Leigh. Barrett Browning doesn't seem to have been a favourite of Florence's; I also wonder what she made of the article in Fortnightly Review if she read it and knew that Louisa Sarah had written it. However, despite these differences in background and outlook, poetry enabled Florence and Louisa Sarah to become friendly. I think their friendship was in the late 1870s and/or early 1880s, while Louisa Sarah was writing some of the poems that were published in 1882 in her Poems, Lyrics and Sonnets, and Florence was getting married and perhaps trying her own hand at poetry.

In 1883, however, the friendship was interrupted if not ended when Louisa Sarah went to Germany to study, a decision that divided her life starkly into two phases. She met and married the artist Ignatz Felix Guggenberger and lived in Munich for some years; but the marriage failed and she returned to London on her own, in the early 1890s, immediately immersing herself in anarchist politics. She joined the Autonomie Club whose female members wore short skirts and even cut their hair. She translated Louise Michel's Commune de Paris into English. She still wrote poetry, but now she focused on human suffering and social issues. She knew Peter Kropotkin and his wife; and knew of the French revolutionary Bourdin, who killed himself while trying to blow up Greenwich Observatory. When she died in 1895 obituaries were published in the anarchist journals Liberty and The Torch of Anarchy.

Further from lyrics and sonnets Louisa Sarah Guggenberger could hardly have gone, and it boggles my mind that she and Florence ffoulkes - devout and devoted wife of a high church clergyman living in the suburbs of Nottingham - could have anything to say to each other any more. However, they may have kept in touch in the 1880s and 1890s.

Margaret Louisa Woods née Bradley

Margaret Bradley and Florence Jeffreys met at school. I don't know how long their friendship lasted. In some ways their lives after school were similar: they were poets; they were high church Anglicans who married clergymen. But in other ways, they were very different.

Margaret Woods (1855-1945) was from a privileged - though not necessarily wealthy - family. Her father, Rev George Granville Bradley was a teacher at Rugby school when she was born; he went on to be headmaster of Marlborough School; and principal of University College Oxford; before ending his working life by being appointed Dean of Westminster in time to be in charge of the funerals of Gladstone and Darwin and the coronation of Edward VII. I've said already that the Bradleys knew Tennyson; but they also knew Matthew Arnold, Julia Margaret Cameron, Lewis Carroll... They moved in the kinds of circles Florence could only read about.

Virtually all Margaret's siblings became writers though Margaret was the most prolific and the best-known of them. In 1879, Margaret married Rev Henry George Wood of Trinity College Oxford. For the next 18 years she lived in Oxford while her husband's academic career prospered. Margaret's first published work was a poem. It appeared in 1881 in a volume collected and printed by a family friend. She continued to publish poetry but also wrote several novels, children's stories, a verse-play and articles.

Margaret's views may give a clue as to Florence's attitude to some of the big socio-political questions of her day - attitudes which only appear in one of Florence's poems. People on the high church end of the Church of England spectrum tended to be conservative and Margaret was no exception - Mrs Humphrey Ward was a close friend of hers. Though Margaret didn't campaign actively against votes for women like Mrs Ward did, her 1907 novel The Invader took the view that the intellectual demands of an undergraduate course were beyond a woman's capabilities and could lead to women graduates neglecting their duties as wives and mothers, and even to sexual immorality. Margaret's heroine used hypnotism to help her cope with her course work and found herself overtaken by an alternative personality who demanded sexual freedom - leading in due course to marital breakdown, remorse, suicide of the heroine and all the other things you would expect in a story by someone watching with disapproval as women demanded equal rights. 1907 seems very late to be making these arguments but Margaret's opinions were still widely held (especially amongst men, of course) and perhaps Florence agreed with them. Margaret's use of hypnotism as a feature of her plot is interesting - perhaps she had discussed altered mental states with Florence though she was never a member of the Theosophical Society or the Golden Dawn.

In 1913, Margaret was elected a member of the Royal Society of Literature, a rare honour for a woman and perhaps some kind of establishment stamp of approval for her conservative views. But those views caused her work to cease to be read even during her own lifetime and I certainly had never heard of her before I started to research Florence's dedications in her Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade.

SOURCES FOR THIS FILE

British Library. Though one book of poems published by Florence is missing and the four items that the BL does have are not catalogued consistently. The British Library has:

1887 Short Poems in Sunlight and Shade. London: Field and Tuer.

An edition of this was also published in New York by Scribner and Welford.

?1890 Sweet eyes, a song. Florence supplies the words. The music is by Mary Augusta C Salmond 1912 Poems of Life and Form. London: Methuen and Co. This one is catalogued under the name "L ffoulkes".

1918 The Living Way. A Set of Verses on the Sacraments. London: C M Dobson

Late Victorian Poetry 1880-99: An Annotated Biobibliography by Catherine W Reilly. Mansell Publishing Ltd 1994: p165. It's a companion volume to Reilly's earlier work which covers mid-Victorian poetry and is too early for Florence.

The all-important book that I used to find out more about the kind of poems Florence chose to write: The Poet's Manual and Rhyming Dictionary by Frances Stillman. Published Thames and Hudson Ltd originally 1966: p27, pp51-67. My friend Helen Ash lent me her 1996 edition.

SHORT POEMS IN SUNLIGHT AND SHADE

Review: Cambridge Review vol VIII Supplement dated 20 June 1887 pxciv. The other reviews are quotes, in Poems of Life and Form on an unnumbered page at the end of the book.

The TENNYSON quotes:

Via archive.org to the full text of In Memoriam with analysis and notes by H M Percival. London: Macmillan and Co 1907; the web copy is now in University of Toronto.

The full text of the Miller's Tale, with some notes, can be seen on ebook, Early Poems of Alfred Lord Tennyson at www.gutenberg.org/files/8601/8601-h/8601-h.htm#section39.

Tennyson's Nothing Will Die can be seen at website poetry.rapgenius.com which also prints other early works.

Florence's quote from the Idylls of the King: The Last Tournament is often printed without the rest of the poem eg in Love Songs from Tennyson selected by Edith Harris. New York and Chicago: Rand McNally and Co 1907 p93. I saw the Library of Congress copy online via archive.org.

The full text of Shelley's To— is at www.poetryfoundation.org/poem/174412.

For further information on Jessie Fothergill, see ODNB volume 20 p533.

Hamilton Drummond is listed in Late Victorian Poetry 1880-1899: An Annotated Biobibliography by Catherine W Reilly. Mansell Publishing Ltd 1994 p146. Florence must be quoting Sir Hildebrand and Other Poems published Dublin by Hodges Figgis and Co 1882. Drummond's only other volume of poetry was published in 1893.

The Wordsworth quote: see a complete set of poems by Wordsworth at www.bartleby.com,

For the full text of Myers' St Paul, see www.sermonindex.net.

Myers is also in Late Victorian Poetry 1880-1899: An Annotated Biobibliography by Catherine W Reilly. Mansell Publishing Ltd 1994 p344.

The quote from the Proceedings of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Liverpool is from volume 31. Some further information on the Society is at www.scholarly-societies.org website sponsored by University of Waterloo Library.

The full text of Christina Rossetti's poem called Spring can be see at www.gutenberg.org/files/19188/19188-h/19188-h.htm#p\_34A.

Via google to The Works of George Herbert p4.

For information on Walter Herries Pollock and on Alfred de Musset, see wikipedia.

Florence's Gold Must Be Tried By Fire is from 1 Peter 1:7. I found it at www.biblestudytools.com.

SWEET EYES

The British Library catalogue gives 1890 as the date of publication of Salmond's song, but with a query so it might be a year or so either side. London: W Morley and Co.

More information on Mary Augusta Salmond:

Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry volume 3 Burke, 1937 edition p1975

Medical Times and Gazette volume 2 1878 p366 a marriage notice for Mary Augusta's sister Geraldine says their father was "of Lincoln's Inn".

Plantagenet Roll of the Blood Royal: The Clarence Volume by Melville Henry Massue Marquis de Ruvigny et Raineval p187 entry for Walter Salmond.

Whitaker's Peerage, Baronetage etc 1925 edition p726 says that Mary Augusta Compton Salmond had been awarded an OBE.

QUESTIONS

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume 1 number 6 issue of 15 February 1888, p485.

TO THE ARABS. ALLAH'S MESSAGE

The reference I found was in Poems of Life and Form unnumbered page at the end.

Via the web I found it mentioned in The Athenaeum issues p4366-4392 1911 p489 in a list of recently published poetry and drama. Florence ffoulkes' friend, GD member Hugh Elliot, was a member of the Athenaeum Club and grandson of one of its founders: I expect he persuaded the Club's magazine to take the advert for Florence's pamphlet.

POEMS OF LIFE AND FORM

Poems of Life and Form with Florence's name given as L F Wynne ffoulkes possibly in an attempt to hide her gender. Methuen and Co Ltd 1912. It's dedicated to HRH Princess Frederica of Hanover "who has written with generous favour of my verses".

For Princess Frederica of Hanover, see wikipedia.

The Poetry Review volume 1 number XI November 1912. Published London: St Catherine Press Strand: p496; p504-09; p514.

There are biographical notes on James Griffyth Fairfax in The Bibliography of Australian Literature compilers John Arnold, John A Hay, Sally Batten. Published Kew Victoria: Australian Scholarly Publications 2001-08. Volume 1 p4

THE LIVING WAY

The Living Way (A Set of Verses on the Sacraments) printed by C Maurice Dobson of 146 Kensington High St. There's no date anywhere in the booklet and even the British Library stamp doesn't have a date on it, though the booklet is listed in the catalogue as having been published in 1918. The booklet has no introduction or preface.

LOUISA SARAH BEVINGTON see ODNB volume 5 p613.

MARGARET LOUISA BRADLEY WOODS

I based my piece of Margaret Woods on the article about her life and work by Martha W Vogeler in the Dictionary of Literary Biography volume 240: Late 19th and Early 20th Century British Women Poets. Editor William B Thesing of the University of South Carolina. Farmington Mills MI: Gale Group 2001. In her lifetime Margaret was a far better-known figure than her husband.

George Granville Bradley 1821-1903 is in ODNB and you can read his entry online.

Julia Margaret Cameron: A Critical Biography by Colin Ford 2003 p62.

Both Margaret and her husband have letters in Selected Letters of Robert Bridges by Robert Seymour Bridges, Lionel Muirhead and Donald Elwin, published Stanford University 1984. There are some brief biographical notes on p1019.

27 December 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

Oliver Firth was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford in November 1888. This was only a month after the temple was founded: he knew several of the founders. Oliver chose the Latin motto 'Volo'. He did embark on the study of the occult that was expected of new initiates but - for reasons I'll discuss below - didn't progress very far with it.

Initially, Oliver Firth had encouraged his fiancée Florence Spink to become a member and she was initiated, also at the Horus Temple, in September 1890, taking the Latin motto 'Volantia'. However, by 1892 Oliver and his friend Frank Drake Harrison, and possibly other Bradford-based members too, were so outspoken in their criticism of the GD that the Horus Temple's senior officials asked the GD hierarchy to intervene. When Annie Horniman was unable to quell them (I discuss that below), William Wynn Westcott - one of the founders of the GD - stepped in. He failed like Annie had. Harrison was expelled from the GD and both Oliver Firth and Florence Firth had resigned from it before the end of that year.

In 1894 the text of a talk Oliver had given was published which indicates that his brush with the GD's magic had left him deeply troubled. It suggests reasons why some of those initiated into the GD might have chosen to walk away. Oliver's talk was called 'Spiritual Occultism' and Oliver started from the viewpoint that the word 'occult' included both the good and the bad, and sources from both west and east. Oliver defined 'Spiritual Occultism' all-embracingly but with a clear bias towards theosophy rather than magic: he described it as a search for self-knowledge through "self-renunciation", higher aspiration and loving service; and specifically as not a selfish craving for power. In a phrase that's definitely a reflection on how he saw the GD, he said that in his view, occultism was not necessarily "the practice of the Occult Arts"; and that occultism without ethics was nothing more than black magic.

I agree.

THE FIRTHS OF BRADFORD

I found several people with the surname 'firth' in the Bradford area in a gazetteer issued in 1822. There was a Sarah Firth, in business as a dealer in chinaware in the Old Market Place. I mention her not because she might be a relative - though she might be - but because GD member Joseph Clayton was also a dealer in chinaware, in the 1880s and 1890s and it's clear from my research into the GD's Bradford members that their families were often business acquaintances, friends, or relatives by marriage. The 1822 gazetteer also included a John Firth, a worsted manufacturer living in Heaton, who is probably Oliver's grandfather though I haven't been able to confirm this. The earliest relation of Oliver that I am sure of is his father Thomas Firth, born in Bradford in 1818, the son of a John Firth and his wife Elizabeth.

In the 1850s and 1860s Thomas Firth ran a worsted spinning business - worsted spinning was a specialism of Bradford - and also received income from patents for improvements to spinning machines. His business was based at Shear Bridge (or Shearbridge) Mills, Horton, and in 1861 it employed 101 boys (the work of spinning being relatively simple, and children being cheaper than adults, of course). He also rented out different floors of the three-storey Mill and its outbuildings: Briggs Brothers; Charles Turner spinner and manufacturer; and a Mr Brook, also running a spinning business, were all sub-tenants at the Mill. In July 1866, all the buildings at the Mill were completely destroyed by fire with losses to the firms involved estimated at £30-40000 in contemporary money. Over the next five years the Mill was rebuilt, even bigger, but it seems that the Firth family may not have been the owners by the time the new Mill was finished: Thomas Firth had retired by 1871 and let his second son Alfred take over the business on what seems to have been a much smaller scale; and by the 1880s the land on which the Mill stood had passed into the hands of William Dewhirst.

In 1843, Thomas Firth married Helen Gomersall. They lived near the Mill, at Ashfield Place Little Horton, and had the large family typical of the time: Walter, Alfred, Lucy Jane, Alice, Henry; and Oliver, the youngest, born in 1860. I haven't been able to find out anything about how or where the children were educated. Walter at least may always have had poor health and may not have been able to go to school, though he and his siblings might all have been tutored at home. On the day of the 1861 census Walter (aged 17) was not at school or working either. He probably died later that year - I couldn't identify him for certain on any census after 1861. Alfred and Oliver and possibly Henry as well had an education that fitted them to continue the family business.

On the day of the 1871 census all Thomas and Helen's other children were still alive though they were not all at home. Thomas and Alfred were at Ashfield Place, with Lucy keeping house for them; while Helen had taken Alice, Henry and Oliver to Morecambe and was renting rooms in John Sill's lodging house on Craven Terrace. There was nothing odd about that but perhaps Helen Firth's health was giving concern: she died in December 1875, in her mid-fifties. Oliver was 15.

Thomas Firth was a widower for just over a year. In the spring of 1877 he married Elizabeth, either Elizabeth Jane Bowater or Elizabeth Dracup (my money is on Dracup for reasons I won't go into). Lucy Jane had married John Waugh in 1873; Alice and Alfred had also married though I'm not so sure who Alice's husband was; and Henry had left home or possibly had died; so that on census day 1881, only Oliver was still living with his father and step-mother in their new home at Langley Bank, Low Baildon.

On census day 1881 Oliver was working for the firm that his father had built up; but that's about all I know for certain about the business after Thomas Firth retired from it. The census entry gives Oliver's occupation as "worsted spinner" but even the owners of mills were described in that way and I'm sure he wasn't working shifts on the factory floor. It's possible that he was employed in the office; but in 1891 he described himself to a census official as an electrical engineer. I understand that the machinery of worsted spinning was not powered by electricity until the 20th century but Oliver could have been involved with the processes of maintaining and improving the machinery in the mill - inheriting his father's abilities - while learning about electricity on the side. I think that around 1890 he was wondering if and how electricity could be made to power the spinning machines - at that time he did some experiments trying to improve the efficiency of magnetic dynamos.

From the tiny amount of information I've found on the Firth family firm after Thomas' retirement, I haven't been able to work out whether Oliver was in partnership with his older brother Alfred, or taking orders from him as the youngest brother. I take Oliver's description of his source of income in 1891 to mean that he was not working in the family mill any longer; but I may be wrong about that. However, I am sure that by the late 1880s his work was no longer the focus of his best efforts if, indeed, it ever had been.

OLIVER'S LEISURE TIME

Oliver Firth had broad interests, and from several sources I've received the impression that when his interest in something was aroused, he pursued it energetically and thoroughly. One person who knew him slightly in the early 1890s, described him as "indefatigable". The evidence I've found for what Oliver did in his spare time - membership of societies, books published - tends to come from the 1890s and later, rather than the decades before, but I think it's still reasonable to say that his interest in the geology and botany of Yorkshire and Lancashire began in his teens; a letter to a journal in the 1890s, about the affect of tidal waves in rivers, suggests he'd spent a lot of time studying them. As he got older and had less spare time for walking and observation of natural processes in the wild, he began to grow and study ferns, and developed an interest in the old (and fast disappearing) dialects of Yorkshire.

Oliver was also a keen stamp collector by the early 1880s. A rather unhelpful obituary in The London Philatelist of 1913 gave the information that Oliver had joined the Royal Philatelic Society around 1883. Meetings of the Society were held in London and Oliver didn't attend one until 1898. Consequently he was never a very well-known member though he did have some letters published in the Society's journal during the 1890s, on particularly interesting items in his collection. During the mid-1890s, in addition to all his other commitments, he found time to work on a guide to stamp collecting. This was published in 1897 and was a major contribution to the subject, at 187 pages.

These widely divergent pastimes led to Oliver making friends with varied interests. One who joined the GD, probably at Oliver's suggestion, was Robert Elliott Steel who shared Oliver's interest in geology and geomorphology but doesn't seem to have had much interest in stamps. However, by the late 1880s at the latest, Oliver had been diverted into a completely new area of study and impassioned commitment: he had discovered theosophy, almost certainly by reading Helena Petrovna Blavatsky's Isis Unveiled (published 1877) and The Secret Doctrine (published 1888). During the early 1890s theosophy was the main focus of his interest, the place on which he focused most of his considerable energy. He travelled all over the north of England to attend theosophy meetings, and was also a regular visitor to theosophy conferences in London, for several years before he turned up at the Royal Philatelic Society.

OLIVER AND THEOSOPHY

Blavatsky had taken up residence in London in 1887 in the house owned by Countess Wachtmeister in Regent's Park, from which the TS worldwide was run. Oliver might have gone down to London and met Blavatsky there but I haven't found any mention that he did. He definitely met the co-leader of the Theosophical Society, Henry Steel Olcott, in 1889, but that was in Bradford when Olcott gave a talk there on The Awakening of Japan (to theosophy, that is). In his memoirs Olcott described Oliver at that time as "joyous-hearted" and "keen-brained" in the cause of theosophy. Olcott had been invited to speak in Bradford by one of several groups of people meeting informally in the city to discuss theosophy and the meaning of The Secret Doctrine. In 1891 the group that Oliver and Florence Firth were involved with took the next step and applied to TS headquarters to found a TS lodge, Bradford Lodge. I give the names of the lodge's other founders because I've mentioned several of them before, and because all of them were members of the GD as well, either initiated already or about to become so: Joseph Clayton (the chinaware dealer); Bogdan Edwards and his brother Stanley Jastrzebski; Oliver and Florence's friend John Midgley; Thomas Pattinson (the founder of the GD's Bradford temple) and his wife; Oliver, his wife and his sister-in-law Kate Spink; and another of Oliver's friends, Frank Drake Harrison. Bradford Lodge's official contact at TS headquarters was Isabel Cooper-Oakley but when she was away (as she often was) GD founder William Wynn Westcott - a leading light in the TS and an old friend of Thomas Pattinson and Bogdan Edwards - came to visit in her stead; and so the close ties already in existence between the GD and the TS continued.

For men, the links between the TS and the GD in Bradford encompassed freemasonry. Baildon Lodge number 1545 was founded in 1875 and Thomas Henry Pattinson was a member of it from its early years: it was he who supervised the decoration of its first rooms with a mural of ancient Egyptian figures which became well-known amongst Yorkshire freemasons. By the late 1880s if not earlier, Oliver Firth had been initiated as a member of the lodge; he served as its Worshipful Master in 1892, the year after Pattinson had done so; Frank Drake Harrison was its WM in 1897 and a Dr E G Firth who might be a relation of Oliver's served in 1917. In 1891 Oliver also became a corresponding member of the London-based lodge Quatuor Coronati number 2076, set up as a forum for the study of the history of freemasonry. A Harrie Firth of Baildon, another member of Baildon Lodge 1545 had joined QC2076 in 1889; this might be Oliver's brother Henry, whom I've had trouble identifying after he left home.

Theosophy does seem to have meant more to Oliver than either magic or freemasonry, however. With Thomas Pattinson, he had done a lot of the form-filling the TS in London required before it would give permission for the setting up of a local lodge. This willingness to get involved in the committee-work and administration side of theosophy meant that Oliver was particularly busy during the early 1890s when interest in theosophy was expanding at a rapid rate. He was elected Bradford TS Lodge's president in 1892 and was still in post in 1894; with Thomas Henry Pattinson as secretary.

Another important theatre for Oliver's work in theosophy was the TS's European Section, an umbrella group for all European lodges which held two or three days of lectures and socialising in a different European town each summer. Oliver and Frank Harrison were elected to the committee that ran it and organised those yearly meetings. Attending the yearly meeting of 1892, Oliver will probably have met John William Brodie-Innes, who gave one of the talks. Brodie-Innes was an old friend of William Wynn Westcott and had been a member of the GD and the TS since 1890. His involvement with the TS in Europe was probably what led, in 1893, to Oliver becoming a member of the group that the TS set up to give advice on theosophical matters to the World Parliament of Religions. The parliament of religions met from 15 to 17 September 1893 as part of the Chicago World's Fair, and Oliver may have attended it.

Oliver's greatest commitment of time and energy after Bradford Lodge was with the Northern Federation of TS lodges, which held several meetings each year between 1893 and 1895 in different cities each time. He and Frank Drake Harrison did a lot of the Federations' administrative work, in the mid-1890s, organising the meetings and also public lectures in Bradford and nearby towns. The public lectures were often given as part of lecture tours by theosophy grandees like Annie Besant but less senior members of north of England lodges also gave talks at Federation meetings and to individual lodges. There seems to have been a list of TS lodge members willing to give talks. Oliver was definitely on this list and was particularly busy with lectures in 1893 and 1894. In 1893 he gave his talks Theosophy and Daily Life; and Karma, Free Will and Fate to the TS lodges in Manchester and Middlesbrough as well as Bradford. That year he was also asked to go to Wakefield to talk more generally about theosophy at a public meeting which resulted in the setting up of a TS lodge in the town. And 1893 was the year in which his article 'Some False Concepts of Occultism' was published in the English theosophical journal Lucifer in 1894, containing more of his reflections on the relationship between theosophy and the western occult. In it he stated that you didn't have to study western esotericism and magic in order to get to grips with theosophy; if he had thought you had to once, he had since changed his mind.

1894 was the year in which Oliver spoke most often. He began 1894 in January with Some False Notions of Occultism at Harrogate and then at Leeds. A couple of months later, his subject was The Powers of Will, which he gave at Middlesbrough Lodge. In July his subject was the TS and its Three Objects, at Bradford and then Harrogate. In October it was Everyday Aspects of Theosophy, at Leeds and then at Harrogate. The following month Oliver demonstrated his familiarity with some Indian texts at least when he talked on The Vedanta Philosophy, at Athene Lodge Bradford, repeating it at Leeds Lodge in March 1895.

Oliver was also first to come out with the idea which became known as Friends Across the Sea - a kind of pen-pal scheme for lodges in different countries. In August 1894 the Northern Theosophist magazine published Oliver's article explaining it, and then gave a talk at the Northern Federation's next meeting, in Middlesbrough, to an audience which included Isabel Cooper-Oakley and Colonel Olcott. Olcott gave Oliver's scheme his blessing and put Mrs Cooper-Oakley in charge of getting it organised; but it never really got off the ground, overtaken by events.

When not travelling the country in the cause of theosophy in the early 1890s, Oliver went to as many of Bradford Lodge's meetings as he could (there were often several each week) and also to its theosophical study group. He sponsored new members of Bradford Lodge, 21 people between 1891 and 1894 including his sisters-in-law, and Harold Dunn whose brother Edward Dunn was another of the Northern Federation lecture-givers and joined the GD as well as the TS.

Florence Firth's ability to commit time to theosophy was limited by her household and child-care commitments. She did what she could, however. She was a committee member in Bradford Lodge in 1892 but gave it up in 1893 after she had had her first child. A longer-term commitment was Bradford Lodge's Sunday evening meetings, which she organised with the help of John Midgley's wife Sarah. They were held in Baildon, probably in Florence and Sarah's houses. Florence may also have been the Lodge's librarian; a library certainly existed by 1894 and was open on Wednesday evenings at the rooms where the Lodge held its meetings at the time - 9 Osborne Chambers, New Kirkgate.

I hope all this coverage of the activities of Oliver Firth and Florence Firth in the TS is making clear why neither of them was particularly committed to the GD. The TS and the GD offered a choice between eastern philosophy and the western occult tradition; and also between study leading to enlightenment; and study followed by practising the precepts learned. In Oliver's case, he seems to have begun his GD membership with the idea that it was impossible to follow one without studying the other; but had begun to worry about where the study of western occultism would take him, and changed his mind about the necessity of working at it. Florence seems to have agreed with him.

However, behind the great expansion in TS membership in the early 1890s there was trouble brewing between Annie Besant and the American William Quan Judge, its two most likely leaders now that Blavatsky was dead (she had died in May 1891). The struggle between them raged for about three years, and got very shrill and very public in November 1894 when an article about it was published in the Westminster Gazette under the headline 'Isis very much unveiled'. In the weeks after its publication, everybody in theosophy was discussing the article and Oliver wrote to Lucifer saying that the TS must make an official response to it; but the organisation was in such disarray that no coherent reply to it emerged.

Oliver Firth knew both Annie Besant and William Quan Judge well, through his work for the TS's European Section: Annie Besant was on its governing committee and Judge was its president-for-life. At first he was inclined to favour Judge rather than Besant. In his turn Judge counted Oliver as a friend as well as a supporter, and asked Oliver to be one of his "special delegates" at a meeting held in London in July 1894 to consider the claims Judge was making - that he should take charge of the TS as he was in touch with the mahatmas that until Blavatsky's death had communicated with her alone. Oliver made a speech at this special meeting. I haven't been able to find an account of what he said, which is a pity: depending on when during the meeting he made it, he may actually have spoken in Judge's support. But as the meeting wore on, Judge's arrogant behaviour turned Oliver against him; so he stood for, and was elected, to the committee that was set up at the end of the meeting essentially to get rid of Judge from the TS. In the months that followed, Judge was edged out, at least in theory; but the American lodges resigned en masse from the TS worldwide.

At the TS's European Section congress of July 1895, some of Judge's more determined supporters demanded changes in its constitution to keep it independent of interference from TS headquarters in London and allow Judge to be re-elected as its president. A committee to look into the possibility of constitutional change was elected, but it was dominated by Annie Besant's supporters, Oliver Firth being one; and no changes were made, to my knowledge. Annie Besant reigned supreme and was the dominant force in the TS (other than in the USA) for the rest of her life.

The dispute between Annie Besant and William Quan Judge was a disaster for the TS in Britain and it has never really recovered. Hundreds of members resigned or just stopped paying their yearly subscription, including all those who strongly supported Judge; entire lodges closed for lack of support; others were divided - often quite bitterly - between supporters of the two candidates. As support for the TS fell away, the Northern Federation couldn't continue; its magazine stopped being published and Oliver's round of talks to its member lodges ceased. There were fewer public lecture tours by senior TS members and the charity work the TS had been doing in the early 1890s had to be stopped for lack of funds.

Bradford Lodge seems to have come very early to the stage of being split between the two candidates. In 1893 Thomas Pattinson, Bogdan Edwards, Joseph Clayton and Clayton's daughters set up the Athene Lodge as a rival to the Bradford Lodge and they may have done this as supporters of Judge. Despite being a Judge supporter himself at this time, Oliver stayed in Bradford Lodge, as did Florence, and Kate and Gertrude Spink. So it's possible that Athene Lodge's break-away from Bradford Lodge was about sources of strife that were closer to home.

The Bradford GD and TS members were a very independent-minded bunch and many of them had a tendency to say what they thought, however tactless - perhaps even playing up to that reputation when senior officials arrived from GD and TS headquarters to quell restlessness in the ranks. Emissaries sent by the GD to keep the Horus Temple within bounds included Annie Horniman, no mistress of diplomacy herself. In September 1892, at the personal request of Samuel Liddell Mathers, she attended the Horus Temple's equinox ritual and meeting to report on some gossip that had reached him. A letter she wrote to Mathers after her visit didn't allay his concern: she told him that she had herself heard "Mr Firth" call astrology "mere divination". It's a pity Annie wasn't a bit more specific about who it was that was doubting the usefulness of astrology as a magical tool. There were two Mr Firths in the Bradford GD (and Bradford TS Lodge) at the time, Oliver and Walter (who may have been a cousin). I think it was probably Walter Firth Annie was meaning (see the Sources section for the reasons); but there's no absolute proof that she didn't mean Oliver, who resigned from the GD shortly afterwards.

Oliver and Florence Firth gave up on magic and the GD very shortly after Annie's visit to Bradford. But they didn't lose their faith and interest in theosophy during the very difficult years of the mid-1890s, and theosophy did keep limping on. Instead, in 1896-97 it was the GD's turn to have a bout of internal wrangling. I found a piece of evidence at the Freemasons' Library that shows that Oliver at least was still in touch with some GD members at this time and - despite no longer being a member himself - knew a great deal that he shouldn't have, about what was going on in the Order. Early in January 1897, he was one of those who tried to mediate after Annie Horniman was expelled from the GD by Mathers. Although Annie could be a difficult person to deal with, many GD members were aware that she had been ejected for reasons that had nothing to do with magical matters. A petition was organised on her behalf, requesting Mathers to reinstate her. Oliver and Florence didn't sign the petition, but when Mina and Samuel Mathers visited London in January 1897, Oliver managed to have a meeting with Mina and - apparently - to speak on Annie's behalf. After it, he wrote to Annie herself, telling her how sorry Mina now was, that the friendship she and Annie had enjoyed for so long had got mixed up with GD business and come to grief.

It was a surprise to me to find such a letter in the FML collection, and to realise that Oliver must have gone to London to try to help Annie Horniman, with whom he might have quarrelled himself in 1892. Annie's reply - if she made one - has been lost; but it didn't lead to either she or Oliver going back to the GD. Annie was only welcomed back in the post-Mathers era; and Oliver and Florence never did return, working on instead amidst the wreckage of theosophy in Britain.

The rise to prominence of Katherine Tingley, a new leader of theosophy in the USA, led Annie Besant to set out on a lecture tour of the north of England in 1897, a series of engagements which began the emergence of theosophy in Bradford from two years of complete inertia. On Annie Besant's itinerary was an evening talk at Baildon's Central Hall; and Bradford Lodge managed to organise a conversazione in her honour for the afternoon after the lecture. At the conversazione Florence and her sisters Kate and Gertrude Spink agreed to try to run a new theosophical study class - the first in Bradford for several years. As part of the effort to get theosophy in Bradford to rise from the ashes, Oliver started writing on theosophy again, and Florence wrote her first ever article on theosophy. Oliver's article On the Theosophic Use of the Imagination appeared in Theosophical Review in October 1897 and in Lucifer in 1898. In it, Oliver considered the use of the mind in scientific research into theosophy. Florence's article Theosophy and Education was also published in Lucifer in 1898. She chose a subject raised several years before in a talk by Oliver, probably one she and her husband constantly discussed: how to live your life according to theosophical principles. Florence focused on whether theosophist parents should bring up their children as theosophists or leave them to find their way to it as adults. She concluded that theosophist parents should tell their children about their beliefs.

Theosophy in Bradford was just not the same after Besant v Judge dispute, though: friendships had been sorely tried by it and some had come to grief; and by the time Oliver's and Florence's articles were published neither of its lodges had enough members to survive on its own. In 1900 Athene Lodge was wound up and Bradford Lodge was relaunched. Oliver and Florence Firth, and Kate and Gertrude Spink were amongst those eating humble pie in 1900: they all attended the meeting at which the factions represented by the two lodges began their reconciliation. Oliver chaired the meeting, had perhaps even organised it. Florence was the reconstituted Bradford Lodge's new secretary and also agreed to be its librarian. The TS seemed fated not to have an easy life, however, and in 1906 it was overtaken by a scandal that in terms of the mores and fears of the age was the most serious that it had faced: one of its most active workers, Charles Webster Leadbeater was accused of encouraging young boys to masturbate to relieve sexual tension; and rumours started to go around that Leadbeater's relationships with some of the sons of theosophists he knew were too close for moral comfort.

While the gossip about Leadbeater was going the rounds in theosophical circles Oliver may have been wondering whether he might be better off as a co-mason, a particular form of freemasonry which allowed the equal participation of women. There are some letters from Oliver to the London secretary of International Co-Masonry, Alfred Faulding, written in 1906. However, I haven't found any evidence that he followed up his interest, although his friend Frank Drake Harrison became one of co-masonry's most senior figures in England. Florence was never a co-mason either.

An investigation by senior TS figures didn't find any absolute proof of what was being said about Leadbeater; but in order to damp down the scandal, he resigned from the TS anyway. However, in February 1909 Annie Besant - as the new president-for-life of the TS after Olcott's death and as a firm believer in Leadbeater's innocence - got him reinstated, prompting another crisis of membership. Members of the TS who had remained in the TS through the Besant v Judge struggle and its aftermath now resigned in large numbers, including Oliver and Florence Firth, and Florence's sisters Kate and Gertrude Spink. Any interest they still had in theosophy as a spiritual path, they followed up in private. It was a sad ending to nearly 20 years of commitment to theosophy as a movement for personal development and social change in Britain.

Oliver and Florence's involvement with theosophy, freemasonry and magic often caused them aggravation, but their belief in the importance of the teachings of theosophy will have helped them weather the storms of economic change in late 19th century Bradford, storms that will have affected Oliver directly if he was still involved in the family business.

BEYOND THEOSOPHY

Laws taxing imported British 'finished' textile goods began to be passed in European countries in the 1870s and there was some retrenchment in Bradford at that time although as the Firth family business produced yarn rather than finished goods, it may not have been badly affected. The USA's McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 was a more serious challenge to Bradford: duty on imported woollen products was raised to over 90% and mills making finished goods were very badly affected. Local buyers of the Firth mill's yarn will have begun to buy less, but exports of yarn continued to increase until just before the first world war. However, despite worsted spinners faring better than mills that used worsted to make finished goods, the Firths' mill seems not to have still been in business by 1901, when Oliver told the census official that he was a man of independent financial means. He was never involved in the textile industry again but - a few years later - moved into a completely different line of work using skills that he may have learned helping his brother Alfred manage the family business.

Oliver Firth and Florence Spink had married each other in Baildon in August 1890 with lots of guests from both families. They had set up home at a house called Rushcroft, in Baildon, down the hill from Florence's family. Their first child, Mary Alice, was born late in 1892. A change of address to Hawthorn House in Baildon followed, and two more children: Thomas in 1893 and Margaret in 1894, so it's not very surprising that Florence didn't play a prominent part in the upheaval in the TS in the mid-1890s.

Oliver's father and step-mother had left Bradford and settled in Ulverston, probably when Oliver married, all Thomas's children now being off their hands. Thomas Firth died in Ulverston in August 1897. I believe Elizabeth Firth died shortly afterwards - I can't see her on the censuses of 1901 or 1911 - but I haven't identified a death certificate for her. Oliver perhaps inherited something from his father, or from the sale of the worsted spinning business - an inheritance of invested money would explain how he could tell the 1901 census official that he had independent financial means. His and Florence's income was enough for them to employ a cook and a nurse to help Florence run the household; it was these servant luxuries that enabled her to find time to write her article on children's spiritual education and prepare a book for publication.

Quite how Florence Firth and Annie Besant came together to prepare The Golden Verses of Pythagoras and Other Pythagorean Fragments is a bit of a mystery to me. The two women were acquainted, of course, but I wouldn't have supposed that they knew each other well. Annie Besant being the woman she was, I imagine that the idea for the book came from her. Perhaps it arose from her visit to Bradford in 1897 and was part of her attempt to re-ignite theosophy in the city where it had been so strong in the early 1890s. Florence Firth might have volunteered to do bulk of the work of the project: the preparation of the text. The text is a set of moral phrases generally held to be the work either of Pythagoras himself or of his followers, which Annie Besant's Introduction suggested theosophists might like to ponder on as part of their practice of meditation. I would be surprised if Florence's education had enabled her to read the phrases in Latin, let alone Greek; and in fact her short Preface makes it clear that she used English translations. The little book was published in 1904 by the Theosophical Publishing Company.

While Florence was working on the Pythagorean fragments, Oliver was looking around for an investment that would give him an administrative or managerial role. By 1903 he had bought or funded the building of Dean Head Sanatorium, a couple of miles east of Baildon in the village of Horsforth.

I wonder if Oliver's brother Walter had died of TB? The disease was one of the scourges of the 19th century, a horrible, protracted way to die. The 'open-air' treatment for it was pioneered by Dr Otto Walther at a sanatorium in Nordrach-in-Baden in Germany, where he began taking patients in 1888. Within a decade there were many sanatoria run along Walther's lines in Europe, including several in Britain. Most patients in sanatoria using the method pioneered at Nordrach did have to pay for their treatment and this was a heavy financial burden as the cure - if there was one - could take up to a year. However, fees for a TB cure in England were affordable by a larger number of families than treatment in places such as the Alps or Egypt.

There's no suggestion that Oliver was involved in the clinical side of the sanatorium he owned. His role was as manager and he would have employed a doctor or doctors. Always willing to work long and hard at the projects he was committed to, Oliver was often at the sanatorium over the weekend, and he was in his own quarters there on the day of the 1911 census. He was also at the Sanatorium when he died, in February 1913, aged only 52.

On census day 1911 Florence, Mary and Margaret (Peggie) were at home; they had moved away from Baildon, perhaps after Florence's father John Spink died in 1909; and were now living at 2 Cornwall Place off Manningham Lane. Florence Firth had never declared any source of income to a census official before. She had almost certainly not been asked before if she had any income of her own - women's earnings and women's work are notoriously absent from the 19th-century censuses. In 1911, however, she was able to complete the census form herself, as Oliver was away; and she wrote on it that she was employed as an embroidery designer, working at home on designs for a dress-maker. I have tried to follow up this interesting declaration, on the web and elsewhere, and not been able to find anything at all on this late-flourishing career - it's such a pity! Another point of interest to me on the 1911 census form is that despite Florence's daughter Mary Alice now being 19, Florence wrote that she was still at school - meaning, I guess, that she was in some form of post-school education; Peggie was still at school too but at 16 that's not quite so surprising, though it's good to see evidence that Oliver and Florence thought their daughters' education was important.

Quite a few men called Thomas Firth lived in West Yorkshire in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Thomas Firth, Oliver and Florence's son, was not at home on the day of the 1911 census and I couldn't spot him anywhere else in the UK. One source I've found lately (this is August 2014) suggests that he may have emigrated to New Zealand. His sister Mary Alice hasn't been easy to track either, in fact I haven't been able to identify her for certain, after census day 1911. Peggie, who didn't marry, went to work as secretary and was appointed secretary of the Artificers' Guild in 1928; recommended for the post by her aunt Gertrude Spink, a director of the Guild.

By 1909 Florence's sisters Kate and Gertrude were both living in London; both were working though Kate at least was not being paid for it. I haven't been able to discover when or why Florence made her clean break with the past. Whenever it was, she and Peggie left Bradford and all their family and other ties there, to move south. They didn't join Kate and Gertrude in London but set up home at Beenhams Cottage, Railway Lane in Littlemore, a village just outside Oxford. Although Peggie must have moved to London to take up her 1928 appointment, Gertrude retired from London to join her sister in Littlemore; it was still her address when she died in 1947. However, Florence Firth was at 71 High Street Oxford when she died in September 1939. She might have been living in the rooms above the shop; or perhaps she was just visiting someone there.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR OLIVER FIRTH AND FOR HIS WIFE FLORENCE MARGARET after her marriage - for her life before her marriage, see SPINK

FIRTHS IN THE BRADFORD AREA

Baines's Directory and Gazetteer of Bradford issue of 1822 transcribed at www.genuki.org.uk.

who owns a worsted spinning firm.

THE FIRTH MILL AT SHEAR BRIDGE

At www.forgottenbooks.com, Newton's London Journal of Arts and Sciences volume 41 1852 p379 in a list of Provisional Protections ((by patent)) Granted. See Number 98.

Chronological Index of Patents Applied for and Granted issue of 1860 p6 number 96.

Rambles Around Horton by William Cudworth, a writer on the history of Bradford and the surrounding area. Published by subscription and printed in Bradford by Thomas Brear and Co Ltd 1886: p37; p149. On p37 there's mention of a Samuel Dracup, resident of Idle and maker of shuttle machinery and harness. I think Thomas Firth's second wife may be a member of this family.

The Engineer volume 22 1866 p23.

Via newspaperarchive.com to London Express of Wednesday 11 July 1866 p4 under the headline Great Fire at Bradford.

London Morning Post of 27 October 1855 p3 quoting a recent London Gazette: list of partnerships dissolved included two firms based at Shear Bridge Mill.

I did not find any evidence for the Firth's business existing after the 1870s.

OLIVER FIRTH AS AN ELECTRICAL ENGINEER

I find his stated occupation on the 1891 census rather troubling as he doesn't seem to have been a member of the society which already existed for electrical engineers. This may just mean that he was not working as a professional. He had definitely been working on experiments with dynamos: see

The American magazine Electrical Age issue of 1891 p31 and Dynamo Construction: A Practical Handbook by John W Urquhart, electrician. London: Crosby Lockwood and Son 1891 p305.

Oliver's research don't seem to have ended in his applying for a patent on any new piece of machinery.

THOMAS FIRTH AND FAMILY

Possible baptism of Thomas Firth: familysearch England-ODM GS file number 0990533-0990535: baptism 22 March 1818 at Bradford; parents John and Elizabeth. BUT there are several men called Thomas Firth in mid-19th century Bradford so this may not be Oliver's father.

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1470405: marriage of Thomas Firth (b 1818) to Helen Gomersall (b 1822) took place 16 January 1843 at York.

MARRIAGE OF OLIVER FIRTH TO FLORENCE SPINK

Yorkshire Post and Intelligencer of 28 August 1890 though I couldn't read the full guest list and account of the wedding as I don't have a subscription to www.genesreunited.co.uk.

A THOMAS FIRTH WHO WENT TO NEW ZEALAND see family history website www.pickeringfamilyhistory.com.

FLORENCE FIRTH: BEENHAMS

The building still exists and is listed at zoopla: Beenhams Cottage, Railway Lane Littlemore.

The building next to it, now used as a garage, is Grade II listed, see www.britishlistedbuildings.co.uk:

For what is known about the house at 71 High Street see www.oxfordhistory.org.uk. While searching with google I noticed on another website someone saying that while they were at Magdalen College (whose address is High St Oxford) they rented rooms at 71 High Street.

OLIVER AND YORKSHIRE DIALECTS

Transactions of the Yorkshire Dialect Society volumes 1-4 1902 p62 in a membership list.

Transactions of the Yorks Dialect Society volume 2 issues 9-12 1907 pxi as a member.

Original Tales and Ballads in the Yorkshire Dialect by John Malham-Dembleby, 1912.

OLIVER AND NATURAL HISTORY

Transactions of the Yorkshire Naturalists' Union parts 17-22 published by the Union 1892.

Nature volume 53 1896 p198 letter from O Firth of Hawthorn House Baildon.

The British Fern Gazette volume 1 published 1909 by the British Pteridological Society: p222 in a list of members.

OLIVER AND STAMP COLLECTING

Website www.rpsl.org.uk is the home of the Royal Philatelic Society of London, established 1869 and thus the earliest stamp-collecting society in the world. The London Philatelist was the Society's magazine, published monthly. Using its archive search came across a lot of mentions of Oliver, between 1894 and 1913 but with gap after 1904 until a one-paragraph note of his recent death (there's not even a proper date) in volume 22 number 256 issue of April 1913 p87. The magazine's editor in 1913 is the Society's vice-president, M P Castle. The one-paragraph note has no author's name, so I presume it is by the editor.

An article by Oliver in London Philatelist issue of 1898 in 2 parts volume 7 no 76 pp104-07 and volume 7 no 77 pp128-34: Dies Used on Registered Envelopes of Great Britain.

Oliver also had several letters on items in his collection published in the London Philatelist between 1892 and 1900.

Postage Stamps and their Collection: A Practical Guide to Philately for All Collectors by Oliver Firth. L U Gill 1897.

THEOSOPHY

BLAVATSKY IN LONDON

See wikipedia on the history of Blavatsky Lodge; the publication of The Secret Doctrine; and Blavatsky's death in London 8 May 1891.

FIRTHS AND SPINKS IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register volume January 1889-September 1891 p107 Oliver Firth in a batch beginning with Joseph Clayton, all already very long-serving members; "Resigned March 11 1909".

Old Diary Leaves: the True History of the Theosophical Society by Henry Steel Olcott. Madras: Theosophical Publishing House in six volumes. Oliver is mentioned in Volume 4 published 1931 and covering 1887-92: pp219-221 and p350. And in Volume 5 published 1932 and covering January 1893 to April 1896: p210.

Seen 2013: A History of the Theosophical Society in Bradford at www.ts-bradford.org.uk/theosoc/btshisto.htm. Originally prepared in 1942 to celebrate 50 years of the re-launched Bradford TS Lodge, it includes a list of members.

The Theosophical Congress held by the Theosophical Society at the Parliament of Religions. World's Fair 1893 Chicago Illinois September 15-17 [1893]. Report of Proceedings and Documents. Published at the TS American Section headquarters, 144 Madison Avenue New York City 1893: p10 in list of TS members who were in the Congress' advisory council. Also on the advisory council: Colonel Olcott; Annie Besant; Bernard Keightley; and A P Sinnett. It isn't clear from the text of the Proceedings how many members of the advisory council actually attended the Parliament of Religions. It was a long way to go just for a few days.

Oliver's appearances in Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine. London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi

- volume X March-August 1892 issue of 15 March 1892 p80 news section
- volume XI September 1892-February 1893 issue of 15 September 1892: p81 news section
- volume XII March-August 1893 issue of 15 March 1893 p78
- volume XIII September 1893-February 1894 p254, p343, pp494 -502
- volume XIV March-August 1894 p449-55, pp521-23
- volume XV September 1894-February 1895 and almost entirely given over to the dispute and the claims of W Q Judge: p166, p254, p340, p384
- volume XVI March-August 1895 issue of 15 July 1895 pp358-360

Then there's a two-year gap until his next appearance:

- volume XXI September 1897-February 1898: pp131-34 Oliver's On the Theosophic Use of the Imagination; and p572. On pp466-469 Florence's Theosophy and Education.

Lucifer ceased publication shortly after this, a victim of the Besant v Judge dispute.

--

NORTHERN THEOSOPHIST which was published from December 1893 to July 1895 is the best source for Oliver's work for the TS.

Northern Theosophist price 1d. I saw the reprint of it issued 1997 by the TS in Edmonton Alberta Canada. It contains the best list of Oliver's lectures; and dates of all the meetings of the Northern Federation of the TS, most of which I imagine Oliver attended though he's not always mentioned in the accounts of them.

KATHERINE TINGLEY IN ENGLAND

Theosophy volume XI May-Dec 1896 pp130-31: Mrs Tingley and her theosophical crusaders were in England for about three weeks in June-July 1896, at a series of events organised for them in Liverpool and London by several ex-members of both the GD and the TS in Britain. Then they moved on into Europe.

OLIVER IN THEOSOPHICAL REVIEW

Theosophical Review volume 221 October 1897: p131. And volume 34 May 1904 p272.

FLORENCE'S WORK IN THE TS IN BRADFORD

Northern Theosophist ran from vol 1 no 1 Dec 1893 to vol 2 no 20 July 1895. Vol 1 ed by W A Bulmer. I saw the reprinted ed of 1997, pubd by the TS in Edmonton Alberta Canada. Vol 1 no 1 Dec 1893 price 1d. On p3 mention of mtgs held Sun evenings in Baildon, run by Mrs Firth of Bradford Lodge, w the help of Mrs Midgley. Mrs Firth was hoping to set up a library. Mention of a League of Theosl Workers, whose members all belonged to the TS; aims were to apply theosl principles to daily life, and to facilitate charity work by members. In Vol 2 number 13 December 1894 p3 reference to Bradford Lodge's library; though the librarian's name isn't given.

FLORENCE'S THEOSOPHICAL BOOK

The Golden Verses of Pythagoras and Other Pythagorean Fragments selected and arranged and with a Preface by Florence M Firth; preface is dated November 1904. Introduction by Annie Besant. London and Benares: Theosophical Publishing Co. New York: John Lane. Chicago: Theosophical Book Concern. All 1905. I read the copy at the Freemasons' Library, which is on loan to the FML from the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia.

OLIVER AND THE GOLDEN DAWN

Golden Dawn Companion p35 for the attempt William Wynn Westcott to curb dissent and disrespect at the Horus Temple. P128 for the initiation date of John William Brodie-Innes.

The Magicians of the GD: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923 by Ellic Howe. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. On p111 for the attempt by Annie Horniman to curb dissent and disrespect at the Horus Temple. In a letter to Samuel Mathers dated October 1892, Annie mentions that the Mr Firth who was dismissive of astrology had also refused to take on the job of auditing the Horus Temple's accounts. This makes it much more likely that the disrespectful Mr Firth was Walter, not Oliver: Walter Firth was employed in Bradford City Council's accounts office - just the sort of man you'd want to look over your accounts at year's end. On pp135-136, p140, pp143-44 the account of Annie Horniman's expulsion from the GD in December 1896 and the failed attempt to get her reinstated, via a petition asking Mathers to reconsider his ban. Very few GD members in Bradford signed the petition, possibly because it was organised by members in London who didn't necessarily know members in Bradford very well; and possibly because Annie Horniman's actions in October 1892 had caused annoyance which still rankled. No longer members of the GD in 1896, Oliver and Florence Firth, and Kate and Gertrude Spink were not eligible to sign the petition or even to know of its existence, which makes this letter all the more odd:

Freemasons' Library under call number GBR 1991 2/4/1/13: a letter dated 24 January 1897 from Oliver to Annie Horniman

OLIVER FIRTH AS A FREEMASON

Ars Quatuor Coronati 2076 volume I 1886-89 unnumbered pages at end list the Lodge's current officers and members. On [p11] number 176 a Harrie Firth of Baildon is a member; as a member of Baildon Lodge number 1545. Oliver first appears as a member in Ars Quatuor Coronati 2076 volume VIII 1895 unnumbered endpages [p26], Oliver Firth of Rushcroft, Baildon, Shipley. He'd joined QC2076 in May 1891 as a member of Baildon Lodge.

Baildon Lodge 1545 1875-1935 anonymous publication, a short history for the Lodge's 50th anniversary: p3, p12 for Pattinson's design of the lodge rooms; p28 list of WM's.

CO-MASONRY

I looked at Co-Mason Magazine from volume 1 1909 to volume 4 1912: I couldn't find any mention of Oliver Firth or indeed Florence Firth as a member of any of Britain's co-masonry lodges. The only mention of Oliver I found in connection with co-masonry was in Women's Agency and Rituals in Mixed and Female Masonic Orders editors Alexandra Heidle and Jan A M Snoek. 2008 in Boston and Leiden: Brill, in their Texts and Studies in Western Esotericism series: p354 refers to some letters from Oliver Firth to Alfred Faulding in 1906, now at the co-masonic archive at Surbiton. Faulding was the London-based general secretary of International Co-Masonry.

FLORENCE FIRTH'S BOOK

The Golden Verses of Pythagoras and Other Pythagorean Fragments selected and arranged and with a Preface by Florence M Firth. Introduction by Annie Besant. I saw the copy now owned by the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia and loaned by them to the Freemasons' Library. Published London: Theosophical Publishing Co 1905. On pix in her Introduction Annie Besant explains why she thinks that the phrases of the Pythagorean school should be studied by theosophists: she states that Pythagoras (actually him, not his successors) translated some of the teachings of the Buddha into Greek, thus bringing Buddhism into western culture for the first time. My advisor on all things eastern, Roger Wright, was most surprised when I mentioned this to him: he had never heard of any evidence supporting this view. As far as he's aware, the first Greek philosopher to come across any kind of eastern philosophy was Pyrrho (360-327 BC) who went to India with Alexander the Great. Modern dates for the lives of Pythagoras and Buddha show Pythagoras living and dying before Buddha was born.

NORDRACH TB TREATMENT

Below the Magic Mountain: A Social History of Tuberculosis in 20th Century Britain by Linda Bryder. Oxford Clarendon Press 1988. A helpful history with plenty of references to contemporary writing on TB and the Nordrach system.

THE NORDRACH TB CURE

For the East Anglian Sanatorium Co Ltd, of Nayland in Suffolk, see www.pastscape.org.uk and the archives at Suffolk Record Office - you can see brief details via www.nationalarchives.gov.uk

And a patient's-eye view written by the Canadian artist Emily Carr who spent a year 1903-04 in the Nordrach sanatorium where GD member Dr Edith Collett had been a doctor, though it was known from the start that she was not suffering from TB: Pause: A Sketch Book by Emily Carr. Toronto: Clarke Irwin and Co Ltd 1953.

The Philadelphia Medical Journal volume 6 1900 p1040 has an account of a visit to Nordrach-upon-Mendip sanatorium near Bristol. This was owned and run by doctors Gwynne and Thurnam who had both contracted TB and been cured at Nordrach in Germany. Rowland Thurnam was initiated into the GD in 1895; it's not very likely he and Oliver Firth knew of each other.

Hazell's Annual issue of 1906 p104 in list of TB sanatoria, Rowland Thurnam is described as proprietor and resident physician at Nordrach-upon-Mendip sanatorium. Dr Gwynne has gone.

--

28 August 2014

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

http://pws.prserv.net/Roger\_Wright/

***

Walter Firth was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford, in November 1888. He chose the Latin motto 'Multum in parvo'. He was still a member several years later but never did any of the study necessary to progress to the GD's inner, 2nd Order. He resigned from the Order, or was possibly expelled from it, late in 1892 or early in 1893.

BEFORE WE START

This is the biography of a GD member who lived in Bradford. I'm based in London and can't justify the expense of going to Bradford to look at records kept locally and not yet on the web. Particularly with Walter Firth, this is a pity - he worked in local government and there are probably records of his career in the local record offices. If any reader fancies starting on Walter Firth where I leave off, be my guest.

THE FIRTH FAMILY

The surname 'Firth' is quite a common one in the West Riding and the GD had two other members called Firth - Oliver Firth, and his wife Florence. Although Oliver Firth had an older brother called Walter, the GD's Walter Firth was someone else, perhaps related in a distant, tribal way, but not a close relation. In the infinite gradations of the Victorian class system, Oliver Firth and Walter Firth were not really out of the same drawer. Oliver Firth's father owned a worsted spinning business and a big mill at Horton. Walter Firth's father was a skilled or possibly semi-skilled labourer.

WALTER FIRTH

Walter Firth was born in Bradford in 1859 or 1860, the son of Henry Firth and his wife Mary. Henry Firth worked as a sawyer - that is, he sawed wood for a living. I couldn't find much information on Henry's working life; which probably means he was working for wages, perhaps in the local iron works, or a Bradford sawmill or as a self-employed man. If he had set up a company or a partnership it would, I think, have shown up on the web.

Henry and Mary Firth's family was a very small one by mid-Victorian standards: just Walter and his elder brother Archibald. On the day of the 1861 census the family was living at 17 St John's Terrace Bowling. Until the late 18th century, Bowling - still known as Bolling at that stage - was mostly parkland; but from the 1790s the work of the Bowling Iron Works had a drastic affect on the district so that by the time the Firths were living there, there were terraces of houses surrounded by hundreds of acres of slag-heaps. However, there were compensations: the profits of the foundry had financed not only a fancy parish church in the new Gothic style; but also a National School which is almost certainly where Walter and his brother were educated.

By the 1871 census the Firths had either moved a few streets or had their street renamed and their house renumbered: their address on census day 1871 was 12 St John's Lane. Walter's cousin Annie Patterson was living with them on that day: aged 19, she was working in a worsted spinning mill. Archibald was also working, in a warehouse. Walter, aged 11, was still at school.

Perhaps the reason why Henry Firth and Mary had such a small family was Mary's poor health. She died in her early 40s, probably in 1874. I can't find any trace, either, of Walter's brother, after the 1871 census; perhaps he too died although there is no death registration on freebmd. By 1881, further trouble had come to the family - Henry Firth was out of work. Walter, however, had been able to take advantages of the times he lived in - getting a better education than would have been available to his parents, and consequently being able to get trained, and work in an office, the kind of job where the threat of unemployment is less, and you are also less liable to get ill or injured through the work you do. Office work also had the advantage of being thought of as middle-class.

Walter began his working life in the office of an accountant. On the day of the 1881 census, he was still with that employer, as an accounts' clerk. He was still living in Bowling, at 163a Hey Road, and was the major breadwinner in the household. He was earning enough to support not only his father, but also his wife, her sister, and his two-month-old daughter; though his wages didn't run to paying for any live-in servants and in fact, the Firths never did employ even the basic maid-of-all-work.

In 1879, Walter had married Mary Isabella Carrodus. Mary Isabella had grown up in Keighley, where her father Thomas was secretary of the Mechanics' Institute and School of Science and Art. Mary Isabella (born 1856) was the eldest child in a large family. Thomas Carrodus' census entry for 1871 isn't complete - he's the only member of the family whose occupation is filled in. And by 1881 Mary Isabella was married and a mother, at home with her baby, housework to do and a household to run. So I haven't been able to find out whether she went to work when she left school. She probably did, though - on the day of the 1881 census her sister Anne (aged 21 and not yet married) was working as a worsted weaver.

Walter and Mary Isabella had six children: Mary Ann the baby on the 1881 census; Archibald Patterson, born in 1883 and named after Walter's elder brother; Carrodus Verdon (what a magnificent name!) born 1886; Nelly born 1890; and Sydney born 1897 or 1898; and another child, probably born in the early 1890s, who died young.

The censuses aren't good at the little details of people's working lives - like exact job titles or qualifications. However, I think it's safe to say that Walter was gaining some qualifications during the 1870s or 1880s, either at his work or by study in the evening at a place like the Keighley Mechanics' Institute. I think that eventually he was qualified in book-keeping at the very least if not accountancy, because by 1888 he had landed a very good job with Bradford City Council, working in the cashier's office of the magistrates' court. The new job financed a move to Manningham - compared to Bowling, a more pleasant and more recently built suburb - where Walter and Mary Isabella lived (I believe) until Walter's death. On the day of the 1891 census they were at 214 Hollings Road off Whetley Lane; in 1901 they were at 57 Leamington Street near Lister Park; and in 1911 they had moved to Athol Road, the next road north-east from Leamington Street. And it was at this time of change for the better that Walter agreed to be initiated into the GD.

In terms of the GD in Bradford, Walter Firth is almost unique: nearly every member of the Horus Temple was either a freemason (that's especially true of the earliest members) or a member of the Theosophical Society's Bradford Lodge. But Walter Firth was neither, so it must have been through other connections that he knew those men who in early 1888 obtained permission from William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers in London, to set up a GD offshoot. Getting to know customers who came into the cashier's office to pay fees and fines doesn't strike me as a likely way in. More likely is an invitation from an old school friend, a work colleague or client. I don't know where Walter Firth went to school, or who with, and no one else in the GD in Bradford worked for the City Council but perhaps it was someone Walter had met through his job at the accountant's firm. Another possibility is that Walter Firth was a friend - or his wife was - of one of the many TS and GD members who lived in Manningham. During the early 1890s in particular, Manningham was the centre of theosophical activity in Bradford, and it's likely that Walter and Mary Isabella knew people who were in the TS. Perhaps they had both been asked to join, but had declined with thanks. Somebody persisted, however, and it ended with Walter Firth - though not Mary Isabella - deciding to give the GD a try.

It didn't work out. Walter just wasn't interested in the occult and if he is the 'Frater Firth' mentioned in a report sent by Annie Horniman to Samuel Liddell Mathers late in 1892, he thought study of the occult was not worthy of his best efforts. It's a pity that Annie wasn't a bit more specific in her report as to which Frater Firth she meant: she probably didn't realise there were two of them. However, something Annie did tell Mathers makes me think that the 'Frater Firth' she was writing about was Walter, not Oliver.

The GD members in Bradford had always been an independent-minded bunch, disinclined to take orders from above, and in September 1892 Annie was sent by Westcott and Mathers, to restore rule from London. She attended the Horus Temple's equinox meeting and was dismayed by what went on there, singling out two of its members in particular for condemnation - Frater Firth, and Frater Harrison (Frank Drake Harrison - unlike Firth, there's only one of him so he's easy to identify). The meeting had been a mixture of business and ritual and at the business stage Frater Firth had been asked to act as the Temple's auditor. Oliver Firth had no accounting background that I know of, which makes it more likely that it was Walter Firth that Annie was referring to when she told Mathers how rudely Frater Firth had said that he would do no such thing. Annie was a great believer in students of the occult having the proper attitude towards those who occupied senior positions by dint of knowing more. Frater Firth's lack of respect in declining to take care of the Temple's accounts caused her to note his name down as a symptom of the Temple's general lack of discipline; though of course, Walter - if it was him - may just have been expressing himself bluntly, like a stereotypical Yorkshireman. It didn't end there, though. Annie was made very angry when Frater Firth started to speak with a lack of respect about the GD's rituals. He refused to apologise for making clear his views - perhaps it was Annie who had asked him to - and said that he (to quote Annie's report) "would laugh if he chose, even if turned out for doing so". Frater Firth went further, describing the astrology he should have been studying, as "mere divination". Walter Firth, of course, spent his working days in an atmosphere of cash and human frailty. Perhaps this had made him suspicious of those who were sure they could second-guess the future. He might have prided himself on his rationality. Annie, however, suspected Frater Firth of wanting to pick and choose which occult subjects he would deign to spend his time on; a privilege which she thought no initiate should expect.

Quite what the upshot was, of Frater Firth's performance at the GD's equinox meeting, isn't absolutely clear. Ellic Howe's account of the GD in the 1890s says he was expelled. R A Gilbert's Golden Dawn Companion says that both Oliver and Walter Firth resigned, Oliver doing so very soon after Annie's visit to Bradford. One way or another, Frater Firth ceased to be a GD member. Oliver Firth, an enthusiastic TS member, made speeches and wrote articles criticising magic and the GD (though not mentioning the Order by name). Walter Firth - who had done no occult study during four years in an occult organisation - probably never gave magic another thought.

By 1901 Walter and Mary Isabella's children were growing up. Mary Ann, Archibald and Carrodus had all left school. In true middle-class fashion, Mary Ann was at home helping her mother - she wasn't out at work. Archibald (now 18) was working in a bank. Carrodus was an office boy - a usual point of entry into administrative work, for youngsters leaving school. Carrodus may have already been working in Bradford's cloth industry - by 1911 he had shown enough flair to have been promoted to designing worsted coatings. Nelly was at school; and the baby Sydney was only three. Mary Ann may have married in 1905; if I found the right Mary Ann (there are several Mary Ann Firths who are her contemporaries) her husband was Edward Copley. Carrodus married Annie Isabel Swift in 1908 and Archibald married Mabel Rose Hainsworth in 1910. So on the day of the 1911 census, only Nelly (now in the helping-her-mother role) and Sydney (still at school) were still with their parents at 61 Athol Road. Walter was still working in the cashier's office, and could expect to continue doing so until he retired. Or died. I believe Walter Firth died in early 1915; aged only 54.

I haven't been able to find out anything about Sydney Firth after his appearance on the 1911 census. Nor have I been able to identify a death registration for Mary Isabella. I think it might be Walter's daughter Nelly who married Harold Hirst in Bradford in 1919.

It's likely that Nelly and her sister Mary spent the rest of their lives in England. Archibald and Carrodus emigrated to the United States. Archibald, Mabel Rose and her mother arrived in the USA in 1920; in 1930 they were living in Pennsylvania. In 1942, draft papers for Archibald were issued in Manhattan despite his age - he was 49. Then he disappears from Familysearch's records so I don't know when or where he died. Perhaps Carrodus and Annie Isabel left for the USA in 1920 but I haven't found any evidence for when they arrived. Carrodus died in North Carolina in 1969. I don't know whether Walter and Mary Isabella have any descendants.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914.

On p134 new recruit Walter Firth's address is given as c/o Bradford City Council, with a note about his occupation there.

Gilbert's list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR WALTER FIRTH - alas! Not very many.

BOWLING

The History and Topography of Bradford by John James. Published 1841 so only covers until then: p311-12.

MANNINGHAM

Wikipedia page, which led me to Manningham: Its Historical Development to the Early Twentieth Century by K Keith, 2003 for the West Yorkshire Archaeological Advisory Service. Based on old maps, tithe and planning records.

WALTER IN THE GD

The Magicians of the GD: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923 by Ellic Howe. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972: p111.

GBR 1991 GD 2/3/3/5 copy of a report written by Annie Horniman for Samuel Liddell Mathers 29-30 September 1892.

AFTER WALTER'S DEATH assuming 1915 to be the correct date for that (Walter Firth had several contemporaries with the same name, living in the Bradford area:

ARCHIBALD PATTERSON FIRTH

Familysearch census records for Pennsylvania 1930

Familysearch GS film number 228 3703 draft cards State of New York, borough of Manhattan, 1942 have a A Patterson Firth DOB 6 Jan 1883.

CARRODUS VERDON FIRTH

Familysearch Ref ID v38A cn38466 GS film number 198 33 95: death registration

***

11 October 2014

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

http://pws.prserv.net/Roger\_Wright/

***

Charles FRANKS who was initiated into the Golden Dawn in July 1894 and chose the Latin motto 'Semper Idem'. However, only a few months later - January 1895 - his membership was described as 'in abeyance'. The address he gave when joining the GD was 191 Camberwell Road.

I couldn't identify this person at all.

WHO DID HE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN? I really have no idea.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Francis Freeman was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in July 1895. He chose the Latin motto 'Servo fidem'. He had the time, ability and persistence to do the study necessary for initiation into its inner, second order and was initiated in January 1897. You could not do practical magic in the GD unless and until you were a member of that inner order. He was still a member of the GD when the surviving records run out, around 1903; but never joined either of its daughter orders.

I have found out very little about Francis Freeman. He led the kind of life which just doesn't appear on the web or in local record offices except in the Electoral Roll. So here is a rather short biography of him.

THE FREEMANS

Francis Freeman was born on the fringes of the City of London and lived in suburban London all his life. Using google I references going back to the 16th century to people (mostly men of course) with the surname Freeman, who lived either in the City of London or on its outskirts. It's likely that some if not all of these people were relations of Francis; but I haven't been able to find enough information on any of them to work out a family tree. My hopes were raised by finding at archive.org a Freeman Genealogy in Three Parts; but this well-researched book was about the Freemans of New England, and no one living in the UK in the 18th or 19th century was named in it.

A Francis Freeman who might have been the GD member's grandfather or great-grandfather lived in the parish of St Sepulchre Farringdon, to the west of the City proper, in July 1790 when he served on a coroner's jury. And in the 1820s a man called William Freeman, who might be Francis' father or grandfather, was either living or working at Woburn Place in Bloomsbury.

However, I only move from speculation to history with the marriage of the GD member's father, William Freeman to his mother Amelia Ann Mole (always called Ann) in April 1841 at St Pancras church. On Francis Freeman's baptism record William Freeman was described as a “gentleman” - a term often used to indicate men who did not need to work. However, William Freeman had a profession - on the 1851 census he’s called a “house agent”, essentially an estate agent.

In the 1840s William and Ann were living at 19 Cloudesley Terrace, off Upper Street in Islington. They had six children: Annie; William; Elizabeth; Francis; Isabel and Kathleen. Francis Freeman was born on 14 June 1848 and was baptised at St James Clerkenwell, the borough in which both his parents had been born. His baptism didn’t take place until October; perhaps either Ann or the baby had been ill after the birth. The Freeman family lived carefully but comfortably: on the day of the 1851 census they employed a cook as well as a housemaid, but were funding their money as many middle-class families did when it came to the future of their children: Annie was doing lessons at home and that’s probably all the schooling the Freeman daughters got; but William junior was at a school, where Francis will have joined him when he was six or seven.

I couldn’t find the family on the census in 1861 but by 1871 some changes had been made. William, now 62, had retired from work and was living off the income from rented property and share-holdings. Both William junior and Francis had left school and were working. William had gone to work in the office of an import/export business with connections to the colonies. Francis was working in a bank. Though eldest child Annie was away on census day 1871, all the other Freeman children were still living at home, ‘home’ now being rather further out of town than before, at 324 Liverpool Road. With four daughters able to help with the household chores, the Freemans now only employed the one general servant.

Francis had probably started work there when he left school - in 1863 or 1864 - and he stayed working in a bank, almost certainly the same bank, until he retired, in what was a typical 19th-century working-pattern. I don’t know which bank; nor whether he worked at the bank’s head office in the City or in one or more of its branches.

Francis’ father William Freeman died in March 1875, leaving his widow some at least of the rented-out houses he owned. Some documents at the London Metropolitan Archive show Francis Freeman dealing with mortgages and lettings on property at Enfield Chase, in the late 1880s. This might have been property Francis had inherited from his father but it’s more likely that Francis was acting for his mother at this time; though he may have inherited the land from her much later.

At some time during the 1870s Francis’ sister Elizabeth married; I couldn’t identify her husband for certain. Francis’ brother William married Alice Freeman - presumably a relation - in 1879; they set up home at 27 Florence Road Hornsey. On census day 1881, Ann Freeman, her unmarried daughters Anne, Isabel and Kathleen, and Francis were living at 3 Hill Side, Crouch Hill. The Crouch Hill/Crouch End/upper Holloway district was being turned into new suburbs at the time; and although they did move several times within it, Francis and his sisters lived in that area for the rest of his life. I suppose it’s possible - though I haven’t found any evidence of it - that some of the roads were being built on land owned by the Freeman family.

Francis’ sister-in-law Alice seems not to have been very strong. She and brother William had only two children: Alice Ethelwyn, born in 1880, and William Hugh born in the summer of 1887. Alice only survived her son’s birth by a few months; and for a time Francis’ youngest sister Kathleen moved in with the widower William, to run the household and bring up his two children. On the day of the 1891 census William junior, Ethelwyn, William Hugh and Kathleen were living in Islington; while Ann, daughter Annie and Francis had moved to 4 Ashley Road Upper Holloway.

A few weeks after census day, Francis' mother Ann died while on a visit out-of-town; perhaps she was visiting her married daughter Elizabeth. Francis became the head of a household reduced to himself, his sister Annie, and - when she returned from helping out at her brother's - Kathleen. These three Freemans continued to live together until Francis' death. One general servant was employed; and Annie ran the household. In May 1904, Annie advertised in the London Middlesex Gazette for a "clean, capable" general servant. She held out the lure of it being a "Small family" (I think she should have mentioned there were no children) but she was expecting the woman appointed to cook as well as doing the cleaning and maybe the shopping; all for £16 per year. Domestic service was notoriously unregulated; and is notoriously hard to research. However both Roger and I thought that was rather a low wage for someone who would be cooking as well as cleaning; though of course the wage would include bed and board. I wonder if Annie's advert got many responses? I can't decide whether financial times were getting tough for the Freemans despite their incomes from rents and Francis' salary; or whether Annie just begrudged spending too much of her housekeeping budget on servants.

At some point between 1891 and 1901 - the years in which he was in the GD - Francis had an important promotion, to the position of cashier. Perhaps the extra salary that went with it funded another move, to 9 Ella Road to the south of Crouch End, where the three unmarried siblings were on census day 1901, being visited by their niece Elinor Key. The household did have a general servant on the day of the 1911 census; but I imagine it was not the woman whom Annie took on - if she found one - in 1904. Francis, Annie and Kathleen were still at 9 Ella Road; and as in 1901 they had a visitor, their niece Kathleen Marjorie Key, sister of Elinor.

The Key sisters' father, Walter Henry Key, seems to have been the 'great man' of the Freeman family. His daughters were described as nieces of Francis Freeman on the census but I think the relationship wasn't quite so simple: they were the nieces of Francis' married sister Isabel. In 1883 Isabel Freeman married a man called John Key; although I haven't found evidence to prove it, I think he must be Walter Henry Key's brother. Walter Henry Key was slightly younger than Francis Freeman, having been born in 1855. He was born in Islington and married a local girl, Mary Ann Partridge. He rose to be the director of a provisions business based in the City; possibly employing both Francis' brother William and his own brother John, who was a commercial traveller. Francis Freeman wasn't active in the civic affairs of London, but Walter Henry Key was almost ubiquitous in them: a member of the London School Board, the Common Council of the Corporation of London and the Port of London Authority; elected to the London County Council, for Hackney Central in 1907 and for Stoke Newington in 1919, on both occasions as a Conservative.

Francis Freeman was, of course, far too old to serve in World War 1 at all. Unless already retired, was probably needed at his bank to hold things together while so many of the younger employees went off to fight. He continued to live with his unmarried sisters at 9 Ella Road throughout the war, and he died there on 10 March 1920.

FRANCIS FREEMAN AND THE GD

When I'm doing a biography of a GD initiate I always like to try to work out who it was who recommended them for membership. It has been surprisingly difficult, for most members, to nail that information down. I can say, in Francis Freeman's case, that he did not enter the GD by way of freemasonry or as a member of the Theosophical Society - two much-travelled routes into the GD, especially in the early 1890s though less so towards the end of the decade. He was not a member of the TS; and as far as the evidence goes that I've been able to find, he was never a freemason. There are two other possibilities in his case, two other circles of acquaintances; though I can't prove a connection with either of them.

The first circle of acquaintanceship is banking. In the late 19th century the City of London had an extraordinary number of banks, both British and foreign; with an insatiable need for young men to work as clerks - a job that was usually for life. It was inevitable that some of them should find their way into the GD; though most of those who did were rather younger than Francis Freeman. One who was more his age was Harold John Levett and I do know which bank he worked for because he was careful to give full details when filling in the 1911 census form. His employer was the London Joint Stock Bank. He worked in branches in various suburbs, rather than at its head office, ending his career as manager of the branch at Westbourne Terrace. Harold Levett introduced to the GD at least one other bank clerk - Herbert Morris - but the connection there was the Theosophical Society and they may not have had the same employer. Altogether, this possible way in to the GD for Francis Freeman does seem a bit tenuous.

The other possibility is an acquaintanceship based on Crouch End. As Francis Freeman would have been away from Crouch End all day, friendships based there would involve his sisters as well as himself; though he was the only Freeman to join the GD. Although most of them didn't stay very long, several members of the GD did live in the Crouch Hill area during the 1890s; beginning with John Collinson, who moved there in the early 1880s and was still there in the late 1890s; and taking in A E Waite who passed through in 1891 and M W Blackden who spent a similarly transitory time there in 1900. It's possible that Francis Freeman knew John Collinson but Collinson was no longer active in the GD by the mid-1890s so he's not very likely to have been Francis' sponsor. Two men who arrived in the district in the mid-1890s seem more likely than any of those I've mentioned so far. For a few years at that time John Herbert Slater (he's called Herbert) and his family were living at 35 Tivoli Road, to the north of Crouch End on the way to Alexandra Park. He was initiated into the GD in the same month as Francis Freeman, July 1895. Herbert Slater was trying to carve out a career as a barrister in the mid-1890s but in the end, he earned more money and became better known as a writer on collectables and collecting, especially books. He looks like a good candidate for bringing Francis Freeman to the GD's notice; but it could equally well have been the other way round, Francis Freeman introducing him. I think the most likely route in for both Francis Freeman and Herbert Slater was through knowing the Felkins. Robert William Felkin and his wife Mary Jane moved to London in 1893 or early 1894 and rented 6 Crouch Hall Road, just off The Broadway where the district's main shops were. After several years teaching tropical medicine at Edinburgh University Robert Felkin was known to many members of the GD there. He and his wife were initiated into the GD in London in March 1894. Both the Felkins were very sociable, and Robert in particular had a crusading spirit about recruiting suitable people into the GD.

So that's it. Historical records being what they are - more misses than hits - it is very easy for an ordinary 19th-century person to live a longish life, about which you can hardly find out anything, now, with any certainty.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR FRANCIS FREEMAN

At archive.org there's a Freeman Genealogy in Three Parts privately published in Boston Mass 1875. Author Frederick Freeman has been amassing family data for 50 years. However, there was no sign of Francis Freeman on it and I think it's a history of the Freeman families of New England, some of whom had arrived there in the 1630s.

OTHER FRANCIS and WILLIAM FREEMANS WHO MAY BE ANCESTORS

Searches on google came up with references to people called Freeman, living in the City or in Farringdon, that went back to 1535. Impossible to build up a family tree from them, though.

At www.londonlives.org, City of London coroners' inquests, LL ref LMCL1C6500 30514 parish of St Sepulchre Farringdon.

House of Commons Papers 1824 p105 in a list of men eligible for jury service in Mddx 1820-23: a William Freeman of Woburn Place.

GD'S FRANCIS FREEMAN

Marriage details for his parents from familysearch England-EASy GS film number 413297. Unfortunately none of the births of the children were on familysearch.

Seen on ancestry: baptism record for Francis Freeman St James Clerkenwell October 1848 with a note of his date of birth.

IF this is the GD's Francis Freeman: property transaction details held at London Metropolitan Archive for land at Enfield Chase:

- document number ACC/0999/LA/SG/26 dated 7 September 1885
- document number ACC/0999/LA/SG/27 dated 9 April 1888
- document number ACC/0999/LA/SG/30 dated 23 July 1890.

ABOUT WALTER HENRY KEY

Lots of references to him on the web, see for example wikipedia on elected representatives at the London County Council. Also these:

At wellcomelibrary.org, a City of London Report 1915 of the Medical Officer for Health for the Port of London Authority. Walter Henry Key is on this Report as a member of the Port of London Sanitary Committee; as its member for Farringdon Without.

Just a note about Isabel Freeman Key. Probate Registry records show that she died in December 1895 in Yeovil, Somerset. I think she had no children.

DEATH OF FRANCIS FREEMAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW

Seen at genesreunited, issue of the Morning Post dated 1 December 1887 death notice for Alice, wife of William Gates Freeman of Stroud Green; aged 35.

ANNIE FREEMAN'S SERVANT PROBLEM

Seen on the web: London Middlesex Gazette for Saturday 21 May 1904 p5 in the small ads.

10 December 2014

">

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

<http://www.wrightanddavis.co.uk>

***

Miss G M FRIEND was initiated into the Golden Dawn in May 1893 and took the Latin motto 'Vincit Veritas'. Three years later, in June 1896, she was initiated into the GD's 2nd Order - the level at which you started doing practical magic rather than just reading and learning occult texts. At the date of her initiation she was living at 52 Kent House Road Sydenham.

This is another GD member I know nothing about. It's very difficult to identify - say, on the census - someone whose forenames you do not know. And women marry, and change their surnames. I have not tried to figure out who Miss Friend was. And as to WHO DID SHE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN? The only suggestion I can make is connected with her address. Several GD members lived in the Sydenham area so very tentatively I suggest Miss Friend might have known either Maria Jane Burnley Scott or Annie Horniman; though in the case of Annie Horniman, no one with the surname Friend is mentioned in the index of the biography I read.

BASIC SOURCES I USED.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

Biography of Annie Horniman: Annie Horniman: A Pioneer in the Theatre by Sheila Gooddie. London: Methuen 1990.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Ethel P F FRYER-FORTESCUE who was initiated into the Golden Dawn, probably in November 1901 according to R A Gilbert's best guess, which he had to make as the GD records don't give the date. Ethel took the Latin motto 'Semper Fidelis'.

You would think that it would be easy to identify someone with such an eye-catching surname; but it wasn't, and I don't know who this woman was. I was not helped by the GD itself - by the time Ethel joined, whoever was keeping the GD records wasn't noting down initiate's addresses. It's always possible with GD members that they mostly live abroad, but I thought I'd give the census a go in any case, seeing there couldn't be that many people with a surname like that - but I couldn't see anyone that I thought was likely to be the GD member. Looking on Google Books didn't help either: I found no one called Fryer-Fortescue but several people called Fortescue Fryer. I went back to the census, this time trying both surnames separately and together but in the other order. And of course by 1901 she could have married. I didn't find anything, so Ethel is going to have to remain a blank.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Helen Priscilla Little, known to her friends as Reena, was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in March 1893, and took the Latin motto 'Silentio'. She raced through the study initiates needed to complete to reach the GD's 2nd, inner order and was initiated into it in May 1894. She was an important member of the GD during the next decade and after the GD's collapse in 1903, joined one of its daughter orders. She married for a second time in 1896 and was known in the GD from then on as Reena Fulham Hughes.

I think 'Silentio' was rather a good motto for Reena to pick. Her life has been one of the hardest to research of all my GD members - I've found very little information on her parents and where she grew up; and virtually none on her second husband though there was plenty on her first.

REENA'S FAMILY

On her second wedding day, Reena told the verger who was preparing her marriage lines that her father's name had been Job Hamlin. The surname was my first stumbling block. There are a number of ways in which it can be spelled - HamlYn, HamlEn, HamblEn are just a few of them - and I can't really be sure I haven't just missed information on her childhood that just wrongly spells her name. Job was a more unusual name, but even with that in my favour, I couldn't find Reena's father on any census; not for certain.

Reena herself told census officials in 1881 and in 1891 that she had been born near Taunton in Somerset, around 1851. This turned out to be less helpful information than I'd hoped: there was no registration on freebmd of a child called Helen Hamlin (I checked some of the other spellings as well) born in or near Taunton around that date; and in fact for some time I chased the family of a Helen Hamlin born in 1851 in Sidbury, Devon, who turned out to be quite the wrong person.

Around 1872, Reena married a man called Archie Little; again, there was no registration of such a marriage in England or Wales. I think the marriage took place abroad, and I've come up with a tale of Reena's early life that takes all those absences of information into account; though on various grounds I'm not at all happy with it.

The tale is this: Reena's father took her and the rest of his family to New Zealand shortly after she was born. There he went into business as a carter, until 1863 when he and a travelling companion were attacked, and Job Hamlin was killed, in the Hauraki district near Auckland by Maoris resisting British rule. There are several accounts of the death of a Job

Hamlin in histories of New Zealand. And the proceedings of the New Zealand House of Representatives record the granting of pensions to several widows of men who had been killed by Maoris at this time, including £50 per year to a Mrs Job Hamlin. If this Job Hamlin was Reena's father, she will have been about 12 years old when he died. Mrs Hamlin and her family continued to live in New Zealand, probably in or near Auckland; where her daughter Reena met and married Archibald Little, an officer in the Royal Navy. So that's the tale.

New Zealand is the most likely venue for Reena's marriage to Archie Little, and 1872 the most likely date for it.

It was much easier to trace Archibald Little than it was to trace Reena Hamlin; but he was never a member of the GD. It is always easier to find out about the wealthy: and Archibald Little's grandfather - after whom Reena's husband was named - was a landowner and investor in railways in the 1820s and 1830s. The elder Archibald Little and his wife Agnes bought the estate of Shabden Park at Chipstead in Surrey in 1816. Archibald and Agnes' elder son William married in 1840 and brought his new wife Emily Ann to live at Shabden Park; that's where Reena's husband Archibald - usually called Archie - was born, in 1843. Under normal 19th century conditions, William would have inherited the estate on his father's death; but when Archibald Little the elder died in 1844, the estate was sold, instead. The widow Agnes, William, Emily Ann and their growing family all moved in to 21 Park Square Portland Place, where the pooling of their financial resources meant that they were very comfortably off: on census day 1861 they were able to afford a butler, two lady's maids, a cook, a housemaid and a kitchenmaid. The family all lived at that address until Agnes died in 1869, so that was where Archie grew up.

Archie Little joined the navy, probably straight from school. By 1861 he was a midshipman, serving on HMS Neptune which was in harbour at Malta on census day that year. In 1868, promoted to lieutenant, he joined the crew of the sloop HMS Virago which was about to depart for Australasia on surveying and other duties. At some time during that tour of duty, he and Helen Hamlin met.

Archie and Reena married on the strength of Archie's promotion to Commander, which happened in 1872. They remained in Auckland for at least four more years; because a child is buried in St Stephen's churchyard there that I think is their elder son - Archibald Claude Hamlin Little. Reena Little wrote on the 1911 census form that one of the four children she had given birth to had since died; I think this child, buried in March 1874 at the age of 14 months, is the dead child. Archie and Reena's elder daughter, Hilda, also told census officials that she was born in New Zealand; in about 1876.

By 1881 Archie Little had retired from the navy, at quite a young age. He and Reena came back to England - a country which Reena couldn't possibly have remembered, if I'm right about her history - and settled in west London. On the day of the 1881 census, Reena, Hilda and nine-month-old Audrey were living at 3 Coningham Villas, Boscombe Road (off Uxbridge Road near to Shepherd's Bush); I couldn't find Archie in the UK, perhaps he was visiting friends or relatives abroad. Reena's in-laws, William and Emily Ann Little, were living not far away, at 57 Courtfield Gardens South Kensington but if my tale of Reena's childhood is correct, I wonder how much contact the two families were having: William and Emily Ann may not have thought much of Archie's decision to marry the daughter of a man who drove a bullock cart. William and Emily Ann were still able to afford a butler, a cook and two housemaids to run the house for them. Reena was managing with the basic general servant; but this may not have been due a lack of money to employ more than one. I've noticed from my research on other GD members that even in the 1880s the younger generation were making do with fewer servants than their parents had employed; and if I'm right about Reena, she will have grown up in a society where there was a shortage of servants. I suppose it's even possible that she might have been a servant herself before her marriage - but in that case, how did she gain the education that made her such a good student of the GD's esotericism?

William Little died in 1884 and perhaps Archie inherited some money from him; but Emily Ann lived until after Reena's second marriage - which won't have pleased her either if she knew about it - dying in 1899.

In 1886, Archie and Reena had their last child, Adrian. On census day 1891 Archie, Reena, Audrey and Adrian were living at 64 Netherwood Road Hammersmith, still with just the one general servant. Hilda wasn't in the UK on census day - she was probably visiting or at school abroad. Just over 18 months later, in November 1892, Archie died, aged only 48. Reena's decision to join the GD came four months after his death: perhaps she had decided she needed something to occupy and challenge her mind in the first few months of her widowhood; and a chance to make new friends when her mourning period was over.

REENA IN THE GOLDEN DAWN

I don't know who she knew in the GD who had recommended her as a likely initiate, but Reena very soon became one of group of women initiates who did a lot of the GD's housekeeping and office work and were also good friends, having tea and biscuits and a chat together (for example) after cleaning the GD's rooms (non-members weren't allowed in them so the GD couldn't employ a cleaner). Accounts of the GD's history during the late 1890s mention Reena and Helen Rand working together quite often. A good example of this happened in September 1897 as part of the 2nd Order's move to into rooms in 36 Blythe Road Hammersmith: Reena and Helen unpacked the GD's library, arranged the items on a bookshelf donated by Frederick Leigh Gardner; and catalogued them all. Netherwood Road, where Archie and Reena had been living in 1891, was only a few streets away from Blythe Road - Reena was probably the GD member who lived closest to 2nd Order rooms. Perhaps she had even suggested Blythe Road as a cheap and easy-to-reach address, when the 2nd Order needed to find a new headquarters.

The GD's central core of active women members also included Florence Farr and her sister Henrietta Paget, Florence Kennedy, Cecilia MacRae, Dorothea Butler (later Hunter) and Annie Horniman. In December 1896 all of them (and many others) signed the petition which asked Samuel Liddell Mathers to reinstate Annie Horniman as a GD member: he had just ejected her for reasons which had nothing to do with magic and did him no credit. They all submitted to Mathers' dictat that initiates accept his orders without argument, and Annie was not allowed back into the GD for three years; however, Annie's GD friends continued in close touch with her, regardless, during her exile.

I haven't found any evidence of Helen and Reena doing magical work together beyond the formal rituals that every initiate had to attend if they could. However, there is evidence of Reena's involvement in one of the magical sub-groups that grew up within the GD after 1897. In early 1897 she, Cecilia Macrae and occasionally Florence Kennedy, went to the Monday afternoon meetings of a small ritual group formed and led by William Wynn

Westcott. Presumably they had joined the group at Westcott's request, but by the beginning of 1898 they had dropped out of it, probably because of a certain undercurrent within the group that they had detected. I've found plenty of evidence in my GD researches to justify my belief that while Westcott may have approved the involvement of women in the occult in theory (he was an admirer of Anna Bonus Kingsford, for example), in practice, he really didn't like it and couldn't handle it. His was a very male world.

The latest evidence I found for Reena doing magic beyond the formal rituals is from around 1901: she and Florence Farr were getting together to go astral travelling, noting down (as was customary) what they saw and where they thought they had gone while they were on the astral plane.

There's evidence that Annie Horniman's women friends in the GD felt particularly strongly about Mathers' increasingly militaristic, arbitrary and just plain bizarre behaviour during the late 1890s. Many of them took a prominent role in the decision made in April 1900 to replace his one-magician rule of the GD with an executive council elected by the members of the 2nd Order. Reena was one of those who supported this process. I don't know whether she stood for election to the executive council (my hunch is that she didn't - I don't see her as a committee woman) but if she did, she wasn't elected. She was given a role that was probably more to her taste, being made one of the Adepti Litterati appointed by the executive council to teach new initiates. For the next three years she taught tarot and Enochian chess to new initiates; they must have been the subjects that she was particularly keen on as well as good at herself. The game of Enochian chess was invented by William Wynn Westcott, although Samuel Liddell Mathers codified its rules. It needed four players as there were four sets of pieces, representing the four classical elements earth air fire and water. Both Enochian chess and tarot were used in the GD for divination; though you could just play a game of Enochian chess without the divinatory element.

By the mid-1890s Reena was not only playing Enochian chess, she had also learned the conventional kind. Or is that the wrong way round? - perhaps she took to the complexities of Enochian chess because she was already playing the conventional kind. I wonder who taught her? Chess-playing by women was virtually invisible in the UK until the 1880s but in 1895 it received a big boost with the founding in London of the Ladies' Chess Club. Rhoda Bowles was one of its keenest members, doing the work of organising tournaments and also writing a regular column on chess (not just women's chess) in the short-lived magazine Womanhood. Reena was probably not one of the Ladies' Chess Club's original members but she had joined by 1900. By that year, enough women players were known to Mrs Bowles for her to organise a league of women's teams. Reena doesn't seem to have been in the Ladies' Chess Club's team that year and when she played in tournaments she lost more matches than she won; but that was quite common even amongst the Ladies' Chess Club members, with so many women still quite new to the game. Early in 1902 (the last year for which I found any information on Reena and chess) Reena was one of the Ladies' Chess Club members who went to Ada Ballin's house at 18 Somerset Street to see a tournament between the Club's team and representatives of Cambridge University Chess Club; however, she did only watch the games, she didn't play in any of the games.

Events in the GD were probably distracting Reena from any wish she might have had to improve her chess game by getting more practice. As part of the separating of the GD from Mathers, Annie Horniman was reinstated as a member; but within a few months, her return had led to a breach between Annie and most of her friends in the order, including Reena.

Annie felt that the sub-groups that were now flourishing in the Order broke the magical rule that forbade people at different levels of initiation to do magic together - and of course they did break that rule, but their members were getting so much out of them that they wanted them kept.

Very little information on these sub-groups has survived and the membership of each sub-group is not known for certain; they were very informal affairs. However, Reena had moved on to another of them after her rather disappointing experience with Westcott's ritual group. When Annie Horniman, backed up by William Butler Yeats, started pushing for a meeting to discuss sub-groups (and Annie had the fixed intention of getting rid of them), Reena was one of those who signed a counter-statement declaring that they would leave the GD if the sub-groups were banned. Reena's friends Florence Farr, Helen Rand and Henrietta Paget also signed the statement; and Dorothea Butler (now Hunter) didn't actually sign it but fully agreed with what was in it.

The meeting about sub-groups took place on 26 February 1901 and so many members wanted to have their say that Reena had to wait over two hours for hers; Helen Rand and Henrietta Paget had already had to leave by that time. Reena seems to have said few words, but what she did say inadvertently put the cat properly among the pigeons. As a result of Reena's speech, Annie Horniman and Yeats found out for the first time that there was more than one sub-group - the only one they had been aware of up until then was Florence Farr's Sphere Group (which Reena wasn't a member of, as far as I know). Uproar ensued, and on behalf of the members who wanted them kept, Marcus Worsley Blackden was obliged to confess that yes, there was more than one; and Reena was obliged to confirm that unbeknown to Annie Horniman, she was a member of one of them.

Those who wanted the sub-groups to continue won the day but in the next two years several of their strongest supporters left the GD for other reasons, including Florence Farr, Henrietta Paget and Dorothea Hunter. Reena and Helen Rand stayed on through a period of increasing fracture within the GD until finally, at the annual meeting of 1903, it became clear to everyone that the order really couldn't continue as it had done; leaving those who were still members having to decide what they would do next. Both Reena and Helen Rand were amongst the 14 2nd Order members who chose to go with A E Waite to found the Independent and Rectified Rite (or Order): they signed the document announcing that intention, in July 1903; and presumably were present when the IRR/O was consecrated on 7 November 1903. The IRR/O continued until 1915, but I don't think Reena continued to be an active member as long as that: few records of the IRR/O survive but those I've seen don't seem to be aware that by 1911, Reena had gone back to calling herself Mrs Little, and describing herself as a widow.

On 8 October 1896 at St Matthew's Hammersmith, Reena married Alfred Joseph Fulham Hughes, a relationship which even now would cause raised eyebrows as her new husband was so much younger than she was. She was obviously conscious that she had thrown the normal rule-book of marriage out of the window: the marriage was by licence rather than by banns, so that it wouldn't be made public three weeks beforehand to all St Matthew's regular church-goers; and she told the clergyman who took charge of the service that she was 38 when in fact she was 45. Her new husband was 29. Even today, such a disparity of age between marriage partners is viewed as fine if the man's the old one, but shocking if the woman is.

Alfred Fulham Hughes may also have been telling untruths to the vicar: he gave his occupation as 'electrical engineer' but his name didn't come up on google as a member of the Institute of Electrical Engineers (listed amongst its members were several men with friends in the GD and one with a wife who was a member). I'm restraining myself from the thought that Alfred Fulham Hughes may have been a chancer, on the lookout for a woman who seemed to be in comfortable financial circumstances. I'd find that a lot easier to do that if I'd been able to pick him out on any census, or via any other of my usual family history sources. He arrives at the marriage out of nowhere; and by 1911 he's disappeared again and I can't trace him any later either, via any legal or probate records surrounding his death.

What on earth did her GD women friends make of Reena's second marriage? Did they know? - how old she was, and how old he was? Were any of them invited to the wedding? Neither of the witnesses to the marriage was a GD member. Perhaps they never met him - he never was a GD member. The other big question is: what did Reena's children make of acquiring a step-father who was not so many years older than Hilda?

I believe that in 1901 the marriage was still going well: I haven't found Alfred Joseph on the census for that year; but then I haven't found him on any of the others either, and Reena, Hilda and Audrey are missing from it too. I'm assuming that they were all away somewhere together. Term hadn't quite finished on census day so Reena's son Adrian was still at school at Christ's Hospital. In 1903 Reena was still known to GD members as Mrs Fulham Hughes; so if anything was going wrong, Reena hadn't told those members who kept the records of the GD and the newly-formed IRR/O. However, by census day 1911 Alfred Joseph was gone and Reena had gone back to calling herself Mrs Little. At the very least, the disparity of ages had proved too much for her and her husband. I haven't found any evidence that they were ever divorced - that was still a very expensive business and usually resulted in social death. Instead, Alfred Joseph probably left the UK and Reena reverted to being a widow. She, Hilda and Audrey drew a line under the affair and escaped the curiosity of their neighbours by moving away from Hammersmith, although they didn't go far, only to 23 Fairlawn Avenue in Chiswick. Reena was still living there when she died in January 1916.

BRIEF NOTE ON REENA'S CHILDREN

It is always harder to find out what happened to people after the 1911 census: the years after that event aren't so well covered by web-based sources. So I've found out relatively little about what happened to Reena's children. Hilda is the child I've found out least about. That may be because she got married: there are several marriage registrations on freebmd between 1911 and 1915 of women called 'hilda little' and her's may be one of them. Audrey never married. She moved to Kendal in the Lake District and died in December 1960. Though I don't know what profession Adrian took up after he left school, I've found that he married and (I think) had children. He died in Broadstairs in December 1948.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914.

The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR REENA LITTLE/FULHAM HUGHES

JOB HAMLIN

This is my Place: Hauraki Contested 1769-1875 by Paul Monin. Wellington New Zealand: Bridget Williams Books 2001. In Chapter Gold and War 1860-65 p195. The Hauraki Gulf is to the north-east of Auckland.

The New Zealand Wars: 1845-64 by James Cowan. AMS Press 1969 p291.

Appendix to the Journals of the House of Representatives New Zealand Parliament 1864: Further Papers relative to the amnesty to rebel natives.

New Zealand Parliament House of Representatives business from 1866 p246 .

New Zealand Parliament House of Representatives accounts for year ending 30 June 1868 p3.

ARCHIBALD LITTLE

At www.chipsteadvillage.org some details on the owners of Shabden Park.

Reports from Committees (that is, Parliamentary committees) 1837 railway subscription lists p19.

The Court Magazine and Belle Assemblée 1840 p81 and also in Gentleman's Magazine 1840 p91: marriage of Emily Ann Bishop to William Little.

Familysearch England EAS-y GS film number 580884: baptism of Archibald Little 27 November 1843.

Times Wednesday 28 August 1844 p6 death announcements includes one for Archibald Little esquire of Shabden Park, on "25th inst" [Aug 1844].

Navy List April 1870 p406.

Navy List October 1870 p478, p184, p20.

Navy List January 1881 p336, p471.

Navy List October 1890 p338, p382.

REENA AND ARCHIE'S SON

See www.aucklandcity.govt.nz for a list of headstones in St Stephen's churchyard, Parnell Auckland. Website www.reocities.com has a few more details.

ALFRED JOSEPH FULHAM HUGHES

Full details of marriage registration seen via Ancestry.co.uk.

REENA AND THE GD

The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923 by Ellic Howe. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972: p135, p139, p143, p169, p182-183, p197, p228, p238.

ITEMS HELD IN THE GOLDEN DAWN ARCHIVE, FREEMASON'S LIBRARY all from the period 1900-02:

- GBR 1991 GD 2/4/3/32: letter Reena to Florence Farr 26 April 1900.
- GBR 1991 2/4/3/51 undated but catalogue suggests April 1901 which sounds a year too late to me: letter Reena to Florence Farr
- GBR 1991 2/4/6/1: statement of the majority of 2nd Order members to the 3 current chiefs (that is JWBI, Felkin and Percy Bullock) issued February 1901 before 26 February.

Confirmation of the 1897 group: Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - letters mostly to but occasionally copies of letters from Frederick Leigh Gardner. Letter from William Wynn Westcott to Gardner, 17 May 1897.

Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume III 1901-04 p32 note 4, p33.

Yeats's Golden Dawn by George Mills Harper. Wellingborough Northants: The Aquarian Press 1974: p44.

Florence Farr: Bernard Shaw's New Woman by Josephine Johnson. Gerrard's Cross: Colin Smythe 1975 p89-90 though Johnson doesn't give the Source of the description she prints of Florence Farr and Reena's astral travelling session.

ENOCHIAN CHESS

There are plenty of books on tarot out there but rather fewer on Enochian chess. Wikipedia has a short introduction, based mostly on Ellic Howe (see above) and these two works:

- The Golden Dawn: A Complete Course in Practical Ceremonial Magic but Israel Regardie with input from Cris Monnastre and Carl Llewellyn Weschke, eds. Woodbury Minnesota: Llewellyn Publications. Originally 1989 but the 6th edition of 2002 seems to be around more.
- Enochian Magic for Beginners by Donald Tyson. Woodbury Minnesota: Llewellyn Publications 1997. I found a pdf file of this at www.scribd.com 6 July 2014.

AFTER THE GOLDEN DAWN

A E Waite: A Magician of Many Parts by R A Gilbert. Wellingborough Northants 1987 p178 Appendix C.

WOMEN'S CHESS

Women, Clubs and Associations in Britain by David Doughan and Peter Gordon. London: Routledge 2006 p81 in section Sporting Clubs.

Dictionary of British Women's Organisations 1825-1960 by David Doughan and Peter Gordon. London: Woburn Press 2006 p70 although it's probably referring to 1911.

At www.chess.com/blog/batgirl/the-ladies-chess-club there is a very thorough account of the early years of the Ladies' Chess Club. Unfortunately, the writer doesn't give her sources.

Womanhood: the Magazine of Women's Progress and Interests, political, legal, social and intellectual; and of health and beauty culture editor Ada S Ballin. This is from volume 3 1899-1900 issue 16 which is probably spring 1900 but I couldn't see the exact date.

British Chess Magazine volume 22 1902; p198-199. Published London: Trübner and Co.

11 August 2015

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

<http://www.wrightanddavis.co.uk>

***

Joseph Knight Gardner was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford in July 1891. He chose the Latin motto 'Valet anchora virtus'. He had some prior knowledge of the western esoteric tradition and - despite working full time - was able to do the work required for entry into the GD's inner, second order in just over two years; being initiated into it in September 1893. You couldn't do any practical magic in the GD until and unless you were in that inner order. Joseph was still an active member of the GD in 1895; though probably not for much longer.

Rachel Taylor was initiated into the GD in September 1892, also at the Horus Temple, taking the Latin motto 'Una voce'. She never progressed to the GD's inner order and may have dropped out of the GD after only a short time.

Joseph and Rachel were married in 1895. They were two of the large group of members of the Horus Temple who actually lived in Liverpool. They were also two of the very large group of GD members who were also in the Theosophical Society.

Thanks are due to Ted G Davy whose profile of Joseph Knight Gardner was published in a Canadian theosophical magazine. My double-biography below is very indebted to Davy's work especially for the later part of the Gardners' lives.

THE TAYLORS AND THE GARDNERS

Due to an infuriating lack of data I can't prove this, but it looks from my researches into their families that Joseph (known as Joe) and Rachel (known as Ray) were distantly related in two ways. It has been much easier to find out about Ray's family than about Joe's; but I'll start with Joe's anyway.

Though I suspect it might be 'Richard' I don't know Joe's father's forename for sure: I can't find the man and his family together on the census in 1861, 1871 and 1881, and by 1891 he was dead. If he was the man I suspect he was, he died during 1880 and it's likely that he was a member of a prominent family of businessmen with branches living and working in Liverpool and in north Wales. Richard Gardner - if I have his name right - married Esther Taylor, most probably in 1860. Esther was born around 1830, the eldest child of an Isaac Taylor and his wife, also named Esther. Isaac Taylor was in business a maltster and ironmonger in the Yardley district of Worcester; though both he and his wife were probably dead by 1860, and their daughter Esther got married in Liverpool where she spent the rest of her life.

Joe Gardner was the third son of Esther Gardner and her husband, born in West Derby - a middle-class suburb of Liverpool - in June 1864. Because I can't find the family on the two censuses after that, their family history - including the death of Joe's father - is a blank until census day 1891. On that day Esther was living at 16 Aubrey Street Everton and some of her children (maybe all of them) were still living at home. Any financial trouble the family had felt after the death of Esther's husband while her children were quite young had been eased because all the boys were working. William was an engineer; George was working as a clerk in a timber firm; Joseph was also a clerk, in a firm of solicitors, though he was possibly doing accounting, rather than legal work; Charles was apprenticed to a pharmacist; and Emily was helping her mother run the house. There may have been a second daughter, Ada; but I can't prove she was a relation because she was away on census day, staying with Rachel Taylor and her family. It's likely that George Gardner had gone into the Gardner family's timber business, which had bases in Liverpool and at Flint.

I think you might say that in the endless gradations of Victorian society, Rachel Taylor was a cut slightly above her husband-to-be. She had been born in Holywell, Flintshire, in 1867, one of the middle children in the huge family of another man called Isaac Taylor, possibly a relation of Joe's grandfather of the same name. Rachel's father Isaac Taylor was a land agent and surveyor. In the 1830s he had done work for the local county council, reassessing rateable values; and he was also employed by Lady Vivian to run her estate, Plas Gwyn at Pentraeth in Anglesey. Lady Vivian, formerly Mary Elizabeth Panton, had inherited Plas Gwyn from her father. She had married the 2nd Baron Vivian in 1841 and lived in Cornwall.

Isaac Taylor had married into the Gardner family of Liverpool and north Wales: his wife was Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of a man who was definitely called Richard Gardner, and of Richard's wife Martha Jones of Liverpool. Richard Gardner was in business as a timber merchant - presumably in the same firm which later employed George Gardner at its Liverpool offices - and served as mayor of the Flint in 1850 and 1851. Isaac and Sarah Elizabeth lived at Coleshill Cottage at Bagillt near Holywell, at least from the 1870s to the 1890s. They had one son, Isaac, who was working learning the land agent and surveying trade from his father by 1881; and at least nine daughters, of whom Rachel was the fifth.

Coleshill Cottage was teeming with people on the day of the 1891 census: father Isaac and wife Sarah Elizabeth were both at home and Isaac's unmarried sister Alice had been a member of the household for many years. Son Isaac, now 27 and in partnership with his father, was as yet unmarried and living at home. And also still at home were daughters Mary, Rachel and Evelyn. Staying at the Cottage that night were four visitors, probably friends of the Taylor girls: Annie Williams and Ada Howell who were both 20; Ada Gardner - the woman who's possibly Joe Gardner's sister - aged 24; and Henry Williams whose probably a brother of Annie, aged 34. It's not at all surprising that the two Adas and Henry had all been born in Liverpool and Annie not far away, in Birkenhead. Unlike Esther Gardner, who had no live-in servants, Isaac and Sarah Elizabeth employed three servants: a cook, a housemaid (both of whom must have been rushed off their feet); and - because this was a country district where a coach was more a necessity than a luxury - a coachman.

JOE, RAY AND THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY IN ENGLAND

By the time of the 1891 census, Joe Gardner was a convinced theosophist. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Colonel Henry Steel Olcott had founded the Theosophical Society in New York in 1874 but interest in the subject amongst the public at large had to wait until the publication of Blavatsky's Isis Unveiled in September 1877. Joe was amongst those who found Blavatsky's attempt to reconcile modern science with theology an attractive alternative to Christianity in an age of increasing doubt. A group of English theosophists was meeting regularly by the early 1880s but this was in London and Joe may not have been aware of them - nor them of him - until several years later.

Blavatsky took up residence in England in May 1887 and the numbers attending the meetings of the TS in London began to increase; but lift-off for theosophy in England was not really reached until the publication in 1888 of her last work, The Secret Doctrine. This started a rapid expansion of the TS in England, organised into locally-based lodges which sprang up in most large towns. You could actually sit in the same room as the Great Woman by going to Countess Wachtmeister's house in Regent's Park, where Blavatsky was living and where the London-based theosophists held their meetings. Joe Gardner was one of those introduced to her there. Asked to advise him on the best approach to understanding the concepts discussed in The Secret Doctrine, Blavatsky recommended that Joe study it from the Kabbalistic angle - that is, in the light of a well-known western esoteric text much used in the GD; so Joe joined the TS's Esoteric Section, founded in October 1888 for those TS members who wanted to look at philosophy from both the eastern and western points of view. William Wynn Westcott, who had helped found the GD earlier that year, was also a member of the TS Esoteric Section so I presume Joe got to know him, at least as a much older acquaintance.

Joe Gardner officially joined the TS in June 1890 though he had been a member unofficially for a couple of years beforehand. One of the two sponsors of his application was Sydney Coryn. Sydney Coryn was working in Liverpool at the time but was originally from London. His brother Herbert Coryn was one of Blavatsky's hand-picked inner circle, and a leading light of theosophy in Brixton and Clapham. Perhaps Joe owed his personal introduction to Blavatsky to the Coryn brothers, both of whom were in the GD for several years, as well as the TS.

Over the next two years Joe and Sydney Coryn gathered together enough Liverpool residents who had similar interests to be able to found a local lodge of the TS. Sydney was elected its first president and Joe its first vice-president. Joe also made contact with theosophists based in Bradford Yorkshire, including the group who founded the GD's Horus Temple in 1888 and it was through some of them, rather than through Westcott, that Joe was brought to the GD's notice. For the next two or three years Joe studied western occultism and theosophy in parallel.

Joe was one of Liverpool Lodge's most active members in its early years. He stood as sponsor to a large number of its recruits, including three who were curious enough about western esotericism and magic to be recommended - perhaps by Joe - to the GD at some stage: Robert Nisbet; Amy Earp; and John W S Callie. Also in Liverpool Lodge in the early 1890s - though not sponsored into it by Joe - were others who gave the GD a try: Robert Sandham, Rev Thomas Duncan, William Ranstead, Herbert Crooke, Eliza Jevons, and John Hill who married Amy Earp.

In the early 1890s Liverpool Lodge held its meetings on Thursday evenings. One member, or (very often) a visitor from Bradford TS, would lead a talk on a pre-arranged subject - Joe led one on The Planets and The Shakti, in spring 1893 and another later in the year whose subject he still hadn't decided a week or so before the meeting. There were also discussion groups: one on The Secret Doctrine was running in 1892 and a second one was started in 1893 to consider the Key to Theosophy. In 1892 these meetings were taking place in rooms at 62 Dale Street but by 1893 the lodge had so many members that they had to rent a larger space; they moved to Crossley Buildings, 18 South Castle Street.

Joe moved out of Liverpool in 1893, to the Freshfield district of Formby. Formby was a little closer to Southport than to Liverpool and several members of Liverpool Lodge lived in one of those two towns. Although I think Joe was still working in Liverpool, he and Ray Taylor were amongst the founder-members of the Southport Lodge that year. This mention of Ray as an early member of the lodge in Southport was the earliest I've found for her in the TS records I've seen, as I seem to have missed the entry for her in the TS's membership registers. Another of the lodge's founders was Herbert Crooke. Herbert, Joe and Ray must have been close friends around 1893-95.

In the summer of 1894 Joe and Ray were able to meet the surviving founder of the TS when both Liverpool Lodge and Southport Lodge were visited by Colonel Olcott as part of a lecture tour. However, there was trouble brewing in theosophy and over the next two years the TS worldwide tore itself in two in a dispute about Blavatsky's legacy and uniqueness (or otherwise) and who should be in command now that she was dead, Olcott not wishing to take on that role. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky had died in London in May 1891 and two candidates had emerged by 1894 as successors offering very different views of the future: the American William Quan Judge; and the Englishwoman Annie Besant. Judge had known both Blavatsky and Olcott for many years and was president-for-life of the TS in Europe; Besant was a relatively new recruit to theosophy but a committed and hard-working one, and she had Olcott's support.

Between 1894 and 1896 debate on the complex issues embodied in the candidacies of Judge and Besant raged within the TS and became very bitter, and very public. Local lodges took sides; or split into warring factions. A few theosophists spoke out in favour of moderation and careful consideration but no one was listening. In 1895, a convention of the TS worldwide held in London backed Besant and attempted to limit Judge's powers within the TS. This incensed Judge's supporters and the TS began to disintegrate. The lodges in the USA held their own convention and left the TS worldwide to be an independent organisation. In England and elsewhere many individual members resigned and more just never paid their yearly subscription again. Whole lodges closed down through lack of members.

Perhaps it was the emphasis the GD put on independent study and action that made so many of those who were in both the GD and the TS come out in support of Judge. Judge was claiming that the mahatmas (who had only ever communicated with Blavatsky while she was alive) were now in touch with him. To Blavatsky's old friends this was very distressing, it brought her unique status into question. But those who were in the GD and the TS understood that any properly prepared person might be able to communicate with entities from beyond the physical world. They saw Judge as another like themselves and in Liverpool, some got together as a committee to defend him. The GD's founder William Wynn Westcott, however, was a member of the TS's Council and also a man who valued order and hierarchy. He came down firmly on the side of Annie Besant, who knew how to work within a bureaucratic system and had never made any claims to be in touch with the mahatmas. To a certain extent, the dispute in the TS then spilled over into the GD: it's noticeable that some GD members who supported Judge seem to have ceased to be active GD members around 1895. Including Joe and Ray.

As far as I can tell, Joe and Ray weren't members of Liverpool's 'Judge committee' although they knew all its members well. Whether they had reservations about Annie Besant, or were horrified to see theosophists behaving as badly as anyone else in an argument, they decided not to continue their membership of the TS in England. It must have cost them both dear to lose such an important part of their social life. They were able to remain members of the TS in Europe but it wasn't quite the same, I'm sure, and they must have been excited and intrigued in 1896 when news reached them of a new leader of theosophy in the United States, Katherine Tingley.

Mrs Tingley arrived in England in June 1896 with a group calling themselves Crusaders, intent on raising European awareness of her vision of 'universal brotherhood'. After London, Liverpool was the first place the Crusaders went to. They were accompanied by Herbert Coryn and were met at Lime Street station by Joe and other ex-members of the GD and TS in Liverpool and Southport, including Robert Sandham, Herbert Crooke and John Hill. Ray met them later, at one of a series of private and public meetings organised for the Crusaders around Liverpool between Sunday 21 June and Tuesday 23 June. Herbert Crooke and Herbert Coryn were convinced by Mrs Tingley's new theosophical vision and became two of her most loyal supporters. Joe and Ray don't seem to have been quite so enthusiastic and Joe was happy to continue as a vice-president of the TS in Europe when its members made a formal decision to distance themselves from Tingley's group.

In his biography of Joe Gardner Ted Davy mentions that Joe was a freemason; though without giving any details of where and when. I haven't come across any evidence that he was a freemason in England; but as with most people it's easier to find those who reached the top. If Joe was a freemason in England, he confined his involvement to the lodge he belonged to.

JOE AND RAY

It's clear that Joe Gardner and Ray Taylor knew each other by 1893. I'd go further and say that they'd probably known each other, or at least known of each other, since their childhoods. Perhaps by 1893 they were engaged and Joe's move to Formby was part of their preparations for married life. They married in the spring of 1895 and so, perhaps, were rather less actively involved in the ongoing Judge vs Besant argument than some of their friends. For the first couple of years they lived in Formby and that's where their daughter Radha Knight Gardner was born in 1896. However by 1901 they had moved away from Lancashire altogether - Joe had taken a job in the offices of a cloth merchant in Bradford. They never lived in Liverpool again.

Was Joe beginning in the restlessness that in a few years would take the family much further away from home? Or were he and Ray hoping that the signs of rejuvenation in the TS in Bradford were something they could take a part in? After several years being like theosophical groups elsewhere in England - all-but-moribund - some of Joe and Ray's old theosophist/GD friends in Bradford were meeting again and trying to put old differences behind them. Bradford TS Lodge was re-founded in 1902. However, neither of Gardners are listed as members so perhaps the moving to Bradford was a coincidence, driven by the offer of a good job. Cutting loose was made easier by the deaths of Ray's parents in the late 1890s; Joe's mother was still alive though - in 1901 she was living with Joe's sister Emily Sanders - and she didn't die until 1929, after Joe had retired.

Joe and Ray's two sons were both born in Bradford: Arthur Godwin Gardner in 1901 and Bryan Knight Gardner in 1907. Perhaps 1907 was a year of decision. Joe was now 43 and Ray 40 and they had the future of three children to think of. They decided to emigrate. The USA was their original choice of destination but eventually they decided that British Columbia had more to offer.

I'm not going to go steal Ted Davy's thunder by reiterating his profile of Joe Gardner. The profile is on the web, search for it using 'Canadian Theosophist' and 'Joseph Knight Gardner'.

I do want to make a few comments though, mainly about what an extraordinary change Joe and Ray made to their lives by starting out again in their forties in western Canada - the vast wilderness west of the Rockies was about as different from urban, industrial Lancashire and West Yorkshire as you could get. The work that Joe Gardner initially chose to do there was also completely outside his previous experience: he tried ranching, in Kamloops and then in Salmon Arm before returning to accounts work and to urban life when the family moved to Vancouver in 1914. Through this period of almost continual change, Joe and Ray's interest in theosophy was the one constant in their lives: Salmon Arm had an active theosophical group, and so did Vancouver. Both Joe and Ray had an aura of theosophist glamour about them in these circles - Joe as someone who had talked to and been given advice by Blavatsky; and Joe and Ray as people who had known Annie Besant and had met Colonel Olcott and Katherine Tingley.

When Joe retired, he and Ray moved from Vancouver back to Salmon Arm to be near Radha, who was now married. In his retirement Joe kept his brain lively by trying something new - he wrote a series of articles for the Canadian Theosophist using the writing name Ich Dein. He died in November 1937, in Salmon Arm. Continuing her commitment to theosophy in her widowhood, Ray joined the International Friends of Madame Blavatsky in 1938. Joe had kept a commonplace book of theosophical aphorisms that he had found useful for his meditation practice; Ray prepared this for publication, also in 1938, as Blossoms Culled from East and West.

Ray lived on until 1965. She and Joe have many descendants in Canada.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR JOSEPH KNIGHT GARDNER AND RACHEL TAYLOR GARDNER

Blavatsky's two important publications:

Isis Unveiled: A Master-Key to the Mysteries of Ancient and Modern Science and Theology. On p1 in the introduction to the edition published in 1972 by the Theosophical Publishing House it says that the original edition was published in New York by J W Bouton in September 1877. I haven't been able to find out when the book was first available in England but - living and working in Liverpool - Joe might have had friends who could bring him an American copy.

The Secret Doctrine: the Synthesis of Science, Religion and Philosophy in two volumes London: Theosophical Publishing Company 1888. A 3rd volume, very controversial even at the time, was published in 1897.

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register volume January 1889-September 1891 p158. Joe acted as a sponsor in his turn to about 20 new TS members, the last one making their application in October 1894.

Some mentions of Joe in the TS's main magazine of the 1890s, published in London by its Theosophical Publishing Society. I didn't see Ray mentioned at all.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume X March-August 1892 p166; p340.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume XI September 1892 to February 1893 p517-518.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume XII March-August 1893 p67, p253.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume XIII September 1893 to February 1894 p71, the last mention of Joe that I found.

Old Diary Leaves by Henry Steel Olcott, his memoirs of the early days of the TS. Published in 6 volumes between 1895 and 1932 by the Theosophical Publishing Society of Adyar Madras. Volume 6 1893-96 p210-222.

KATHERINE TINGLEY IN ENGLAND

At website scribd: an account of the Crusaders' visit to England appears in Theosophy volume XI number 2 May-December 1896 pp130-31.

BRADFORD TS

There's an online history of this lodge, which is still in existence. See www.ts-bradford.org.uk. Very many of the names mentioned are of people who were in both the TS and the GD and Joe at least will have known some of them. However, neither of the Gardners appears in the list of members.

TS ESOTERIC SECTION

The Golden Dawn and the Esoteric Section by R A Gilbert. Published London: Theosophical History Centre 1987: p3, pp6-8, p14 and p23 Appendix B which reprints an advert published in Lucifer volume 3 number p176. Joe is not mentioned at all in this account of the Esoteric Section.

ISAAC AND SARAH ELIZABETH TAYLOR

Via archive.org to Historic Notices....of the Borough and County Town of Flint by Henry Taylor (who's possibly another relation) published in London: Elliot Stock 1883: p213-214. Some of the book's illustrations were by Randolph Caldecott whose widow became a member of the GD.

At flinttowncouncil.co.uk a list of mayors of the town.

At www.nationalarchives.gov.uk records held at Flintshire Record Office as QS/FR/1 1836: rate assessment for Flintshire.

At Endowed Charities of Anglesey. Return and Digest for 1897 in what is probably an obituary, Isaac Taylor of Cole's Hill (sic) Bagillt is described as "agent of Lady Vivian".

At www.archiveswales.org.uk a history of the Plas Gwyn estate whose records are now in the National Library of Wales.

At www.crafcroftspeerage.co.uk a family tree of the barons Vivian.

A RICHARD GARDNER IN BUSINESS AROUND 1855 though it's impossible from the published details to know if it's Rachel's father, Joseph's father or a more distant relation: London Gazette date of issue not at top of page but it must be from May or June 1855. On p2184 one of a list of partnerships recently dissolved includes, on 31 May 1855 by mutual consent, that of Richard, Joseph and William Gardner, timber merchants trading as R I (or possibly R J) and W Gardner.

ESTHER TAYLOR GARDNER

IF this is the right woman: familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1520014

JOE AND RAY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Via www.theosophycanada.com to Fohat. A Quarterly Pubn of the Edmonton TS vol IX no 2 summer 2005 pp 41-43 article by Ted G Davy: An Early Theosophist in Western Canada: Joseph K Gardner. Family history details were supplied by Dorothy Sonnenberg, daughter of Radha Gardner.

BLOSSOMS...

I could only find one copy of Joe Gardner's book: in the collection of the University of Alberta. It's Blossoms Culled from East and West published Vancouver BC: Sun Publishing 1938.

At //theosophy.katinkahesselink.net/canadian you can read issues of The Canadian Theosophist, first published in 1926. Its volume 20, issue of 15 March 1939, p15 had an anonymous review of Blossoms...

CANADA

Familysearch information from the Canadian census of 1911: sub-districts 1-54 in British Columbia, Yale and Cariboo districts.

Familysearch GS film number 2032873: marriage of Harry Wisby Leonard to Radha Knight Gardner, January 1920. Harry was also a recent immigrant to Canada; he'd been born in Portsmouth.

Familysearch GS film number 2074506: marriage of Arthur Godwin Gardner to May Victoria Welch, March 1927 in Vancouver BC.

Familysearch GS film number 1953194: death of Joseph Knight Gardner 8 November 1937.

***

19 December 2014

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

http://pws.prserv.net/Roger\_Wright/

***

Ellen Sophie Gaskell née Atkins was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple on 20 March 1897 and took the Latin motto 'Vox et praeterea nihil'. Three other people were initiated as part of the same ritual - Frederick Clarence Ritchie, Edith Jermyn Beaufort and Laura Gertrude Love, though I don't think Ellen necessarily knew any of them beforehand.

The GD was not the first secret organisation that Ellen had joined. She had actually founded a secret association a few years before. Perhaps she found it impossible to find time to do both groups justice. She certainly was far more committed to the aims of the association she had founded. Ellen never followed up her GD initiation and doesn't seem to have attended many, if any, subsequent rituals.

Ellen's husband George Arthur Gaskell was just as interested in esoteric ideas as she was, and it's a puzzle to me why he never joined the GD. I imagine that he was offered the opportunity; but perhaps he decided, like Ellen, that western magic was not for him.

ELLEN'S FAMILY

Ellen was the younger daughter of George Atkins and his wife Miriam Elizabeth Timpson. I could not find out anything much about George Atkin's youth or family except that he was born in Lewisham around 1820. I know a little bit more about Miriam: she was born in September 1820 in the parish of Cripplegate, City of London, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth. She told census officials over several decades that she'd been born in Birmingham, so she may have grown up there rather than in London.

George Atkins had qualified as a solicitor and was working in London when he and Miriam married, in Lewisham, in 1849. They lived at George Place in Lewisham Village for the first few years of their marriage and their children Alfred and Clare were born there, in 1850 and 1852. However, between 1852 and their daughter Delia Elizabeth's birth in 1854, the family moved to Aston on the outskirts of Birmingham. Perhaps family contacts of Miriam's were able to offer George a better job there than he was likely to get in London. He may have been the 'Atkins' of the solicitors' firm Snow and Atkins whose offices in the late 1870s were in Ann Street (renamed Colmore Row when Council House Square now known as Victoria Square was built). The firm was still in practice in 1906 and possibly later.

Ellen Sophie Atkins was born in 1855 while the family was living in Aston; her younger brothers Frederick (1856) and Gilbert (1857) were also born there. Then the family moved to the south side of Birmingham where the next son, Ion, was born. In 1861 the Atkins were living at 2 Belgrave Place, Belgrave Road Edgbaston. George and Miriam's youngest child Joseph had been born a few days before census day that year - a lying-in nurse was part of the Atkins household on census day, along with their one general servant. Joseph died after only a couple of months so Ellen - aged six - might not have ever remembered him; but in 1869 she will have felt the death of her older brother Clare (he was a boy not a girl apparently) at the age of 16 and it's possible that brother Frederick also died young as I can't find any trace of him after census day 1871.

By the time of Clare's death the family had moved again, to Worcestershire; perhaps they had moved there in search of better health for the boy. On the day of the census 1871 they were living at 20 Ladypool Lane King's Norton. Alfred was now working and training in the office of an engineering firm. Although Delia was described on the 1871 census form as still having lessons I think this might be a mistake by the census official as Ellen - a year or two younger - was not so described. I think that by 1871 Delia and Ellen's lessons - whatever they had consisted of - were over for good, and that they were helping their mother run the household, so that the expense of a servant could be dispensed with. Employing even the one maid-of-all-work was a mark of social status, as well as a great convenience for the household, and the lack of any servant living in the Atkins household in 1871 gives me the impression that George Atkins' income was uncertain and his family were having to be very careful with their expenses.

By the day of the 1881 census, George and Miriam Atkins had moved back to Aston and were living in 119 Conybere Street. Delia was still living at home and so were Gilbert and Ion, both of whom were working by now, Gilbert as a lithographer and draughtsman, Ion as a managing clerk in a solicitor's firm, presumably the one his father also worked for or was a partner in. The family was employing a general servant once more, now three sets of wages were coming in. I couldn't find Ellen at all on the 1881 census so she must have been abroad. She was now 26, and it's possible she had gone away to have some training, or some more training, as a singer.

I've found two references to Ellen as a singer, a soprano. They are a news item about her marriage; and a remark she made herself in an article she wrote about diet and health. If you wanted to read it that way, the fact that she knew Charles Santley could also be a reference. Charles Santley was one of the best-known British baritones of the 19th-century, touring frequently from the 1850s to the 1890s to sing opera and oratorio; so that Ellen could have heard him many times at concerts, from her childhood onwards. Actually being acquainted with this famous singer was a bit different though. It's possible Ellen took lessons with him - from the 1890s, as his stage career finally began to wind down, he did take pupils; but perhaps it's more likely that they just met through mutual, musically-inclined friends. However they became acquainted, Ellen knew Santley well enough to ask him for advice on how he kept his voice and throat prepared to sing.

It's clear from Ellen's writings of the mid-1890s that she had managed to obtain a musical training beyond that which most middle-class women of her time could expect: she knew some harmonic theory. However, I haven't been able to find any other references in books, magazines or newspapers to Ellen as a singer and she never described herself as such to any census official. I've come to two cautious conclusions about this lack of information: that Ellen sang mostly at private parties, not on concert platforms; and that she may not have been paid for her singing. Ellen was serious about her musical career and did her best to overcome handicaps she knew were holding her back in it; but she was never a famous singer and perhaps never seriously expected to become one.

Ellen's mother Miriam died in 1886 and her father George in 1887 and it's likely (though I can't prove it) that Ellen didn't live with any of her family from this time on: not for her the life led by her sister Delia, of keeping house for her brothers in the Birmingham suburbs. Neither parent seems to have had much money to leave their children and I wonder how Ellen managed, financially, after that time, if she didn't charge for her singing; although you could, and some GD members did, manage to survive in the 1880s and 1890s on an income that to us would seem miniscule. Ellen did earn or inherit enough money to spend two years between the beginning of 1890 and the end of 1892 in the USA; she was in America on census day 1891. She spent part of those two years in St Louis and it was there that she came across the concept of colour-music. Her study of the connection between light and music continued for many years. So sure did she become that colour and musical tone held the key to the future of humanity, that she decided it was her life's work to alert people to their importance and to prepare them for the coming of a new life based on them: an era of true equality between the sexes and of release from the dominance of the body over the soul.

MUSIC AND COLOUR

Different colours and different musical notes are now known to be the way humans experience different wavelengths of electromagnetism. The idea that sound and light might be vibrations from different points along the same continuum goes back to Pythagoras' experiments with lyre and monochord; and forward through Newton's Opticks and his Principia Mathematica to the mathematical-physics of quantum theory. It's still an important study within music. Other lines of descent from Pythagoras led to the concept of music as an art of healing; and to the works of Robert Fludd and the Rosicrucians - a blend of science and mysticism.

Ellen's pamphlet The Secret of Happiness was printed by the Women's Printing Society Ltd of 66 Whitcomb Street London WC late in 1894; at her own expense. Its subject was two connected beliefs that were quite widely held in occult circles, and to which Ellen returned to in later articles. Firstly, that the Divine Spirit in each human was being starved in the modern world. And secondly, that the body was "only a Passing-Note" (as Ellen put it), of little importance in the longer term; it was the Spirit that was important and would endure. If you believed in these two arguments, it was clear to you that Man's priorities in the late 19th-century were wrong: the focus on the material world only, and the neglect of the spirit, were causing all the modern world's ills. There's plenty of late 19th-century writing along those lines, including some by other members of the GD. Writers in this vein usually had particular points that they wanted to make - areas of spiritual neglect that they wanted to draw their readers' attention to - and Ellen, too, added to the basic argument a couple of twists of her own. Firstly she thought that the ills of the body were currently being treated incorrectly by doctors who didn't believe in the existence of the soul or spirit - by which she meant by the use of “drugs, operating knives and vivisection horrors”. And secondly, she was sure that if people would only nourish their Spirit with colour and music, mankind would be able to make the next step in evolution, to a higher level of cosmic understanding.

Other themes Ellen aired in The Secret of Happiness were not widely held, even in esoteric circles, but they were at the core of the work she now felt she must do, in moving humanity on from materialism. Ellen felt that the Spirit needed liberating, that it had become imprisoned in the body; and that the concept of Love had become debased by the emphasis on sex, so that true union between man and woman had become impossible. It was also impossible while women were not acknowledged as equal; equal but different. Ellen’s work was to free the Spirit by getting mankind to give up sexual union and replace it with a more lasting and fulfilling relationship - the union of Spirit with Spirit, with man and woman on equal but different terms.

Although a lot of Ellen’s arguments in The Secret of Happiness were couched in Christian terms, her idea that “now there is coming the revelation of God as Woman” was definitely not Christian orthodoxy. In the new era Ellen was wanting to bring about, man and woman would worship the Mother-Father, not the Father and Son. Ellen was sure from the evidence she saw about her that Woman was awakening after a long sleep in a world dominated by man and rationality. Woman, Ellen wrote, was preparing herself for “a great, universal Spring clean” of mankind which would end with a “loss of individuality in this world” and create the conditions for the union of Spirit with Spirit. It would be through colour that woman would be revealed as her true self, and the new era of true equality would begin - perhaps very soon.

Ellen ended her pamphlet with two songs, which were perhaps a battle-cry for the secret association she founded to help her do her spring-cleaning: a Hymn of Life; and The Name Whereby We Shall be Saved, A Hymn to Jehovah “Mother-Father Wonderful”.

The Secret of Happiness might have been by way of a prelude to a much larger book Ellen was working on in the mid-1890s, called The Key of David (Revelations 3:7) Revealing the Motherhood of God. Apparently, the book was going to explain the revelation by tabulating a series of correspondences, equating the seven musical notes of the scale of A-minor (which is known as the Key of David) with: the seven colours; the seven days of the creation myth in Genesis; the messages in Revelations; and several other sets of seven. Ellen was going to argue that the evil in the world was the result of mankind’s misunderstanding of those correspondences. Correspondences, of course, are part of the bedrock of western magic. I don’t know how far Ellen got with the Motherhood of God book; it was never published as far as I can see. Perhaps Ellen was waylaid by the practical details of starting a new social movement: that sort of thing does take time.

The secret association Ellen founded does seem to have remained more or less a secret: I have found two passing references to its existence around 1893-95, soon after it was formed; but nothing else. The references were both in music magazines published in America. Though her secret group was meant to operate in England, Ellen wrote several times over the next few years that she expected the new era she was working towards to show itself in the USA first, and she was doing her best to recruit American members. She must have sent some kind of prospectus of her new association to both magazines, together with either the full text of another book she was working on - not the David book - or a detailed synopsis of it. The secret association was called the Motherhood of Music Association. Although she deplored the current emphasis on sex, Ellen also shared the contemporary view that motherhood was woman's highest calling, and saw herself and her co-workers in the association, as being the mothers of the new era-to-be.

In her prospectus, Ellen said that the Motherhood of Music Association would be holding meetings at the Ladies' Own Tea Association shop and tea rooms, on the second floor of 90 New Bond Street. It would be very interesting to know how many women turned up at the meetings; and how many of those who did turn up were members of the GD. The Association was to be a secret, core group of women workers for spiritual and evolutionary change. However, Ellen also invited readers of The Secret of Happiness to contact her at the Musical Exchange, a recently-founded club for musicians at 16 George Street Hanover Square; and to join a Society with no particular rules, which was to have a rather wider reach and be more public. She was having a membership brooch designed in the form of a treble clef with three notes in the corresponding colours she had explained in The Secret of Happiness. And she hoped to found branches of the society in the USA, New Zealand and Australia, through which the work of spiritual spring-cleaning would be begun, world-wide.

I couldn't find any evidence that the Motherhood of Music Association ever got further towards the fulfilment of Ellen's aims than just being a chance for like-minded women to meet. But then, its work was on the astral level (if you like to think of it that way) not the material one. Not so visible to the historian.

In 1895, just at the time when Ellen's new social movement should have been getting established, something happened to her that I would imagine she had ceased to hope for. She got married, to George Arthur Gaskell. For some years at least, her life ran on two parallel but hugely different lines - one messianic, one very domestic; with theosophy added to the mix - already pretty rich - of Ellen's thinking on Christianity and music-colour theory.

GEORGE ARTHUR GASKELL

George Gaskell was born in 1843, the eldest son of Peter Gaskell and his wife Sarah, née Sherlock. Both his parents' families came from Lancashire. Peter Gaskell did not work, he lived on the proceeds of houses and offices rented out. George and his seven siblings grew up in suburban Liverpool and north Wales before moving south, first to Hastings and - by census day 1871 - to Camberwell in south London, where Peter Gaskell died in September 1872. His widow and those of her children who were still living at home went to live in Brighton.

George Gaskell was already working as an artist at the time his father died. It has been hard to find out anything much about his career in art; partly because he seems to have exhibited very few paintings, and partly because he has the same name as, and was a contemporary of, Professor George A Gaskell, the American teacher of calligraphy and the history of writing. I would particularly like to know where Ellen's George Gaskell did his artist's training; because, depending on which art school he went to (if he went to one) he might have met several future members of the GD.

Until his marriage George Gaskell moved around quite a bit. He lived in Bradford in the mid-1880s and in Edinburgh in the early 1890s. Both of those towns would have a GD temple founded in them and though he may not have met any future GD members in Bradford, he certainly met some in Edinburgh because he was a member of the Theosophical Society by then, and so was almost everyone who joined the GD in Edinburgh. It seems very likely that Ellen met GD members through George Gaskell and I say again that it's odd that she joined the Order but not him.

George Gaskell first joined the TS in April 1890. He let that application drop for some reason, only to apply a second time, about a year later, with two sponsors who were well-known TS members - G R S Mead and W R Old. George became a member of the TS's Blavatsky Lodge, which consisted of Mead, Old and other close associates of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. He stayed a member of the TS through the power struggle between W Q Judge and Annie Besant, after Blavatsky's death; during which so many members left; and he was willing to sponsor Ellen's membership application to the TS in 1898, after Annie Besant had won; only to resign again for good this time, in 1904.

When exactly Ellen Atkins and George Gaskell met I don't know. Both their families had connections with south London and they might have known each other since they had been children. It's more likely, though, that they did not become acquainted until Ellen returned from her time living in the USA - around 1892 - all fired-up with music-colour theory and its chances of changing the world.

I'm fairly sure that it was George Gaskell who introduced Ellen to theosophy and the eastern philosophy on which it was based. The argument of The Secret of Happiness was put forward in strictly western terms; perhaps Ellen had already finished it when she got to know her future husband well. However, an article that was published in The Theosophist in November 1894 showed Ellen attempting to weld together her Christian beliefs, her ideas on music-colour theory; and the eastern idea of cosmic cycles of history, which had reached the west through theosophy. In the article she argued that "some great crisis" was expected shortly by "all classes of thinkers", and she included herself amongst these thinkers, on the grounds that she was one of the few people who had developed what she called their "7th sense", a "purely spiritual" sense, sufficiently to see what was coming. After the crisis was over, with several historical cycles ending at the same time, that era would begin which Ellen was working for.

LIFE WITH GEORGE

Ellen Sophie Atkins and George Arthur Gaskell were married in Brighton - where most of his family still lived - in 1895. Having started off their married life in Brighton (I think), they then lived for about four years in a flat in London - number 1 West End Mansions, which was a purpose-built block on West End Lane in the centre of West Hampstead. That was their address when Ellen joined the GD in 1897 and they were still there on census day 1901; though soon afterwards they left for 4 Castle Hill in Hastings before moving back to Brighton before 1904, to 68 Ditchling Road. On census day 1901 the Gaskells were sharing their six-roomed flat with George's widowed sister Alice Mansell. Alice told the census official she was an artist, although I haven't found any evidence of pictures by her, either in the normal reference books or on the web. With both her husband and her sister-in-law working at their art, and apparently no money to afford servants - or at least no wish to spend the money they had on hired help - the burden of housework and cookery fell on Ellen; who wrote an article about how much better-able she was to take on these heavy and time-consuming tasks now, than she had been in the past.

SUPERCOOKING

There's nothing much new under the sun! An edited version of Ellen's article on how and what she cooked these days was published in an American magazine in March 1898 under the headline 'Super-cooked food': not quite 'supercook', or 'super food'; but nearly there! The article excited so much interest that four variations of it saw the light of day between autumn 1897 and spring 1898 - the very time when Ellen was involved with the GD. Longer versions with more practical detail appeared in the English papers English Mechanic and World of Science and the Weekly Times and Echo; and different, shorter, versions were published in the American Vegetarian Society's magazine Food, Home and Garden and in Good Housekeeping.

To the readers of the English Mechanic.. Ellen explained that after years of ill-health which normal medicine had not really cured, she had made radical changes to the way she ate: both what she ate, and how she prepared it. As part of the changes, she had read a great many recent books and articles on diet and health; and she had also asked around for advice, which is where Charles Santley comes in. Because not only were Ellen's health problems debilitating and depressing, they were hampering her career in music - she had had for years a tendency to catch feverish colds that took a long time to clear up and affected her voice.

Ellen didn't slavishly adopt all the advice contained in her reading: using herself as a guinea-pig she tried it out and discarded quite a lot of it, before reaching a diet and cooking method that made continual ill-health a thing of the past. They gave other benefits too: Ellen had more energy; and she also had more time. This was all happening (I think) at the time when she was deeply immersed in music-colour theory; the years when she met and married George Gaskell; and the months that she was involved with the GD. It was a period when virtually all her previous understanding of life was jettisoned - heady stuff.

Ellen began her dietary experiments by giving up meat and in 1897 she was still a vegetarian. However, although eating no meat improved her overall health, she was still catching those flu-ey colds, so more experimentation was necessary. For a while, she lived on fruit and nuts and nothing else - not even salt, which she had abandoned on the advice of a Mrs Wallace (whom I haven't been able to identify) who thought it was dangerous, and of Charles Santley, who told Ellen salt harmed his throat. The fruitarian diet got rid of the colds altogether but Ellen soon found it had serious disadvantages: it cost a lot and was very inconvenient when she was away from home; she also found herself craving bread, and salt (as well she might). Rather reluctantly, she started eating cereals and vegetables again - but the resulting meals were bland, she often felt physically weak and was always cold; and back came the flu-ey colds. At this frustrating and rather depressing point, around the summer of 1896, Ellen came across an article about Dr Kellogg's sanatorium, where slow-cooked food was the basis of the patients' treatment. Everything fell into place and she realised that though the items in her diet were the right ones, the way she had cooked them had been wrong.

Ellen started cooking all her food - not just cereals - for as much as four hours. Over the next year or so she worked out a set of 'best-methods' - which foods were best steamed, which were better baked in the oven, and how long to cook each type of food, for the most pleasing results. She found that all her food tasted better cooked that way. It also kept for longer - which in the days before the fridge, was an important benefit, meaning less time spent shopping and watching the stove. Wondering whether the health problems Mrs Wallace blamed on yeast might actually be the result of bread not being cooked for long enough, Ellen developed a yeasted “supercooked bread”, which she could eat without any digestive troubles and was so popular with her neighbours that in late 1897 she was baking it regularly for 10 households.

From health and/or financial considerations, the Gaskells only had the coal fire burning in their flat for two days each week, so on those two days Ellen cooked enough food to last the other five; heating up the left-overs on an oil-stove on the non-fire days. They soon found that eating slow-cooked cereals meant that they weren’t hungry so often. So they followed another set of dietary advice, this time from a book by Dr Edward Hooker Dewey, and gave up breakfast. By 1897 they were only eating one big meal each day, at mid-day, with the occasional snack in the evening.

Isn’t Ellen’s tale of revitalisation-by-diet modern? And there being nothing new under the sun, it was also timely for many readers of her article. The extent of the feedback and the number of requests for more detail from readers of the published articles seems to have taken the various newspapers and magazines by surprise. When preparing to publish its own version of it, the Vegetarian Society of America must have contacted Ellen and asked for more practical information. When the article appeared in the Society’s Food, Home and Garden it included a list of Ellen’s best-methods (for different vegetables, pulses, rice, and that yeasted bread) so that readers could try them out in their own kitchens.

If Ellen had been alive to publish a book in our modern era of dietary gurus she might have made a fortune! No matter that there were other explanations for a lot of the changes in her health; and that some of the advice she took was faddish. She called the method of cookery she had developed “super-cooking”, over 100 years before variations on the term entered modern TV and advertising terminology. Super-cooking revolutionised her life. She had only had one flu-ey cold after reading the article about Dr Kellogg; after an incident of back-sliding when she had succumbed to an ordinarily-cooked loaf of bread and some oatcakes. By early 1897 she was convinced that the level of chronic illness she saw around her was the result of bad eating habits: people were eating the wrong things, poorly cooked, and Ellen wanted to help them find the cure that she had found. Hence the article.

With her energy levels raised by her super-cooked diet, Ellen could now do “a long morning’s hard work” washing clothes, cleaning the flat and - on coal fire days - cooking and preparing all that bread. With more energy, and not bothering with breakfast any more, she could have the heavy work done by mid-morning, so that after their one, mid-day meal, the rest of the day was free for her to concentrate on other things - a walk, meetings in the afternoon, keeping engagements to sing in the evening; and preparing for the new era of humanity. The coming crisis was not far from Ellen’s thoughts even as she wrote down the details of how she super-cooked a rice pudding: she was thinking that if more women organised their food and hours her way, they would have more time and energy to spend doing the women’s work that was necessary to make the new era a reality.

AFTER THE CRISIS OF HUMANITY

In the mid-1890s Ellen believed that the coming crisis of humanity had begun already and she actually named 1896 as the year in which the public at large would begin to be aware of it. I guess she must have joined the GD as part of her preparations for that critical time, in which the population would usher the new era in by coming to understand the true meaning of love. I don’t know what she made of the year 1896 and its immediate successors. However, no articles by Ellen appeared between 1898 and 1904 and in her later writing she never mentioned the importance of 1896. There are other indications that 1896 et seq had disappointed her. By late 1903 she seems to have been seeking reassurance on two counts: that the new era of humanity would become obvious soon, and that she herself was scheduled play an important part in the process. After a gap of several years, she and George started having seances again. While scorning to become involved in the social world of spiritualism, or to go to seances with either amateur or professional mediums, they had gone through a period of holding them, just the two of them, using a planchette (a kind of board with a hole in it, used to help in automatic writing sessions) with Ellen as the medium, writing the questions and the answers. Both Ellen and George were given reassurance by two separate-but-linked sets of seances with entities which they understood in theosophical terms. So important did they think the communications they received to be, that George wrote up accounts of them and sent them to the Theosophical Review.

In talking about what happened during these sessions I'm trying not to be too sceptical but you can see from what George wrote about what happened, that the the question-and-answer sessions can be interpreted as communication with Ellen and George's unconscious minds; rather than with entities from the Beyond.

The first three sessions were with an entity that identified itself as a fire elemental working on the higher reaches of the Devachanic plane; which had come in response to George's recent reading (probably a re-reading) of Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine. A lot of Ellen and George's questions to this entity were personal and they kept the answers to themselves. The questions that appeared in George's article would have been of interest to theosophists, and not obviously personal; though if you had known Ellen well you would have realised how very personal some of them were.

It's not clear how long a gap of time there was before the next set of seances, in which Ellen and George communicated with a whole group of entities George called devas "active on high mental planes". This time it was Ellen who was told that her thoughts had caused the entities to appear: "...you called me. You thought of my colour..." and in these sessions she led the questioning rather than George. The responses confirmed two views of herself that Ellen might have begun to doubt: the devas told her that she was being trained for a particular job in the new era of humanity; and that they were not able to communicate with many humans because so few understood the language of music-colour. Both Ellen and George were told not to be put off doing the work they were destined to do for the future of mankind by the hostility of other people, or the hostility of other visions Ellen had had.

Having received some of the reassurance she needed, Ellen asked what would be the result of her and George's work - what the future of the human race would look like. She was given some details: that the law of karma would apply; that the new era of humanity would be based on the principles of theosophy, religion and socialism; and that women would take their proper place in it, as teachers and upholders of Natural Law. The article reads as though it was George that asked Ellen to put the question about socialism. I don't think she would have thought of it on her own account: a world of true relationships between the sexes wouldn't need socialism, would I think have been her view. (Also, of course, the species would rapidly become extinct if all humans followed Ellen's call to give up sex and try for a more lasting basis for their relationships.)

There were practices in the question-and-answer sessions that Ellen may have been remembering from her short time in contact with the GD: each of the devas which she saw presided over a different point of the compass and told her to face in that direction while they were communicating with her; and one deva told Ellen that she had a part to play in the awakening India's women to the crisis of the new era of humanity, a part she must play by travelling to India, not in person but astrally. Of course, we'll never know for sure whether she carried out her orders!

Although George sent his accounts of the two sets of sessions to the Theosophical Review, by the time the second of them was published neither he nor Ellen was a member of the TS any more. Ellen may have decided to resign because of what Annie Besant was doing at the Central Hindu College there, trying to revitalise Hinduism in India. She wrote to The Theosophist criticising Annie's efforts on two counts: that Hinduism was too much corrupted to be rescued by its own followers; and that Annie would never achieve anything lasting unless she reached out to India's women as well as its men. Ellen put forward the idea (which I find mind-boggling) that Hinduism and Christianity should somehow come together to form a new religion; the energy and competitiveness of Christianity lifting Hinduism out of the sloth that had allowed India to be conquered by the British. After several years studying theosophy Ellen had decided for Christianity. She could not approve of Hinduism's emphasis on freeing yourself from the laws of cause and effect - from karma. She thought it resulted in inertia, a psychological "paralysis and death", and she had opted instead for Christianity's individuality and its belief that all are equal in the sight of God - for the USA rather than India as the place where the new era of humanity would begin. It seems strange to me that, holding those views, she should act as medium to entities that she and George both understood were theosophy not Christianity and perhaps they did shake her preference for Christianity for a while: Joy Dixon, in her book The Divine Feminine, mentions that Ellen rejoined the TS at some point after 1907. However she had resigned again by 1912 and her comments on Annie Besant's work, her comments on it were the last article she had published in a theosophical journal as far as I know.

By 1904 Ellen must have been heavily involved in the longest piece of writing she ever attempted, A Woman's View of Genesis Chapter Two Verses 18-25. She and George may have been studying Genesis together: George too had a work on it published, though not until 1925. Ellen's book was definitely published, by Advance Press of Upper Richmond Road, in 1905, but I haven't been able to find a single copy of it anywhere - not on the web nor in any library. I have found one copy of what might have been a kind-of companion piece - Ellen getting in her retaliation first with a pamphlet on Crankiness - but I couldn't justify a trip to the Bodleian Library just to look at one publication of a few pages, so I don't know what was in it - although I think the gist of it is pretty clear.

In the absence of the book itself all I can do by way of guessing what A Woman's View of Genesis might be about is: say what II 18-25 consists of; and suggest that the book was an elaboration (into 248 pages) of her views as expressed in The Theosophist in November 1894. Genesis Chapter Two verses 18-25 is the section where God creates Eve out of Adam's rib. Ellen argued that woman - unlike man - was NOT born of the earth. At her creation woman was not of the material world, she had only become so since the Fall and thus couldn't be held responsible for the material world's problems. Ellen preferred to think of woman's creation as showing Eve as silence being taken out of Adam as sound. Since the Fall woman had not been able to sing - that is, until very lately. When woman could sing again it would be an indication that the imbalance between the sexes was being righted, and the human species was approaching that new era of human evolution.

The book was reviewed in Review of Reviews, probably by the magazine's founder and chief editor W T Stead. With not many words to spare for it, he merely called it "mystical and biblical". The Theosophist, rather cleverly, got a woman (also anonymous) to review it. She criticised Ellen for blaming men for everything. However, like Ellen, she thought that both sexes would have to work hard, and work together, to bring about the right conditions for mankind's next evolutionary step. The unknown woman also agreed with Ellen's view that those who called themselves Christian but didn't live their lives according to Christianity's teachings, were part of the problem not part of the solution.

THE WOMAN QUESTION

After the book on Genesis two years went by before a long article by Ellen was published that was the first of three in which she concentrated on 'the woman question', and on the 'now'. There was no religion in 'Women's Sphere of Work', which was published in the March 1907 edition of the Westminster Review, a long-established magazine with a reputation for political radicalism at least in theory. Ellen didn't really have anything much that was new to say on the various issues around women's work - for pay or not for pay, in the home or out in the world, were women physically up to the demands of work, should they do work previously only done by men; that sort of thing - but she did point up the issues of class and wealth (or lack of it) that underpinned so much of the debate while not always being openly acknowledged. And she argued that it was women's job in the modern world to stand apart from its tendency to judge everything solely by its monetary value; and to supervise a general movement towards "higher possibilities through increase of knowledge": the argument she had made in so much of her writing, but stripped of all spiritual or religious content. She was aiming to get those views out to a wider public; perhaps in increasing anxiety that society was going not towards a higher level of evolution but determinedly in the other direction, towards a completely materialist society.

From women's work it was a short walk to woman's suffrage and in 1912 Ellen contributed to the ongoing debate about it, writing a response to items published by the Times in which the Sir Almroth Wright attributed women who wanted the vote were mentally unbalanced; and Dr Leonard Williams suggested that the lunacy laws would have to be re-written if women didn't stop campaigning for it. The basis of Ellen's riposte was: how safe were women, having to consult doctors who were so out of touch with half their patients? And of course, Ellen was speaking from personal experience when she endorsed the recent opinion of Dr Agnes Savill that male doctors were 50 years behind the times when it came to treating women. In the rest of the article she took up the question of imbalance to argue that the importance of women and men to society could be seen as a set of scales, at the moment seriously out of balance due to the weight of favour and importance coming down so heavily on its male side. No real progress in evolution could be made until the balance was equal on both sides. Bulk, and force - the male side - wasn't everything; the "finer forces" on the female side must be seen as just as essential.

Ellen also tackled what she felt was underlying the attitude of Sir Almroth Wright and others (mostly men) like him - a fear of the consequences of giving women the vote when there were so many more women than men in Britain. She reminded Wright that an excess of women over men was nothing new; and detailed some of the good things that these excess women had spent their time doing in the past. However, two novels recently chosen for serialisation in the Daily Mail had made Ellen worry that even women's work as healers and in religious education was under attack. They were also feeling the pressure of the intense scrutiny they were now under as mothers and potential mothers of the British race - a scrutiny mostly formulated and carried out by men.

In short, Ellen felt that there was a concerted, possibly even conscious, effort being made by the (male) powers that be to condemn women as mad for wanting to lead a fuller life. This trend had to be stopped. She ended her article by returning to the imagery of imbalance and scales, saying that giving women the vote was essential if the balance between the sexes was going to be righted.

Ellen's women's suffrage article was published in The Freewoman, a magazine founded by Dora Marsden to voice radical views not just on the vote but on all the issues that surrounded the woman question. The Freewoman was so radical in its choice of subject-matter and so strident in its views that it made most women nervous, never mind most men. However, during the two years of its existence, Ellen was a regular reader, and may have been one of its 300 subscribers. She had already had one other article published in the Freewoman, which had helped build the magazine's reputation. It was on by far the most controversial subject she ever wrote about: syphilis. She was very well aware that she was breaking taboos, as a woman, by even admitting she knew of its existence. She felt, though, that men had so consistently refused to take full responsibility for their part in the spread of the disease, that women couldn't take the risk of ignoring it any longer - the very stability of the Empire and the future vitality of the British people was at stake. Ellen was particularly concerned about the children who had it; and how married women to be protected from unwittingly catching it from their infected husbands.

Ellen had probably been roused to write this particular article by decisions recently made by the various campaigns for women's suffrage, to leave all issues surrounding sexual behaviour (and its consequences) out of their arguments. She thought it was cowardly and missing the point to continue to let men off the hook this way. Her own view was that men ought to be forced by moral pressure and even by law, to raise their own standards of sexual behaviour to the standards they expected of women. I'm not sure whether George Gaskell share this particular attitude, but it's very likely that Ellen's ideas about how far syphilis was damaging the British race, will have been influenced by George's interest in eugenics.

When the Gaskells got married, he was 52 and she was 40. However, their not having any children may have been a pro-active decision on their part, rather than the result of the age of the two partners. I've already said that Ellen in her writing was looking forward to an era in which sexual passion between man and woman would have been replaced by something more lasting. She might have thought that not becoming a mother was a price she must pay for the part she saw herself playing in bringing into being the new era of humanity she was so convinced was imminent. (She did never have any children.) Or - as the middle-classes were increasingly doing despite a moral climate that continued to be against it - they may have used contraception to make sure Ellen was not going to conceive. She may even have married George on the understanding that they would not have a sexual relationship.

George had been an active advocate of eugenics at least since the late 1870s when he'd had a short exchange of letters with Charles Darwin on the possibilities offered by evolution by natural selection for preventing the 'unfit' from having children; and for keeping the birth-rate low by use of contraception. He wrote two pamphlets for The Malthusian League in the 1890s, and even in the late-1920s he was still a convinced eugenicist, regularly reading the Eugenics Review and probably a member of the Eugenics Society that published it.

Ellen saw women demanding the vote and taking the initiative in the control of syphilis as good indications of the rise of women she had been predicting in her articles announcing the new era of humanity. However, by 1911 Ellen was increasingly worried at the lack of any other indication that the human species had begun to take that evolutionary step; perhaps even by a sense that she was failing in her own task of helping lead mankind along the right path. She had not entirely given up hope that her fellow humans would follow her, but she was increasingly feeling short of support; as is shown (I think) by her reaction to a copy of the American journal The Bible Review she was lent by a friend during the summer of 1911. In this journal, she read an article in which the Rev George T Weaver talked about a seventh age of the world, the age of Aquarius (I did say there was nothing new under the sun), which he reckoned had begun in 1881. Ellen will also have seen that the journal's subtitle was: A Monthly Journal of Christian Esotericism. So excited was Ellen to find that a group of Christians she had never heard of were also working towards the new era, that she made an effort to find what little literature there was in Britain about them. And she wrote them a long letter - it was an article really - asking the publishers of the magazine who they were and what religious views their organisation had; and explaining her own.

She was now pinning her hopes on the coronation of Edward VII having been a high-point, having been - although she didn't actually say so - one of the ways in which the new era on the far side of the crisis of humanity was showing itself. I'm not sure whether Ellen had given up on the Motherhood of Music Association, or whether she was trying to start another idea to run in parallel with it, or whether her ideas had just moved on; but she was now trying to found something she called "a Theosophic Christhood" which would be governed by the "cult" (sic) of the Christ-Psyche, and in which occultism would become "scientific" (by which I suppose she means - accepted in mainstream thinking as something that could be researched and quantified).

The organisation that published The Bible Review was the Esoteric Fraternity Group of Applegate California. It had been founded in the late 1880s and surely, when she wrote her letter, Ellen must have taken that founding date to be another manifestation of the crisis of humanity. Ellen had discovered that the Fraternity's members were interested in what she called the "higher use of Sex". She told them that her Theosophic Christhood would leave behind the present era of uncontrolled and irresponsible sex in which men had understood women in the physical sense only. Instead women would lead men to a state of mind in which sex would be seen as "an electro-spiritual force" (she's not the only GD member to be very interested in the possibilities of electricity), with partners being revealed to each other by "Christ-psyche vision" - a true marriage made in heaven. She asked the Esoteric Fraternity whether they could help bring about this true harmony between the sexes.

In a long note at the end of Ellen's letter/article, the journal's editor, Hiram Butler, admitted that the Esoteric Fraternity Group had indeed been founded as a theosophic Christhood; and that it acknowledged that for any future evolution of the species to take place, both genders would need to be "in harmony with the Divine purpose". However, these were about the only views his group shared with Ellen. He disagreed that women were still degraded - he thought the sexes had achieved equality already - and he also thought (one would get bored to tears with hearing this argument if it wasn't so facile, so dangerous and so persistent) that male violence was the result of female provocation. He said that his group was reluctant to have anything much to do with theosophy as theosophy had no god. And he dismissed Ellen's arguments about cycles of humanity as the ideas of someone who just wasn't grounded in reality.

A snub; not the first she had received. Poor Ellen. It may have come, too, at a difficult time in Ellen's life. I may be reading far too much into some small pieces of evidence, but by 1911 she and George may have been living mostly or entirely apart.

Both Ellen and George were in England on the day of the 1911 census. Both of them had left London. But they were living in different places. On census day, both were the heads of households that consisted solely of themselves. George had returned to Brighton, to 19 Millers Road near the main station. Ellen, however, had gone to live at 55 Kimberley Road Portsmouth, a few minutes from the Esplanade at Southsea.

I'm not sure you can assume anything from the fact that both Ellen and George declared on their 1911 census forms that they were married. The social stigma of marriage breakdown made people who were in fact separated write down their legal status as 'married'; and of course they were married in the sense that they were not divorced (most of them not being able to afford it). I have already found three GD members and the daughter of another member, doing that in 1911. However, George and Ellen were both people who wrote and studied; who may have want short spells of time apart to concentrate on these things; and had just enough income to afford to pay two rents provided they each picked rooms in a street and/or town that was not too fashionable. A bit unorthodox, especially in terms of the time that they were living in; but not the same as being separated. It bothers me, though, that Ellen was still living in Southsea in the summer of 1911 - that was where she read her borrowed copy of The Bible Review. And that when George died, though Ellen was still alive, George's sister Louisa (who also lived in Brighton) was his executor. The 1921 census may give more information on whether George and Ellen were still living together at least some of the time.

AFTER GEORGE?

However she might have felt when she read their reply to her hopeful letter, I think Ellen was well-off out of the Esoteric Fraternity, if the views of its journal's editor were representative of its members. And even if the Esoteric Fraternity had been willing to work with her towards that theosophic Christhood, any cooperation would have been interrupted if not completely derailed by the first World War.

By 1925, when she was 70, Ellen had admitted to herself that the new era of humanity might not come to pass in her lifetime. She wrote to the Occult Review to ask why it was that her fellow humans did not want to take the opportunity that was offered, to create a more spiritual, more equal society - why they didn't believe that "forces and beings" could exist that were "higher than the human". She was still sure that such entities existed and were out there wanting to help, but saw all around her that belief in them was declining. She did end this rather wistful, short letter on a positive note, however, wondering if she was the one who had got it wrong, and that it was possible for the human species to lift itself up to that higher level of evolution without the help of these super-human beings.

I've only found evidence of one art work by George Gaskell after 1900. After a spurt of paintings around the time that he and Ellen married, he seems to have more or less given up art to concentrate on his occult studies. He had several books published in the 1920s, the results of at least two decades of research into the symbolism of the Bible and the religions of ancient Egypt. He died in Brighton, in 1933.

Ellen died in 1940. Her death was registered in Bromley so I presume that's where she had lived in her last years.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR ELLEN SOPHIE GASKELL

SNOW AND ATKINS

See wikipedia for the brief history of Ann Street and its change of name as Birmingham's commercial district expanded.

Kelly's Post Office Directory of Birmingham with its Suburbs issue of 1878 p393.

London Gazette 10 June 1879 p3873.

Commercial Gazette issue of 11 Oct 1893 p19.

Solicitors' Journal and Reporter volume 50 1906 p687.

ELLEN'S PARENTS

Familysearch England-ODM GS = 815948 records in Dr Williams' Library: birth of Miriam Elizabeth Timpson. Familysearch affiliated publication number RG4_4675 gives some more detail.

CHARLES SANTLEY has his own detailed wikipedia page.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register January 1889-September 1891 p160 entry for G A Gaskell. Theosophical Society Membership Register September 1891-January 1893 p38 entry for George Arthur Gaskell. Theosophical Society Membership Register 1895-May 1898 p221 entry for Mrs Ellen S Gaskell, with G A Gaskell as one of her sponsors. A note in the 'Remarks' column: "Rejoined see volume IX p293".

There's mention of George and Ellen in The Divine Feminine: Theosophy and Feminism in England by Joy Dixon. Baltimore and London: The Johns Hopkins University Press 2001: pp71-72; p195-196.

ELLEN'S COMING NEW AGE

It's likely that in talking about the coming new age, Ellen was meaning the Age of Aquarius. The idea that the world was about to move from the Age of Pisces to the Age of Aquarius was being discussed in occult circles in Ellen's time, and other members of the GD wrote about it, especially Henry Pullen-Burry. See wikipedia for the idea of historical ages governed by the precession of the equinoxes, a concept that goes back to Hipparchus. At the bottom of the wikipedia page is a discussion of when the Age of Aquarius might be beginning: none of the dates that are mentioned suggest that it began in the age in which Ellen was living; though several suggest dates near to our own time. Most seem to think it hasn't begun yet.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS, the only work by Ellen that's in the British Library catalogue.

The Secret of Happiness published London: 1894 at Ellen's expense; placed by the British Library cataloguers in Philosophical Tracts 1875-94.

Reputedly there were two reviews but I couldn't get to read either of them:

- The Path volume 9 1895 p323 which is an American theosophical magazine published New York and edited by W Q Judge at the time. The reviews are not online unfortunately.
- supposedly in Lucifer September 1894-January 1895 but I must have missed it.

Music-colour theory:

At www.rosicrucian.org an article from Rosicrucian Digest number 1 2009 p31: Pythagoras and Music by Melanie Richards M.Mus, SRC

At www.hps.cam.ac.uk contents of the Whipple Library shows their copy of Newton's Opticks printed for the Royal Society 1704 by Sam Smith and Benjamin Walford of London. In it he suggests that the spectrum of 7 colours was governed by the same ratios as music's diatonic scale. In Principia Mathematica Newton describes how sound moves through the air and he was especially interested in the correlations between the colour spectrum and the diatonic musical scale.

Just noting that via google I saw a book published 1844 London: Smith, Elder and Co, Colour-Music by D D Jameson.

At www.sacred-texts.com I found that Blavatsky had made correspondences between colours and 1) the principles of man; and 2) states of matter eg ether. Also at this website I found mention of The Principles of Light and Colour by Edwin Dwight Babbitt, which made correspondences between colours and musical notes so that C = red; and also between colours and the astrological zodiac so that Aries = pure red and so on until Pisces = violet-red. The book was published New York: Babbitt and Co 1878. I didn't see any evidence in Ellen's writings that she'd taken an interest in astrology, though; so perhaps she never came across Babbitt's book.

The Musical Exchange was very new when Ellen was using it as a postal address. Google came up with quite a few references to it covering 1894-95 but none from later:

Via newspaperarchive.com to the London Standard of 7 July 1894 p1 which is its classified ads page; and also on other days between July and December 1894 but not any later than that.

Via www.newspapers.com to The Westminster Budget of 28 December 1894 p16.

Via google to The Musical Herald and Tonic Sol-fa Reporter issues 550-561 1894 p30, p332.

Via google to Musical News volume 8 1895 p415.

UNFINISHED BOOK THE KEY OF DAVID... I note that the key of David isn't Ellen's invention. I couldn't find the book or any reference to Ellen's book on the web and it's not in the British Library catalogue either, at least not under that title and not with Ellen Atkins or Ellen Gaskell as author. She wasn't the only woman thinking along these lines: I noticed this book in the British Library catalogue: Woman's Divine Rights; or Key of David to Physical Immortality: A New Revelation by Frances C Wright, published 1910 in Philadelphia USA by the Philadelphia Order. I wonder if Ellen knew her?

ELLEN'S SECRET ASSOCIATION: the two mentions of it

1 = The Music Review editor F G Gleason; volumes 3-4 1893 p454.

2 = Werner's Magazine published Chicago: Music Teachers' National Association; volume 16 1894 p265.

The venue for its meetings:

At rcnarchive.rcn.org.uk The Nursing Record of 26 May 1892 p415.

At www.advertisingarchives.co.uk their image number 30541808 is an advert from the Ladies' Own Tea Association Ltd which appeared in The Queen, the Lady's Newspaper 30 November (unfortunately I couldn't read which year).

London Gazette 1 May 1903 p2790.

And a modern reference: Where to Take Tea by Susan Cohen. London: New Holland 2008 p41.

THE COLOURS AND TONES ARTICLE

The Theosophist volume XVI 1895 whose editor is co-founder of the Theosophical Society, Col Olcott. Published Adyar Madras: by its proprietors. Volume 16 number 2 November 1894 pp113-120 article by Ellen S Atkins: Colours and Tones. The article got a mention in Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine volume XV September 1894-February 1895, editors Annie Besant and G R S Mead. London: Theosophical Publishing Soc. The mention was in volume 15 number 88 issue of 15 December 1894 p349 in the section where the editors commented on other theosophical and “Mystic” publications. Reviewer “HTE” described Ellen’s article as “evidently the result of much intuitional study”. Is it just my suspicious nature thinking that “HTE” was not very impressed?

ELLEN’S ‘SUPERCOOKING ARTICLE’; its four different versions

I think the Version I’m calling 1 is the earliest though I haven’t seen it yet as I’m not quite certain which newspaper it was published in, or exactly when - my source for it was a bit vague on those points. The magazine or newspaper is most likely to have been the Weekly Times and Echo - see its entry in the Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature: 1800-1900 p2907-08 and also Wikipedia on Thomas Richard Allinson 1858-1918 who became its medical editor in 1885.

Version 2: English Mechanic and World of Science volume LXVI. This newspaper was owned by The Strand Newspaper Co; office at 332 Strand. Published for the Company by E J Kibblewhite. Ellen’s article is in issue number 1700 published 22 October 1897 pP222-223: When and What to Eat.

Variant 3: via archive.org to Food, Home and Garden volume 11 new series number 15 issued March 1898: p39 and p43: Super-Cooked Food. Editor Henry S Club. Published Philadelphia: Vegetarian Society of America.

Variant 4 which includes the first of the two references I have found to Ellen as a singer:

Good Housekeeping published by the Hearst Corporation; volume 26 number 5 May 1898: p216. Seen at hearth.library.cornell.edu from their set of GH back issues.

The article Ellen read on Dr Kellogg’s sanatorium was in the short-lived magazine Natural Food, issue of August 1896: E H Baker on A Model Invalid’s Hotel.

Some of the people whose work on diet Ellen mentions in the article:

DENSMORE: via archive.org to the California Digital Library’s copy of Emmet Densmore’s The Natural Food of Man with the long subtitle: A Brief Statement of the Principal Arguments ag the use of Bread, Cereals, Pulses and all other Starch Foods. Published 1890 in London and New York by Pewtress and Co of Little Queen Street Holborn and 319 West 45th Street. Densmore’s dates are 1837-1911, he was a British doctor. In the book’s Preface piv he suggests that eating starch is a cause of drunkenness; the intended readership of the book is temperance workers. On p1 Densmore had started his research on starches about 10 years previously, as an investigation into the causes of obesity.

MRS WALLACE. I couldn’t identify her though I gather from Ellen’s article that she was someone Ellen expected her readers to have heard of; so probably a writer or speaker on issues of diet.

DEWEY : at www.gutenberg.org. The text of Edward Hooker Dewey’s The No Breakfast Plan and the Fasting Cure. However, it can’t be the work by Dewey that Ellen had read because it wasn’t published until 1900 in Meadville Pennsylvania but not in Britain. Ellen must have read one if not several of his other publications:

1894 The True Science of Living

1895 The New Gospel of Health

1896 A New Era for Women

1899 Chronic Alcoholism

He has a wikipedia page.

FIRE ELEMENTAL ARTICLE

Theosophical Review which is the 1890s theosophical magazine Lucifer, renamed. Volume XXXIII number 196 September 1903 to February 1904. Editors still Besant and Mead. London: Theosophical Publishing Society of 161 New Bond Street. Chicago: Theosophical Book Concern of 26 van Burne Street. Benares: Theosophical Publishing Society. Madras/Adyar at the The Theosophist offices. Theosophical Review volume 33 number 196 issue of 15 December 1903 pp347-54 article by G A Gaskell: What the Fire Elemental Told Us.

THE DEVAS ARTICLE

Theosophical Review volume XXXIV March-August 1904, editors still Besant and Mead and publishing details as per Volume 33. Theosophical Review volume 34 number 200 issue of 15 April 1904 pp110-121, article by G A Gaskell: What The Devas Told Us.

ANNIE BESANT IN INDIA ARTICLE

The Theosophist volume XXV 1904 edited by Colonel Olcott and published in Madras by its proprietors at Adyar. In volume 25 number 8 issue of May 1904 pp485-490, article by Ellen: Hinduism and Christianity.

1905 - ADVANCE PRESS

There's an entry for the Advance Press in The Reformers' Yearbook volume 13 1907 p228 as the Advance Press and Publishing Guild of 238 Upper Richmond Road.

PO Directory 1904 County Suburbs. Street directory p428 shows Edward Shuttleworth's stationer's shop at 148 Upper Richmond Road. Upper Richmond Road was re-numbered between 1904 and 1907. PO Directory 1904 County Suburbs. Street directory p358 Edward Shuttleworth's stationery business is now at 238 Upper Richmond Road. Neither issue of the Directory lists a publishing firm at the address.

Advance Press was probably founded in 1904 or 1905 with Ellen's book and pamphlet amongst its first publications. There are no publications by the firm in the British Library catalogue.

Crankiness is a 32-page pamphlet published 1905 by Advance Press as Issue 1 of its Advance Series. Although Amazon seemed to know of its existence there were no copies in stock; or at any of the other online booksellers. My partner Roger Wright stuck at the task of investigating it for longer than I did; it was he who found the reference to a copy being at Oxford University.

A WOMAN'S VIEW OF GENESIS... see the full text of the verses referred to at www.kingjamesbibleonline.org and at several other bible websites.

A Woman's View of Genesis Chapter Two: 18-25. Even Roger Wright couldn't find any copies of this at all, on the web or in a library. Some copies were printed, however, and even the Times had at least one, in 1905: it appeared in A Catalogue of the Most Important Books

Available for Free Circulation Among Subscribers to the Times issued by the Times of London Book Club 1905. And there are the two reviews:

1 = Review of Reviews which is edited by W T Stead; volume 32 issue of November 1905 p503. One paragraph only. The reviewer isn't named but I imagine it's Stead himself.

2 = The Theosophist volume 27 1906. Published at Adyar Madras by the Theosophical Society. Volume 27 number 6 issue of March 1906 p468-69 review by "A Woman".

WOMEN'S SPHERE OF WORK

Westminster Review volume 167 1907 January-June p323-29 issue of March 1907, article by Ellen: Women's Sphere of Work.

ELLEN'S LETTER/ARTICLE BIBLE REVIEW

Seen via www.iapsop.com which is the webpage of the International Association for the Preservation of Spiritualist and Occult Periodicals, based at Forest Grove Oregon: The Bible Review: Monthly Journal of Christian Esotericism published by H E Butler and the Esoteric Fraternity Group of Applegate California through their Esoteric Publishing Company. The Company had an English publisher, Fowler and Co of 7 Imperial Arcade Ludgate Circus. Ellen's letter/article is signed and addressed like a letter and was printed in the Correspondence section of Bible Review volume 10 October 1911-September 1912: pp84-90. It was followed by a two-page editorial note on it, pp90-92. On p84 Ellen's letter/article was dated 13 August 1911 and written at Southsea England.

THE FREEWOMAN ARTICLES OF 1912

The full text of The Freewoman is on the web at www.modjournal.org the website of Brown University's The Modernist Journals Project. The journals there include the notorious British modernist art magazine Blast.

Syphilis article: The Freewoman volume 1 number 9 issued Thursday 18 January 1912 p176 article by Ellen: The Unspeakable.

A modern reference to it appears in:

Sex and Suffrage in Britain 1860-1914 by Susan Kingsley Kent. London: Routledge 1990 p254 in her chapter: The Doctors; although she gives its publication date as April 1912 not January. There's some general information on The Freewoman at p21; p167; p217.

Votes for women article, Ellen's reply to Sir Almroth Wright: The Freewoman volume 1 number 22 issued 18 April 1912 pp438-: The Value of the Quick Unbalance of Women.

OCCULT REVIEW LETTER

Occult Review volume LXI January-June 1925; published London: William Rider and Son Ltd, editor Ralph Shirley. Volume 41 number 5 May 1925 p321 in the correspondence section, a short letter from Ellen headed: Has Humanity Attained to Superhumanity?

I'VE PREPARED A SEPARATE FILE FOR GEORGE ARTHUR GASKELL; not a biography just a list of art works and publications.

11 August 2015

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

<http://www.wrightanddavis.co.uk>

***

ART AND WRITINGS OF ELLEN GASKELL'S HUSBAND GEORGE ARTHUR GASKELL

GEORGE ARTHUR GASKELL

Not to be confused with the American Professor George A Gaskell, born 1844. See the V&A catalogue at www.vam.ac.uk/nal which has William E Henning's, An Elegant Hand: the Golden Age of American Penmanship and Calligraphy published 2002, about Professor Gaskell and others.

GEORGE AS AN ARTIST

Most art websites persist with DOB and DOD of 1871-1900, which they ought to have worked out for themselves are quite ridiculous. The dates must originally have been 'fl' dates because they fit very well with the dates of paintings exhibited by George at the major art galleries.

This seems to be his earliest known work: seen at website askart and at www.arcadja.com where there were more details:

1873 Portrait of a Rabbi Holding a Book. Oil. Signed and dated. Last sold Bonhams San Francisco 2009. According to www.mutualart.com the price it fetched in 2010 was $10,000.

Some online lists of George's later works, with some paintings listed several times and others only once.

Website www.askart.com had this list of works by George in a list of recently-sold paintings:

1874 Checking for Thorns

1894 Playing on a Breakwater

Child playing on (sic) a beach

1897 Ladies playing in the sea

Maidens stranded on the beach are these 2 titles actually the same painting?

1900 The Cat Cradle
1901 Tea time
no date The Parasol
1910 Washing the Plant
Blossom Time

At a list www.artnet.com some of the same works have slightly different titles

1874 Checking for Thorns. Pencil and watercolour; dated.
1875 He Loves Me, He Loves Me Not. Oil; dated.
1894 Playing at (sic) a Breakwater.
1900 The Cat's Cradle. Watercolour and bodycolour; dated.
1910 Cleaning the Rubber Plant. Watercolour; dated.

Website www.artrenewal.org had 1897 Rising Spring. Had a 'last sold' date of 2002; now in a private collection.

Website www.invaluable.co.uk had 1897 Ladies Playing in the Sea. Watercolour. Signed and dated.

Website www.arcadja.com

1901 Time for Tea. Watercolour. Last sold at Bonhams Knightsbridge 2001.

This seems to be George's last known work, seen at www.arcadja.com but with more details at www.christies.com

1910 A Basket of Lilac signed "G A Gaskell 1910". Sold July 2010 for £875.

Website www.bbc.co.uk/arts/yourpaintings lists four paintings definitely by him and three attributed to him. They are all portraits and were all painted in the late 1880s. The sitters were all male; none of them have any connections with the GD that I know of. All the paintings roughly same size and in oils so they may have formed a set. All seven are now in the collections of the Bradford Museums and Art Galleries. The four definitely by George are:

- * Abraham Holroyd. Accession number: 4/1887.
- * Benjamin Watson. Accession number: 6/1887, donated by the artist.
- * James Hanson. Accession number: 7/1887, donated by the artist.
- * William Byles. Accession number: 5/1911, donated by F G Byles.

The three probably by George, though clearly not signed as such, have only recently been found in the museum's basement. All the sitters are men; none of them have been identified. They are all dated 1887. Accession numbers: 2007-025; 2007-025; 2007-039.

Mentions of George in the standard reference works; which don't always agree!

The Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940 gets its listings from contemporary exhibition catalogues. On p194 George Arthur Gaskell with fl dates 1885-1900. Painter of figures and domestic scenes. Addresses: Bradford 1885; Brighton 1894; London 1897. Works exhibited: 3 at the Royal Society of Artists Birmingham; 4 at the Walker Art Gallery Liverpool; 3 at Manchester City Art Gallery; 4 at the Royal Academy; 1 at the Royal Society of British Artists.

Dictionary of British Art volume IV Victorian Painters 1: The Text. By Christopher Wood for the Antique Collectors' Club 1995 p188 George Arthur Gaskell w fl dates 1871-1900. Exhibited 10 works at the Royal Academy between 1871 and 1900. The titles of 2 of them are given, neither of which figure in any of the online lists of his works: A Young Archer; and See My Kitties! Also exhibited at the Society of British Artists 1872-93. Based: London

EUGENICS

George's exchange of letters with Darwin: see the University of Cambridge's web pages at www.darwinproject.ac.uk but I got my details from A Calendar of the Correspondence of Charles Darwin editors Frederick Burkhardt, Sydney Smith and David Kohn. 1994. Catalogue numbers

- 11744 to Darwin from George Gaskell 13 November 1878
- 11745 is Darwin's reply written at Down 15 November 1878
- 11752 a reply from George to Darwin 20 November 1878.

George had two letters published in The Malthusian, the magazine of the Malthusian League. I haven't found evidence that he was actually a member of it, but I imagine he was.

- letter of 26 January 1879 printed in the issue of 2 March 1879
- letter published in the issue of March 1884 when George was living in Bradford, commenting favourably on a recent issue of the Bradford Observer in which a decline in the death-rate in the city was interpreted as the result of use of birth control.

George subsequently wrote two pamphlets for the Malthusian League - The Cry of the Poor, on sale by October 1884; and Social Control of the Birth-rate and Endowment of Mothers, on sale by June 1891. A prime mover in The Malthusian League was Dr C R Drysdale who had strong connections with the British Vegetarian Society, some of whose members advocated birth control via chastity, rather like Ellen Gaskell did.

Eugenics Review volume 21 April 1929-January 1930 published quarterly for the Eugenics Society by Macmillan and Co. Eugenics Review volume 21 number 3 issue of October 1929 p238 in the letters section: George writing from 8 Parkmore Terrace, Dyke Road Drive Brighton, querying a review by Marie Stopes which had appeared in the ER's July issue. On pp238-39 was her reply.

George's last work was A New Theory of Heredity published London: C W Daniel and Co 1931 and reviewed in Quarterly Review of Biology volume 6 1931 p350.

Modern mentions of George's views on eugenics:

The Origins and Growth of the English Eugenics Movement 1865-1925 by Lyndsay Andrew Farrall. New York and London: Garland Publishing Inc 1985.

Demography and Degeneration: Eugenics and the Declining Birth-rate in 20th Century Britain by Richard A Soloway. Chapel Hill and London: University of North Carolina Press 2nd edition 1995. This mentions a reply to George's first letter in The Malthusian, made by Edward Aveling (see wikipedia for more on him). Aveling was a member of The Malthusian League, as was Annie Besant for a while before she discovered theosophy; so George may have known both of them.

GEORGE AND WESTERN ESOTERICISM

Theosophical Review volume 30, March-August 1902; edited by Annie Besant and G R S Mead: p33 begins George's article: Green Spiritual Philosophy.

George's denunciation of the current leadership of the Theosophical Society was published as a pamphlet: Exeunt Mahatmas! London: Watts and Co 1907.

Books by George:

The Gospel Drama: Its Symbolism and Interpretation original edition published under the pseudonym John Mysticus; later editions published under the correct name. Published 1916 by C W Daniel.

There was a real person called John Mysticus:

The Emperor Romanus Lecapenus and His Reign by Steven Runciman. Published Cambridge: Cambridge University Press 1963; p68 in chapter Romanus's Government at Home: in 925, John Mysticus was appointed successor to John the Rector as a minister at Romanus' court.

Muslim Perceptions of Other Religions by Jacques Waardenburg. Published New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press 1999; p132 in the chapter Mediaeval Times: John Mysticus probably met the historian and geographer al-Masudi in Damascus in 946. Al-Masudi wrote of him as a monk by training, very learned and "rather familiar with their [philosophical] systems" - by which he meant the philosophy of Greece and Rome.

The Archetypal Man: As Foreshadowing a New Scripture Exegesis published 1922 Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Fenwick and Wade. This was reviewed in Occult Review volume 40 number 1 July 1924 p64 by regular reviewer H S Redgrove. It consisted of two essays, one trying to reconcile the concept of the archetypal man with modern science; and one arguing that as all sacred myths contain a hidden symbolic meaning, readers should not concern themselves too much with detail.

A Dictionary of the Sacred Language of All Scriptures and Myths. Published 1923, London: George Allen and Unwin. It got a rather disparaging review by T Besterman, in Occult Review volume 38 number 4 issue of October 1923 p253: he disliked it on several grounds, but mainly that it was difficult to use as a reference work; and fell between two stools being not really a dictionary because it didn't define things; nor an encyclopaedia because it didn't explain things. George objected to Besterman's criticisms and his riposte was published in Occult Review volume 38 number issue of 5 November 1923 p303.

Finally a series of books all published by C W Daniel:

Genesis Interpreted Through Undermeanings Disclosed by the Language of Symbolism published 1925. This was reviewed in Occult Review volume 41 number 6 June 1925 p398 by the regular reviewer identified only as "E.M.M." who described the results of George's years of study as: a conviction that "all Scriptures are written in a common symbolic language of cosmic origin and contain a common universal wisdom"; and a belief that Jesus had not been an historical person but something George called "the indwelling Saviour of the Soul".

George's letter The Gospel Story as Allegory was published in Occult Review volume 41 number 3 March 1925: pp186-87. In it he argued that it wasn't necessary to reject large parts of the Bible as "incredible" provided that you took its stories as allegory not history.

Egyptian Scriptures Interpreted through the Language of Symbolism published 1926. This was reviewed in Occult Review volume 43 number 5 May 1926 pp 354-55 by long-serving reviewer and contributor Regina Miriam Bloch who was more positive than either Redgrove or Besterman about George's work, describing it as "valuable spadework" in its attempt to "elucidate the universal meanings" of ancient Egyptian texts.

Gnostic Scriptures Interpreted published 1927.

Hellenic Scriptures Interpreted published 1930.

24 February 2015

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

http:pws.prserv.net/Roger\_Wright/

***

Webster Glynes was one of the first people to be offered membership of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn: he was initiated at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in July 1888. He got as far as choosing a motto, the Latin 'Descende ut ascendas' but never followed up his initiation in any way and resigned from the Order, though the records don't say when.

This is one of my short biographies. Although I have found a lot of glancing references to Webster Glynes in a variety of different historical records, there isn't enough information on him to write a longer one.

Sally Davis

October 2016

UPDATE JUNE 2017

I was contacted a week or two ago by a descendant of Webster Glynes' nephew John Sydney Glynes, with news of Webster as a golfer; and as a poet!; and of what happened to Webster's brother Brock.

My basic sources for any GD member are in a section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources for this particular member are listed at the end of each section.

This is what I have found out about WEBSTER GLYNES.

IN THE GD

Very little. Webster was one of a group of freemasons known especially to William Wynn Westcott but probably also to Samuel Liddell Mathers. They were asked to be members so they could advise on the GD's rituals; but perhaps also to ensure their keeping silent about the Order's existence. Most of them were no more interested in the western magical tradition than Webster was; and maybe they were never expected to be active members of the Order.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

SPIRITUALISM

I haven't found any evidence that Webster was a spiritualist. However, it is hard to tell whether people were spiritualists as spiritualism was a very locally, even family-based pursuit and there was no over-arching organisation with a membership list that can be consulted now.

THEOSOPHY

Very few of the members of the GD were involved in both freemasonry and theosophy. Webster conforms to this rule: he wasn't a member of the Theosophical Society.

FREEMASONRY

I wouldn't have dared to write this section without the help - especially the explanations - given me by two of my friends at the Freemasons' Library: Susan Snell the archivist; and Peter Aitkenhead the assistant librarian and expert on freemasonry degrees. Nor could this section have been even as intelligible as I hope it has been, without these two books, which they suggested I read:

Beyond the Craft by Keith B Jackson. Original edition 1980. I used the 6th edition, 2012, to which Jackson has added details of several orders left out of the 1st edition. Hersham Surrey: Lewis Masonic, an imprint of Ian Allan Publishing Ltd. See www.lewismasonic.co.uk

A good introduction.

A Reference Book for Freemasons. Compiled by Frederick Smyth. Published London: Quatuor Coronati Correspondence Circle Ltd 1998. Recommended by Peter Aitkenhead.

If I've still got it wrong, I suggest you try one or both of those books for the correct answers.

BEGINNINGS

Though it doesn't seem to have been a tradition in his family, Webster was an active freemason from the 1860s to at least the 1890s and possibly later, though access to records from after 1900 isn't as good as for the earlier period.

CRAFT MASONRY

The first lodge Webster was a member of, was Percy Lodge of Instruction. It was numbered 234 when he joined it, in 1859, but was renumbered 198 in 1863. In 1855 it was meeting at the Marquis of Granby pub, in Down Street near Piccadilly; it was probably still meeting there when Webster joined it. Even after he had been initiated into a fully-fledged lodge, Webster still kept in touch with Percy Lodge 198 and was a guest at its centenary festival in 1891.

Although the second half of the 19th century saw an explosion in the number of craft lodges founded, Webster belonged to very few of them. His main loyalty in craft masonry was to St Alban's Lodge 29, which he joined in 1865. As its low number indicates, it was one of the oldest craft lodges - its warrant had been issued as far back as 1728 although the name 'St Alban's' only dates from 1771. It met in the City of London; from 1867, lodge meetings were held at the Albion Tavern Aldersgate Street. It's likely, therefore, that Webster's name was put forward as a suitable lodge member by a business contact of Glynes and Son, Webster's family firm. St Alban's Lodge 29 was Webster's main sphere of freemasonry activity until the 1880s and he served as its Worshipful Master from January 1871 to January 1872; he was also Zerubabel of its Chapter though I couldn't find out in which year.

St Alban's Lodge 29 is one of the 'Red Apron' lodges. There are 19 of them, all based in London, and each of them has the right to nominate one member per year to serve as a grand steward at the annual festival of freemasonry, held each April. Though a great honour, serving as a festival steward was also a serious commitment of effort and money. It was the job of the 19 grand stewards to organise and finance the festival. Grand stewards in the 1890s could expect to pay out about £25 each towards the expenses of the evening. Grand stewards serving their year in the 1870s had to find rather less - £15-20 - but it was still serious money. It's been difficult to find evidence of how much any member of the GD earned each year; but George Frederick Rogers, a graduate of Cambridge University with five years' experience as a hospital doctor, earned £100 a year in the University anatomy department between 1900 and 1914; it's not surprising that he never volunteered to be a grand steward. Webster was the only GD member to have that privilege. His name was put forward to do a year as grand steward in April 1870. He served until the festival evening of April 1871, meaning that for three months that year he was committed to a Master-ship and a grand stewardship at the same time. A busy and exacting time!

All those who had done a year as grand steward were entitled to join the Grand Stewards' Lodge (which, unlike all other craft lodges, does not need to have a number). Webster joined the GSL some time after 1871.

FREDERICK LODGE OF UNITY 452

I discovered that Webster was a member of this craft lodge quite by accident, while researching GD member Herbert Coryn who joined it in the late 1890s. The lodge published its by-laws and a list of current members in 1883, and Webster is shown as one of the lodge's most recent initiates. Harold John Levett, who worked in a bank, had been initiated even more recently; he too joined the GD in due course.

Frederick Lodge of Unity 452 was based at Croydon's freemasons' hall in the High Street. Members in 1883 were a mixture of those who worked in the district, and those who worked in the City. I'm not quite sure how Webster became involved in the lodge, but it may have been through two of its most long-serving members, the Ohrens brothers, who were very active in London freemasonry at this time (though neither of them ever joined the GD).

Although he was never involved with the day-to-day management of any of the masonic charities, Webster did serve as steward for the 1883 festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys.

WM's and PM's of craft lodges were often invited to consecrations of lodges and other lodge festivals. Webster may have not had all that much time for this extra socialising but he did attend two consecrations that I know of: that of Caterham Lodge 2095, in May 1885; and that of Huguenot Lodge 2140 in May 1886. William George Lemon was also at the Huguenot Lodge 2140 consecration.

OTHER FREEMASONRY

As well as being a time when the number of craft lodges being founded increased rapidly, the mid-to-late 19th century was a period of great experimentation and innovation in freemasonry. In England, old orders of freemasons gained new impetus; and new orders were set up to bring into use practices and degrees already well-established in other countries, particularly the USA but also Scotland. From the evidence I've found, Webster was more interested in discovering these variations on craft masonry, than in gaining a deeper knowledge of the craft. Particularly in the 1880s and early 1890s, he joined a lot of these new or expanding orders.

MARK MASONRY

Mark Masonry came to England from Scotland in the mid-19th century. It has always been independent of craft masonry and has its own Grand Lodge; though anyone wishing to be admitted to a Mark Masons' lodge must already be a member of a craft lodge.

In 1869, Webster was admitted to the first Mark Masons' lodge to be founded in England: Bon Accord Lodge, given its warrant in 1851 by a chapter of the same name based in Aberdeen. When it was founded, it didn't have a number; as Mark Masonry expanded, it was given the number 3750. The lodge met four times a year. Webster served as its Worshipful Master from October 1888 to October 1889; so he was WM-in-waiting when he was initiated into the GD. William George Lemon, whom I've already mentioned once in this account, had preceded him as the lodge's WM. Lemon also joined the GD in 1888.

Webster was still involved in Mark masonry in 1896: at a meeting of the Grand Lodge of Mark Masonry that December, he was one of many men present who were given a jewel. I haven't been able to discover what the occasion was; he might have been retiring.

I think Webster must have been present at the consecration of the Royal Naval Chapter 59; he was offered membership of the chapter at that meeting. I'm not sure whether that indicates he was a member of its Lodge. The lodge could trace its history back to the 18th century, but its chapter was only founded in 1884. In the few references to the lodge and chapter in the freemasonry press, I haven't seen his name as an officer of either.

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS, also known as CRYPTIC MASONRY

Cryptic masonry was one of the new ideas arriving in the UK mid-century from the USA, where it is a part of Royal Arch masonry. Its Rite of Perfection, having probably been formulated in late-18th century Europe, reached England from New York and went separately to Scotland from Illinois. An English Grand Council was set up in 1873 and it had offices and held its meetings in the masonic hall at 8a Red Lion Square to start with before moving both to the new Mark Masons' hall in the early 1890s.

Webster was admitted to cryptic masonry at a meeting of its Grand Master's Council held at Anderton's Hotel in Fleet Street (a popular venue for freemasonry organisations) in May 1882. William George Lemon was already a member. The RSM was a small organisation and only two years later, Webster had climbed its hierarchy so far as to serve as its Grand Conductor of the Grand Council. There's a magazine reference to his being a member of the RSM's Grand Master's Council number 1 (a Council being RSM's equivalent to a craft lodge) but he formally resigned from it in 1889. He was still a member of the RSM in 1899, but was not attached to any particular Council and was probably not very active.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE (AAR)

This rite seems to have gone from France to the US via the West Indies in the 18th-century and then travelled back across the Atlantic to Scotland and England in the 19th. The rite is organised through a Supreme Council, which had its own Masonic Hall at 33 Golden Square in Soho. Its equivalent to the craft lodge is the Rose Croix chapter. The joining rules are strict and shed some light on Webster's beliefs: all members are required to be not only Christians but to believe in the Trinity of God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost (which the Unitarians for example, do not, as their name suggests). Membership of a Rose Croix chapter is by invitation only, and all candidates must have been master masons for at least one year.

Webster had been initiated into Invicta 10 chapter by 1880 (the earliest AAR source I looked at); W G Lemon was also a member of that chapter. He was in a group of men advanced to the 30° level at a meeting of the AAR's Supreme Council in May 1883; but never rose any higher in the Rite. During the mid-1880s Webster was making his way up the chapter's hierarchy to serve as its equivalent to a craft lodge's WM - its Most Wise Sovereign. By 1889 he had got as far as the rank two below the top, First General. However, I can't find any evidence that he actually served as MWS. He must have dropped out for some reason. GD founder William Wynn Westcott joined Invicta Chapter number 10, though not until 1898 so the two men probably didn't coincide in it.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, properly known as the Order of the Temple

Efforts by the modern Knights Templar to prove descent in secret from the order which served in the Holy Land during the Crusades have all been proved to be fake. The history and wiping out of the medieval military/religious order has undoubtedly been an important influence on the modern Knights Templar order but the modern order can't be traced further back than 18th-century Germany. Its earliest attested document, from Boston Massachusetts, is dated 1769.

Originally, groups of modern knights templar formed 'encampments' but during Webster's time the name of its basic form of organisation had become 'preceptory'. When Webster joined the order, each country was ruled over by a National Great Priory, those in the British Empire answering to a Convent General, with the Prince of Wales as its Grand Master. Both this hierarchy and the entrance requirements were changed around 1890, but when Webster was first invited to be a knight templar, all candidates had to have been master masons for two years, and be a member of a Royal Arch chapter. A belief in Christianity was more assumed than required.

Meetings of the order's preceptories were sometimes covered in The Freemason magazine.

Webster was present at a meeting of the Harcourt Preceptory number 74 in November 1883 at its regular venue, the Greyhound Hotel in Richmond; I think he was being 'installed' at this meeting though the report doesn't specifically say so. In 1886 he served his year as Harcourt 74's preceptor and in May of that year he represented it at the annual meeting of the National Great Priory, at the City Terminus Hotel at Cannon Street. Not all preceptors attended the annual meeting. Perhaps Webster had been encouraged to do so by his acquaintance at Harcourt 74, Ralph Gooding MD, who had been its preceptor in 1883 and who in due course rose to be a Great Officer in the National Great Priory. Another knight who was at the annual meeting in May 1886 was William George Lemon - it's impossible that those two men don't know each other before they join the GD. At that meeting the Great Priory's officials for the coming year were elected; neither Webster nor W G Lemon were on the list and that was the only meeting of the National Great Priory of England and Wales that Webster went to, at least up to 1900. Unlike some of the other GD members who were also knights templar, he was still a member of the Order in 1898; but a list of Great Officers covering the period to 1915 doesn't have his name in it. Perhaps he did not approve of the changes in qualifications that were put through in 1889-90. Perhaps he was just too busy with other things to do more than keep his interest at a local level.

ROYAL NAVAL LODGE/CHAPTER 59

There's no history of either the lodge or the chapter at the Freemasons' Library, so my knowledge of Webster's involvement with this group of freemasons is limited. At the consecration of the Chapter in July 1884, Webster's name was put forward as a joining member. As there's no evidence from later years of him being an officer in the chapter, I presume he turned the offer down.

ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND

You don't seem to need to have Scottish ancestors to be a member of the Royal Order of Scotland; as far as I know, Webster didn't have any, but he was a member of its Royal Bruce Chapter by February 1886. What you did need to be able to prove, even to be considered for membership, was that you had been a Master Mason for at least five years. Membership was by invitation only, and was much sought-after, as the ROS administers specifically Scottish, and rather ancient, degrees.

The Royal Order of Scotland has documents from the 18th-century establishing its right to be considered second in rank only to craft masonry amongst all the masonries. It is run from Edinburgh and all lodges are answerable to its Grand Lodge. In England during Webster's time, some lodges at least shared the premises of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, at 33 Golden Square in London.

In 1886 Webster must have been a member of the Royal Bruce Chapter for some time, in fact, because he was making his way to the top of its ladder of officers: at the meeting of February 1886 he was its Inner Guard; and the meeting of July 1891 was his last as its TRSTA - that is, its Tirshata, a biblical term meaning 'governor'. After the meeting, everyone went off to a banquet at Greenwich; perhaps at Webster's expense.

ORDER OF THE SECRET MONITOR

This was the last order - as far as I can see - which Webster joined. It was also the latest to be formed, at least in England, being founded in 1887. The order's rituals are based on the biblical story of David and Jonathan. There is evidence of an order based on David and Jonathan in the late 18th-century Netherlands and of several such in mid-19th century America. England's OSM was the idea of the wonderfully-named Issachar Zacharie, an English doctor who had served with the Confederate army in the US civil war before returning to London, and setting up in private practice, in 1875. Zacharie was a member of Bon Accord Mark Masons lodge, so he will have known Webster well. The meeting which led to the founding of the English OSM was held at Zacharie's house, in May 1887, and most of the early members came from Bon Accord Lodge. They all joined the OSM's first conclave, originally named Alfred Meadows Conclave 1 but from 1891 just known as Premier Conclave 1.

I couldn't actually tie down whether Webster was one of those Bon Accord Lodge members who joined the OSM's Alfred Meadows Conclave 1 when it was founded in July 1887. However, he was definitely a member when the Alfred Meadows Conclave 1 met in April 1889 at the Holborn Restaurant; and was third on its list of officers, its G (Guide). Nelson Prower was at that meeting; and was another of the conclave's officers; though more junior than Webster. Webster was installed as the conclave's Supreme Ruler at its meeting of May 1892, also at the Holborn Restaurant.

Webster did join two organisations that researched the history, mythology and symbolism of freemasonry: the craft lodge Quatuor Coronati 2076; and Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (SRIA), which wasn't a lodge or an order of freemasons, though only freemasons could join it. Both organisations were filled with men who joined the GD even if only for a short time. Most joined it in its first year - 1888 - invited by its founders William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers. Westcott was in both QC2076 and SRIA; Mathers was a member of SRIA and an occasional visitor to QC2076 meetings.

QC2076 was founded in 1886 and Webster went as a guest 8 November 1886 to one of its earliest meetings. Full membership of the lodge was restricted to (I think) 40 at any time; but the lodge's founders had always intended to have a large number of corresponding members who received its journal, Ars Quatuor Coronati, and were welcome at meetings, but were not eligible to serve as one of its officers. Webster became a corresponding member in 1888. However, he doesn't seem to have been very interested in the lodge's investigations, was never a full member, and was no longer even a corresponding member by 1900.

Webster joined SRIA in 1886 and got onto the ladder of promotion towards serving a year as Celebrant (its equivalent to Worshipful Master) almost at once, being Torch Bearer in 1887-87; and 8th Ancient for the year 1887-88. He was made 4th Ancient for the year 1889-90; but sent apologies for non-attendance at the meeting of October 1889. He's not mentioned in the SRIA's Transactions after that, so I suppose he must have resigned. William George Lemon was already a member of SRIA in 1885; and Nelson Prower was elected a member in 1887. Both Lemon and Prower continued to be members after Webster dropped out. I may be reading too much into Webster's lack of enthusiasm; but that and his willingness to serve as an officer in many other freemasonry organisations - with all the commitment of time and money that were required - suggests that he was interested in the practicalities, perhaps even the theatricalities, of freemasonry ritual, not its theory.

Webster Glynes, William George Lemon and Nelson Prower coincide in many freemasonry organisations. William Lemon and Webster were in Percy Lodge 198. They were in Bon Accord Mark masonry lodge and William's son Frank had joined it too by 1898. They were both involved in cryptic masonry in the 1880s. They were both knights templar in that decade. And William Lemon was already in the SRIA when Webster joined it. Nelson Prower also got involved in cryptic masonry in the 1880s though later than the other two; and he joined the SRIA in 1887. Nelson and Webster were in the Order of the Secret Monitor together, something William Lemon was not a member of. Meeting so often, particularly in the late 1880s, the three men must have been well-acquainted, if not actual friends. William Lemon was a barrister and Webster a solicitor, so they may have been business associates as well as fellow freemasons.

They also were all initiated into the GD during its first few months but did not follow up their initiation. I'm not sure when Nelson Prower left - he just seemed to stop going to meetings and paying his subscription. William Lemon stayed the longest, resigning in 1893.

Webster's year as SR in the Order of the Secret Monitor seems to have been his last as an officer of any freemasonry lodge or order. It's likely that he was having to take on more work in the family firm in the early 1890s. No doubt he still attended lodge and order meetings, but he no longer had the time to commit himself to doing more.

Sources:

Theosophical Society Membership Registers 1889-1901.

Sources freemasonry:

In general: Database of the collections at the Freemasons' Library, accessible online at //freemasonry.london.museum, option 'Explore'. You can also reach Lane's Masonic Records from there; and online digitised versions of some freemasons' magazines, to 1900.

PERCY LODGE 234 (renumbered to 198)

The Freemason February 1855 p127.

The Freemason January 1891 p2, also for W G Lemon as a lodge officer.

ST ALBAN'S LODGE 29 though I note the FML catalogue also has references to a St Alban's Lodge 678.

Lane's Masonic Records.

In the FML catalogue there are records of St Alban's 29 going back to 1791.

The Freemason January 1871 p4.

GRAND STEWARDS' LODGE

The Grand Stewards' Lodge 1735-1895. The Grand Stewards and their Lodge by Colin Dyer. Published by the Lodge 1985: passim for a general lodge history; p200, pp204-05; unnumbered pages of members with joining dates, at the end of the book. This is my reference for Webster's first initiation as a freemason and the lodge he joined. Peter Aitkenhead, assistant librarian at the FML confirms that this lodge has no lodge number.

FREDERICK LODGE OF UNITY 452

By-Laws of the Frederick Lodge of Unity 452 printed by Jeffrey of Tufton Street Croydon 1883.

Inside the leaflet, a pull-out page gives a list of members as at 1883. Herbert Coryn was not yet a member; for reasons I won't go into here, I think he won't have joined before the mid-1890s and he did not remain a member for long. The lodge had a Royal Arch chapter but Webster was not a member of that in 1883.

STEWARDSHIP AT THE FREEMASON CHARITY

The Freemason May 1883 P5.

AS GUEST AT OTHER LODGES:

The Freemason May 1885 p3.

The Freemason May 1886 p7; W G Lemon and Webster at the consecration of Huguenot Lodge.

MARK MASONRY

Masonic Calendar for 1888, its 3rd year of issue; and for 1898, showing its huge expansion in the intervening decade. 1898 issue p53 for Webster as current WM of Bon Accord Lodge and W G Lemon as its IPM.

By-laws of the Regulation of the London "Bon Accord" Mark Masons Lodge; this lodge also had no number when the edition I looked at was published. First edition 1856. This edition London: 1898; p18 issued September 1898: pp3-10 for its history; p11 begins its by-laws; unnumbered pages at the end for all members so far; and members as at September 1898 -

Webster no longer being among them.

The Freemason November 1884 p8.

The Freemason July 1886 p2.

The Freemason October 1887 p14.

The Freemason December 1896 p5 report on a meeting of Mark Masonry's Grand Lodge. Webster Glynes was one of many who were presented with a jewel.

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS also known as the Cryptic Rite, a reference to the basic layout of one of its rituals.

Annual Report of Proceedings of the Grand Council of RSM of Engl and Wales etc.

Issue of 1887 printed 1888 George Kenning. Just noting that at this stage 15 RSM councils were supposedly in existence; but five of those were dormant.

Issue of 1891: p3, p18 in the list of Grand Conductors of the Council, and pp20-22 its list of current members. Webster's freemason friend W G Lemon was a member of RSM and may have been responsible for Webster joining it.

Next one I read was: Issue of 1896: p3; p21.

Issue of 1899, the last one in the volume in the Freemasons' Library collection: p22, confirming Webster was still a member, though not attached to any Council.

The Freemason May 1882 p8.

The Freemason October 1889 p14.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE

Rules and Regulns for the Govt of the Degrees from the 4° to 32° Inclusive under the Supreme Council 33° of the Ancient and Accepted Rite etc etc; plus a List of Members. Earliest one is 1864.

Issue of 1880 p56.

Issue of 1885 p131.

Issue of 1888 p52, p57

Issue of 1900 p63, p225, p281.

The Freemason May 1883 p12 rpt on the quarterly mtg of the AandAR's Supreme Council. AandAR's hq is at 33 Golden Square. Mtg on 8 May [1883]. Webster Glynes was in a group of members adv'd during the mtg to level 30°.

The Freemason Feb 1889 p12 AandAR: a mtg of its Invicta Chapter number 10, at [33] Golden Sq 15 Feb [1889]. Webster Glynes, as "1st General" was the 2nd person on the named list.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR - Order of the Temple

Calendar of the Great Priory published yearly for the members of the Order. I looked through the volumes for 1872 to 1900. In 1896 the title was changed to Liber Ordinis Templi. The 1897 and 1898 issues had lists of current Order members.

1883 p10 in the list of current preceptories: Harcourt 74 Kent/Surrey meets Greyhound Inn Richmond. Warrant (not especially early) 1863. Current preceptor, Ralph Gooding MD.

1886 p30-32.

1889 pp36-37 changes to requirements for candidates passed by the National Great Priory of England and Wales; against some opposition. Nothing was mentioned about the modern requirement for a belief in Christianity.

Statutes 1890 with changes to the entrance requirements.

Ordo Templi Alphabetical List of Great Officers 1846-1915. Glynes does not appear in this book.

The Freemason November 1883 p12.

The Freemason May 1889 p9.

ROYAL NAVAL LODGE/CHAPTER 59

Freemasons' Chronicle July 1884 p10 which doesn't mention Webster as a possible joining member.

The Freemason July 1884 p9.

ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND

The Freemason February 1886 p13.

The Freemason July 1891 p11.

At www.brad.ac.uk/webofhiram are some pages on the Royal Order of Scotland including what looks like a full description of its Degree of Heredom ceremony.

For the meaning of 'tirshata', arrived at August 2016 by Peter Aitkenhead at the Freemasons' Library, consulting:

History of the Royal Order of Scotland by E Fox-Thomas. London: A Brown and Sons: p10.
Royal Order of Scotland: the Second Hundred Years by George Draffen 1917 p111.

Though neither book actually explained the term in so many words!

ORDER OF THE SECRET MONITOR

The Freemason April 1889 p11.

The Freemason November 1891 p10.

The Freemason May 1892 p12 with change of name of the Conclave from Alfred Meadows number 1 to Premier number 1.

QC2076

Ars Quatuor Coronatorum number 2076 published by the Lodge.

Volume I 1886-88 p25; and [p12] of the unnumbered pages at the end of the volume listing the full members, and the corresponding members, both in order of seniority.

Volume XIII 1900; unnumbered pages at end of this volume.

SOCIETAS ROSICRUCIANA IN ANGLIA (SRIA)

Transactions of the Metropolitan College

The earliest issue in the FML's collection is that of 1885, prepared by William Wynn Westcott, future founder of the GD; as the SRIA's Secretary. The other main GD founder, Samuel Liddell Mathers, is a member and so is William George Lemon; but Webster Glynes is not.

Webster first appears in the Transactions of the Metropolitan College issue of 1886 p3 in the list of officers for the year 1886-87, as Torch Bearer, near the bottom of the list. The College had moved its meetings to the Masonic Hall Great Queen Street.

Transactions of the Metropolitan College issue of 1887 p3 notes Nelson Prower as a new member. On p5 in the list of officers for 1887-88, Webster has moved up one rung on the ladder, to 8th Ancient.

Transactions of the Metropolitan College issue covering 1889 and 1890 p3 in the list of officers for 1889-90, Webster is now 4th Ancient. However, on p8 his apologies for absence from the meeting of October 1889 were read out. I couldn't find a reference to resignation letter but I couldn't find any references to him after that meeting that he was obliged to miss. W G Lemon and Nelson Prower continued as members of SRIA after this.

For a general history of SRIA:

History of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia by the MW Supreme Magus Dr William Wynn Westcott. Privately printed London 1900.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

The surname 'Glynes' is very rare. For most of the 19th century the only people called Glynes who appeared on the UK census were Webster's close family, in London.

Webster Glynes was born in November 1835 in Shoreditch, the eldest child of Randall Glynes and his first wife Elizabeth Sarah, née Richards. He was named for his grandfather Charles Webster Glynes who had died a few days before. By census day 1841, Randall and Elizabeth had had three more children: John, Emily and Alice. They were living in the suburb of St John Hackney, where they employed two servants, one of whom was called Mary Mott and might be a distant relation of mine.

At some point between 1841 and early 1844, Randall and Elizabeth Glynes moved back into the City, to 8 The Crescent, America Square. One of their neighbours there was Nathan Meyer Rothschild; and the Glynes family law business may have been in rooms on the ground floor. Webster's mother Elizabeth died there in February 1844, aged 36. Randall Glynes married again after only a few months of being a widower. His second wife was Amelia Bode, whose family lived in Brighton. Randall and Amelia moved further out of London, to a house called The Rookery, at Great Ilford, Barking. On census day 1851 they were living there with a nurse and two other servants. Elizabeth Glynes' children Emily, Alice and Jessie were all at home; with Amelia's children Brock, Edward, Margaret and Charles. Webster Glynes (now aged 15) and his brother John were at the school run by Rev Arthur Jackson and his wife Matilda, at 36 Canonbury Square in Islington.

On census day 1861, Randall and Amelia were staying in Shoreham, near where their sons Brock, Charles and Arthur were all at school. They had changed their London address again and were living in a house on Stratford Green. Webster, Emily, Alice, Jessie and their half-sister Adeline were all at the house in Stratford on census day, with two visitors, Francis Maud and his sister Lydia; and two female servants. After leaving school, Webster had become an articled clerk in his father's solicitor's practice. He was now 25 and must have been almost qualified. His half-brother Brock Glynes joined the practice in his turn. Brock was working for his father's firm in 1871 but I'm not sure for how long afterwards as I can find no information on him after that year.

Webster's sister Emily married another London solicitor, William Bruty, in 1867. On census day 1871 Webster and his sisters Elizabeth and Jessie were living with William Bruty at 37 Dorset Square Marylebone. Emily was away, but her two children - Edith and William - were at home. This was a well-to-do household - in addition to two women, the Brutys also employed one male servant and male servants were expensive. Webster, aged 35 was fully qualified as a solicitor by now and was an important part of the family law practice.

It's a pity I can't find Webster on the census in 1881 or 1891. In fact, there are fewer men called Glynes on the 1881 census than on the previous two or three, and they had few enough. The family was beginning to spread out and go abroad. Two sons of Webster's next brother, John, went abroad, William Randall Glynes to New Zealand and John Sydney to South Africa. Webster's youngest brother Arthur went to South America though he returned late in life.

Randall Glynes was widowed for a second time in 1883, when Webster's step-mother Amelia died.

Sources: censuses 1841-81. Freebmd.

See wikipedia for America Square.

At nationalarchives.gov.uk, a reference to item ACC/0159/039 held at the London Metropolitan Archive: part only of the Will of Charles Glynes of Burr Street St Botolph. The Will is dated February 1801, probate on it was granted 23 January 1804. Charles Glynes was Webster Glynes' great-grandfather. One of the executors is a Susanna Glynes, presumably Charles Glynes' widow.

Familysearch England-ODM GS film numbers 370932, 380133: Randall Glynes was born 4 January 1812 and baptised on 6 February 1812 at St Botolph Without Aldgate. His parents were Charles Webster Glynes and wife Ann.

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 413282: marriage of Randall Glynes to Elizabeth Sarah Richards 27 November 1833 at West Hackney. Both parties were aged 21 (rather a low age at marriage, for the 19th century middle-classes).

At nationalarchives.gov.uk item number PROB 11/1869/69 is the Will of Charles Webster Glynes, "gentleman", of America Square; held at the Public Record Office Kew. Will dated 30 November 1836.

Familysearch England-ODM GS film numbers 396238-240: Webster Glynes was born on 22 November 1835 and baptised in 1836 at St Leonard's Shoreditch. His parents were Randall Glynes and wife Elizabeth Sarah. On the baptism record, Randall Glynes was described as a "Gentleman", giving me at least the initial impression that he was a man of independent means, who didn't work. However, evidence from elsewhere indicates that Randall was a solicitor in the family business.

Gentleman's Magazine 1844 p439 set of death notices for April [1844] included one for Elizabeth Sarah, wife of Randall Glynes Esq.

Familysearch England-ODM GS film number 1067117: Randall Glynes and Amelia Bode were married on 30 November 1844 at St Nicholas Brighton.

Birth of the first of Randall and Amelia's children: Familysearch England-ODM GS film numbers 380134 and 380135: Randall Brock Glynes born 23 December 1845.

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1472365 is a burial record Emily Bruty: 24 May 1873 in Essex.

WORK/PROFESSION

The income of Webster's family in the 19th century was based on their work in the City of London; and had two main sources. The first was the family firm of solicitors, usually called Glynes and Son; which Randall Glynes and in due course Webster and Brock Glynes joined as articled clerks on leaving school. Webster Glynes qualified to practice as a solicitor in 1862.

From the 1830s if not earlier, to at least 1869 if not later, the firm's offices were in America Square; either very near to or actually on the ground floor of the house the family lived in. By 1862 it also had premises in Stratford East - again near or in a house lived in by the Glynes - though I'm not sure how long these out-of-town offices were kept up. By 1870 Glynes and Son had got too big to fit into the America Square address and had moved to 128 Leadenhall Street. By 1871, Webster's younger half-brother Brock was an articled clerk at the firm; he later went to South Africa and died in the Orange Free State in 1874. For a few years in the 1870s Randall and Webster took another partner, and the firm was known as Glynes, Son and Church; it moved offices again, to 29 Mark Lane. Alfred Church left to set up in business for himself, in 1881, but Glynes and Son continued at the Mark Lane address until 1897. Mark Lane was near the Tower of London in a district inhabited by many small firms. Several GD members' businesses were run from offices in and around it in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, including those of Francis Wright and Sydney Turner Klein, who were both dealers in flour imports; and George Cecil Jones, who worked as an analytical chemist.

Randall Glynes was the mainstay of Glynes and Son from the 1830s. He died in March 1896, aged 84 and had probably not been very active in the firm for the last few years. Webster - 61 when his father died - decided to close the firm down. Its last appearance in the Law Lists was in 1897. Webster continued to practice law on his own account; but in 1900 he cut his ties with the City even more by moving his offices to 105 Grosvenor Road Belgravia, where he was now living.

Sources:

The Law Lists, which begin in the 1850s:

Law List 1855 p155 with Randall Glynes only.

Law List 1868 p267 as Glynes and Son, and both Randall and Webster Glynes listed, at 4 The Crescent America Square, and at Stratford East.

The death of Brock Glynes: death notice in London Evening Standard 15 May 1875. Details sent to me June 2017 by a descendant of John Sydney Glynes.

Law List 1897 p423 the first year in which Randall Glynes wasn't listed. Webster Glynes, apparently in practice on his own, is at 29 Mark Lane and at Vestry Offices, New Square Minories.

Law List 1898 p430 Webster Glynes with only the New Square Minories address.

Webster's last appearance in a Law List is in the issue of 1915 p538 as clerk to Ward of Portsoken.

Information from other sources:

The Legal Observer 1837 p246 and p253 announcing Randall Glynes' qualification as a solicitor, after articles done at his father's solicitors' practice in America Square. Up until this point, the family firm was called C W Glynes.

The Weekly Notes volume 4 1869 p238 with the firm called Glynes and Son; still at The Crescent, America Sq.

Transactions of the Philological Society 1870 p4.

LG 27 September 1872 p4504 creditors' notice in the case of Robert Bolton Wilde Peel deceased. Issued by Glynes and son of 128 Leadenhall Street.

The Law Reports; Chancery Appeal Cases 1874. An indication of the kind of litigation work Glynes and Son did.

London Gazette 6 August 1875 p3988 in case of Otway v Currie. Randall Glynes is acting for Currie against Otway's executors. Glynes Son and Church are now at 29 Mark Lane.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter volume 25 1881 p682 announced the departure of Alfred Frederick Church and the reversion of the Glynes' firm's name to Glynes and Son.

Times 3 August 1883 p14 legal notices: Webster Glynes doing some Probate work.

Times May 1867 and October and November 1888 publish a series of legal notices showing Glynes and Co acting in various sales of property by auction.

PO London Directory 1900 law directory, solicitors p2598 has Webster Glynes at Vestry Hall, New Square, Minories EC. However, the Times 6 September 1900 p14 has Webster Glynes acting in a Probate case from offices at 105 Grosvenor Road South Belgravia.

The only reference I have to Brock Glynes working as an articled clerk is the 1871 census and that doesn't give where he was working. It's my assumption - possibly wrong - that Brock had joined Glynes and Son.

Probate Registry 1896 for the death of Randall Glynes.

London Gazette 21 August 1896 p4773 creditors' notice in the case of Randall Glynes, deceased. Issued 19 August 1896 Duffield Bruty of 40 New Broad St, solicitors for the executors. The 'Bruty' of the solicitors' firm will have been Webster's brother-in-law, William Bruty, I presume.

VESTRY OF ST BOTOLPH WITHOUT ALDGATE; a family fiefdom

For over a hundred years, members of the Glynes family worked as clerks to the vestry of St Botolph without Aldgate and its successor, the City ward of Portsoken. That is, they handled the legal and legal-financial work of the 19th-century equivalent of a modern urban borough. The history of the parish and vestry of St Botolph without Aldgate is particularly complex, as part of the medieval ecclesiastical parish was in the City of London while the rest was outside it, as the name suggests, in the county of Middlesex. In addition, the 19th century saw the relentless expansion of urban London; law after law increasing the responsibilities of vestries; and - at the end of the century when the old local government system was bursting at the seams - a series of reorganisations of the old vestry system. It fell to the Glynes family to guide generations of elected vestry representatives through all of these, and they must have done a their task well, otherwise they wouldn't have kept the job through four (possibly more) generations.

The first Glynes that I know about to be the vestry clerk at St Botolph without Aldgate was Webster's great-grandfather Charles Glynes, who died in December 1803. Charles was succeeded in the post by his son Charles Webster Glynes, who died in November 1836. Webster's father Randall then took on the task and may have kept the job title until his death though by 1890, if not earlier, Webster was taking his share of the ever-increasing work. In 1896 when Randall Glynes died, Webster took over the top job as vestry clerk. I think he held the post at least until 1915; though at that point he may have retired and it looks as though the long connection of what was now Portsoken Ward with the Glynes family ceased.

Sources:

Via archive.org to The Churchyard Inscriptions of the City of London transcribed by Percy C Rushen. London: Phillimore and Co 1910: p31, p35 in the section on burials in the churchyard of St Botolph without Aldgate.

Times 3 July 1890 p3: "the Matter of the Churchwardens of St Botolph Aldgate", in the High Court. The dispute that had begun in April amongst the church wardens in St Botolph without Aldgate, which caused uproar at a meeting of the elected vestry members. Randall Glynes as the vestry Clerk was trying to read the Minutes of the last meeting when a noisy row broke out over who had a right to chair the current one. Webster Glynes is mentioned in the report as helping his father with the work of the vestry. The argument resulted in a legal case, over whether the decisions made at the meeting were legally valid.

Times 25 March 1904 p2 Webster Glynes acting for the ward of St Botolph without Aldgate in a case at the Guildhall, appearing for the overseers in a case of alleged non-payment of rates - a case typical of the work the Glynes family was doing for the vestry.

Times 26 September 1907 p5. The dispute that had broken out in 1890 had finally been resolved! Webster Glynes was still Vestry Clerk at St Botolph without Aldgate.

ANY PUBLIC LIFE/EVIDENCE FOR LEISURE TIME? Bearing in mind, of course, that most leisure activities leave no trace behind them.

Webster's initiation as a freemason came at the same time as he was getting involved in other activities that would take up leisure hours he'd formerly had to use for his legal studies.

In November 1858, he became a member of the Philological Society. The Society had been founded in 1842/43 and still exists for the study of comparative philology and linguistics. The majority of its members in the 1860s were clergymen and academics, with some representatives of the upper-classes. To my eye, virtually none of them looked as though they were employed in the City of London, so it was quite a filip for Webster to be elected a member. Perhaps he had shown more than passing interest in the Society's great 19th-century project, the New English Dictionary on Historical Principles, which had been set in motion in 1857 with a stirring speech from Rev Richard Chenevix Trench. Webster was still a member in 1872, the last year I could find the Society's Transactions online.

More normally for men working in the City of London in the late 1860s and 1870s, both Webster and his brother Brock Glynes were in the Essex Regiment, a voluntary militia with battalions in Ilford and Barking. In 1869 Brock had obviously just joined, as an Ensign; and Webster was a Lieutenant.

I haven't been able to discover when Webster was elected a member of the New City Club; but it won't have been before he was made a partner in Glynes and Son, because only partners and directors of City firms were even considered for membership. The Club had been founded in 1832 and was organised like a typical gentleman's club; though the Times, reporting in 1875, said that it was far better run than most! It is still at its original address, 19 Old Broad Street. By the mid-1870s Webster was one of its directors. In November of 1875 he led the delegation that called on Club member Alderman William Cotton, to congratulate him on his election as Lord Mayor of London.

There's no listing for Webster Glynes in the British Library catalogue but in 1893 he did publish one work - a poem, nineteen pages long, called The Maiden: A Golfing Epic. Perhaps meant to be circulated amongst the golfers Webster knew, The Maiden was dedicated to Dr William Laidlaw Purves, who in 1887 founded the St George's Golf Club at Sandwich in Kent, and laid out its course over the sand dunes. I haven't been able to find a list of the Club's early members, but I presume that Webster must have been one of them. The Club's Challenge Trophy was first played for in 1888; I wonder if Webster ever won it?

Given royal approval by Edward VII in 1902, and now one of the select group of golf courses that take it in turns to host the Open, St George's Golf Club was a prestigious club to belong to. However, to my mind by far the most prestigious organisation Webster was a member of was the Drapers' Company - the Worshipful Company of the Drapers of London, already in existence (at least informally) by 1180 and granted its royal charter in 1364. Over 100 lord mayors of London have been members of it. Webster's association with it began as early as 1850 when he became one of its apprentices. He and his father Randall were both granted the Freedom of the Company in 1857. Webster's association with it continued for over 50 years, reaching its climax in July 1915 when - after working his way up through the various levels of Wardens - he began his year as its Master, in difficult circumstances, of course, as it was wartime.

Sources:

VOLUNTARY MILITIAS

The Essex Almanac 1870 p53 news of the Essex Regiment of voluntary militia. This is the latest information I could find on Brock Glynes.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY

It still exists: www.philsoc.org. Fiona Marshall's article: History of the Philological Society: the Early Years can be read by following the links: pp1-3.

Transactions of the Philological Society 1858 p201 notes on the meeting of Thursday 4 November 1858. The meeting was chaired by the Society's Treasurer Hensleigh Wedgewood - Charles Darwin's brother-in-law. At the meeting it was announced that Trübner and Co would be publishing the New English Dictionary.

Transactions of the Philological Society 1864 business section pp2-6 to assess the current membership. At least at this stage, Webster was the only future GD initiate who was a member of the Society. His address is 8 The Crescent America Square.

Transactions of the Philological Society 1870-72 business section p4 member Webster Glynes now of 128 Leadenhall Street.

NEW CITY CLUB

See a wiki at wikipedia for a short history of the Club.

Times 20 November 1875 p7.

Wikipedia for the list of lord mayors of London: William Cotton 1822-1902 who owned wharves near Tower Bridge and mines in Norway and had his finger in many, many pies. He was a member of four London livery companies, though not the Drapers'.

GOLF AND POETRY

In June 2017 I found quite a few references to Webster's poem on the web; but no full texts of it. And as it isn't in the British Library, I haven't actually been able to read a copy.

Publication details from www.christies.com, - a copy was available in 2012 at Christie's in London, as part of a sale called Origins of Golf: the Jaime Ortíz Collection. The Maiden: A Golfing Epic by Webster Glynes, privately printed 1893. There's no indication of how many copies were printed. 19pp octavo. Dedicated to W Laidlaw Purves as founder of the St George's Golf Club. This particular copy was sold for £8125.

Country Life volume 23 1908 p70 had a reference to it though I think the full poem was not printed.

It's listed in The Library of Golf 1743-1966 compiler Joseph S F Murdoch. Gale Research Co 1968 p93.

See its wikipedia page for more on Royal St George's Golf Club; also the Club's own web pages at www.royalstgeorges.com, and it's also mentioned on many golfing websites.

At jmb.sagepub.com, there's a biography of William Laidlaw Purves originally published in the Journal of Medical Biography volume 5 number 4 1997; by Neil Weir. 1842-1917. Surgeon, lecturer; eye and ear specialist. Born and trained in Edinburgh. Appointed surgeon and lecturer at Guy's Hospital 1874.

I checked the United Grand Lodge of England membership register, now at Ancestry, to see if Dr Laidlaw Purves was a freemason in England. There was no entry for him in the register, so he was just a golfing friend.

THE DRAPERS' COMPANY

See www.thedrapers.co.uk, the Worshipful Company of Drapers for its history and current (July 2016) wardens which include a woman, Lady Victoria Leatham. Via its website to www.londonroll.org where you can check the names of apprentices and freemen of all the major livery companies.

Wikipedia on the history of the Company, which has owned its current premises in Throgmorton Street since buying them from the Crown in 1543.

Times 5 August 1913 p3.

City of London Year Book and Civic Directory 1914 p161.

Times 30 May 1916 p3 with Webster nearing the end of his year as Master. The Company had held a lunch for some French academics on a visit to England. As their chief host, Webster had proposed a toast to the entente cordiale; Monsieur Joubin replied for the visitors.

The History of the Worshipful Company of the Drapers of London volume 2 1915 p5 with Webster as master-to-be.

MARRIAGE

When I was looking through issues of The Freemason magazine from the 1890s, for mentions of Webster, I noticed that there were none after 1896. The initial reason for that absence was the death of Webster's father with the mourning rituals and business that it entailed.

However, in 1898, Webster made another big break with the past: at the age of 62 or 63, he got married. His wife was an American widow aged 51, a Mrs Ella Maria Dietz Clymer; better known - usually known - as Ella Dietz.

ELLA DIETZ

There's much more about Ella Dietz on the web than there is about Webster Glynes.

Ella Maria Dietz was born in New York City in 1847, the daughter of William Henry Dietz and his wife Frances. In 1864 she married into another distinguished family, the Clymers of Berkshire County Pennsylvania. Her husband was Edward Myers Clymer III, general manager of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company and a director of several coal companies. They had one child, Edward Manuel Clymer (born 1869) but the marriage was not a success. An obituary of her husband in the newspaper of the town where he had begun his working life doesn't mention Ella at all. For several years in the late 1870s Ella tried to make a career for herself as an actress - something I think she would not have done if still living with her husband. And when her husband died in May 1883 - in New York, unexpectedly, of erysipelas - she was in Europe.

A reference in a book on Henry James' novel The Portrait of a Lady suggests that in 1869 Ella thought about getting a divorce. Though as far as I can tell, she never took that idea any further, her unhappiness in the marriage did inform what she got involved in. She became very active in women's voluntary and campaigning clubs, particularly the New York-based Sorosis Society. She taught elocution and drama skills - useful for women intending to speak in public, as well as would-be actors. As women's clubs in different American cities got together to form the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Ella was a willing committee-woman and also coined the GFWC's motto - unity in diversity - using it in a speech in March 1889. She became particularly well-known for her work for women's rights, in which she was known for her use of "sweet persuasiveness" rather than the more brusque tactics of some activists.

Poems by 'Ella Dietz' were first published in American magazines in the early 1870s. In 1876 she published one musical score - a song to words by H Constable. In 1877, she published the first of the three long works for which she is best known: The Triumph of Love. The Triumph of Time, and The Triumph of Life followed, in 1884 and 1885. One reviewer of the second volume described it as containing "exquisite songs". However, a reviewer of the last volume thought that Ella's inspiration had begun to run out, and that she was trying too hard to be mystical. The reviews were both in the British journal Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research and a reference to Ella in its 1881 volume shows that she had plenty of friends in occult and mystical circles in England.

Sources:

ELLA DIETZ

At www.findagrave.com a reproduction of an obituary of Ella's husband; the name of the newspaper and the date of the article aren't given but the typeface and local knowledge in it suggest it the Reading Eagle. Clymer had begun his working life as a lawyer in Reading.

Ancestry's New York Incoming Passenger Lists 1820-1957: an Ella M Clymer arrived in New York from Liverpool on the Gallia on 18 June 1883.

A photograph of Ella as a young woman came up on google when I keyed 'ella dietz'. And another was at www.oldphotobank.com - as a member of Sorosis Society; taken c 1880 when Ella was President of General Federation of Women's Clubs. Photography by Sarony of 680 Broadway.

National Cyclopedia of American Biography volume 13 1906 p68.

At www.findagrave.com a reproduction of a profile of Ella published in the Reading Eagle of 24 November 1895. Just noting here that findagrave doesn't give details of where Ella is buried.

Familysearch: New York residents Ward 18 in 1850. I think the family is Ella's but the naming of her as 'ellEN' is a bit worrying.

Familysearch had no details of Ella's marriage or her son's birth registration. However, US Passport Applications 1795-1925 GS film number 001711012 lists an application from Edward Manuel Clymer dated 1922 on which his DOB is given as 6 May 1869, in New York City.

New Essays on The Portrait of a Lady by Joel Porte. Cambridge University Press 1990: p65. Ella is described as a friend of Henry James' cousin Minnie - Mary Temple, the daughter of Henry James' aunt Catherine.

Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter.

London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881: reference to Ella Dietz in the index; as having gone back to the USA. However, the entry had lost its page number.

Light: A Journal of Psychical, Occult and Mystical Research. Published London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd 1885: p173 issue of 11 April 1885; and p238 issue of 16 May 1885.

Modern reference works:

Mid Victorian Poetry: An Annotated Biobibliography by Catherine W Reilly, covering 1860-79 Mansell Publishing Co Ltd 2000: p132 listing only the first of the three volumes: The Triumph of Love: A Mystical Poem in Songs, Sonnets and Verse. London: E W Allen 1877. 176pp.

Late Victorian Poetry: An Annotated Biobibliography by Catherine W Reilly, covering 1880-99. Mansell Publishing Co Ltd 1994: p137 with her year of birth as 1856 which doesn't agree with any other source.

Works in the British Library catalogue; all under 'Ella Dietz' there's nothing under Clymer.

1876 Diaphenia Song. Music apparently by Ella; words by H Constable. London.

1877 The Triumph of Love: A Mystical Poem in Songs, Sonnets and Verse. 175pp. London: E W Allen.

1880 A Few Words on the Work of the Actor, and the Duties of Art Critics and Audiences. Originally a talk given by Ella at the Church and Stage Guild 6 April 1880. London: Women's Printing Society 1880. 22p

1884 The Triumph of Time. Mystical Poem. 227pp. London: E W Allen.

1885 The Triumph of Life: Mystical Poem. 345pp London: E W Allen.

At www.bartleby.com you can read some poems by Ella; those published in anthologies:

- O Touch Me not, Unless thy Soul... from The Triumph of Love
- Emanation
- The King's Daughter.

The last two were both in the Oxford Book of English Mystical Verse editors Nicholson and Lee 1917.

Ella as a clubwoman in the USA:

Some information on her at www.gfwcgrundywomensclub.com subtitled 'Living the Voluntary Spirit'. GFWC: General Federation of Women's Clubs whose motto is 'unity in diversity', coined by Ella Dietz in a speech at a banquet given on 20 March 1889 at the Sorosis Society (of New York). The Sorosis Society was one of the GFWC's founding women's clubs.

The Magazine of Poetry and Literary Review volume 3 1891 p432-33 is a profile of Ella, currently 5th president of the Sorosis Club.

Reading Eagle 24 November 1895 a profile of Ellas following the announcement of her election as the vice-President of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs.

WEBSTER AND ELLA

I haven't found any evidence as to when and where Webster Glynes and Ella Dietz might have met. They might have met in the USA, though I think London is more likely; and they could have known each other for many years before they married.

Ella visited Europe several times, though neither she nor her son are on any UK census before 1901. She was definitely in England in April 1880 - she gave a talk at the Church and Stage Guild. And British Incoming Passenger Lists show her arriving in Liverpool from Montreal in June 1897; probably her last arrival before her marriage to Webster in the autumn of the following year. Webster caught the habit of crossing the Atlantic from Ella: an incoming passenger list from October 1899 has him returning - apparently on his own - from Boston to England; perhaps he now had business clients there. Another from October 1901 has both Webster and Ella reaching Liverpool from Boston; perhaps having combined business with visiting Ella's friends and relations. The trips to and from the US continued until the first World War: in June 1913, it was Ella on her own who was arriving in London from New York.

It so happens that Webster was out of the UK on the census days of 1881 and 1891 - visiting the USA perhaps - so I don't know where he was living in the 1880s. Electoral Registers at Familysearch show him living in the Finsbury/Holborn district, on the north/west fringes of the City, in the 1890s. However, by census day 1901, he and Ella had moved quite a long way west of the City, to an area where almost certainly she had more acquaintances than he. They were living in Pimlico, at 105 Grosvenor Road, on the northern embankment of the Thames; where they were employing a cook, and a parlourmaid. In 1906 they moved from there to a block of flats round the back of Barker's department store on Kensington High Street - 9 Hamston House, Kensington Court Place. On census day 1911 they were managing without any servants. This cut-back on the expense of a large house and the servants to clean it might indicate that Webster was more or less retired from work by now; it might also indicate they were husbanding their resources against the costs of Webster's progress in the Drapers' Company towards his year as Master; and it might indicate that a flat - possibly with a lift - was easier on a man in his 70s and a woman in her 60s. By this time, Ella's son Edward was also based in England. He was working as an insurance agent, and he and his wife Edith were living in Shepperton with their daughter Florence; they had a son as well but he wasn't with them on census day, probably at school in the US.

Marrying Ella took Webster Glynes into social circles he may have had little contact with before. With all her 'women's club' experience and contacts, it was not long after their marriage before Ella had become an active member of the Society of American Women in London. She served as its president in its social year 1906-07, which happened to be a particularly lively one. Ella presided over the SAWL's normal lunches at the Hotel Cecil and the Prince's Restaurant; and a "toy tea" at the Criterion Restaurant amongst other events. She also was the most senior host when the SAWL held a lunch for Elisabeth Reid and Mrs Longworth at the Hotel Cecil. Elisabeth Reid, daughter of the financier Darius Ogden Mills, was the wife of the recently-appointed US ambassador to Britain, the newspaper owner Whitelaw Reid. The Duke of Marlborough - husband of the American Consuelo Vanderbilt - was amongst the speakers at the lunch. Millicent Fawcett the suffragist was amongst the guests; together with the anti-suffragist ex-viceroy of India Lord Curzon, husband of Mary Leiter, another American heiress. Later on in Ella's year there was an International Red Cross conference; the SAWL held a lunch for some of the delegates.

Ella may have known the new ambassador's wife from New York days: a native New Yorker, Darius Ogden Mills returned there after making his fortune in California. Mr and Mrs Whitelaw Reid arrived in London to take up their appointment in 1905; Whitelaw Reid died in post in December 1912. During their tenure, funded by Elisabeth Mills Reid's family money, they entertained on an epic scale. Their 4th July garden parties were legendary, with as many as 5000 people invited. Although the Glynes were not of sufficient social standing to get asked to formal dinners at Dorchester House, where the Whitelaw Reids had set up home, they might have been invited to more informal dinners if Elisabeth and Ella had been friendly enough. Webster and Ella were often amongst the hundreds of guests at the Reids' receptions.

As a published poet, Ella also became a member of the Author's Club. In March 1909 she and Webster were at a dinner held by the Club at the Hotel Metropole to commemorate the life of Edgar Allen Poe. The other guests that evening included Arthur Conan Doyle; Mrs Humphrey Ward and her husband; and Dr John Todhunter, playwright and former member of the GD.

And as if all this socialising weren't enough to be going on with, in 1911, Webster began the four-year climb up the hierarchy of the Drapers' Company towards his year as Master; with all the engagements at Drapers' Hall, that that entailed.

Sources:

Light: A Journal Devoted to the Highest Interests of Humanity, both Here and Hereafter. London: Eclectic Publishing Co Ltd of 4 New Bridge Street Ludgate Circus. Volume 1 January-December 1881 reference in index.

Ancestry's Incoming Passenger Lists: arrivals in Liverpool from Montreal 3 June 1897. I couldn't see any reference to Ella's son; so I suppose she was on her own.

Ancestry's Incoming Passenger Lists: arrivals from Boston 19 October 1899.

Ancestry's Incoming Passenger Lists: arrivals in Liverpool from Boston 20 October 1901.

Ancestry's Incoming Passenger Lists: arrivals in London from New York 17 June 1913.

At Familysearch, some electoral register information on Webster, indicating where he was eligible to vote. He's sometimes in two lists in the same years, because he would have been a voter in the City of London while he had offices there.

City of London: 1891 to 1912 with a gap between 1899 and 1907.

London Borough of Finsbury/Holborn: 1890 to 1899.

London Borough of St George Hanover Square: 1901 to 1903.

London Borough of Kensington: 1906 to 1912.

Webster and Ella on the social circuit:

Times 4 March 1902 report on the 3rd annual luncheon of the Society of American Women in London; at the Prince's Restaurant Piccadilly.

Times 8 May 1906 p10 Court Circular. During Ella's year as president.

Times 30 June 1906 p11 SAWL's lunch for Elisabeth Reid.

Times 11 June 1907 p9 SAWL's lunch for delegates to the International Red Cross Conference.

Times 14 December 1907 p10 Court Circular. SAWL's "toy tea" at the Criterion Restaurant; with Ella still as its president. The Times noted that SAWL had been founded in 1899; perhaps Ella was one of the founders. It now had 150 members.

Times 8 July 1908 p15 Court Circular: Mr and Mrs Webster Glynnes amongst the 2000 guests at a typically large-scale reception by Whitelaw and Elisabeth Reid; for the American bishops who had been attending the Lambeth Conference.

Times 2 March 1909 p10 "Mr Webster Glynnes and Mrs Glynnes ('Ella Dietz')" at the Authors' Club dinner.

City of London Year Book and Civic Directory 1914 p161.

WHITELAW REID and wife ELISABETH

See wikipedia for Whitelaw Reid, owner of the New York Tribune. And for the father of his wife, Darius Ogden Mills, California-based banker and financier and one of America's wealthiest men. Whitelaw Reid married Darius' daughter Elisabeth in 1881; in New York City with a reception some time later at the Mills family's estate outside San Francisco. The Whitelaw Reids had served as ambassadors to France 1889-92. Whitelaw Reid was appointed to the UK by President Theodore Roosevelt; he presented his credentials to Edward VII in June 1905. Whitelaw Reid died in London in December 1912.

See also //burlingamefoundingfamilies.wordpress.com for Elisabeth Mills Reid "Legendary for her parties as well as her philanthropy".

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN WOMEN IN LONDON

Dictionary of British Women's Organisations by Peter Gordon and David Doughan. London: Woburn Press 2001 p133 which gives the year of SAWL's founding as 1896. It was affiliated to the GFWC in America. Its premises were at 5a Pall Mall East.

Two biographies of Lou Henry Hoover mention it, as she was a member. Lou Henry Hoover was the wife of mining engineer and entrepreneur Herbert Hoover, president of US 1929-33. See wikipedia for information on both of them.

An Independent Woman: The Life of Lou Henry Hoover by Anne Beiser Allen. Westport Connecticut and London: Greenwood 2000 p53. Lou joined SAWL in 1908 so she would have known Ella.

Lou Henry Hoover: A Prototype of First Ladies by Dale C Mayer. Hauppauge New York: Nova Science Publications 2011 p171 which reads as if Lou was President of SAWL in 1915.

DEATHS OF WEBSTER AND ELLA

At the end of his year as Master of the Drapers' Company, Webster was 80 and probably looking forward to a quieter time. He finally gave up all his legal work in 1915. He died, at home in Hamston House in the autumn of 1919. Although that much younger, Ella survived him by only a few months, dying in January 1920.

Sources: freebmd; probate registry records for Ella Glynnes; there's no entry for Webster.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

31 October 2016

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Frederick Charles Gobert was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 22 June 1899. He chose the Latin motto 'Nil scis quod scia'. Eliza Augusta Venner Morris was initiated on the same evening but I don't think they knew each other. Their social backgrounds were so different that the only way they might have met before, would have been as employer and craftsman. The lack of records means that I don't know whether Frederick was a keen GD member or whether he let his membership lapse after only a short time. He was not initiated into the GD's 2nd, inner order; he didn't play any part at all in the upheavals that shook the GD between 1900 and 1903; and he didn't join either of the GD's daughter orders, Stella Matutina or the Independent and Rectified Rite.

This is one of my short biographies. I've found very little evidence about Frederick Gobert's life, most of it the 'family history' type.

Sally Davis

March 2016

This is what I have found on FREDERICK (or possibly FREDERIC) CHARLES GOBERT.

IN THE GD

Records are sparse for the GD's London temple after 1897 when William Wynn Westcott resigned as administrator. Of course, records will have existed, but they haven't survived. As a result it's rather hard to tell how far members initiated after 1898 advanced as occultists; or even where they were living while they were members. I think, though, that Frederick Gobert did not reach the level of study that would have allowed him to be initiated into the GD's 2nd, inner order.

As to who he knew in the GD who recommended him as a possible initiate: I have no idea.

Sources: see the main Sources section below.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Not that I have found. Unlike many GD members, he was not a member of the Theosophical Society. And the Freemasons' Library catalogue has no mention of him; meaning that if he was a freemason, he kept his involvement very local.

Sources:

For his not being in the TS: TS Membership Registers 1890-1900.

For his not being a prominent freemason: he's not in the catalogue of the Freemasons' Library; though records of lodges are held by the lodge themselves.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

No.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Frederick's parents were William James Gobert and Mary Charvet, who married in Stepney in 1864. Both surnames are rare in the UK. On the 1911 census there were less than 40 people called Gobert, and most of them were Frederick's close relations. There don't seem to be many Charvets either. Though William James was born in Bethnal Green and Mary in Bermondsey, the surnames sound French to me. I cautiously suggest that the ancestors of both of them had been French Protestants.

While searching Ancestry and freebmd for people called Gobert, I noticed an Isaac Gobert who died in Bethnal Green in 1870, aged 63 - perhaps William James' father. And one of the other male Goberts on the 1911 census was a George Gobert born in Bethnal Green in 1842; perhaps William James' brother.

William James was born in 1839. I couldn't find a birth registration for Mary Charvet, but she must have been born around 1844-45.

William James Gobert was a cooper - a skilled job. He worked in breweries - obviously - but it's impossible to say from the available data whether he had one employer during his working life, or several. He and Mary began their married life in Shoreditch; by 1867 they had moved south of the Thames to Bermondsey; in the early 1870s they were back on the north side of the river, in Stepney; before moving south of it again by 1875, to Camberwell. William James and Mary had the large family associated with mid-Victorian Britain: Catherine Eleanor born 1865; Evelyn Mary born 1867; Caroline Elizabeth born 1868; Mary Isabel born 1870; William Charvet - the first son after four daughters - born 1871; Frederick Charles the GD member, born 1873; Eleanor Maud, born 1875; Thomas Alfred, born 1877; and Harry George, the youngest, born 1879. There was also Alfred James, who was born in 1872 and died either at the birth or shortly afterwards.

On census day 1881, the Goberts and their nine surviving children were living at 82 Flaxman Road Lambeth. They had a lodger, Eleanor Hughes, a widow who was working as a needlewoman. A few weeks after census day, Mary Gobert died aged 36; worn out, I should imagine, by at least ten pregnancies in 14 years and all the heavy work of caring for the children. Frederick was seven when his mother died. In 1887 his grandmother, another Mary, died in Limehouse. William James Gobert was her executor - not that she had a great deal to leave. By that time, William James and his children had left Lambeth and were living at 17 Northway Road Brixton.

In 1890, William James Gobert got married again, to Elizabeth Wear. When they married, Elizabeth was 41; she and William James didn't have any children. Elizabeth moved in to 17 Northway Road and this is also where Frederick was living on census day 1891. He had left school, and was apprenticed to a carpenter. His younger brothers Thomas and Harry were still at home; and so were three of his sisters - Catherine, who was between jobs; Caroline, who was working as a dressmaker; and Eleanor. The younger members of the family had been able to take advantage of the 1870 Education Act: Thomas was still at school at age 16; and Eleanor had gained sufficient education to train as a teacher. On census day 1891 she was working in a school; later she confirmed that she was employed by a County Council, probably London County Council (the LCC) but possibly Middlesex.

Sources: freebmd; census 1881, 1891; Probate Registry entries 1887.

WORK/PROFESSION

Frederick finished his apprenticeship and worked as a qualified carpenter. In 1911 he was employed by a building firm - that is, he was not self-employed. I suppose it might have been the same firm that his brother Harry George later worked for as a manager, though in 1911 Harry George was working in the offices of a hardware and ironmongery firm.

With the younger children in the family getting rather more schooling than their elders, in the late 19th and early 20th century, Frederick's siblings straddled the class system. On the day of the 1901 census, Harry George and Eleanor were doing work that would place them in the lower-middle-class. The older girls, having left school before the 1870 Education Act was rolled out, were restricted to working as dressmakers or servants: work typical of the working-class woman. And William James and Frederick were on the cusp of the classes - working with their hands, but as trained artisans.

By 1901 Frederick was no longer living with his father and step-mother. On census day 1901 - about 18 months after his GD initiation - he was lodging with John Stone and his wife Mary, at an address I couldn't read but the road is in the Wandsworth/Streatham area. By 1911 he was one of two lodgers in the household of Fanny Godbold at 25 Vining Street Brixton. Fanny Godbold was a widow. She wasn't well-educated and had trouble filling in the census form - the first which the head of household had to complete by themselves. She had had 11 children; only four were still alive and only one of her daughters was still living with her. She'd had a hard life and the hard times were continuing: as well as having lodgers, Mrs Godbold took in washing to help make ends meet.

William James and Elizabeth Gobert had moved to 9 Wellington Road Stockwell, where some at least of their children were still living in the 1940s. On census day 1911 Evelyn, Eleanor and Harry George were living with them. Evelyn was at home between jobs; Eleanor and Harry George were still in the jobs that they had had in 1901. Catherine and Mary Isabel were living elsewhere, working as servants. Catherine was the only servant in the household of John Abraham Ore and his niece, at 93 Elm Park Brixton; and Mary Isabel as nursemaid to the two small children of Rev Thomas Gilling-Lax and his wife, at St Thomas's Vicarage, Stourbridge in Worcestershire, a household where there was also a cook and a housemaid.

Mention of a Church of England cleric as an employer of Frederick's sister is perhaps the right place in this biography to say that the Goberts were Anglicans: in 1911 an employee and representative of the established church was not likely to take on a non-Anglican to look after his children. More confirmation - see below - Frederick's brother Thomas Alfred is buried in an Anglican cemetery.

William James Gobert was still working as a cooper in 1911; and he probably continued to work until his death early in 1914.

Sources: census 1901, 1911; freebmd.

DEATH

Sources are lacking for Frederick Charles Gobert in between census day 1911 and his death. Apart from the fact that he didn't marry, I don't know what happened to him: what he did in world wars 1 and 2; whether he was out of work in the 1920s or the Great Depression; when or if he was able to retire; where he lived and who if anyone he lived with - all unknown.

Frederick Charles Gobert died in April 1947 in St Francis Hospital East Dulwich. He'd been taken to hospital from his usual address, 28 Kemerton Road Camberwell, near Denmark Hill. His brother Harry George was his executor; as he was with many other family members. As far as I can tell, Frederick never married; and thereby hangs a rather curious tale about his family.

Sources: google searches which came up with nothing about Frederick's life; Probate Registry 1947.

DESCENDANTS? AND WHAT (IF ANYTHING) HAPPENED NEXT.

The only child of William James and Mary Gobert who married was Thomas Alfred; and he was also the only child who left England. He went to Canada, where he married Emily Hannah Griffin. He died in Canada in 1951. A quick look on google hinted that Thomas and Emily do have descendants - the only descendants of all William James and Mary's ten children.

Frederick's brother William and his sisters Mary Isabel and Catherine Eleanor were living at 9 Wellington Road Stockwell when they died, unmarried; William in 1936; Mary Isabel in 1942; and Catherine Eleanor in 1947. Unlike Frederick, none of the three of them left a Will. Harry George sorted out their small estates. Harry George and Caroline moved to Worthing, perhaps when Harry George retired; neither of them had married. Caroline died in 1951; and Harry George in 1964.

Sources: freebmd for marriages of Frederick and his siblings: I found none. Probate Registry entries though not for Caroline or Harry George.

At //billiongraves.com a photo of a headstone in St Mark's anglican cemetery Niagara-on-the-Lake Ontario; Thomas Alfred Gobert and his wife Emily Hannah née Griffin. His dates given as 21 July 1876 to 6 November 1951.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

31 March 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Thomas Myles GOLDIE was initiated into the Golden Dawn in March 1898 and took a motto that R A Gilbert couldn't read in full but guessed was the Latin 'Sibi Experiosas'.

By 1898 the GD record-keepers were not noting down initiate's addresses. So when I found two men called Thomas M Goldie on the 1901 census I didn't have any extra information to pick either one of them as the GD member; and of course, the GD member might have been someone else entirely.

Another one of my failures.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Alfred J HAILEY who was initiated into the Golden Dawn in November 1892, choosing the Latin motto 'Carpe Diem'. His membership had lapsed by 1903: that is, he had gone three years without paying the sum all members contributed towards rents, materials and other bills. At the date of his initiation he was living in the relatively new London suburb of Willesden, at 26 Bruce Road Stonebridge.

I couldn't identify Alfred on the census either in 1891 or 1901. I usually use the census as a way in, with GD members, as if you find the right person, you can get their age, parents' names if they're still living at home; or their spouse's name if they're married; and their profession if they have one. Without this information it is a lot harder to identify birth and death records for them; and I didn't identify Alfred's date of birth or date of death.

I did find just one piece of information that might say what Alfred did for a living. Via Google Books I got to the Navy List 1887 which lists an Alfred J Hailey, not as a serving seaman but as an Assistant Clerk. By his name were two dates, and from the way information is laid out in this type of Government Issue list, I would presume them to be the date he was appointed (15 January 1886) and his first day at his current post (19 February 1886). The problem was that I couldn't find his name anywhere on any subsequent Navy List (they were published more or less every year); perhaps - as the number of them grew - the Navy List didn't bother to publish all the names of its clerks, it just stuck to those who were serving on its ships. It's not really likely that Alfred resigned from the Navy office after only a few months and got another job - people tended to stay much longer in the same job in the 19th century. So IF the Navy List Alfred J Hailey was the GD member, I cautiously suggest that during the 1890s, and probably for the rest of his working life, Alfred was working in the offices at the Admiralty.

I do know, though, that he was a member of the Theosophical Society (TS) - when he applied for membership in 1891 he was living at 37 Buckingham Gardens West Kensington; but later he gave the same address in Stonebridge that he gave the GD. The TS was subdivided into lodges and most people joined the lodge nearest to where they lived or (more commonly with men living in London) nearest to where they worked. Alfred started out in the TS as a member of its Blavatsky Lodge, whose meetings were held at the TS headquarters in Regent's Park, and whose members included many who knew Helena Petrovna Blavatsky personally. He may have met Blavatsky himself in his first few months as a member, as she didn't die until 1892. By late 1892, however, Alfred had moved to Earl's Court lodge, where he was very active, sponsoring new members and acting as lodge secretary. For about a year. Then the TS was torn in two by a dispute about who if anyone should hear from Blavatsky's mahatmas now that she was dead. During her lifetime they had communicated with no one but her, and it had been an important part of her mystique that this was so. Within a year of her death, William Q Judge had begun to claim that now the mahatmas were in touch with him. The hierarchy of the TS in Britain was adamant that Blavatsky had been unique, and that anyone else claiming to have had communications from the mahatmas was a fraud. A note on Alfred's membership details at the TS headquarters shows clearly that he did not agree with that view - which did prevail, at least in Britain. With many others who ended on the wrong side of the dispute, Alfred let his membership of the TS lapse.

WHO DID HE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN? When I started looking through the Theosophical Society membership books I quickly realised that the TS was a very good recruiting ground for the GD, at least in the early 1890s. Alfred would have met (unknowingly, of course) several members of the GD at meetings of Blavatsky Lodge, but I think it's quite likely that the person who mentioned his name to the leaders of the GD may have been ALICE GORDON, of Earl's Court TS lodge.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

If it's him: Navy List 1887 p27. And several later Navy Lists; in which he did NOT appear.

Particular sources for Theosophical Society members: TS membership books, kept at the TS headquarters building at Gloucester Place London W1. TS magazine Lucifer which was published between 1887 and 1897; it had a news section giving details of talks and lectures due at the various TS lodges.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

James Handyside and his wife Lucy Handyside were initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn on 24 September 1895 at its Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh. James chose the Latin motto 'Ab oro usque ad mala' and Lucy the Latin motto 'Omne trinum perfectum'. They don't seem to have followed up their initiations by getting more involved.

This is one of my short biographies. I haven't found out much about James and Lucy Handyside. However, what I have found out about them suggests that they were friends of William Charles Hopgood, who was a GD member in Bradford.

My short biographies mostly cover GD members who lived in Bradford, Liverpool and Edinburgh. I've done what I can with those people, using the web and sources in London. I'm sure there's far more information on them out there, but it will be in record offices, the local papers...I'd need to be on the spot to look at them, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

May 2017

My basic sources for any GD member are in a section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources for this particular member are listed at the end of each section.

This is what I have found on JAMES HANDYSIDE and his wife LUCY HANDYSIDE née Hurt.

IN THE GD

The basic records of the Handysides' initiations were kept at the GD's headquarters in London. The records of the Amen-Ra temple were destroyed in 1901, but I think that if they had remained in the Order long enough to undergo the second initiation, to its inner 2nd Order, we would know about it.

Like almost all of the GD members in Edinburgh, the Handysides joined as members of the Edinburgh Lodge of the Theosophical Society. From the TS records it's clear that theosophy was their main interest.

THEOSOPHY

James and Lucy Handyside applied to join the Theosophical Society in March 1893. At that time, all applicants had to have two sponsors who were already TS members. The Handysides' sponsors were George L Simpson; and Andrew Petri Cattanach who was a very committed member, acting as the Edinburgh Lodge's secretary and librarian. Although Lucy Handyside didn't act as anyone's sponsor in the future, James joined with George L Simpson to sponsor two other applicants, and with Andrew Cattanach to sponsor one. I think all three men were friends and this is where William Charles Hopgood comes into the picture - not as a member of the TS in Edinburgh, but as a friend of James Handyside since the mid-1870s, when Hopgood was studying medicine at Edinburgh University. See my file on William Charles Hopgood for John Hepburn Handyside, a mentor to Hopgood and probably a relation of James Handyside though I haven't been able to prove quite how.

The Handysides continued to be members of the TS through two great crises in the organisation, crises in which a good proportion of the members left. They also kept up their membership through a move to Glasgow, and then a move back to Edinburgh, in the years around 1900. James was still a member at his death. Lucy continued to pay her annual subscription until March 1909, when she was one of another large group of members who resigned when Annie Besant was elected president-for-life and reinstated Leadbeater, about whom there had been so much scandal a few years before.

FREEMASONRY

Scottish freemasonry has its own headquarters in Edinburgh. I would need to go there to discover whether James Handyside was a freemason. However, I think not: my researches into the members of the GD have shown that very few men were both freemasons and theosophists.

Sources:

Theosophical Society Membership Registers 1889-1901.

Theosophical Society Membership Register Sep 1891-January 1893 p214: entries for James Handyside and Lucy Handyside.

James' sponsorships of new applicants:

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p143 June 1894: application of March Cochrane, later Mrs Cuthbertson, of Edinburgh. Second sponsor: George L Simpson.

Theosophical Society Membership Register March 1895 to June 1898 p123 November 1896: application William E MacFarlane of Birkenhead. Second sponsor: George L Simpson

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1898-February 1901 p96 May 1899: application of Miss Annie Mills of Edinburgh, later of New York. Second sponsor: A P Cattanach.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

JAMES HANDYSIDE

I thought for a brief period that Dr John Hepburn Handyside was a younger brother of James Handyside's father Robert. However, such census information as I have found for Robert Handyside, father of James, suggests that the relationship is not as close as that: John's brother was born in Edinburgh; James' father was born in Lauder in Berwickshire.

James Handyside was the elder son of Robert Handyside of Lauder, and his wife Catherine, née Cruickshanks, who were married in Edinburgh in 1842. James was their second child, born in Edinburgh in October 1845. He had an older sister, Agnes, and a younger brother, Robert.

Robert Handysides had probably started his working life as a footman but by 1851 he was working as a butler. He was actually with his family on the day of the 1851 census, at 48 Pollerrow Edinburgh St Cuthberts; meaning, I suppose, that his current employer lived either in the city or just outside it. The Handysides had a lodger, James Lindsay, a tailor from Forfar. There were no live-in servants.

On the day of the 1861 census, Robert Handysides was not with his family, he was at Newton House, Tibbermore, just outside Perth, where he was the most senior member of a staff of seven servants. The name of the head of the household has been rendered by Ancestry's transcribers as 'Henrietta Austerlong Spener', which I'm fairly sure is incorrect; she was living at the house with her two children. Catherine Handyside and her children - Agnes, James, and Robert (who was three) were now at 14 William Street, Edinburgh. Agnes and James had left school. I think the transcription of Agnes' occupation can be translated as 'hatmaker's assistant'; and James had been apprenticed to a draper. Again, Catherine Handyside had a lodger, a woman this time: Janet Alexander, who taught needlework.

I couldn't see James' father on the 1871 census in Scotland but he wasn't at home with his family. Catherine had moved a few doors down the street, to 9 William Street, and she had five boarders so I think you can say she was now running a boarding house. James and Robert were still living at home. Robert was at school, James was working in the office of one of Edinburgh's doctors, and I wonder if that's how he met William Charles Hopgood.

LUCY HURT

Despite the references to her name as Hurte with an 'e' in the Scottish Probate records, Hurt without an 'e' is how Lucy was registered.

Lucy Handyside was born in 1848, daughter of William Hurt and his wife Jane, née Redfern. I only found Lucy on a census once before her marriage. On census day 1851 she was living with her parents in Misterton, a village in Nottinghamshire, north-west of Lincoln. William Hurt was the minister of the village's baptist church.

William Hurt is listed in the 1851 Religious Census; but then he and his family seem to disappear from the records. I couldn't find them on the censuses for 1861 and 1871; I tried with Hurt, Hurte, Hunt and even Hart, with no success. I wondered if William Hurt had died; but there were more death registrations 1851-71 than I expected for men with that name and I couldn't identify any of them as Lucy's father. I don't know what happened to Lucy Hurt between census day 1851 and census day 1881.

Sources: censuses 1851-71, freebmd birth and marriage records.

Handyside:

Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1066692: marriage of Robert Handyside to Catherine Cruickshanks, daughter of George Cruickshanks, 29 April 1842 in the parish of Edinburgh.

Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1066695: baptism record of James Handyside, son of Robert and Catherine. Born 16 October 1845 in parish of Edinburgh.

Topographical Dictionary of Scotland volume 1 1846 p633/647 has Newton House Tibbermore listed. At www.carehome.co.uk it's now a care home.

Hurt:

At www.nottshistory.org.uk p11 of the 1851 Religious Census. Entry for the Baptist Chapel at Misterton. Built before 1800. Current minister William Hurt. Congregation: 21 in the afternoons; 18 in evenings.

WORK/PROFESSION

James Handyside married Lucy Hurt at some time during the 1870s. There's no registration of the marriage on freebmd, so I presume they got married in Edinburgh.

If James Handyside finished his apprenticeship at the drapers, he didn't ever work in a draper's shop. Nor did he stay long working in the doctor's surgery. By 1881 and still in 1901, he was employed as a book-keeper in the offices of an Edinburgh coal merchant.

In 1881 James and Lucy Handyside were living at 6 Gladstone Terrace. At that point they didn't employ any live-in servants. By 1891 they had moved to 7 Maxwell Street, Morningside Road, and were employing the basic one general servant. On census day 1901, James was still working for a coal merchant - presumably the same coal merchant as before - but he and Lucy were now in Glasgow, at 3 Arundel Drive. They had no live-in servant on that day; perhaps they were between servants, or had preferred to spend the money on a larger house in a better district. The stay in Glasgow was, or turned out to be, temporary. By 1905 they were back in Edinburgh, first in 27 South Clerk Street and then in 19 West Nicolson Street.

DEATH

James Handyside died in June 1905, Lucy in November 1931. James hadn't made a Will, so perhaps his death was sudden. Lucy had learned from earlier mistakes and made her own Will in 1921. Her executor was Ada Blanch Mellor, a neighbour on South Clark Street. I don't think Lucy and James had had any children.

Sources:

Scottish Probate Calendar 1876-1936:

Entries from 1905: James Handyside, died 27 June 1905.

Entries from 1931: Lucy Hurte or Handyside, died 7 November 1931.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

For the GD members who were freemasons, the membership database of the United Grand Lodge of England is now available via Ancestry: it gives the date of the freemason's first initiation; and the craft lodges he was a member of.

To take careers in craft freemasonry further, the website of the the Freemasons' Library is a good resource: //freemasonry.london.museum. Its catalogue has very detailed entries and the website has all sorts of other resources.

You can get from the pages to a database of freemasons' newspapers and magazines, digitised to 1900. You can also reach that directly at www.masonicperiodicals.org.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

To put contemporary prices and incomes into perspective, I have used www.measuringworth.com/ukcompare which Roger Wright found for me. To help you interpret the 'today' figure, measuringworth gives several options. I pick the 'historic standard of living' option which is usually the lowest, often by a considerable margin!

9 May 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

E Heywood PURKIS who was one of the first people to join the Golden Dawn, being initiated in April 1888 and taking the Latin motto 'Nascitur non fit'. He resigned in 1890.

I know nothing about this person, not even his or her gender. Though I have supposed all along that it was a man, that may be wrong and have led me up the garden path as regards finding out anything about him. I have to say that his or her address at the time of their initiation made my heart sink - Charilley sur Clarens, Canton de Vaud, Switzerland. So I haven't really tried all that hard to hunt him or her out. The only thing I would say - and that very cautiously - is in answer to my query WHO DID HE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN? Most of the earliest members of the GD were acquaintances of William Westcott and (to a lesser extent) Samuel Mathers through freemasonry. However, I couldn't find any references to an E Heywood Purkis at the Freemasons' Library, as being a member of any of the freemasons' lodges Westcott was involved in; and no one with that name was a member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia either.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

24 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Luther Hill was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Horus Temple in Bradford on 19 November 1891. He chose the Latin motto 'Sequor'. He was never an active member and resigned, probably quite soon after his initiation.

This is one of my short biographies. They mostly cover GD members who lived in Bradford, Liverpool and Edinburgh. I've done what I can with those people, using the web and sources in London. I'm sure there's far more information on them out there, but it will be in record offices, the local papers...I'd need to be on the spot to look at them, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

March 2016

This is what I have found on LUTHER HILL.

IN THE GD

Luther didn't follow up his initiation.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Yes. Like most members of the GD in Bradford, he was a member of the Theosophical Society.

He'd applied to join the TS in April 1891. At that time, all applications had to be sponsored by two people who were TS members already. Luther's sponsors were Thomas Pattinson and William Hall Grason. I haven't found out much about Grason, but Thomas Pattinson was an important member of the TS in Bradford and a founder of the GD's Horus Temple; he and GD founder William Wynn Westcott had known each other since the mid-1880s if not earlier.

Luther Hill remained a TS member from 1891 to 1897. Whereas the GD was organised into temples, the TS was organised into lodges, with the major English towns having at least one lodge in the early 1890s. There were two lodges in Bradford but for some reason, Luther chose to be a member of the lodge in Liverpool; I suppose he had friends there, or business acquaintances.

Luther kept a low profile and did not take sides in a dispute which all-but-destroyed the TS in England in the mid-1890s. However, in 1897 he let his membership of the TS lapse.

Source: Theosophical Society Membership Register volume covering January 1889-September 1891 p212.

Just noting that Luther's wife Lucy Hannah was never in the TS or the GD.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

No.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Luther Hill was born in Bradford Yorkshire in 1864. He was the youngest child of Walker Hill and his wife Susannah (née Cook). He was given the same name as a child of Walker and Susannah who had been born in 1858 and died aged only a few months. Luther Hill born 1864 had three older sisters.

The Hill family were involved in the cloth trade in Bradford. In 1861, Walker Hill was a stuff-finisher and foreman in a wool mill. By 1871 he had left the mill and started his own business as a draper and cloth dealer, probably at 118 Westgate in Bradford, where the family were living on census day 1871. All Luther's older sisters were working by 1871. Eliza (aged 20) was a French-polisher, Clara (18) and Miranda (13) were both working as factory hands in a worsted mill. Susannah told the 1871 census official that she was a "draper's wife"; which I take to mean she worked in the shop.

By 1881 the Hill family had moved to 51 Sedgewick Street, though I don't know whether the shop was elsewhere or they were still living above it at the new address. Clara and Eliza were still living with their parents; they both said they were married, but their husbands were not living with them. They were both working: Clara Roper was a worsted weaver now; and Eliza Dunn was a cook. Clara Roper's son, aged 5 months, was also in the household. Luther Hill, now 17, was also still living at home. He was working as a warehouseman in a stuff-making mill.

Sources: census 1861, 1871, 1881; freebmd; and Family history web page halsteadresearch.org.uk, which has good sources for its information: Walker Hill (born 1826) married Susan (sic) Cook, at St Peter Bradford on 29 October 1853. There are some details of Luther Hill's elder sister Clara (born 1853) on this web page; but nothing on his other sisters, Eliza and Miranda.

Just noting that 'susan' isn't right, for Luther's mother: freebmd and various census forms have 'susannah'.

EDUCATION

On the 1871 census Luther was described as "scholar"; so he was at school. Probably he went to the local National School.

WORK/PROFESSION

On the 1891 census, Luther described himself as a stuff cloth dealer. There's some evidence from later (see below) of a firm trading as 'Luther Hill'. On the 1901 census there's a bit more detail about Luther's business; or perhaps he had expanded its range. He's described as a stuff and cloth seller, and skirt manufacturer. The skirt-making may have been done by his wife.

Sources: census 1891, 1901.

ADDRESSES

Before the day of the 1891 census, Luther and his wife had moved to 70 Beamsley Road, between Frizinghall and Shipley, to the north of the Bradford city centre. It was still being given as his home address in 1909 but the TS knew of a different address for him in the mid-1890s, 4 Manor Street. Not sure what's going on with the second address. It doesn't sound like the address of his business.

Sources: census 1891, 1901, 1911; Probate Registry 1909; Edinburgh Gazette 23 May 1913 p555.

FAMILY

Luther Hill married Lucy Hannah Brown in 1888. Lucy was a daughter of John Brown and his wife Hannah. She had been born in 1868 in Cleckheaton, south of Bradford but by 1881 the family had moved to Manningham, another Bradford suburb. In 1881 John Brown was working as a salesman for a drapery firm. It sounds as though he might have known Luther Hill as a customer of his employer.

The marriage would probably have taken place anyway; but it might have been hastened by the fact of the bride being pregnant. Luther and Lucy's first child, Winifred Annie Hill, was born early in 1889, about six months after the wedding. Not a good start. They had two more daughters: Elsie Veda, born 1892; and Constance Marion, born 1895. Luther and Lucy did not have any live-in servants in 1891; but by 1901 they were employing the basic, one general servant.

ECONOMIC PROBLEMS OF BRADFORD

Of course, there was boom and bust, but for most of the 19th century Bradford was one of the richest cities on earth. However, protectionist legislation enacted in the USA in 1890 began its long decline.

A source from the time:

Times Wed 29 October 1890 p5 article discussing the consequences of the recently-passed McKinley Tariff Act in the USA. Included a report from a correspondent in Philadelphia where two representatives of Messrs Lister and Co, one of Bradford's biggest mill owners, were in the town looking for a site on which to build a new mill.

And two more recent accounts:

Technology and Culture vol 51 no 4 2010: article The Yankee Yorkshireman by Mary Blewett 2009 . Published by Johns Hopkins University Press 2010. On p36-37 there's an account of a relative decline in the Bradford woollen industry in the 1870s; with mills diversifying from cloth-making to making women's dresses and suiting for men's suits and outdoor wear.

Connecting Seas and Connected Ocean Rims...Migrations from the 1830s to the 1930s, ed Donna R Gabaccia and Dirk Hoerder. Leiden and Boston Mass: Brill 2011 p346-48, describing the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 as a disaster for Bradford's woollen industry.

See also my biography of Joseph Leach Atherton, whom Luther Hill will have known. I haven't been able to prove it but I believe Atherton may have worked for Lister and Co.

ABSENCE AND DEATH

Luther Hill went to Canada in 1907, travelling on the Lucania from Liverpool to New York, and then overland. His wife and daughters did not go with him. I can think of three reasons why he might have done that; perhaps there are more, but here are my three:

- 1) it was a business trip. This seems the least likely: Luther's business seems to have been a very local one, not on an international scale.
- 2) he was the advanced guard, going to Canada to find work and raise some money so that his wife and daughters could join him.
- 3) he had abandoned his business and family. I have to say that this seems the most likely of the three.

Luther Hill didn't return to England. He died in April 1909, somewhere in northern Alberta.

Sources: via Ancestry to Canadian Passenger Lists 1865-1935; Probate Registry 1909 which gave the date of Luther Hill's death but only "northern Alberta" as the place. Northern Alberta has hardly any settlements of any size, unless you count Edmonton; but if Luther Hill had died there I think the Probate Registry would have noted it down.

WHAT (IF ANYTHING) HAPPENED NEXT.

Luther's wife Lucy attempted to carry on his business, trading as "Luther Hill" from a stall in Kirkgate Market. In 1911 Lucy, Winifred, Elsie and Constance were still living at 70 Beamsley Road. Lucy's younger brother William was living with them; he was working in a factory warehouse. The 'Luther Hill' business went into receivership in 1913. I haven't been able to find out what happened to Lucy and her children after that year. Too many people called Hill!

Sources: census 1911; Edinburgh Gazette 23 May 1913 p555 reprinting a list originally in London Gazette; and London Gazette 3 June 1913 p3973.

Searching google with Luther Hill's daughters full names, I didn't get any responses that I was convinced by. I looked in freebmd for a death registration for Lucy Hannah Hill; again I didn't get anything that convinced me though there was one in 1929 in Eccleshall and one in the city of Leicester in 1950 that might have been her.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

28 March 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

William Charles Hopgood was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn in September 1894 at its Horus Temple in Bradford. He chose the Latin motto 'Lupulus bonus'.

He gave the administrators of the Horus Temple an address in Redcar, though in the 1880s and again from the late 1890s GD he lived in Middlesbrough. He was still a member of the GD in 1898 though he never reached the level where he would have been eligible for its inner, Second Order.

He may have been called 'Charles' not 'William'.

UPDATE MAY 2017

Thanks are due to an American descendant of William Charles' Hopgood's elder brother Philip Downing Hopgood. A few weeks ago she sent details from the membership database of the United Grand Lodge of England, now available on Ancestry. This prompted me to delve a little deeper into William Charles' life as a doctor and as a freemason; and my delving also led to the discovery of a probable friendship between William Charles Hopgood and two GD members who lived in Edinburgh.

Even after the update, this is still one of my short GD biographies. They mostly cover GD members who lived in Bradford, Liverpool and Edinburgh. I've done what I can with those people, using the web and sources in London. I'm sure there's far more information on them out there, but it will be in record offices, the local papers...I'd need to be on the spot to look at them, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

16 May 2017

This is what I've found out about WILLIAM CHARLES HOPGOOD

IN THE GD

William Charles could have found out about it through Alfred Ernest Scanlan, a GP working in Middlesbrough. Scanlan was in the Theosophical Society and from 1893 if not before, he knew people who were in the TS's Bradford Lodge. Nearly all the members of the TS in Bradford were in the GD as well. Scanlan was initiated into the GD during 1893.

With proof (May 2017) that William Charles was a member of freemasons' lodges in north Yorkshire, it becomes more likely that he might have discovered the GD's existence through acquaintances who were freemasons. I think I prefer the friends-in-the-TS-route, however.

There's a letter dated 17 March 1898, from Thomas Pattinson of the Horus Temple Bradford to Frederick Leigh Gardiner, who was about to be appointed the Temple's Cancellarius. Pattinson says that Gardiner would shortly be in a position to "assess Hopgood". The letter doesn't elaborate on what the assessment would be for, though normally speaking, an assessment would take place on study-work a GD member had done: their homework, as it were.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

FREEMASONRY

Thanks to my American emailer, I'm able to say that William Charles did join three freemasons' lodges. They were all craft lodges and I haven't found any evidence that he progressed further into freemasonry. He didn't remain in any of the lodges for very long.

William Charles Hopgood grew up in Oxfordshire but his first initiation into freemasonry came as part of a move to north Yorkshire. On 22 October 1877, he became a member of Cleveland Lodge 543. Lodge 543 was based in Stokesley, a centre of handloom weaving a few miles south of Middlesbrough where William Charles had gone to work. During his time as a member, it was meeting at the Golden Lion, Market Place. See below for why I think he was asked to join it by Dr John Hepburn Handyside, who had worked as a surgeon and apothecary in Stokesley since moving there from Scotland. In 1847 Handyside had been a founder member of the lodge. He was its first Worshipful Master and served five more times in the role; and was also lodge secretary for 31 years.

The writing is very faint on the 'subscriptions paid' page of the UGLE membership list in which William Charles' memberships are noted down; but I think he only paid his annual subscription to Cleveland Lodge 543 for two or three years - setting a pattern that he repeated in the two other lodges he became a member of. A lodge history, based on minutes of its meetings, confirms that he was never an active or prominent member of it.

Although in 1879 he was in the process of leaving Oxfordshire to work elsewhere, it was in Chipping Norton that he received his second lodge initiation, at The Bowyer Lodge 1036. A lodge history includes a full list of its members and shows that only one other man with the surname Hopgood joined it in the 19th century: William Charles' eldest brother Richard Cooper Hopgood. Richard must have been recruited before 1873. William Charles' recruitment was during a period when the lodge was trying to recover after several years of internal tensions which had resulted in many resignations, even of founding members. The lodge won't have been expecting William Charles to be an active member, as he was moving away; he paid his dues for a year or two but then stopped.

The last lodge William Charles was initiated into was in Middlesbrough: Ferrum Lodge 1848. This was a new lodge, founded in 1879 and, naturally, anxious to attract new members. William Charles was initiated in January 1881; he paid his yearly subscription for the next two years but then dropped out, and that seems to have been his last involvement in freemasonry.

This is very speculative but I think that William Charles knew future GD members James and Lucy Handyside when he was studying medicine at Edinburgh University in the mid-1870s; and that James may have given William Charles a letter of introduction to John Hepburn Handyside when William Charles was thinking of moving to Middlesbrough. James Handyside was working in the offices of a GP in Edinburgh in the 1870s and perhaps that was how he and William Charles met; though I'm also suggesting that they had similar interests and might have encountered each other anyway.

I haven't been able to prove it, but I think James Handyside, and John Hepburn Handyside, may have been nephew and uncle: James' father was called Robert; and John Hepburn Handyside had an older brother called Robert; but I haven't been able to find evidence that those two Robert Handysides are the same person and later census information suggests they aren't.

THEOSOPHY

Unlike Alfred Scanlan, William Charles was not a member of the Theosophical Society; at least, not during the 1890s, though the TS was very active in Bradford. However, a name he gave his house in Middlesbrough in the 1900s suggests that he might have been interested in Ancient Egypt. If I'm right about his knowing James and Lucy Handyside in the 1870s, he may have shared that interest in the mythology and religions of Egypt with them. The TS lodge in Edinburgh wasn't founded until the 1890s - too late for William Charles to join it - but James and Lucy were active members of it, perhaps on the strength of having read her Isis Unveiled, published in 1877.

James and Lucy Handyside were initiated into the GD's Amen-Ra temple in Edinburgh in September 1895. Perhaps William Charles had suggested to them that they might like to give the GD a try; though they knew plenty of members of the GD in Edinburgh - almost all the members of the TS in the city joined the GD as well. Although the GD had started out with all its rituals based on Rosicrucian ideas and symbolism, by the mid-1890s Egyptian elements also played an important role.

SPIRITUALISM

Involvement in spiritualism is a tricky thing to investigate, as it was mostly carried out by informal groups in their own homes. There were one or two national organisations - the best-known is the British National Association of Spiritualists - but there's no list of its members that can be consulted now.

Sources:

GD:

Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection. Concertina-file with catalogue number NS73: letters mostly to (but occasionally from) GD member Frederick Leigh Gardner.

Freemasonry:

UGLE members' database seen at Ancestry.

CLEVELAND LODGE 543.

Cleveland Lodge 543 Centenary 1847-1947. No author is credited on the title page, but the lodge history section is by Edwin Franks. Printed Middlesbrough: Jordison and Co Ltd. There's no date of publication: p9, pp13-14; pp22-24; p42 et seq.

THE BOWYER LODGE 1036.

The Bowyer Lodge 1864-2014 by Richard A Stevens. No printers details but the work is copyrighted, 2015: pp21-24 of a history that ranges wider than most lodge histories do, covering the growth of freemasonry in Oxfordshire in general; pp32-33. Lists of important members p101; pp105-07. Full list of members from its founding in 1864 begins p122; pp124-25.

FERRUM LODGE 1848

I found the two lodge histories given above at the Freemasons' Library. The FML doesn't have a history of Ferrum Lodge 1848 so I think none has been written.

John Hepburn Handyside and James Handyside:

Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1067756: baptism record of John Hepburn Handyside, born 13 April 1815 at Inveresk w Musselburgh. Parents John, and Isabella née Hepburn.

His older brother Robert: Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1066761: baptism record from St Cuthbert's Edinburgh of Robert Handyside born 9 January 1807; parents John and Isabella.

SOMEONE called Robert Handyside is GD member James' father: Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1066692: marriage of Robert Handyside to Catherine Cruickshanks 29 April 1842 in the parish of Edinburgh. Robert Handyside's father isn't named; so I can't prove beyond doubt that Robert and John Hepburn Handyside are brothers.

Birth of William Charles' friend James Handyside: Familysearch Scotland-VR GS film number 1066695: baptism record of James Handyside, son of Robert and Catherine. Born 16 October 1845 in parish of Edinburgh.

Theosophy:

Theosophical Society Membership Registers 1888 to 1901.

Theosophical Society Membership Register September 1891-January 1893 p214 entries for James Handyside and Lucy Handyside. They both joined in March 1893, and were members of Edinburgh Lodge, at least to start with.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

William Charles Hopgood was born into a family of doctors in Chipping Norton Oxfordshire. His father, was Thomas Hopgood, who ran a general practice and a pharmacy in the town in the mid-19th century and began the medical training of three of his sons. I say 'began' but the two generations of Hopgood doctors illustrate how medicine in the 19th century was moving rapidly away from a training as an apprentice to an older practitioner, to a training requiring qualifications gained at a university.

Thomas Hopgood was elected a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons (MRCS) in 1846 and was Licensed to practice medicine by the Society of Apothecaries (LSA) in 1858. Both of these sets of letters-to-the-name came late in his life and his entries in the Medical Directories - first published in the 1850s, the need for such a publication an indication in itself of how the profession was changing - do not list any university qualifications for him. He was able to begin training his three doctor sons but then all three of them were sent away to finish their training, with the youngest two spending a year or two at university medical schools.

Thomas Hopgood married Hannah Cooper of Bledington in Gloucestershire in October 1841. They lived on the High Street in Chipping Norton, probably above the chemist's shop and the rooms where Thomas Hopgood saw his patients. They had four sons. The eldest, Richard, trained as a pharmacist and by 1871 was also practising as a dentist, another skill he might have learned from his father before medicine and dentistry became separate professions with separate training. The three younger sons were the doctors, with William Charles the youngest, born in the summer of 1854.

Philip Downing Hopgood, Thomas and Hannah's second son, was sent to St Bartholomew's Hospital in London for his further training; though he doesn't seem to have done any university courses. He was made MRCS and LSA - he will have had to qualify by examination - in 1867. He worked for a time as house surgeon at Portsmouth, Portsea and Gosport Hospital, and resident surgeon at the Portsmouth Lock Hospital; and then moved to be house surgeon at the Great Northern Hospital in London, before returning to Oxfordshire to set up as a GP. He moved to Stow-on-the-Wold, where his mother's family came from, and by 1880 was a partner in the general practice of Haywood and Hopgood. New opportunities for doctors were opening up in the institutions run by the Poor Law Unions, and Philip became Medical Officer at Stow-on-the-Wold workhouse. There were also different new opportunities in local authorities as the range of their duties expanded; Philip Hopgood was Medical Officer to Stow-on-the-Wold urban district council.

The next doctor brother, Thomas Frederick Hopgood, was probably the most brilliant of the three. After being the first Hopgood to study at university - at University College London, where he won the Fellowes gold medal - he became MRCS and LSA in 1867 and was also the first Hopgood to become a Member of the Royal College of Physicians (MRCP) which was taking over the licensing role previously played by the Society of Apothecaries. After graduation he worked at the Royal Surrey County Hospital at Guildford or a time as house surgeon, before moving to Sunderland, to take advantage of a rather different set of new opportunities - those arising in the rapidly-growing cities of the industrial north of England. By 1880 he was senior house surgeon at Sunderland Infirmary, while also working at the Sunderland and North Durham Eye Infirmary, the orphan asylum, and Monkwearmouth and Southwick Dispensary. Over the next few years he also found time to write a few short articles for medical magazines - of which there were more and more, as the profession expanded.

I think that William Charles Hopgood was the least committed to medicine of the three doctor brothers. However, he did follow the elder two into the profession. On the day of the 1871 census, still living at home in Chipping Norton, he was listed as a surgeon's pupil: that is, he was beginning his medical training by working as his father's assistant, as his elder brothers had both done. Then, like Thomas Frederick, he was sent to university, firstly to University College London and then to Edinburgh medical school. He qualified as MRCS and LSA in 1875. Unlike his brothers, however, he didn't spend time working as house surgeon at a hospital. He returned to Chipping Norton and joined his father's general practice. He worked there for a couple of years before following his brother Thomas Frederick to north-east England around 1877; not to Sunderland, however, to Middlesbrough.

Sources: freebmd, census 1851-71, probate registry 1873.

I began my sweep through the Medical Directories at 1855.

Medical Directory 1855 London and Provincial list p233 in which only Thomas Hopgood was listed.

Then I went on to:

Medical Directory 1870. Provincial List p439 which had Thomas, Philip Downing, and Thomas Frederick Hopgood listed.

I jumped forward then to:

Medical Directory 1880. Provincial List.

Familysearch England-ODM GS film number 856928: marriage of Thomas Hopgood and Hannah Cooper 21 October 1841 in Bledington Glos.

Richard Cooper Hopgood: census 1871 when he was living in Over Norton, with wife Louise and daughter Mabel. Probate Registry entry indicates he died in Cradock, Cape Colony South Africa in January 1873.

Familysearch England-ODM GS file number 95229: baptism of William Charles Hopgood 30 July 1854 at Chipping Norton.

WILLIAM CHARLES HOPGOOD IN MIDDLESBROUGH

Dr Thomas Hopgood died in Chipping Norton in October 1880. By that time William Charles was living at 101 Grange Road Middlesbrough. I'm not sure whether this was the same house as 41 Grange Road West, which was where he was living on the day of the 1881 census. On that day, he was still unmarried. There were no servants living in the house, so perhaps he had a cook and skivvy coming in by the day. He had some visitors, though, on census day: Mrs Isabella Scarf, aged 36, from Horsley in Northumberland, and her two daughters Marion (14) and Ruby (7) who had both been born in Yorkshire. It's possible, I think, that Mrs Scarf was not the visitor she claimed to be, but lived in the house permanently and was employed by William Charles as his housekeeper. However, neither of them said so to the census official.

During his first few years in Middlesbrough, William Charles worked as surgeon to a number of local institutions set up to help men working in its heavy industries. He's likely to have seen a lot of industrial injuries. In addition to being surgeon to the wire works and the boilermakers, he also did work for the Odd Fellows, the Free Gardeners, the Druids and the Lothian Club. It's likely, though, that this work was designed to earn money while getting his name known in the city, and that he never had any intention of making it a lifetime's commitment. After a few years he gave it up and went into private practice.

By 1890 William Charles was a GP at 6 Acklam Terrace Newport Road, which I think is the same place as 66 Newport Road, in the Linthorpe district of Middlesbrough, where he was living on census day 1891. This census day he was definitely employing a housekeeper who lived in, a Mrs Harriett Farman, aged 48, who was originally from Suffolk. He - or more likely Mrs Farman - had a young visitor that day, Florence Pettit aged 14 and born in Yarmouth.

In the late 1890s William Charles may have left Middlesbrough for a while. His address in the 1895 issue of the Medical Directory is 37 Newcomen Street, in the Coatham district of Redcar; and in the 1899 issue his listing doesn't have an address at all. 37 Newcomen Street Coatham was very near to where his future wife was living, with her parents; and that's probably how they met.

Ann Stainsby Gardiner was the only child of Thomas Wheatley Gardiner and Ann Parker, who had married in Houghton-le-Spring in 1852. Ann was born in 1856. Thomas Gardiner ran a grocer's shop in Willington county Durham, but probably retired from it after 1886, when he and another man were indicted for stealing Ann Wilson's cow and calf and receiving the stolen goods. On the day of the 1891 census, Thomas Gardiner - now describing himself as a retired seller of spirits - was living with his wife and daughter at 46 Newcomen Terrace Coatham. He died on 4 March 1893 and on 20 March 1893, Ann Stainsby Gardiner and William Charles Hopgood were married.

Sources:

Medical Directory 1881 Provincial list p543; and obituaries p1343.

Medical Directory 1882 Provincial list p550; p880, p901.

Medical Directory 1888 p1547 Provincial list.

A different source for his whereabouts in 1890: www.genuki.org.uk has Bulmer's Directory of Middlesbrough issue of 1890. An online transcription with no page numbers.

Then I went on to Medical Directory 1895 Provincial list p789.

The next change in William Charles Hopgood's entry was:

Medical Directory 1899 volume 1 Provincial directory p838: back in Middlesbrough but without an address.

Ann Stainsby Gardiner: freebmd, census 1861, 1891, probate registry 1893.

Freebmd has what I think is the same marriage registered twice: Thomas Gardiner to Ann Parker April-June 1852; and Thomas Gardner to Ann Parker July-September 1852. Both registrations were at Houghton-le-Spring.

At //archivesunlocked.northyorks.gov.uk: North Riding Quarter Sessions cases Michaelmas 1886.

I also saw the case referred to via genesreunited but I couldn't see its outcome.

William Charles' marriage to Ann: Findmypast, Teeside Archives reference PR CO 7 p184: marriages in Yorkshire.

LATER LIFE

By 1900 William Charles and Ann were living at 92 Park Road Middlesbrough, where they remained until the first World War. By 1911 the house had acquired a very interesting name - when completing his 1911 census form, William Charles wrote that his home was called Athor House. 'Athor' is an alternative spelling of the Egyptian hieroglyphs more usually transliterated as 'Hathor'. Perhaps Ann shared William Charles' interest in Ancient Egypt, though she didn't join the GD and as far as I know was never a TS member either.

Ann Hopgood's mother Ann Gardiner was living with them on census day 1901; I assume she had done so since the marriage and continued to do so until her death in 1904. On census day 1901 the household had no live-in servants, but by 1911, William Charles and Ann were employing one general servant who lived in. The extra expense could be afforded because William Charles had taken on his only role in public health medicine: he had become a public vaccinator, work which was paid for by the local authority.

William Charles and Ann lived in Middlesbrough until 1913 or 1914. Then they left it and were listed in the 1914 Medical Directory at Glencote, in Wendover Buckinghamshire. This seems to have been a temporary address and by 1915, they had gone to 1 Bohemia Road, St Leonard's-on-Sea, right down on the south coast. William Charles continued to be listed in the Medical Directories until the late 1930s but I still think of the move as one into semi-retirement. Even if it was not intended to be such a move, William Charles was likely to have had fewer patients and more leisure time. Competition for patients in the St Leonard's and Hastings area was fierce: in 1915 about 60 GP's were practising in those two smallish towns.

Ann Stainsby Hopgood died in March 1925 and was buried back in the north-east, in Monkwearmouth, perhaps in a family plot. By 1929 William Charles had moved to 1 Priory Road Hastings where he was still in practice in his mid-70s. After a decade of widowhood and presumably realising he would die quite soon, he married Lucy Martin early in 1937. He died on 5 August 1937 at home at 1 Priory Road. He had no children.

Sources: freebmd, census 1901, 1911, probate registry 1937.

Medical Directory 1900 Provincial list p857.

Hopgood's entry from 1900 remains the same until:

Medical Directory 1914 part 1 Provincial list p744.

Medical Directory 1915 Provincial list p753.

The St Leonard's-on-Sea entry then continues unchanged until:

Medical Directory 1929 volume 2 p771, p1238.

William Charles' last listing is in Medical Directory 1937 volume 1 p813 still at 1 Priory Road Hastings.

Medical Directory 1938 volume 1 has no listing for him.

Via www.durham-images.org to list of burials at Bishopwearmouth Cemetery: folio number 98, entry number 1947, box number 34. William Charles Hopgood is not buried there.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

17 May 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Jessie Louisa Horne was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn, at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in November 1891. She chose the Latin motto 'Ave atque vale' and it sums up her relationship with the GD rather well. The GD administrative records show that when she joined the Order, Jessie Louisa was living at 35 Henslowe Road East Dulwich. She seems to have begun work on the programme of study that new initiates were expected to follow, and as late as April 1892 was still borrowing from the GD's library copies of lectures to read (probably given by William Wynn Westcott). However, she resigned from the Order after less than a year's membership, in August 1892. Jessie Louisa Horne's sister Agnes was married to GD member Sidney Coryn. Both Sidney Coryn and his brother Herbert Coryn were members of the Golden Dawn in the early 1890s.

JESSIE LOUISA'S FAMILY

I am sure of the identity of Jessie Louisa's mother; less sure about that of her father, who got married, had four children and died, all between two census days.

Jessie Louisa Horne's mother was Jessie Taylor. Jessie's family lived in Walworth, south London, where her father John M Taylor was in business. I couldn't read what his business was on the 1851 census - the census official had tried to pack too much detail into too little room - but I think I could see a note saying that John Taylor employed eight men, so it was quite a large one. Jessie Taylor hadn't joined her father's business, she had done an apprenticeship in the linen shop kept by Arabella Penprase at 101 St John's Wood Terrace, in a well-to-do suburb of north London. The apprenticeship completed, Jessie continued to work in the linen shop, promoted to be Miss Penprase's assistant and with a new apprentice working with her. I imagine that Jessie Taylor worked for Miss Penprase until she got married.

Jessie Taylor married a man called Frederick William Horne, in Walworth, in 1861. I have found a man called Frederick Horne on the 1861 census, lodging at 30 Harrington Street North, Regent's Park, and working as a foreman in a cutlery-making factory. I am going to assume he is Jessie Louisa's father.

Jessie Louisa was the eldest of four children; she was born in 1862. Her three younger siblings were Agnes Sophia (named after both Jessie Horne's sisters and her mother) born 1864; Frederick James born 1867; and Percy Stuart, born early in 1869. But then Frederick William Horne died, in the summer of 1869.

Being widowed - particularly unexpectedly - with four children under 10, was a financial catastrophe for most women in the 1860s and I've no idea how Jessie Horne coped in the next few years because neither she nor her children are on the 1871 census. However, by the day of the 1881 census Jessie Horne was running her own business as a ladies' outfitter and milliner. On that day, she and her children were living at 12a Acre Lane Stockwell, just down the road from the Coryn family; and I'm going to assume that they were living above the shop. Percy was still at school but Jessie Louisa, Agnes and Frederick were all working, so that the worst of Jessie Horne's financial struggles (I am sure she had them) were probably over. Agnes was working as a pottery designer; Frederick was serving an apprenticeship; and Jessie Louisa had already begun in what was to be her career - she was teaching. Also in the household was 17-year-old Annie Southgate, who worked as Jessie Horne's assistant (just noting that none of Jessie Horne's children ever worked for their mother's business).

According to the information Jessie Louisa Horne gave the Teachers' Registration Council, she was first employed as a teacher in 1887. However, her mother had told the 1881 census official that Jessie Louisa was working as a governess. Earlier in the century, there would be no doubt that a governess was a woman who worked in a private house, teaching and looking after the young children of a wealthy family; either living in that house, or going to it as a place of employment each day she was required. However, I've seen other GD members describing themselves as governesses when they were clearly working in a school. As a term describing employment, 'governess' was gradually being replaced by the words 'school mistress' or 'teacher' as women moved to take advantage of the opportunities the 1870 Elementary Education Act opened up for them, particularly (according to my source on women teachers in London) women from the lower middle-classes - which I think is what Jessie Louisa Horne was, as the daughter of a shop-keeper.

By 1911, Jessie Louisa Horne was employed by the London County Council. The 1870 Act had set up a School Board for London to administer schools in the area already covered by the Metropolitan Board of Works (MBW), taking over the schools already in that area which were run by the National Schools for Promoting Religious Education (NSPRE). Because a completely new bureaucracy had to be set up and a large number of new buildings constructed, the Act was rolled out in stages, so that teachers were hired gradually rather than all at once. The MBW was succeeded by the London County Council in 1889 but the School Board for London kept its independence until the Education (London) Act 1903, when it passed into the control of the LCC; so that teachers originally employed by the NSPRE or the School Board for London became LCC employees by default, Jessie Louisa being among them.

The only information I have about when Jessie Louisa Horne was taken on by the School Board for London is a Report issued by its Management Committee in 1900 which has her on its list of current employees. However, I think it's likely that Jessie Louisa Horne applied to the School Board for London for a job in 1887 and was accepted because of the many years of experience she already had teaching young children. She was 25 in 1887; perhaps she had decided not to marry; or perhaps she would have liked to marry but was facing the possibility that she might not ever do so. Either way, she saw the School Board for London as offering more secure employment than any job with a family could do and with far better working conditions. The work might be more exacting and she would have to put up with regular inspections of her teaching; but as recompense for those, she would have clearly-defined working hours; the slim possibility of promotion; and a pension. The system was biased - men were felt to be worth more - and figures from 1912-13 show up to one-third of teachers earning less than £100 per year (that is, less than an averagely-paid male clerk in an office).

However, it was still very well paid work when compared to the other kinds of work women did; and a few women earned over £200 per year - serious money for the lower-middle-classes. Jessie Louisa was not alone in opting to work in a school rather than a family. The 1870 Act saw a big expansion in job opportunities for women teachers in schools set up under the new national system: by 1900, 75% of teachers in the 1870 Act's schools were women.

Given that in 1881 Jessie Louisa Horne was probably working as a governess in a family, where did she learn to teach? Nowhere, is one answer: paid work in a family home was all-but unregulated in the 19th century and you could start out as governess with a family's children with no experience and virtually no education, your moral outlook weighing with prospective employers as much as what you knew. However, it's possible - IF Jessie Louisa had been a pupil at a NSPRE school - that she had learned at least the basics of teaching there. The National Society for the Promotion of Religious Education was a charity, founded (in 1811) to provide a basic education for poor children. Although the NSPRE was not run by the Church of England, the CofE's doctrine was basic to what was taught in its schools, and in order to be a pupil your family had to attend the parish church regularly. To keep costs down, the NSPRE operated a 'monitor' system whereby selected older pupils taught the younger ones: so that Jessie Louisa, if chosen, would have undergone an apprenticeship of sorts, though she would not have been paid. Since 1833 the NSPRE had received grants from central government; but in the late 1860s its efforts were felt to be not enough for modern times. The 1870 Act eventually replaced the NSPRE with schools run by local authorities and paid for by the rates, under a central government Board of Education.

No records of the careers of individual teachers employed by the LCC and its predecessors exist any longer; so I can only talk in a general way about the working life Jessie Louisa is likely to have had as one of its teachers. I think it might be possible to work out what pay Jessie Louisa Horne received at different times in her working life, and how and when she was promoted; but this would involve looking through nearly 30 years of committee Minutes at the London Metropolitan Archive and I have decided not to do it.

Not only was the work of a woman School Board for London teacher more exacting than that of a governess; the chances are it was more boring too; and the teacher had less chance to build a personal relationship with any of her pupils, as classes were so large. The curriculum was based on the Victorian understanding of gender and class roles, particularly with regard to girls. It was assumed that they would - essentially - do housework all their lives, with some childcare; either helping their mothers or working as servants in another woman's household until they married; and then working in the marital home and caring for their own children. Apart from lessons designed to achieve a very basic literacy for all pupils, Jessie Louisa Horne will have spent most of her time teaching sewing, washing and the care of clothes to the older girls; and it was her sewing-lessons that would be watched by the school inspectors. Cookery got onto the syllabus in 1882 but most schools had no kitchen facilities; imagine learning how to make a stew without ingredients or a cooking range! Jessie Louisa would have had to teach arithmetic as even girls were expected to know some; though in practice they were allowed to opt to do extra sewing instead. The teaching code issued in 1890 did not expect girls to learn geometry or algebra, so Jessie Louisa won't have needed to teach those even if she had learned them (which seems unlikely). More emphasis would have been put by the school inspectors on women teachers making clear to their pupils (though perhaps not in so many words) the stereotypical virtues of womanhood that they were all meant to develop - being focused on home and family; being hard-working and dutiful; knowing their place in the hierarchy of the time (that is, at the bottom of it).

During Jessie Louisa Horne's working life there were some changes, of course. New subjects were introduced to the curriculum, so that by 1900 Jessie Louisa will have been teaching some history and geography, and possibly singing and physical education. And the poor health of men attempting to sign up for the Boer War led the Board of Education to order that more time be allocated in School Board schools to childcare and infant health care.

Restricted though the system was in its expectations of women teachers and girl pupils, the School Board for London/LCC was still a place where Jessie Louisa Horne prospered. By as early as 1890 it had enabled her to move, with her mother, to East Dulwich and then, in 1891, to more modern housing in Peckham Rye. On the day of the 1891 census Jessie Louisa was at home on her own in Peckham Rye, Jessie Horne having gone to stay with Frederick Horne, whose wife Kate had just given birth to Jessie Horne's first grand-child, Jessie Louisa's first nephew. By 1901 Jessie Louisa could afford to be on holiday abroad on the day of the census. And by 1911, now aged 49, she had been promoted to be a head teacher and had moved to Plumstead, where she spent the rest of her life. In 1911 she was living on her own in 42 Howarth Road, which may have been her own house - that is, she wasn't renting, she was paying a mortgage. When Jessie Louisa died she was still living in the same road, possibly in the same house, renumbered. Meanwhile, Jessie Horne had decided to leave London, and had moved to Margate, where she died in 1919; Jessie Louisa was her executor.

Jessie Louisa Horne was still teaching in 1917, but would have been eligible to retire in 1927 (I think - see my Sources section below for why I'm not sure). Perhaps she used her increased leisure to pursue her studies of theosophy and yoga.

Jessie Louisa Horne joined the Theosophical Society (TS) in September 1890. At that time all prospective members had to have sponsors who were members already; one of Jessie Louisa's sponsors was Herbert Coryn. I daresay the Horne and Coryn families had known one another since the Coryns arrived in London from Cornwall around 1876; and in 1888 Sidney Coryn had married Jessie Louisa's sister Agnes. Although some TS members liked to go to the meetings held at the TS headquarters building in Regent's Park, most preferred to join a lodge near their home or work, and Jessie Louisa joined Brixton Lodge, where Herbert Coryn was an active member. Jessie Louisa was never quite such an active theosophist as either of the Coryn brothers, but in 1892 she was elected Brixton Lodge's secretary and became responsible for organising its programme of talks and its Friday-evening discussion group, where members struggled to make sense of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine, probably guided by Herbert Coryn who had been able to ask Blavatsky about it in person. Jessie Louisa gave one talk herself at Brixton Lodge, on Yoga, on 6 September 1892; and gave it again a short distance away at Croydon Lodge a few days later. Sidney Coryn - Jessie Louisa's brother-in-law - was Croydon Lodge's president and William Dunn (another GD member) its secretary. In 1893 she did something neither of the Coryn brothers did, despite the range of their activities on the TS's behalf: she gave money to one of its projects attempting to bring theosophy to London's poor. She donated 16/6 to a kind-of youth club run by the women of the TS for working girls in Bow, in London's East End. The girls who used the club were the type of girl Jessie Louisa taught every working day, now grown up a little and doing the type of low-paid, repetitive, future-less job that she had had to help them prepare for.

Update 28 March 2013: I had more or less finished this biography of Jessie Louisa Horne when I suddenly thought, "That's odd" about her talks on Yoga. Digging round in my memory I couldn't remember seeing anyone else in the TS in England give a talk on Yoga during the 1890s; and I also couldn't remember more than one or two articles on the subject in any of the theosophy journals I looked at. So I've done a quick look-round to see what exactly she might have been talking about, and how much of a pioneer she was.

It turns out that rather more was known about Yoga in 1890s Britain than I had supposed (see the Sources section). Some excellent sources on the web showed me that 1) the outlines of this complex and ancient subject were known to people in the West who had an interest in Eastern philosophy; and 2) that the Theosophical Society was an important agent in bringing Yoga to Western attention. All the sources I looked at made it clear that in the 1890s, the split between the physical and the meditational side of Yoga hadn't happened yet; both the two were seen as necessary to the practice of it, the aim being to use both of them as means of achieving unity with the Divine.

The first Indian to lecture on the subject in the USA and Europe did not arrive in England until 1895; so in giving her talk in 1892, Jessie Louisa was well ahead of the field. It's likely that she got her knowledge of Yoga as you would expect her to have done, from what I've written above - from Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, in person (Blavatsky had only just died when Jessie Louisa gave her talks) and from Blavatsky's books and articles. As a result, I'm not sure how well she understood the physical exercises you do; I wonder if anyone was demonstrating them at the TS in London before 1895? At the website www.blavatsky.net I found the gist of articles on yoga by Blavatsky published in 1880-81. In them Blavatsky makes a distinction between Raja Yoga, and Hatha Yoga, the physical discipline without which Raja Yoga cannot even be attempted. Jessie Louisa may have been daunted by Blavatsky's belief that to achieve that unity with the Divine you had to have practised Yoga from your youth - which effectively debarred all Westerners. However, she may have found, as people do, that the exercises and techniques of meditation brought great benefits in themselves - helping you relax and concentrate, and focus on the end in view while being surrounded by noisy irrelevance. In addition, other articles on Yoga published by Blavatsky at different times show that Blavatsky did see Yoga as a technique of the Occult. In them, she mentions magic, elementals and astral bodies; so it's not surprising Jessie Louisa Horne was brought to wonder if the kind of work being done by the GD might suit and interest her.

28 March 2013: back into the original text before my Yoga insert:

Jessie Louisa remained a member of the TS until 1895 when - together with the Coryn brothers and their sister Frances - she resigned from it, having sided with the loser in the dispute between Annie Besant and William Quan Judge over who should lead the TS and in what direction, now that Blavatsky was dead.

Herbert and Sidney Coryn, and their friends William Dunn and Herbert Crooke, became the most prominent English supporters of Katherine Tingley, who succeeded William Quan Judge as leader of theosophy in the United States with the rallying cry 'universal brotherhood'. They helped organise and promote Tingley's visit to England in 1896 and all but Crooke later emigrated to live in or near Tingley's theosophical community at Point Loma California. Universal brotherhood became the official policy of the TS in America and the name of the organisation was changed to acknowledge this; at the same time, Mrs Tingley became its leader-for-life. The Universal Brotherhood and Theosophical Society of America had a branch in Britain, run by the Coryns' friend Herbert Crooke. Unfortunately, no records of it exist so that I can't tell who its members were. So I can't tell whether Jessie Louisa Horne was excited by the 'universal brotherhood' idea; or - if she was - how practically involved with it she became. She didn't emigrate, that's for sure. Perhaps she just continued to pursue her interest in Yoga on her own, or with friends. Yoga did begin to de-couple itself from the TS in the early 1900s. The Yoga timeline source I found mentioned that in 1910 there was a Yoga Society advertising in the Times, which Jessie Louisa could have been a member of but which was not connected to the TS.

Sidney and Agnes Coryn went to California in 1902. Jessie Louisa did have three nephews, possibly more, but she seems to have been particularly close to her only niece, Marjorie Stella Coryn. It will have been difficult time-wise, as well as expensive, for Jessie Louisa to go and visit the Coryns in the USA, the journey taking several weeks each way; so she may not have seen her sister and niece for a couple of decades, until the first World War brought Marjorie Stella to Europe in 1917; and Agnes also returned, probably in 1921 after Sidney's death. Marjorie Stella found work in Paris after the war was over; perhaps Jessie Louisa visited her there. Marjorie Stella's brother Frederick Sidney also returned to Europe, in 1916 or 1917, to fight. Many of Jessie Louisa's ex-pupils will also have gone to war and a lot will not have returned. Frederick Sidney returned, but he'd been gassed during 1918 and died young, in England. Agnes was living in France with Marjorie Stella during the 1920s and 1930s so that Jessie Louisa was Frederick Sidney's closest relation during his last years; if he was not in a hospital, his care may have fallen on her.

If Jessie Louisa Horne retired at 65, she will have enjoyed 20 years of retirement in Plumstead, with trips to France and perhaps as far afield as South Africa, before her death. Around 1937, Agnes and Marjorie Stella Coryn came back from France and settled either very near Jessie Louisa or actually in the same house (I haven't got any evidence which it was). Eventually, Jessie Louisa's health declined, and she died on 12 February 1948, in Manna Mead Nursing Home in Blackheath. Marjorie Stella Coryn - who must have made Jessie Louisa so proud, becoming a well-known historian and novelist - was her executor.

JESSIE LOUISA'S BROTHERS

In 1891, Frederick James Horne was working as a private secretary; and I imagine that he was already employed by the joint stock company he said was his employer in later censuses. In 1890 he married Kate Elizabeth Turner. They had three sons: Douglas Percy; Roy; and Kenneth. All three of their children were born in south London but by 1901 Frederick and Kate had moved to Prittlewell in Essex. Some of the Coryn family had moved to nearby Billericay; perhaps this wasn't a coincidence. Frederick and Kate were comfortably off, being able to employ a nurse as well as the basic general servant. By 1911 Frederick Horne had been promoted to company secretary, and he and Kate had moved again, to a 10-roomed house on Drowsett Avenue, Prittlewell where they could afford a cook and a parlourmaid. Douglas was working for a stockbroking firm, and Roy was at university. I haven't been able to identify Frederick Horne for certain after 1911 so I'm not sure when he died.

Percy Horne went to South Africa. I can't find him on any census after 1881 so he may have emigrated as early as the 1880s. In the 1920s he was working as secretary to the South African Garden Cities Trust, which built Pinelands, the first planned township in South Africa. He died in the late 1960s in Cape Town and left money to provide grants for students at Cape Town university. I couldn't find any evidence that he married in England; if he married at all, it was in South Africa.

--

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR JESSIE LOUISA HORNE

JESSIE LOUISA AND THE GOLDEN DAWN

Freemasons' Library Golden Dawn collection reference GBR GD2/2/8a: Receipts for items borrowed by Jessie Louisa from William Wynn Westcott's personal library during the period 1891-1892

JESSIE AS A SCHOOL TEACHER

See wikipedia for details of the Elementary Education Act of 1870, including the curriculum and how the Act was to be implemented through elected local school boards - women were eligible to stand for places on them.

Records (lack of) at London County Council:

London Metropolitan Archive is where the surviving records of the London County Council and all its works are held; also the School Board for London. There don't appear to be any records of people who were employed during Jessie's time: at www.cityoflondon.gov.uk/.../archives.../london-metropolitan-archive, LMA's LMA Information Leaflet 27: An Outline of Sources for the History of Education in London Metropolitan Archive: some details of the bureaucracy of Jessie Louisa's successive employers. It's clear from the list of archives held currently by the LMA that all that has been kept is the admin/bureaucracy stuff - Minutes of the LCC Education Committee 1904-65 are the basis of it but most of the rest is records of LCC departments dealing with schools and schooling.

Records that do survive:

Report of the School Management Committee issued by the School Board for London for year-ended Lady day 1900: plxi begins a list of all current staff. Jessie Louisa Horne is on p127.

At website findmypast: records of the Teachers' Registration Council. Set up as part of the Education Act of 1899. First attempt to make it work began 1902 but was abandoned as teachers refused to cooperate with it. TRC was set up a second time in 1912 and registration began again in 1914. The TRC got more cooperation this time BUT 1) registration was voluntary; 2) neither the Board of Education nor any local authorities used the registration list when deciding who to promote. Registration, therefore, was patchy. Each TRC record gives two dates: year of first paid position; and year of registration with TRC; the two dates often differ by several decades, and do in Jessie Louisa's case. Jessie Louisa's first teaching position = 1887; year of registration with the TRC = 1917 (so she was still teaching at that date).

TEACHERS AND TEACHING IN JESSIE LOUISA'S LIFETIME

PRE-1870 NATIONAL SCHOOLS:

For how the National Schools for Promoting Religious Education were run, see wikipedia.

At www.barnes113.karoo.net/History/bromley\_national\_school.htm there's an account of Bromley's NSPRE, based on its surviving records, which gave me more daily details especially of the 'monitor' system.

SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON AND ITS SUCCESSORS

London's Women Teachers: Gender, Class and Feminism 1870-1930 by Dina M Copelman. London and New York: Routledge 1996. Based on government reports and statistics; good on teacher training and the bigger picture.

For what the typical woman teacher would be teaching and what the elementary school girl pupils would be learning: History of Education volume 17 number 1, which was a special issue on Women and Schooling, published March 1988. London, New York, Philadelphia: Taylor and Francis. Edited by Roy Lowe. Article on pp71-82: The Education and Employment of Working-Class Girls 1870-1914, by Pamela Horn.

JESSIE LOUISA'S RETIREMENT

I haven't been able to find a definite statement - at least, not on the web - as to when Jessie Louisa would have been able to retire. The best I could come up with is The County Council: What it is and What it does by H Samuels. Fabian Tract number 218 with a date stamp on it saying "May 11 1946". Published London: Fabian Publications Ltd. The Tract seems to be saying that the retirement age for both sexes was 65 or after 40 years' service, whichever was the sooner; but I couldn't see what dates the information was referring to, and in any case, in the early days of the LCC none of its employees could have amassed 40 years' service, there must have been some other provision for the earliest teachers.

JESSIE LOUISA AND THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register January 1889-September 1891 P175 entry f Jessie L Horne. Application 19 September 1890: diploma (given on being accepted as a member) 21 September 1890. Subscriptions paid 1892-95 then "W Q Judge". Addresses during membership:

37 Henslowe Road East Dulwich

58 Gowlett Road Peckham

Branch = Brixton. Sponsors: Herbert Coryn, R Hill.

SOME APPEARANCES IN LUCIFER, the magazine published by the TS from its worldwide headquarters at Regent's Park London during the 1890s:

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XI covering September 1892 to February 1893; sole editor, Annie Besant. Published Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume XI number 62 issued 15 October 1892. As part of news section p169 report on recent talks given at Croydon Lodge: on 6 September [1892] Jessie Horne had given "an interesting lecture on Yoga". On the same page, a short report on Brixton Lodge, sent in by Jessie Horne (that's Jessie Louisa, not her mother who isn't a TS member), as lodge secretary: a talk on yoga and been given at the lodge on 2 September [1892]. I think Jessie Louisa' being too modest here - the name of the person who talked about Yoga isn't given. On Fridays when there was no lecture scheduled, a group met to study The Secret Doctrine.

Lucifer: A Theosophical Magazine Volume XII covers March-August 1893, editor, Annie Besant. Published by Theosophical Publishing Society of 7 Duke Street Adelphi. Volume VII number 71 issued 15 July 1893 p523 an article on the finances of the TS-sponsored Bow Club, which was attempting to raise money by asking 70 people to subscribe £5 each; on p524 there was a list of donations so far, including 16/6 given by J Horne.

YOGA

For introduction to its arrival in the West, see wikipedia and the Timeline website I list below.

Blavatsky's articles on Yoga: www.blavatsky.net full text of set of three articles published November 1880 and January, April 1881 though it doesn't say where, probably in the American magazine The Theosophist: The Yoga Philosophy. In the articles Blavatsky describes yoga as a breathing technique; she also associates yoga more with Buddhism than with Hinduism. She states that unless "its philosophy is well understood and is practised from youth" no practitioner will reach the level of skill shown by any Indian Yogi.

A Sanskrit-English Dictionary by Sir Monier Monier-Williams. Published Oxford University Press BUT NOT UNTIL 1899. Monier-Williams describes Yoga as "a kind of...abstract meditation...performed with self-torture, such as standing on one leg, holding up the arms".

Yoga teaches the means by which the human spirit “may attain complete union” with Isvara/the Supreme Spirit - this is the union of soul with matter. He also specifically states that yoga’s closest connection is with Buddhism not Hinduism.

Via googlebooks I also found a book by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky: Raja Yoga or Occultism. Published Bombay: Theosophy Co. It wasn’t published until 1931 but the British Library catalogue confirms it’s a compilation of articles previously published elsewhere. Chapter headings were very interesting, including: Practical Occultism; Occultism vs the Occult Arts; Lodges of Magic; Psychic and Noetic Action; Thoughts on Elementals. Some other chapter headings contain references to astral bodies and hypnotism.

The Theosophist is an American theosophical magazine so Jessie Louisa may not have known about these:

* in volume covering October 1890 to April 1891, issue of October 1890 had 2 articles on aspects of yoga: Jiai Yoga; and Practice of Pranoyama Yoga.

* in volumes published in 1892-93 seen via google plenty of references to YogI but not to YogA.

Roger Paul Wright found for me the website //modernyogaresearch.org’s timeline of Modern Yoga in Britain, taken from Suzanne Newcombe’s Cambridge University PhD thesis 2008: A Social History of Yoga and Ayurveda in Britain 1950-95. The earliest reference to something that might be Yoga in this Timeline is 1619. Newcombe believes that the first work to describe in English the physical exercises used in Yoga, was S Sundaram’s Yogic Physical Culture or The Secret of Happiness, which was published in 1928. NB that the article by Blavatsky that I found at the Blavatsky website is NOT mentioned in this timeline though the TS is often mentioned.

UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD

KATHERINE TINGLEY’S 1896 TOUR OF BRITAIN

At www.scribd.com, Theosophy volume XI number 2 May-December 1896 pp130-34 gives an account of the short tour of England taken by Mrs Tingley’s Crusaders’ group in the summer of 1896. The group arrived from New York on 21 June 1896 and spent three weeks in Britain, visiting a number of British cities but also spending several days at events organised for them in London. On Friday 3 July 1896 the Crusaders spoke at a public meeting at Queen’s Hall Regent Street. Herbert Coryn delivered a farewell address to the Crusaders during the meeting. The Crusaders then went on a tour of other English cities and Scotland before going on to Europe.

Website www.scribd.com also has the full text of the magazine Theosophical Path, edited by Katherine Tingley and produced at the theosophical community of Point Loma California. These volumes make it clear that there was a branch of the US-based Universal Brotherhood and Theosophical Society in Britain, from about 1898 at least until the late 1920s. Jessie Louisa could have decided to join it; but I haven’t found any list of its members so I can’t be sure.

INFORMATION ON FREDERICK HORNE all from Ancestry and freebmd.

PERCY STUART HORNE WENT TO SOUTH AFRICA

Searched freebmd 1881-1910 and familysearch: couldn't see a marriage of Percy Stuart Horne.

At archiver.rootsweb.ancestry.com/th/read/SOUTH-AFRICA-IMMIGRANTS-BRITISH/200-06/1024657909, transcribed June 2012 by Heather McAlister: part 3 of City Club Members of Cape Town includes Horne, Percy Stuart with the date 1919, probably the date he was elected a member, though the transcription isn't clear on this.

At

www.bradclin.com/pinelands/pinelands\_history.htm there's a history of the Pinelands housing development, the first planned township in South Africa, built in the 1920s in the Cape Colony. Percy Stuart Horne was the first ever Secretary of the (South African) Garden Cities Trust, which built Pinelands. The Trust was founded in 1919 to address South Africa's serious housing crisis; it got government funding for its work. On this website, P S Horne is credited with giving the name 'Pinelands' to the new development.

Probate Registry: nothing for Percy S Horne. However, it looks as though he died in S Africa:

via google to University of Cape Town Calendar for 1969. On p169 under the heading "P. S. Horne grants": Percy Stuart Horne's Will had established a number of grants at the University; those wanting further details of them were to apply to the City Hall.

25 March 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

William Evans Hugh Humphrys was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London in November 1899. He had had a classical education and chose a motto in Greek: the transliteration is gnothi seauton. He made quick progress through the study that was necessary to join the inner order and was initiated into that Second Order in March 1901. He stood aside from the strife and upset that was engulfing the GD at that time; but he also didn't join either of the daughter orders that emerged in 1903.

I've found so much information on some parts of William's life that this biography has had to be split into three. This is the first part and covers 1876 to end 1906 including his time in the GD. The other two parts are 1907 to end 1909 and 1910 to 1950.

TO BEGIN WITH, A NOTE ON THE SPELLING OF HIS SURNAME: it's definitely HumphrYs although I've seen other spellings, especially HumphrIEs, on the census and elsewhere.

THE HUMPHRYS FAMILY

On his father's side, William was Protestant Irish landed gentry. The family could trace itself as far back as a man from Cumberland, John Humfrey (sic), who emigrated to Ireland in 1655. John Humfrey settled in Wexford but by the time William's father was born his descendents' main estate was at Ballyhaise House in county Cavan; and they were spelling the surname Humphrys.

Younger sons in the family tended to go into the army and at first William's father, Hugh Humphrys (born 1838) followed this trend, passing from Trinity College Cambridge into the Hussars in 1860. However, he left the army in 1869 and at that point there's a blank of nearly 20 years in his life, before he took holy orders in 1885 when William was 9. After the usual few years as a curate, he was appointed vicar of Knocktopher, Thomastown in 1892. However, the defining appointment of his time in the Church of England was being installed as rector of Eccles-next-the-sea in Norfolk. In 1901 the vicar of Knocktopher had an annual income of £240 while the rector of Eccles-next-the-Sea had an annual income of about £72 before tax, derived from a population of 17. However, Rev Hugh did not live all the year round in Ireland; he seemed to spend as much time in England, either in his London house or in the household of his wife's father, whose family had the right to appoint the rectors of Eccles-next-the-Sea. As far as I can see, Rev Hugh never lived in his Eccles-next-the-Sea parish.

THE EVANS LOMBE FAMILY

In 1875 - during those blank 20 years - Hugh Humphrys had married Louisa Charlotte Catherine Evans-Lombe, whose family owned one of the largest landed estates in Norfolk. Louisa's father, Henry Evans Lombe, had also been ordained a priest of the Church of England but by 1881 did not have the care of any parish. From the mid-19th century to sometime in the 1890s he and his wife (another Louisa) chose to live in the newest of the family's several houses, the recently-finished Bylaugh House, at Smallburgh in Norfolk. William's parents, the Rev Hugh and his Louisa, had a house in London, and made long visits to Ireland, but also spent large parts of their lives at Bylaugh.

WILLIAM'S YOUTH

The GD's William Humphrys, the Rev Hugh and his Louisa's eldest son, was born in February 1876 at their London house at 19 Hatherly Grove Bayswater. He had two brothers - Julian Shirley Lombe Humphrys (born 1880) and Hugh Everard Humphrys (born probably 1883); I haven't found birth registrations in England for either of them so perhaps they were both born in Ireland.

When William was living with his grandparents he was in one of the largest households of any GD member. He was with them on the day of the 1881 census when there were 14 indoor servants at Bylaugh: a butler, two footmen, two grooms, a cook, a lady's maid, four housemaids, two kitchenmaids and a nursemaid, employed to look after Henry and Louisa Evans-Lombe and their daughter's family. In addition, there will have been a coachman and gardeners who were lodged elsewhere. On census day 1891 there were 15 servants living-in, though with household tasks slightly differently allotted: a butler with only one footman; the two grooms and the cook; a kitchenmaid and a scullery maid to support one less housemaid; a nursery maid; the lady's maid; and two gardeners. The coachman and his family were the next household listed on that page of the census. However, the times they were a-changing - during the 1870s, the Evans Lombe family began selling off bits of the estate; and this process was speeded up around 1890 when the land at Bylaugh (though not the house, it seems, at least not at first) was leased or possibly bought outright by William Knox d'Arcy who had made a fortune in mining in Australia and Mexico. By 1898 Henry and Louisa Evans Lombe had moved out of Bylaugh to a smaller house they owned, Melton Lodge near Great Yarmouth. They were both in their late 70s by this time and perhaps not in good health, but other aspects of the family history from the 1870s suggest that the Lombes - and consequently the Hugh Humphrys - were feeling the pinch financially: a smaller house meant a much scaled-down household, with more spare money for school and university fees and nursing care. Despite these indications that the family was drawing in its horns, it was his descent from the Lombes that mattered to William later in his life; and as he seems to have had a private income (I don't know how much per year) it's most likely from them that he had inherited it.

RUGBY and CAMBRIDGE

Times may have been harder than they had been, in the 1890s, but suffering in the Lombe and Humphrys family does seem to have been relative. The GD's William spent 1890 to 1893 at Rugby School (census day 1891 fell during the school holidays) before going to Cambridge University. He started out in 1895 at Queen's College; but in 1898 he moved over to Downing College, graduating with a science degree in 1899. I can't explain the change of college, except to say that I found one reference to it having a reputation at that time for dealing very generously with students who broke the rules, especially the curfew rules. Perhaps William's undergraduate night-life was being hampered at Queen's. Cambridge University was traditional in the Humphrys family (though neither of William's brothers went there) and two cousins of William's were undergraduates when he was: brothers Llewellyn Winter Humphrys and Percy Raymond Humphrys were both at Corpus Christi. However, William's future was decided not by his relatives but, by acquaintances that he made as an undergraduate: Frank Rutter the future art critic, who gave William work on at least two occasions; and Aleister Crowley.

William Humphrys was pretty busy as an undergraduate at Cambridge but not necessarily with his studies. Cambridge University was where he began his career as a journalist and perhaps also where he first began to take an interest in cars and how they work.

Frank Rutter, in his memoirs, says that while they were at Cambridge both he and William Humphrys were stage-struck: they did a lot of amateur theatricals, and William's first efforts at journalism were theatre reviews for one of the university's undergraduate papers. Frank thought William had that desire to get the news first that is the basis of a successful career as a reporter: he used to go to Cambridge railway station to intercept visiting entertainment groups before anyone else, and take their stars to lunch. In this way he got exclusive interviews with Minnie Cunningham, the music hall singer; and Constance Collier, then the tallest of the Gaiety Girls. William also managed to get access to Alfred Milner (later Viscount Milner) advisor to the British Government on the situation in South Africa. And to a man whose surname Rutter spells as 'Rajitsinghi' but who I think must have been the great batsman Ranjitsinhji (later the Maharaja Jam Sahib of Nawanagar) who had been at Cambridge University from 1889 to 1894 and who was - when William must have interviewed him - playing for Sussex, and England.

Motoring was such a new thing that it was only while William was at Cambridge University that the first few cars were driven through Cambridge town. The very first was owned by the Hon Charles Stewart Rolls (born 1877, future co-founder of Rolls-Royce) during his time as an undergraduate at Trinity Hall. Probably not very long afterwards, Aleister Crowley bought himself one, though he never developed the interest in cars that Charles Rolls and William did. The paths of William and Charles Stewart Rolls often crossed between their university days and Rolls' death in 1910; though I haven't been able to discover how well they knew each other so I don't know whether it was Rolls' car that William first got under the bonnet of, to find out what was inside.

In his last year at university William took the next step from journalism and founded his own magazine, the latest version of the Cambridge Magazine. It was in that magazine that the interview with Alfred Milner was first published, and political sketches by the barrister and Liberal MP Sir Frank Lockwood also appeared in it. William may have found himself with the money to fund such a venture after his grandfather Henry Evans Lombe died, in December 1897. When Rev Lombe's estate had its probate granted, his personal effects came to about £54000; this didn't include what was left of the family estates, which William's uncle Edward Evans Lombe will have inherited. William's father the Rev Hugh also had more money coming in after March 1899 when he was appointed a canon of St Canine's Cathedral Kilkenny.

SOURCES FOR THIS SECTION

THE HUMPHRYS FAMILY OF COUNTY CAVAN

There's some information on Ballyhaise house on wikipedia. It's now the Teagasc Agricultural College.

The Book of Irish Families Great and Small by Michael C O'Laughlin p152.

At www.libraryireland.com information originally in A Topographical Dictionary of Ireland published 1837.

A Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry of Ireland Burke 1899 edition, p211.

HUGH HUMPHRYS, William's father.

Alumni Cantabrigiensis Part II volume 3 G-J p489.

Via genesunited, information on his time in the army:

Dublin Evening Packet and Correspondent 20 March 1861 and several other newspapers; purchase of a lieutenancy by Cornet Hugh Humphrys.

Southern Reporter and Cork Cmmrl Courier 11 May 1865 and also several other newspapers; purchase of a captaincy by Lt Hugh Humphrys.

Dublin Evening Courant 11 November 1869 announcing the retirement of Hugh Humphrys from the army.

Crockford's Clerical Directory issues of 1886; 1901 pp696-97.

Hampshire Advertiser 4 March 1899 Ecclesiastical Intelligence: appointment as a canon of St Canine's Cathedral Kilkenny of Rev Hugh Humphrys BA.

Armorial Families 1929 volume 1 p1003.

BIRTH OF WILLIAM, though he isn't named. Seen at archiver.rootsweb.com, items from Cavan Weekly News posted by Kay Stanton 2006, including the issue of Friday 18 February 1876. Birth announcements included a son, on 11 February [1876] at 19 Hatherly Grove Bayswater; to the wife of Hugh Humphrys.

Times Friday 3 February 1922 p1a death notices: Canon Rev Hugh Humphrys had died on 31 January 1922.

THE EVANS-LOMBE FAMILY of Norfolk:

Melton Hall, which was rented by other people at least as late as 1865:

Excursions in the County of Norfolk by Thomas Kitson Cromwell 1818 p173.

PO Directory of Norfolk and Suffolk issue of 1865 p300.

At visionofbritain.org.uk a paragraph from John Marius Wilson's 1870-72 Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales: Melton Hall and Great Melton (Melton Magna).

At www.south-norfolk.gov.uk a photo of Melton Hall. Jacobean. Grade 2 listed but in a bad way.

Bylaugh House:

See wikipedia on how the estate was rumoured to have come into the Lombe family. And some of its later history which unfortunately conflicts with other sources I've found, for example at www.bylaugh.info

At www.norfolkchurches.co there's information on the church at Bylaugh, built in 1809 by the Lombe family.

Via www.ebooksread.com to Armorial Families.

On the importance of the Evans Lombe family to William Humphrys: the announcement of William's death in the Times Thursday 23 March 1950 p1a only mentions his descent the Evans-Lombe family. It was not until the announcement was repeated in the Times of Friday 24 March 1950 that William's father was mentioned.

WILLIAM'S GRANDFATHER HENRY EVANS LOMBE

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1886 p739 does not have an entry for him, confirming that at least by that time he did not have a job in the Church of England.

RUGBY SCHOOL

Rugby School Register covering May 1874 to May 1904; p171 which is also the source for William's addresses in 1904.

Times Saturday 11 July 1936 p19d coverage of the Old Rugbeian triennial dinner held "on Tuesday at the Café Royal". William was on the event's very long guest list.

AT CAMBRIDGE:

University Magazines and their Makers Henry Currie Marillier 1902 p93.

CONSTANCE COLLIER

See wikipedia and also www.the-camerino-players.com

MINNIE CUNNINGHAM

At www.tate.org a reproduction of Walter Sickert's 1892 picture of her in costume at the Old Bedford; now in Tate Britain. With a small amount of information on her life.

At footlightnotes.tumblr.com, a photo of her dancing in her stage costume (showing quite a lot of leg). And a profile as far as 1905, based on information originally published in The Variety Theatre London Friday 19 May 1905 p19a.

ALFRED MILNER later the first and last Viscount Milner. See wikipedia and he's also in ODNB.

And assuming my identification is correct: RANJITSINHJI. A long article on him in wikipedia.

SIR FRANK LOCKWOOD see wikipedia. He was Liberal MP for York from 1883 to his death in 1897.

FRANK RUTTER who's mentioned a lot in the life-by-dates section too:

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927. An important source though William is not actually mentioned in it very much.

Times Mon 19 April 1937 p16 obituary.

Times Tue 20 April 1937 p1 death notices.

Probate Registry 1937

Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 48 p421 although there's no mention of William Humphrys in it.

And for his commitment to votes for women, see The Women's Suffrage Movement: A Reference Guide 1866-1928 by Elizabeth Crawford. London: University College London Press 1999: pp611-12; though it doesn't mention Frank's first wife Thirsa, who was quite as active as he was.

Just noting that there's no entry for William Humphrys in the book; nor is William's wife mentioned as far as I can see.

CHARLES STEWART ROLLS

There are several biographies - he managed to pack a lot into his short life, as a driver and aeroplane pilot and as co-founder of Rolls-Royce.

Source for his having a car while he was still at Cambridge: Aleister Crowley, The Biography. Tobias Churton. London: Watkins Publishing 2011: p28.

In the 1900s Charles Stewart Rolls published a couple of items on car maintenance, very much in the manner of William's articles between 1907 and 1912 though as far as I know Rolls never wrote for William's magazine:

An article The Caprices of the Petrol Motor, in A C W Northcliffe (Baron Harmsworth)'s Motors and Motor Driving published 1902.

Co-author with Frederick Henry Royce in Instructions for Care of Rolls-Royce Cars, 40-50hp published Watford: Acme Tone Engraving Co 1908.

NOW FOR THE REST OF WILLIAM'S LIFE, in a LIFE-BY-DATES, FROM 1899

I've found a lot of information on what William was doing and where he was living from when he graduated to just before the first World War. But on the other hand, some projects he got involved with are still pretty-much a mystery to me despite all my ferreting about amongst the sources I've found. So I've decided to do a life-by-dates sequence to cover the rest of William's life. As usual with a life-by-dates, I'll be typing what the subject was doing in italics; with any comments, and the sources, in Times New Roman. Beginning with:

SUMMER 1899

William graduated from Cambridge University.

Comment by Sally Davis: I think William moved to London in the autumn if not straight away after leaving his College rooms. He lived in central London until his marriage.

Sources: Alumni Cantabrigiensis Part II volume 3 G-J p489.

Kelly's Post Office Directory issues between 1900 and 1914.

Census.

DIFFICULT TO DATE

William must have worked as a journalist.

Comment on the lack of sources, by Sally Davis: William is in the Scoop! database of professional journalists held at the British Library but without any detail of where his work was published. Scoop! is based on the members of the Institute of Journalists. William joined the Institute in 1909 and was a member until 1913 but possibly not beyond that.

Finding out which journals and/or newspapers published his work would be such a task I haven't really tackled it: though William's own magazine did name some of its writers, most articles and editorials in most publications were published anonymously, and their authors are mostly still unidentified today.

If William wanted to be taken seriously as a writer on motors, the magazine he will have aimed to get published in was the The Automotor and Horseless Vehicle Journal: A Record and Review of Applied Automatic Locomotion. First published as a monthly in 1896, it went weekly in April 1902 and shortened its title to The Automotor Journal. It continued to be published until 1931, always by the same firm - F King and Co Ltd of 62 St Martin's Lane, London WC. Authoritative and scientific, it was the magazine for professionals working in the fast-moving, highly technical world of car design and building. Although William wasn't a professional in that sense, he was a scientifically trained, highly skilled amateur and I can see him as a reader of this magazine; though most car drivers would have found the articles too difficult to understand. William's own motoring magazine was a direct competitor of The Automotor Journal, which outlasted it and others.

I have found references in other publications, of articles by William published in the Pall Mall Gazette; but these were from 1919 and 1923, not much help for his earliest work.

VERY DIFFICULT TO DATE THE START - IT MIGHT GO BACK TO HIS SCHOOL-DAYS; CERTAINLY LONG BEFORE 1904

William learned a lot about motor engines, both in theory and in practice. Later he was able to write technical articles on motoring and was considered by others to be an expert on internal combustion engines for submarines.

Comment by Sally Davis. For the evidence about William's knowledge of cars, read the rest of this life-by-dates. If he wasn't interested in them before he went to university, he might have got his start with them through driving and trying to mend the cars owned by Charles Stewart Rolls and Aleister Crowley that I've mentioned above. I've only found one mention of his knowledge of submarines: several articles published in 1904/05, obviously all using the same source - they have the same basic information and all spell his surname wrongly in the same way. It's an intriguing aspect of William's life. Perhaps it was or became an official secret. However, it did cause him to meet Captain Ernest du Boulay, a marine engineer and author of a text book published in 1902. Later on, du Boulay was marine manager for the Automobile Co-operative Association, about which a great deal more below.

Sources: see 1904/05 for more on the articles.

Ernest du Boulay:

At www.bembridgesailingclub.org as co-founder, in a history of the club.

The text book:

A Text Book on Marine Motors published London: The Yachtsman 1902 and 2nd ed 1907.

The British Library has him as a contributor to B Heckstall-Smith's The Complete Yachtsman published London: Methuen and Co 1912 and obviously the standard work for many years - there's a revised 8th edition from 1949.

NOVEMBER 1899

William was initiated into the GD.

Source for the date: RAG see the Sources section.

DECEMBER 1899

William visited Aleister Crowley at Boleskine. Also there was Lilian Horniblow, Crowley's mistress at that time. On 12 December 1899, William was Crowley's assistant in a magical ceremony.

Source: probably Crowley's A Magicall Diarie 1899, manuscript now in the collection of the Ordo Templi Orientis. Quoted pp52-53 of Aleister Crowley, The Biography, by Tobias Churton. London: Watkins Publishing 2011 though the source is not specified in so many words. According to Churton the purpose of the ceremony was to "obsess Gardner" - that is, Frederick Leigh Gardner whom Crowley thought was an enemy within the GD. I find this explanation rather odd, as Gardner had been ejected from the GD a couple of years before, though he was still in regular touch with some of its members. The important aspect from William's point of view, though, was that - according to Crowley - at the end of the ceremony, William was showing "symptoms of panic and fear". Lilian Horniblow hadn't been a participant in the ritual but she had watched part of it. Shortly after it, she decided to return to London and Crowley attributes her sudden departure to her having taken fright at his use of magic.

Comment by Sally Davis: just noting that for the purposes of her relationships outside her marriage, Mrs Horniblow called herself Laura Grahame and that's how she's referred to in Churton's biography.

SPRING 1900

Crowley started to believe that William wanted to have an affair with Lilian Horniblow, and that he was trying to be rid of Crowley so he could pursue a potential relationship without Crowley as a rival.

Source:

Aleister Crowley, The Biography, by Tobias Churton. London: Watkins Publishing 2011 p58;

Churton's source is the Abramelin Diary (I think) for an incident where Crowley surprised William and Lilian together on 17 April 1900. In writing up the incident, Crowley described William as "nearly as big a blackguard as myself". A short while afterwards, Crowley and William met in Cambridge (it's not clear whether it was by accident or not). During the meeting Crowley told William about some rumours he'd been hearing - that residents at 67 Chancery Lane, himself included, were being watched by the police. William replied that the rumours were true and that Crowley's danger would be greatest around Easter. Crowley took this warning as a clear attempt by William to get him to leave the country. It seems to have led to the end of whatever friendship the two of them had had up until that time - William is not mentioned after spring 1900 in either Churton's biography of Crowley; or in Perdurabo: The Life of Aleister Crowley by Richard Kaczynski. Berkeley CA: NAH Books originally 2000 this revised edition 2010. Crowley left England in spring 1900 in any case.

Comment by Sally Davis: whether William did have an affair with Lilian Horniblow; or whether Crowley was making it all up; goodness knows!

APRIL 1901

William was renting rooms at 17 John Street in Bloomsbury. His was the third of the three separate households at that address, so he probably occupied the top floor. He told the census official that he was self-employed; and that he was the proprietor of a newspaper.

Comment by Sally Davis. I've not known where to look for the newspaper William claimed to own, so soon after he'd left University; or what title to look for. Perhaps he was still the owner of the Cambridge Review although I must say that seems unlikely. Whatever newspaper it was, William didn't mention owning one when filling in the 1911 census form, so I suppose it had ceased publication or he had sold it by then. Just noting at this point that he didn't call himself a journalist when speaking to the census official in 1901; though he did do so when filling out his own form in 1911.

Source: 1901 census.

21 JULY 1901 to 20 AUGUST 1901

William may have been involved in a series of trance sessions in which the medium (who wasn't William) took the Enochian alphabet as a starting-point.

Source:

Gerald Yorke Collection at the Warburg Institute: catalogue numbers NS59, NS60 and NS100 (the notebooks) and NS103 Item 7 (a typescript of some but not all of their contents).

Comment by Sally Davis:

Please note that in the Sources section at the end of this file I lay out my concerns about the authorship of those notebooks. In the next paragraph or so, however, I will assume that it was indeed William who owned them and wrote up his occult notes in them. If he was their owner, they show that he was working towards a greater understanding of the Enochian magical language, both on his own and with others, in the summer of 1901. Beginning on Sunday 21 July and ending on Tuesday 20 August 1901, two people undertook a series of guided visualisations - one woman who was the medium on each occasion, and one person who wrote down the medium's account of what she saw while in her trance. Occasionally Florence Farr was present at the sessions, but at most of them it was just the medium and the scribe. Gerald Yorke says in some notes written on the notebooks, that William was the scribe and the sessions took place in his home. For his and my trouble in identifying the medium, see the Sources section. The names of two of the medium's guides during the last few sessions were given in the notes and I repeat them here in case they are known to occultists: Adan, in the sessions of 11, 12 and 13 August; and Zaran in the last session. For the two people who were there for each session, they were a serious commitment of time and energy: the only session whose start- and end-times were noted down lasted one hour. You can see from the handwritten notebooks how furiously the scribe had to write, to keep up with what the medium was saying. How his or her arm must have ached, by the end!

The Yorke Collection notebooks are the latest evidence there is for William as an active member of the GD. When the GD finally fell apart into its two daughter orders (in 1903) he didn't join either of them. How much he needed to earn a living is a moot point, given the wealth there was in his mother's family; but he had other interests which were taking up more and more of his time. In the end he seems to have abandoned the occult altogether.

NOVEMBER 1901

William's grand-mother Louisa Evans Lombe died. After the death of her husband she had moved to a house in Great Yarmouth.

Source: Probate Registry 1902.

BY WINTER 1902 - which might either mean 1901-02; or 1902-03; the source wasn't clear about it.

William had already bought what seems to have been his first car, a De Dion-Bouton, which he later recommended as an excellent car for a beginner - reliable, and easy to maintain.

Comment by Sally Davis. It's likely that William bought the de Dion-Bouton Model D, which first went on sale in 1900. Although the firm had started out making electric vehicles, this very popular car had an internal combustion engine.

Sources:

The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review Volume 2 number 1, February 1907: pp4-5 in an article by William.

The Automotor and Horseless Vehicle Journal: A Record and Review of Applied Automatic Locomotion issue of 15 January 1902 p35 happened to mention that a steam-powered de Dion-Bouton had won the first ever road race to be staged in France; in 1894.

Further information on de Dion-Bouton: see wikipedia and other sources on the web, including photos.

WINTER 1902 with the same problem about which year.

William drove his de Dion-Bouton to the south of France. He sold it there to buy a bigger car and though it was unfamiliar to him he drove it back to England.

Comment by Sally Davis: William must have been confident about his ability to cope with whatever mechanical crises arose during his trip south. He did hire a mechanic in Nice for the return journey; but did most of the repairs himself as - too late - he found that the man could only speak the Niçois dialect, not French or Italian, so they couldn't communicate. A strange clicking from behind him followed William for most of the way north, a clicking that didn't seem to be connected with any fault he could discover. Eventually he found a loaded gun in the pocket in the back, where the mechanic usually sat: the man had been cocking it ready to fire at times along the road. William dispensed with his services as soon as they reached Paris. The curious incident of the gun-toating mechanic proves that it wasn't a de Dion-Bouton car William was driving: de Dion-Boutons had a rather strange arrangement of seats, with the passengers sitting with their backs to where the car was going, facing the driver opposite them.

Sources:

The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review Volume 2 number 1, February 1907: pp4-5 article by William: Where the Click Came From - An Episode of My Niçois Mechanic. The moral of the tale was: take care when hiring servants.

The Automotor and Horseless Vehicle Journal: A Record and Review of Applied Automatic Locomotion issue of 15 January 1902 p159, p173 forthcoming events: Nice week this winter would be from 6 to 18 April 1902, taking in a trip to Turin and Abbazia from 8 to 15 April. There would be an organised run of cars from Paris to Nice at the end of March. If this was the winter William meant, he might also have visited a motor show in Brussels which ran from 8 to 17 March 1902 before joining the run to the south of France.

BY 1904

William had moved a couple of streets to 10 Gray's Inn Place, a small enclave next to the buildings of Gray's Inn.

Source: Rugby School Register covering May 1874 to May 1904; p171. Unfortunately the School Register only gives William's address in 1904; the school doesn't seem to have known what he was doing. Just noting that Kelly's for 1904 shows a Mrs Rutter living at 3 Gray's Inn Place. This is probably Frank Rutter's widowed mother Emmeline and as Frank hadn't married as yet, it's likely he was living there with her.

ALSO BY 1904

William had been elected as a member of the Primrose Club.

The Primrose Club was at 4-5 Park Place St James. Like any gentlemen's club, it provided rooms for socialising, and good meals. It had been founded as a Conservative Party club, a kind-of Clubland equivalent to the Party's Primrose League for women. I would suppose that no one who was not a supporter of the Conservative party would be elected as a member; and perhaps no one who was not a committed Party member. So it says something about the politics of William and his male acquaintances that he joined it; and I think it's likely he was first introduced to men he later did business with, through the Club. The most likely time for him to join a club like this was when he arrived in London. I daresay he knew plenty of men who were members already.

Sources: Rugby School Register covering May 1874 to May 1904; p171; and wikipedia for more on the Club.

??LATE 1904

William had an article published in the To-Day newspaper, on motor boats.

Comment by Sally Davis. I'd like to say I've seen the article, but I haven't even tried to look for it as I don't know exactly when it was published. I can say that it was Frank Rutter who asked William to write it: on leaving Cambridge the year before William did, Frank had got a job as assistant editor of To-Day. He'd moved over to the Daily Mail in 1901 but went back to To-Day in 1902 as editor, and was still there in 1904. The possibility of a motor boat race across the Atlantic was being mooted and Frank knew where to go for an expert opinion on the logistics of such a trip. It's clear William thought the idea was a non-starter: he calculated that an engine of at least 100 horse-power would be needed; and 15 tons of fuel which would be stored - where, exactly? However, he worried that these difficulties wouldn't put people off trying. I don't know whether the race took place.

Sources:

For Frank Rutter at the newspaper To-Day: wikipedia.

The coverage of William's original article in other magazines, some but not all of which give To-Day as the paper in which the article was originally published. You can tell they all have the same source because they all spell William's pesky surname HumphrIEs; following on, I suppose, from Frank Rutter's To-Day.

Monthly Consular and Trade Reports volume 76 1904 p59. This magazine is my source for William having left Cambridge with a degree in science; the Cambridge Alumni publication never says what subjects graduates had studied.

Daily Consular Reports number 2121 issued by US Department of Commerce 1 December 1904.

Via archive.org to Scientific American volume 92 number 4 issued 28 January 1905 p17; the best source for William's calculations and reservations; and for William's work with submarine engines.

Popular Mechanics January 1905; p129 article: Motor Boats for Ocean Races, which mentions that William had also raised the issue of the size of crew that would be needed for such a long and challenging trip: where were they all going to be stowed?

Everitt's Encyclopedia of Useful Knowledge issue of 1905 p227.

DURING 1906

William was a regular reader of The Steam Car and Electromobile Review.

Comment by Sally Davis. Coming across this magazine diverted William from however he was spending his time and set the course of his life for the next six years. He had nothing to do with the production of it: he was just a reader. The magazine's founder, editor, main writer and printer was George Larritt Polsue, who ran a printing company which had a variety of names down the years (always featuring his very unusual surname) but was always based in Gough Square, just north of Fleet Street (at this time still the centre of publishing in the British Empire) and a short walk from Chancery Lane.

Sources:

The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review volume 5 number 9 November 1910 pp273.

The Steam Car and Electromobile Review from February 1906 to January 1907.

The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review volume 5 number 9 November 1910 p273 giving evidence in the libel case Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader, George Polsue confirmed that he had been The Steam Car and Electromobile Review's only owner.

Some sources for George Larritt Polsue:

He's in Scoop!, the database of journalists held at the British Library.

Using google you can find plenty of references to George Polsue's company under its various names. As Polsue Ltd, it was still in business around 1919-20 and had got the contract to publish the Athenaeum magazine. Most google references, however, are to an important legal case on the law of private nuisance: for example in The American and English Annotated Cases volume 4 1907 p373-77; and in text books on the law of torts. See February 1907.

MARCH 1906

The Automobile Co-operative Association was formed.

Source for its formation:

The Steam Car and Electromobile Review volume 1 number 4 May 1906 p100, p108. On p100 was an official announcement issued by the Automobile Co-operative Association of 1 Albemarle Street Piccadilly.

There was no coverage in the Times of the process of ACA being set up, but the Times Mon 28 May 1906 p1 had an advert (bigger than most adverts on this, the 'small ads' page) inviting readers to become members. The advert had several quotes from other newspapers including one published in the Pall Mall Gazette of 12 April [1906] which said that the ACA opened up "a brilliant vista for the motorist".

Long comment by Sally Davis. The founders of the ACA were a group of upper-class car owners but it was not another club like the Athenaeum or the Primrose Club - the Royal Automobile Club, the Ladies' Automobile Club and the Automobile Association existed already and there really wasn't a need for another such. The ACA was a provident or mutual society set up as a joint stock company with its members as its shareholders. It supplied its members with cars and car parts at list prices. It also gave advice, especially technical advice. It ran training courses in car mechanics. It acted as an insurance broker. It had a marine department for those interested in motor boats - Ernest du Boulay was its manager. And it held a dinner each year and had rooms above its offices where members could meet. The announcement in The Steam Car. was also a call for members. To be a member you had to buy at least one share at £1 per share; and pay a small yearly subscription.

Over the next few years and despite the opposition of groups like the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, the ACA was very successful and it was still in existence even during the very difficult conditions of the first World War.

The public face of the ACA was an Advisory Council comprised of the original founding group and others who joined later. Its daily business was carried out by employees, with more and more taken on as the ACA's reach and membership expanded. Decision-making was in the hands of a management committee. In the first few months of the ACA the management committee had about eight members, but this was soon pared down to three, who remained at the helm for several years: Sir Wroth Periam Christopher Lethbridge, 5th Baronet who essentially represented the members and was probably typical of them; Jules de Meray, a City financier; and William Humphrys.

Sources for how the ACA:

Papers by Command volume 76 issued HMSO 1914 p206 the ACA is in a list of "distributive trading societies"; there's some financial information.

Friendly Societies, Industrial and Provident Societies issue of 1915: ACA is in this.

See coverage of the ACA's various AGMs for more information on turnover, number of members, assets.

And see below issues of the magazine I call Automobile Owner..., managed and part-owned by William.

The other members of the ACA management committee:

Sources for JULES DE MERAY

I looked for him on Familysearch. Couldn't pick him out but I did see mention of at least one family called de Meray living in south London in the second half of the 19th century. Although he said in his 1911 census form that he had been born in France and was still a French national, Jules was probably a member of that south London family.

Census 1911 at 1 Rutland Gate Knightsbridge.

Railway Times volume 58 1890 p87 de Meray as a partner in de Meray and Brooke at their offices at 5 Throgmorton Avenue EC.

Mining Manual... volume 5 1893 p367 de Meray as involved in a company set up to develop mines in Spain, Portugal and elsewhere and registered at Companies House in December 1888.

London Gazette 7 April 1893 p214 notices of partnerships dissolved includes one issued by Jules de Meray and Arthur Montague Brooke, trading as de Meray and Brooke, merchants and financiers, of 5 Throgmorton Avenue EC. De Meray would continue the business, on his own, at the same address.

The Electrical Engineer volume 31 1903 p167 de Meray listed as the chairman of Sir Hiram Maxim Electrical and Engineering Co Ltd BUT I think the firm's management is being sued by its investors.

He's into chess as well as cars:

The British Chess Magazine volume 46 1926 p139 an obituary of Jules de Meray which throws a light on his personality which I find a bit alarming - but then I never fancied gambling with stocks and shares. De Meray had died on 21 December 1925 at 48 Sussex Gardens. The obituary described him as a man of "enormous energy, great inventive power and indomitable courage".

Like Lethbridge, Jules de Meray was married three times; he was never divorced, though. The Madame de Meray of the ACA years is Mary Ann E Burton, whom he married in 1898. To celebrate the marriage the de Merays commissioned a portrait of Madame from the British artist Joseph Solomon Solomon who I think was a friend of theirs - he was a guest at several ACA dinners.

Academy Notes issued by the Royal Academies, issues 24-27 1898 on p30 part of a catalogue probably that of the summer exhibition: catalogue number 1024 is Solomon's portrait of Mme de Meray.

At artsalesindex.artinfo.com: the portrait of Mme de Meray by Joseph Solomon Solomon was sold at Sotheby's in March 1988.

Mary Ann de Meray died in 1923, aged 60; and in 1925 Jules married Annie Stack Lauder. He died a few months later.

Sources for SIR WROTH PERIAM CHRISTOPHER LETHBRIDGE (1863-1950) 5th Baronet:

Wikipedia on the Lethbridge baronetcy. Just noting that it was during the 5th Baronet's tenure that the ancestral home - Sandhill Park near Bishop's Lydiard - had to be sold. Car driving was an expensive habit; as was litigation; and divorce.

Times Fri 28 November 1902 p11 short obituary of the 6th Baronet, Wroth Acland Lethbridge, and of Wroth P C Lethbridge, his heir: army 1885; Captain 1898; currently in Grenadier Guards.

Times Sat 3 June 1905 p5 Law Reports. Coverage of case heard in Court of Appeal: Attorney-General v Lethbridge in which lawyers for the 5th Baronet were arguing that death duties were not payable on insurance policies set up by the trustees of the Will of the 2nd Baronet. The Court's decision was in the Attorney-General's favour and the death duties had to be paid in full. Ouch.<http://www.npg.org.uk>

At www.thepeerage.com information on his three marriages. He was divorced twice - quite a record for the early 20th century.

SATURDAY 27 OCTOBER 1906

The ACA held its first annual dinner.

Source:

Times Sat 27 October 1906 p14 Court and Social Column list of today's events.

Comment by Sally Davis: I haven't found a full guest list for this or any subsequent ACA dinners. In some years, the more important guests are named; usually those who made speeches, which William never did. As a member of its management committee William ought to have attended the dinners, though, unless he had a prior engagement.

?15 NOVEMBER 1906

The Times printed a preview of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders' 5th annual car show at Olympia. As well as describing the main features of the show, the report promoted the ACA, mentioning the temporary club-house it would have on the show-floor for the whole of the exhibition.

Source: Times Thurs 15 November 1906 p13: Motor Cars at Olympia.

Comment by Sally Davis. Like most newspapers, the Times didn't name its columnists at this time; the report is just credited to "our special correspondent". The focus on the ACA, though; and the lyrical praise of the "gorgeous yellow" Daimler made for the Nizam of Hyderabad did make me wonder whether William was the writer and by this time, William did have one friend that I know about who definitely wrote for the Sunday Times at least and might have mentioned William's name when the editors of the Times were looking for someone to report on the car show:

For Frank Rutter's art columns for the Times: Times Monday 19 April 1937 p16 obituary of Frank Rutter. Rutter had started to write for the Sunday Times in 1904.

The next part of this three-part life-by-dates of William Humphrys covers 1907-09; return to my GD introduction page to find it. The last part covers 1910-50.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

THE PROBLEM NOTEBOOKS: my anxieties about their authorship/ownership. They are in the Gerald Yorke Collection at the Warburg Institute: catalogue numbers NS59, NS60 and NS100 (the notebooks) and NS103 Item 7 (a typescript of some but not all of their contents). IF their author has been correctly identified, they might show what occult work William was doing in the months after being admitted to the GD's 2nd Order. But I have to say I am rather worried about them. Gerald Yorke bought them on the understanding that they were the work of William Humphrys but when I looked at them, I couldn't actually find any of that evidence that we historians like to see as some guarantee of authorship - names, addresses, 'ex libris' inserts, 'to X on his birthday from Y' - that sort of thing. And the handwriting in NS59 is not all by the same person - at least, I don't think it is. William's GD motto has been written on the inside cover of the notebooks; but the writing (in biro) is Gerald Yorke's. There were dates on some of the pages of some of the notebooks, in pencil like most of the contents and probably scribbled on around the time the contents were written down. The dates are all in July and August 1901.

Gerald Yorke's interpretation of the contents of the notebooks was that they concerned the Enochian alphabet and its meanings. The typescript puts into readable form the handwritten notes in the notebooks, taken down during a series of sessions in which a medium, in trance, related to a scribe what she was seeing in her visions. Fair enough.

In his short introduction to the typescript Yorke identifies four people as being at the sessions: William Humphrys; a GD member whose motto was shortened to 'V' and who Yorke thought was Joseph K Gardner; Florence Farr; and the medium, whom he couldn't identify beyond the initials of her motto (it's definitely a woman). I've got a lot of problems with Yorke's identifications. Firstly, Humphrys: Yorke calls him the scribe and organiser of the sessions and see above for my worries about that. Secondly Joseph Gardner: his motto was Valet Anchora Virtus which was shortened to VAV, not V; in addition, he lived in Liverpool and had a full-time job there so he was not going to be available for evening sessions in London extending over nearly two months. In fact, reading the actual typescript (rather than the introduction) I saw that the person 'V' hadn't actually been present at any of the sessions; V's importance was in having a window in their house which had a design in it that the group used as the focus for the first in the series of rituals. I suggest that the 'V' in question was 'Vigilate' - Helen Rand, a very active GD member who lived in Surrey and whose house many GD members had visited. Thirdly, Florence Farr: the typescript mentions specifically which sessions she attended and she was present at only three of the fifteen. Fourthly, and most troubling, the medium. A note by Yorke in notebook NS60 interpreted the scrawled two initials of her motto as 'IO' or possibly 'JO'. Actually the 'I' or 'J' letter looked more like a hastily drawn bass-clef symbol to me but I quite see that it can't be. Yorke couldn't figure out who this was, and I don't know of anyone in the GD up to 1901 whose motto would have those initials: not in R A Gilbert or my own list of mottos. It could be someone who was initiated after that. Or the little group might have brought in a good medium from outside the order but I can't believe they did that.

22 November 2015

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

This is the second part of my life-by-dates of Golden Dawn member William Evans Hugh Humphrys (1876 to 1950) and covers 1907-09, the busiest part of his life. The first part covers 1876 to 1906. The third part covers 1910-50.

SO, CARRYING ON FROM PART 1, WITH 1907, an important year for William. If you've arrived at this file without seeing Part 1: the ACA I refer to continually below is the Automobile Co-operative Association, formed in 1906 to buy in cars and car parts at list price for its members.

EARLY IN 1907

William took over the magazine The Steam Car and Electromobile Review. He offered his new magazine to the ACA as its car magazine outlet. As part of the deal with the ACA William accepted a place on its management committee; and the ACA agreed to pay £20 per issue for 8 pages of coverage. George Polsue became a director of the limited company founded to run the new magazine; and his firm printed it, from its first issue until mid-1911. William was the new magazine's managing director. He lent the limited company quite a lot of money.

PLEASE NOTE. Comment by Sally Davis on the clumsy name of William's magazine: throughout its existence, it was always called The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review. I'm shortening that to Automobile Owner....

Comment by Sally Davis on the agreement with the ACA: William later said it lasted only a few months; but even after those months had elapsed, the ACA had large adverts in most issues of William's magazine and plenty of news coverage as well.

Sources:

The Steam Car and Electromobile Review from February 1906 to January 1907.

Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 3 May 1910 p114.

For a possible reason why George Polsue might have been willing to sell:

The American and English Annotated Cases volume 4 1907 p373-77; and in text books on the law of torts: Polsue and Alfieri Ltd v Rushmer of 1906. Rushmer was Polsue and Alfieri's downstairs neighbour in Gough Square; he ran a dairy. The legal case upheld an injunction Rushmer had obtained to prevent Polsue and Alfieri using their printing machinery at night. In late 1906 Polsue and Alfieri were having to pay the costs of a case their firm had lost; and facing the necessity of moving to new premises where they could carry on their noisy normal business.

For the change of ownership:

Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 pp270-77, more or less verbatim report of legal proceedings in a libel case; including William and George Polsue giving evidence; and William being cross-examined.

Comment by Sally Davis. Anxious not to foist too much alienating change of the readers of the old magazine happy, in his first few months William's new magazine kept pretty-much to the old one's format. It had a similar high-quality paper, typeface and layout on the page - but then, it was being printed by the same printers. It managed to keep a lot of the same advertisers; though I did notice that the Automobile Association dropped out. It had the same rather lavish use of photographs and diagrams; these didn't come cheap, of course, but a lot of the magazine's articles were highly technical features on how to understand and/or mend your own engine, and one diagram is worth a thousand words. Authors like Geoffrey Holden-Stone, David J Smith, and the writer identified only as 'Generator' continued their monthly columns at first, and though Holden-Stone's column ended, David J Smith continued to write regularly for William's magazine until it closed. William might have known David Smith for several years already: Smith's garage was the English agent for Darracq-Serpollet cars and it was situated off Goswell Street, near where William lived and worked.

William did introduce some new features over the next few months: a series of profiles of well-known car owners; and a column for women drivers.

FROM FEBRUARY TO NOVEMBER 1907

Though not all of its readers were ACA members, Automobile Owner... did portray itself as the voice of the ACA.

Comment by Sally Davis: William was quite specific about when Automobile Owner... stopped describing itself that way - December 1907, probably when the £20-per-issue agreement he'd made with the ACA ran out. Although in the short term, being so closely associated with the ACA probably made William more secure about his magazine's future, in the longer term, being seen as the voice of the ACA was more of a handicap than an asset.

Sources: Automobile Owner.. volume 5 number 9 November 1910. About the editorial independence of the magazine: p271 evidence of William; and p275 evidence of the ACA's Secretary R G Whitcomb. And p272 that Automobile Owner... was not just the ACA's members' magazine.

FEBRUARY 1907

The first issue of The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review was published From 1907 to 1912 its editorial and publishing offices were at 67-69 Chancery Lane. At least until 1908, producing the magazine was the main task in William's life.

Comment by Sally Davis. George Polsue might have insisted that some element of his original magazine name be kept, but that's a long and clumsy title! I shall be referring to William's magazine as Automobile Owner...

William will have known 67-69 Chancery Lane, of course. The classically-decorated frontage of the building survived the Blitz and is still there, at the north end of the street near the T-junction traffic lights at High Holborn; with one shop at either address and an entrance between them into the floors above. The upper floors are all flats now and immediately behind them, all is new, faceless yellow brick. In William's time the different rooms were mostly rented out to businesses though Crowley actually lived in the rooms he rented, and on the day of the 1911 census William said he was living in his two rooms, as well as running his various businesses from them.

Automobile Owner... cost the same as its predecessor for most of its existence - 3d per monthly issue - and up to mid-1910, it never made a profit. William later described himself as its managing director but he did a great deal more than that, especially during its first two years: he's credited with a lot of the articles and from the style of many of the uncredited ones, I think he wrote a lot of those as well. In the magazine's first year he did a series of interviews for a 'prominent car owners' column; though this column was dropped in 1908 perhaps because William didn't have time for it. Although no editor's name was given before October 1908, William may have done the editing and produced the short news reports from February 1907. As managing director he would have been in charge of the magazine's finances, both incomings and outgoings. There's evidence of his discussing with clients the layout of their adverts. I haven't been able to discover how many staff William employed - whether he had a permanent typist, for example, or an accounts clerk. To keep his costs down, he might have done a lot of that kind of work himself. New technology was something he was interested in anyway, of course, but he was particularly keen to come across new processes that could make the Automobile Owner's... production process easier. By June 1907 regular columnists were able to dictate their articles into a wax cylinder and send it direct to a typist.

Sources:

For Crowley and Bennett in 69 Chancery Lane: Perdurabo p54, p62.

Automobile Owner.. volume 2 number 1.

Automobile Owner.. volume 5 number 9 November 1910 pp270-77, more or less verbatim report of the legal proceedings in a libel case; including William and George Polsue giving evidence; and William being cross-examined.

For the new technology: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 5 June 1907 p147, p165.

FEBRUARY 1907

William had two credited articles in the Automobile Owner's first issue: Where the Click Came From, about his trip to the south of France; and the first of his profiles of notable car owners, which featured Sir Charles Knox, a hero of the Boer War who was on the ACA's advisory council.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 1 February 1907: pp4-5 and pp6-8.

DURING MARCH 1907

William almost certainly went to Olympia to see the Motor Boat show there.

Source: no actual proof, but see March 1907.

MARCH 1907

William's credited articles in this month's Automobile Owner... were a profile of Colonel W T Bosworth in the notable car owners series; and a report on the Commercial Motor Vehicles show held at Olympia. William may also have written the coverage of the motor boat show also recently held at Olympia; though this article wasn't credited.

Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 2 March 1907: pp38-39; pp 53-54; pp 54-55 motoring events. Just noting that on p53 there was a list of the newly-elected committee of the Royal Automobile Club: William wasn't one of them.

APRIL 1907

William's articles this month in Automobile Owner... were a report on Cordingley's Motor Show; and a profile of the Hon Mrs Assheton Harbord, who was a keen balloonist as well as a car owner.

Comment by Sally Davis: just confirming that William did interview the notable car owners himself for that series of columns. He allowed Mrs Harbord a paragraph in her profile in which to protest against vivisection - she was a campaigner on the issue.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 3 April 1907 pp78-80 for Mrs Harbord and pp88-91 for Cordingley's Motor Show.

Sources for May Constance Harbord:

Familysearch has a birth date of 6 June 1866 for May Constance Cuningham, daughter of James MacNab Cuningham and his wife Mary née Falconer. She was born in Simla.

Website www.thepeerage.com which uses Burke's Peerage as a source, says that May married Arthur Rankin Blackwood in 1885.

At www.familytreecircles.com, Arthur Rankin Blackwood died in Victoria Australia in 1905.

Website www.cracroftspeerage.co.uk on the barony of Suffield: May Blackwood married Assheton Harbord, second son of the 5th Baron Suffield, in Chelsea in April 1905 (which seems rather soon after her first husband died). Assheton Harbord was a distant relation of the husband of GD member Lady Eleanor Harbord. The Cuninghams were Scottish, with a tradition of working in India for the East India Company and the British government.

At www.gracesguide.co.uk, Grace's Guide to Industrial History, an account of May Harbord's ballooning exploits which included crossing the English Channel four times. In May 1912 she became the first woman in the UK to gain an Aeronaut's Certificate.

She died in 1928.

10 APRIL 1907

The Automobile Co-operative Association was registered as a limited company.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 p270 Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader evidence of William Humphrys. P273 evidence of William: as part of the founding of the company, money had been loaned to it by two people who were now debenture holders: William held the majority of the debentures - 400. The other debenture holder wasn't named during the hearing. I suppose it's most likely to have been George Polsue; though Viscount Massereene and Ferrard (see below) is another possibility. On p273 evidence of George Polsue: he was one of the directors of the limited company.

Comment by Sally Davis. William was another director of the company of course. No other directors were mentioned during the case so perhaps there were only the two of them.

22 APRIL 1907

The Times published a letter from Sir Wroth Lethbridge, writing as the current chairman of the ACA; protesting that the officials who ran Hyde Park were continuing to refuse to allow cars to drive into it.

Comment by Sally Davis: this was the sort of campaigning the ACA was doing for its members.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 3 April 1907: p88-91; p78-80.

Times Mon 22 April 1907 p17.

23 APRIL 1907

William may have attended the dinner which launched the Motor Club.

Source: see May 1907.

FROM APRIL 1907 TO AT LEAST NOVEMBER 1910

Whenever he got the chance, William bought up small numbers of shares in Automobile Owner... limited; so that by November 1910 he owned 10,000 shares in the company.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 p270 Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader p271 evidence of William. Unfortunately no one asked him how many shares there were in total; I imagine that he was the company's major shareholder by November 1910.

MAY 1907

The only article in May's issue of Automobile Owner... which is credited to William is that month's 'car owner' profile, which featured the recently-married Beatrice Wolseley who was an active member of the Ladies' Automobile Club.

Comment by Sally Davis: this is just a hunch of mine, but I do wonder whether, during his interview with her, William asked Beatrice Wolseley if she'd like to write a column for his magazine. A series of articles for women drivers started up in Automobile Owner... very soon after this issue. The Ladies' Automobile Club had been formed in a spirit of defiance by a group of socially well-connected women drivers who had been refused membership of the RAC. It's possible that GD member Hon Gabrielle Borthwick was one of those annoyed women who went out and did something about being refused; though I have to say I haven't actually found any evidence that she was definitely a member of the LAC.

Sources:

Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 4 May 1907 pp112-13 for the profile of Beatrice Wolseley. And on pp118-119 an uncredited report on the dinner which launched the Motor Club; though there isn't a guest list. Though Automobile Owner... never really went in for 'letters from readers'; from this month onwards there, a few were published each issue (p122).

Beatrice, Lady Wolseley:

Dod's Peerage issue of 1914 she's Beatrice Sophia daughter of Colonel William Wallingford Knollys and niece of Baron Knollys. Married 1907 Sir Capel Wolseley who had succeeded as 9th Baronet in 1890. Via google I saw quite a lot of coverage of the wedding including the same photograph that accompanied William's profile of Beatrice: the bride getting into a car after the ceremony.

She was a writer. The British Library catalogue had three works by her:

1893 as Beatrice Sophia Knollys. My Black Spirit. A Novel London and Sydney: Remington and Co

1899 also as Knollys. The Gentle Art of Good Talking which went through two editions in that one year.

Then nothing at all until 1921 as Lady Wolseley. Rose Leaves from the Rose Room. London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co. A book of poems.

The Ladies' Automobile Club:

A Monthly Magazine devoted to the interests of New York Athletic Club volume 12 1903 p20 describes looking down the list of members of the LAC as like reading an edition of Burke's Peerage.

Good Housekeeping volume 38 1904 p343 names the Duchess of Marlborough as one of the the LAC's members.

Via google I reached www.gracesguide.co.uk/1904\_Ladies\_Automobile\_Club where there was a list of the members of LAC in that year. Gabrielle Borthwick was not on the list.

The Horseless Age volume 17 1906 p56 noted that the LAC had taken on an engineer to teach car mechanics, a Mr R Sedgewick Currie. P604 the LAC's members had a special day at the Crystal Palace Show in February 1904.

The Auto: The Motorist's Pictorial volume 12 1907 p329 gave a description of Mr Sedgewick Currie's classes and the car the students worked on.

Automobile Topics volume 16 1908 p1157 the LAC was already organising races for its members.

Royal Automobile Club Yearbook 1908 p1 lists member clubs, which include the LAC. On p217 as with any gentlemen's club, you had to be elected to be a member of the LAC.

And for Gabrielle Borthwick, a notable car owner and car mechanic NOT interviewed by William for Automobile Owner..., see my biography of her on my GD web pages.

??DURING MAY 1907

William might have attended Bexhill races, and been invited by someone he met there, to go on a weekend drive by a group of car owners, from Long Acre in Covent Garden, to Bexhill; and back.

Source: see June 1907.

MID 1907

William must have been working hard making the contacts and sorting out the legal and financial issues for the launch of Automobile Owner..'s own insurance service for motorists.

Source: see November 1907.

??SUNDAY 9 JUNE 1907

William might have gone on the Motor Club's first organised group car trip, from Whitcomb Street in London to Brighton; as a passenger rather than a driver, in Mr Huntley Walker's Darracq.

Source: see June 1907.

17 JUNE 1907

Brooklands racing track was formally opened as the world's first purpose-built motor racing circuit.

Comment by Sally Davis: surely William must have been there. Brooklands had been made possible by the Motor Car Act of 1903 which abolished the 20mph speed limit on all roads that had been in force before. The idea of a car racing circuit was the brainchild of Hugh F Locke King.

Sources: there's plenty on Brooklands on the web, even some film. For the history, see wikipedia; and www.brooklandsmuseum.com

28-29 JUNE 1907

The first competitive event was held at Brooklands - a 24 hour race involving three Napier cars.

Source: wikipedia.

JUNE 1907

William's only credited article this month was a technical one about the use of graphite as a lubricant. Though the coverage was uncredited I think William must also have written the report on the new Linophone technology system just installed at Automobile Owner...'s printers (that's Polsue Ltd) by the Columbia Phonograph Company. And he might have written Automobile Owner...'s report on the trip to Bexhill; and the trip to Brighton.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 5 June 1907. Pp141 for the weekend drive to Bexhill; and p142 for the 9 June 1907 drive to Brighton; though both reports were uncredited. P147 for the article that's definitely by William: The Secret of Efficient Lubrication - Graphite and its Possibilities. (My scientific advisor Roger Wright says that William got it absolutely right about graphite.) P147 for Automobile Owner... 's new Linophone system; and I note that for the rest of the year there's an advertisement in each issue for the Columbia Phonograph Co of 64-66 Oxford Street, makers of dictaphones; better known now as Columbia Records.

JULY 1907

William's credited articles this month were the profile of the well-known rower Captain W H Darell of the Coldstream Guards, for the 'car owner' series; and one on a group car drive to Hastings in which he made the trip to Kent in Mr D'Arcy Baker's Fiat but came back in someone else's Panhard.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 6 July 1907: p177; p184.

SUMMER 1907

On one of his regular visits to Paris, Frank Rutter discussed the idea that eventually became the Allied Artists' Association with his sculptor friend Naoum Aronson.

Comment by Sally Davis: there's no evidence that William was involved at this stage; but he did get dragged in later on.

Sources:

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927: p180.

Naoum Aronson:

Wikipedia has a short page on Naoum Aronson (1872-1943) who seems to be no relation to the better-known David Aronson.

At digidoll.library.wisc.edu, the Digital Library of Decorative Arts and Material Culture: an article on Aronson's recent work, originally published in The Craftsman volume XIX number 1, October 1910 pp10-16; rather gushing in tone but most of it is illustrations including Aronson's head of Tolstoy.

AUGUST 1907

This month's issue of Automobile Owner... saw the first fiction column, Cynical Short Stories. A short story was published every month from this month until 1912, with the most regular writer being someone with the professional name of John Vicarsfield. The issue didn't contain any articles definitely by William.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 7 August 1907: pp239-47 for the short story.

Comment by Sally Davis: unlike some magazines designed for the wealthy, Automobile Owner... didn't take a summer break. If William had holidays between 1907 and 1912 they must have been short ones as I don't think he had anyone he could leave in charge of getting the magazine prepared and printed. And on the subject of John Vicarsfield: google didn't have anything on such a person and the British Library has nothing in its catalogue but him - tending to confirm my feeling that it was a pseudonym.

SEPTEMBER 1907

It was in this issue of Automobile Owner... that the reduction of the ACA's management committee to Lethbridge, de Meray and William was first announced. The three of them stayed in charge for the next three years. Two new (uncredited) series began: The Garages of London; and reports on motoring in the USA.

Comment by Sally Davis: I think William was the person whose three-week search for one particular car that was parked in a garage somewhere in London began the series on garages. Whoever it was did find the car in the end! But not before he'd visited every garage within 20 miles of Charing Cross.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 8 September 1907. P269 for the reduction in ACA management committee numbers; p279-81 for the garage search; p289 motoring in the USA. It's very rare for the price of any car to be mentioned in adverts in the magazine, but on p266 the monthly advert for Vivinus steam-cars gave a price of £425 for a 22 to 28 horse-power vehicle. That would be about half the yearly income of the GD's Annie Horniman, by far its wealthiest member during the 1890s. Vivinus cars were made in Belgium; at this time the ACA was their agent in the UK.

For Vivinus cars see wikipedia.

OCTOBER 1907

There was no article credited to William this month but this issue did see the first column for women motorists: Musings of Miranda; which featured the members of the Ladies' Automobile Club.

Comment by Sally Davis about Miranda: if I'm not right that Beatrice Wolseley was 'Miranda' it must have been someone she knew, another member of the LAC.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 9 October 1907 pp334.

WINTER 1907

Back in London, Frank Rutter started persuading his artist acquaintances to join the group that became the Allied Artists' Association, and by Christmas there was a founding group of 20 London-based artists including Walter Sickert and Gerald Kelly. The idea of holding an exhibition of contemporary British art in London was put to Frank by another Paris-based friend, Jan de Holewinski. Frank and Jan worked together organising that exhibition, until mid-1908.

Comment by Sally Davis: Frank Rutter's work in bringing contemporary modern art to London has been rather over-looked - the glory has tended to go to Roger Fry.

Sources:

For the Allied Artists' Association:

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927: p180-183.

Comment by Sally Davis: Frank doesn't mention exactly when he approached William to play a part in the financial and legal side of the AAA; but it must have been quite early on in the process.

For Jan de Holewinski:

Internationalism and the Arts in Britain and Europe at the fin de siècle by Grace Brockington. Oxford and New York: Peter Lang 2009. On p39 of her chapter Walter Sickert and the Language of Art, and using Frank's memoirs as a source, Brockington mentions de Holewinski as a Polish artist and exhibition organiser, living in Paris in 1907. He and Frank met, in Paris, at some point during the winter of 1907-08. De Holewinski organised a Russian Arts and Crafts Section for the first AAA exhibition: 175 exhibits including works by Kandinsky. In footnote 44 she says that Kandinsky exhibited at the AAA from 1908 to 1914 (except 1912); and in 1913 Brancusi exhibited three sculptures.

The British Library has one work by de Holewinski in its catalogue: A Sketch of the History of Polish Art published by the Polish Information Committee in 1916. However, via google I saw mention of An Outline of the History of Polish Literature published George Allen and Unwin 1916.

11 NOVEMBER 1907 at the Criterion Restaurant

The ACA held its second annual dinner, which William ought to have gone to, as a member of its management committee; though he didn't make any of the evening's speeches.

Sources: Automobile Owner volume 2 number 9 October 1907 on p331: an advance notice for readers who wanted to obtain tickets. The dinner was timed to coincide with the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders' car show at Olympia, the biggest event in the UK's motoring year.

See wikipedia for the Byzantine-style Criterion Restaurant of 8-9 Jermyn Street close by Piccadilly Circus. Built for the catering and wine merchandising firm of Spiers and Pond and opened in 1873, it was a complex of different-sized function rooms. By the ACA's time it had become very popular for ladies' afternoon tea meetings: the WSPU held meetings there regularly. For some more photos: historicdininglondon.blogspot.co.uk

NOVEMBER 1907

The Automobile Owner... launched its own car owners' insurance policy. Users would receive one year's issues of the magazine as part of the deal and also a subscription to either the Automobile Association or the Motor Union. This month's preview of the International Automobile Exhibition at Olympia was by William and he may also have written the report on the ACA's dinner though that was uncredited.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 10 November 1907. PP364-65 for the insurance policy.

DURING NOVEMBER 1907

William went over to Paris to see the motor show there - a much bigger event than Olympia with far more exhibitors.

Source: see December 1907.

DECEMBER 1907

William's article in this issue of Automobile Owner... was inevitably his report on the Paris motor show.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 11 December 1907. Pp418-20 William's The Paris Salon and its Lessons; and note the use of the term 'salon' as if the car show was an art exhibition, perhaps it's the influence of Frank Rutter!

Comment by Sally Davis: On p449 of this issue there was a long, uncredited report on the AGM of The Electrobus Co Ltd. Looking for the company on the web I came across plenty of reports on the legal cases that followed its demise in 1908 - prosecutions for fraud, embezzlement, patent fraud etc. I hope William hadn't invested in it!

1908 was a very busy year for William Humphrys.

JANUARY 1908

The only article credited to William in this month's issue of Automobile Owner... was one on how to deal with skids. He might have written the report on the new Turner-Miesse steam car, which was unusual for the time in being wholly manufactured in England. The month's coverage of the ACA featured its growing contacts in Europe.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 2 number 12 January 1908: pp466-67 William's Skidding and Non-Skids. pp489-91 is the report on the Turner-Miesse steam car, made by Turner's Motor Manufacturing of Wolverhampton. And just noting firstly on p487 an advert for the Adams 10 horse-power car which emphasised that the car was simple enough (!) for a woman to drive it and showed one doing so, the two-seater version was 195 guineas, you paid 250 guineas for the four-seater; secondly p494 an advert for David J Smith's garage at Goswell Road which had second-hand Darracq-Serpellet cars for sale.

JANUARY 1908

The magazine The Motor Trader published an article which William thought libelled the reputation of Automobile Owner... It also published a list of firms who had done deals for the sale of their products through the ACA; causing some of Automobile Owner...'s current advertisers to cancel their adverts, and potential advertisers to change their minds, for fear of being black-listed.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 p272, p273 Automobile Owner.. v The Motor Trader, evidence of William Humphrys. The point he was making was that Automobile Owner... was dependent on its advertisers for the majority of its revenue. H E Morris gave evidence (p273) that you didn't have to have done a deal with the ACA to advertise in Automobile Owner... H E Morris and his brother ran a car manufacturing business in Stroud Green Road, north London. Their firm was not on ACA's list of suppliers. In August 1910 (volume 5 number 6 pp184-187) Automobile Owner... ran a long, lavishly illustrated article on Morris' brothers new model; and in October 1910 (volume 5 number 8 p252) printed an advert for it.

DURING JANUARY 1908

Almost certainly, William went on a motoring Sunday out to Hindhead in Surrey organised by the Motor Club; together with 13 other "leading writers on automobilism". The 14 of them (all men of course) had their photograph taken outside the Moorlands Hotel where the cavalcade stopped for lunch.

Source: see February 1908.

FEBRUARY 1908

Frank Rutter and Jan de Holewinski's Allied Artists Association was launched. Its offices were at 67-69 Chancery Lane.

Comment by Sally Davis: Frank chose the AAA's headquarters because it was a place he knew well as two of his friends already worked there - William, of course; and solicitor Elliott Gray who had been at Queen's College Cambridge with both of them. Frank persuaded William and Elliott to go onto the AAA's first management committee with him and Jan: Frank and Jan did the art, William did the finance, and Elliott gave legal advice. You can definitely detect William's hand in the registering of the AAA as an industrial and provident association; and in the way it raised money - all members having to buy at least one share in the company, at £1 per share, and then paying a yearly subscription. Just like the ACA. Over the next few months Frank and Jan set about organising the first, huge exhibition of works.

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927. Particularly pp182-83. Aware that William Humphrys wouldn't be someone his readers would have heard of, Frank described him as a "motor expert and a director of several companies".

For Elliott Gray (Frank spells his forename wrongly):

Some information on Elliott Cecil George Gray (1877-1944):

Like William, Elliott was the son of a Church of England cleric. But Elliott had been born in India. He graduated in 1898, like Frank but not like William; and went to London to qualify as a solicitor. Later in his working life he was a partner in Dennis and Gray of 3 Lincoln's Inn Fields and Gerrard's Cross. He served in the Middlesex Regiment and then the RASC in the first World War. He retired to Cambridge.

Sources for Elliott Gray:

Kelly's PO London Directory issue of 1910 p241 street directory entry for 67-69 Chancery Lane lists only one solicitor: Philip John Rutland. Elliott Gray must have been a junior in Rutland's practice at the time.

Alumni Cantabrigiensis seen via google so no volume number but p119 in that volume.

Another viewpoint on the AAA:

Walter Sicket: A Biography. Denys Sutton. London: Michael Joseph 1976; p144 but with the surname spelled HumphrIEs.

ALSO FEBRUARY 1908

This month's article by William in Automobile Owner... considered the costs of motoring. This issue had more coverage of the ACA than usual, to promote its new Trade Information Bureau; and its new Motor Trade department, run by a Mr J B King who had been poached by the ACA from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders.

Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 1 February 1908. On p12 William's article: What it Costs to Run a Car. On p13, a photograph of the "leading writers on automobilism" outside the Moorlands Hotel at Hindhead during their day-trip from London. None of them are identified, alas, but surely William is amongst them. P29, p47 for the ACA's latest ventures.

MARCH 1908

The problem of government taxation of motoring reared its ugly head in Automobile Owner... for the first time, in an article by William written on the assumption that a tax on cars would be part of the forthcoming Liberal Party budget. Automobile Owner...s own booklet for car owners who employed staff to do their motoring for them - The Chauffeur's Blue Book - was advertised, also for the first time.

Comment by Sally Davis: William's views on the taxation of cars show (at least to me) that he wasn't a slavish Conservative: he thought a tax on the cars of those who motored for pleasure, who were "able to spend money on indulgence" and still "afford to contribute handsomely to the National Exchequer" was fair. He suggested that the German method of a scale of payments based on the horse-power of the vehicle was a good one; and that - at least at first - was the method that the Liberal Party chose.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 2 March 1908. P51 for the Chauffeur's Blue Book; which was obtainable from 67-69 Chancery Lane. Pp60-61 William's article: The Problem of Motor Taxation.

26 MARCH 1908

The AGM of the ACA was held at its offices at 1 Albemarle Street. William made what I think was his only speech at the ACA's meetings: a short reply to some praise of him by Jules de Meray in his speech as the chairman.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 3 May 1908 pp121-125. De Meray's speech is the source for how William's magazine and the ACA got together and William ended up on the ACA's management committee. Most of the speech was outlining de Meray's plans for greater cooperation between the ACA and motoring organisations in Europe and the USA; over the next year a lot of effort was put into this by the ACA though I don't think William was much involved in it.

29 MARCH 1908

A Mr Humphrys (sic) was a passenger in a car which was driving through Albourne in Sussex when there was an accident in which several people were hurt. When the police arrived at the scene, the driver and his passengers argued that their car hadn't been involved in the accident; but the police arrested the driver anyway. He turned out to be the brother of two well-known actresses.

Comment by Sally Davis: I think the Mr Humphrys who subsequently gave evidence when the case reached court, was the GD's William, keeping up his Cambridge University habit of getting friendly with actresses. The two actresses on this occasion were Phyllis and Zena Dare and the arrested man was their brother John William Cecil Dones.

Source: Times Tues 26 May 1908 p14 and Motor Car Journal volume 10 1908 p290 which identified the two actresses.

The wikipedia page on Phyllis Dare also covers her sister Zena who doesn't seem to have been so well-known.

At search.ancestry something dates for John W C Dones, known as Jack - 1888-1939 (so he's considerably younger than William). And at discovery.nationalarchives.gov, the divorce petition (1922) of John W C Dones against his wife Buna Regina Dones; with a named co-respondent.

APRIL 1908

There was no issue of Automobile Owner... this month. William was just too busy, I suppose!

In addition to all the other things going on in his working life, he had to attend two more motor shows: Cordingley's Automobile Exhibition, at the Royal Agricultural Halls; and the spring show at Olympia.

Sources: see May 1908.

MAY 1908

Automobile Owner... reappeared, with one credited article by William: Comments on the Shows, by which he meant the Cordingley and Olympia spring shows.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 3 May 1908 pp105-06.

23 MAY 1908

A rather disparaging report on Cordingley's Automobile Exhibition appeared in the Times. It's possible William was the author - he was similarly less than enthusiastic in his article for Automobile Owner... - though the report was only credited to a special correspondent.

Times Mon 23 May 1908 p11.

26 MAY 1908 accident

John Dones had to attend the magistrates court at Haywards Heath to answer charges arising from the car accident in March. Mr Humphrys persuaded the judge that Mr Dones' arrest was a case of mistaken identity - the car he'd been driving hadn't been involved in the crash. All charges were dismissed.

Source: Times Tues 26 May 1908 p14. I think that the Mr Humphrys who gave evidence on John Dones' behalf was the GD's William.

Motor Car Journal volume 10 1908 p290 also covers the case; as a case of mistaken identity.

JUNE 1908

William's only credited article in this month's Automobile Owner... was a rather anxious one on the future of the Brooklands motor racing track, which was in financial trouble. However, an uncredited article on the Diamond Fire Extinguisher is almost certainly by him, the first indication of William's involvement in the dry-powder fire extinguisher trade.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 4 June 1908 p158. William might have been an investor in the track himself; but even if he hadn't bought any shares he would certainly have known some of those who had. On pp144-145: The Newest Fire Extinguisher relates how a representative of Diamond Fire Extinguisher Ltd gave a demonstration of his firm's product, in a bucket in the writer's office. The writer was very impressed and persuaded the demonstrator to let him have several canisters to be assessed by some of his readers; though after several repeats of the demo, he was very glad to open the windows!

William was not the only person treated to a demonstration of this new product: the anonymous article in Automobile Owner... mentioned that earlier in the year, the Prince and Princess of Wales had watched a demonstration in the grounds of Marlborough House, their London residence. They had bought canisters for all their houses - an order of several hundred items.

Sources for the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd:

The British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd existed by 1901, it's in that year's issue of Companies volume 10 issued by the Board of Trade; p51.

Via archive.commercialmotor.com to Commercial Motor volume 20 1908 issue of 18 June 1908 p924. This article gave the firm its full name - the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd - and its current address - 65 London Wall, a short walk from Chancery Lane. The Commercial Motor's reporter wasn't quite so enthusiastic as William was: he thought the canister would be more efficient if it had some kind of nozzle, to direct the powder onto the fire. But it was cheap and very light (weighing only three pounds).

16 JUNE 1908

There was a demonstration of the diamond fire extinguisher on the Strand near the Aldwych; with a lunch afterwards at which the Viscount Massereene and Ferrard was the chairman. Speeches were made at the lunch by Joseph Whaley, as the inventor of the dry-powder mix that the extinguisher used; and by a Mr Gomme representing the London County Council, one of the firm's biggest customers.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 5 July 1908 p197.

Comment by Sally Davis: there's not a full guest-list for the lunch, but if William was as keen on the product as he seems to have been (see below) he probably attended both the demo and the social occasion afterwards.

Was the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd's product patented? It's clear that some of the users thought it was. I didn't find any evidence of such a patent, and a lot of evidence that one never existed; including some inadvertently provided by William. I think it's telling that the British Diamond company didn't sue makers of similar products for breach of patent; presumably because it had no grounds.

JULY-DECEMBER 1908

The Automobile Owner... promoted the Diamond fire extinguisher with full-page adverts and lots of mentions in the text of the magazine. And William got very heavily involved indeed with the firm: by September the address of its offices had moved from London Wall to 69 Chancery Lane so he may have invested in it and perhaps even become a director.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 7 September 1908 p258 and subsequent issues to December 1908 but not in 1909.

11 JULY-AUGUST 1908

The Allied Artists' Association held its first, huge, exhibition, at the Royal Albert Hall.

Sources:

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927. Particularly p12, pp49-55; p76; p153.

Times Sat 11 July 1908 and two other days; p1 in the small ads Arts Exhibitions section: an advert for the exhibition on its first day, placed by Frank Rutter as the AAA's secretary.

Times Mon 13 July 1908 p10d the Salon Review. An slightly disparaging assessment of the AAA's exhibition; uncredited as usual.

Via archive.spectator.co.uk to the Spectator of 25 July 1908 p17 a more enthusiastic review by "HS" who considered that the exhibition had more than justified the AAA's existence.

Both reviews commented that the Royal Albert Hall was not a good place to show art works except in having lots of room and wall-space.

JULY 1908

This issue of Automobile Owner... is mostly notable for the amount of space in it given to the Diamond fire extinguisher. Though an article credited to William did discuss an anonymous Eastern potentate who owned two motor boats, one for himself and one for his wives.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 5 July 1908 p198 and passim for the fire extinguisher.

15 JULY 1908

Yet another demonstration of the British Diamond company's fire extinguisher. This one was organised by the Motor Club and took place during the Club's day-trip to Hastings.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 6 August 1908 p236-37, with a photo of one of the demos on the Strand. It's not clear whether William was on the day-trip.

AUGUST 1908

The August issue of Automobile Owner... strayed from its core subject-matter to give the Allied Artists' Association exhibition some coverage. William was so busy this summer that there was no article credited to him this month.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 6 August 1908.

?8 AUGUST 1908 ??22 AUGUST 1908 (the Automobile Owner... and the Times don't agree on the date of the race)

An unexpected boost for the British Diamond fire extinguisher came during the One Hour Record Race at the Franco-British Exhibition stadium in Shepherd's Bush: it put out a fire in C E Bennett's Mansfield motor cycle so quickly that he was able to get back aboard and carry on driving, coming in second.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 7 September 1908 p272.

From www.open.ac.uk the dates of the Franco-British exhibition which had been in preparation for several years: 26 May to 31 Oct 1908.

Wikipedia on the Franco-British exhibition which was held at the White City site later occupied by the BBC building and a housing estate.

Times Mon 24 August 1908 p11 Automobilmism: Motor Cycling at the Stadium, about the motor cycle races held "on Saturday" [22 Aug 1908]. The main race was a one-hour one. The Times mentions a near-collision during the race between C E Bennnett and C R Collier; and that Bennett had to stop at about the 30mile mark because of "faulty contact breaker"; but it didn't mention his bike catching fire.

Web page www.bennetracing.co.uk is a website prepared by C E Bennett's son, who remembers the motorbikes in his father's life. He was Charlie Bennett, known as 'Wag'. After serving an apprenticeship Charlie went to work for the Mansfield cycle company in Canning Town, where he built his first motorcycle around 1907. He later raced motorcycles at Brooklands and on the Isle of Man.

SEPTEMBER 1908

An anonymous article in this month's Automobile Owner... reviewed Frank Rutter's The Path to Paris, suggesting that drivers use it as a handbook when making the trip from Le Havre to Paris. The reviewer knew the writer well enough to say that he was no motorist. William didn't have any articles credited to him in this issue.

Comment by Sally Davis: William must be the reviewer, surely, neatly combining two of his current preoccupations - art and motoring - and promoting his friend's new book.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 7 September 1908 p282 for the review; and p258 for a full-page advert for the Diamond dry powder fire extinguisher, with first mention of the firm's address being 69 Chancery Lane - meaning William was in charge. I wonder what the firm's original investors thought?

OCTOBER 1908

This issue of Automobile Owner... was the first to have a named editor; and it wasn't William, it was the Viscount Massereene and Ferrard. On the back page of this issue and the next two, the British Diamond fire extinguisher company had a full-page advert. None of the articles this month were credited to William.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 8 October 1908 with the Viscount's first editorial on p297. The magazine's offices were still at 69 Chancery Lane; and Polsue Ltd were still its printers.

Comment by Sally Davis: Viscount M and F admitted in this issue that this was his first editorial. Up until September 1908, therefore, someone else had edited Automobile Owner... and though that person remained anonymous throughout, I can't really think who else it could be but William. Now, though, William had so much else going on in his life - and he was probably already thinking ahead to yet another project - that something had to give. Under the Viscount's editorship, the magazine went in some new directions, the most obvious being the increased coverage of aeroplanes (William doesn't seem to have had any interest in planes); and greater use of the editorial and articles for campaigns on behalf of car owners. The editorials also got longer, the Viscount having more leisure time, I daresay.

Viscount M and F was on the advisory council of the ACA and had been promoting the rights of car owners for several years. He and William had things in common other than an interest in cars. They were near contemporaries (Viscount M and F had been born in 1873) and both families were landowners in Ireland, though the Clotworthy Skeffingtons were hugely more wealthy than the Humphrys family. Viscount M and F succeeded to his titles in 1905 and, sitting in the English House of Lords as Baron Oriel, was an opponent of independence for Ireland, a political view that William may have shared. In the 1920s he was an Ulster Unionist senator in the Northern Ireland parliament and got part of his house burned down by the IRA for his pains.

More information on the Clotworthy Skeffington family; and William's editor who is Algernon William John Clotworthy Skeffington, 12th Viscount Massereene and 5th Viscount Ferrard.

At www.proni.gov.uk the introduction to the Foster Massereene Papers gives a detailed family history; dated November 2007.

Wikipedia has a list of the various holders of the three main family titles. William's acquaintance - like so many of the other car drivers William knew - was married twice: in 1905 he married Jean Barbara Ainsworth; she died in 1937 and in 1941 he married Florence Clementine Vere-Laurie.

There's a photo of him with his second wife, taken at the Bassano Ltd studios in 1940: see www.npg.org.uk NPG X84223.

28 OCTOBER 1908

The ACA held its third annual dinner at the Criterion Restaurant. In his speech as the year's ACA president, the Earl of Onslow mentioned that the ACA's turnover in the previous year had been about £100,000. Amongst the other car-owning guests at the dinner, was William's GD acquaintance, solicitor Percy William Bullock.

Times Fri 30 October 1908 p4.

For the guest-list including William, and Percy Bullock: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 9 November 1908 p354-56, which was uncredited. You didn't have to be a member of the ACA to attend its annual dinner but I expect Percy was one. Just noting that Percy's wife Pamela wasn't with him at the do, although it was not a men-only affair, there are several women in a photograph taken during the evening.

NOVEMBER 1908

This issue did have an article by William. He discussed the possibility of using liquid air (?) in internal combustion engines, as an alternative to petrol.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 9 November 1908 p352; back page for the British Diamond fire extinguisher advert.

DURING NOVEMBER 1908

As usual, William went with other writers on motoring for a preview tour of the Olympia motor show.

Source: see December 1908.

BY DECEMBER 1908

The ACA management committee had taken on some new members; all men, and most of them senior employees.

Source: see December 1908.

DECEMBER 1908

This month's issue of Automobile Owner... had William's assessment of the Olympia car show. It also had a new column for women drivers, the reverie of Rosamund.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 10 December 1908. Pp385-88 for William's reflections on Olympia, with photos. P392 what I think is a first: an article (rather than just photos) on flying planes; focusing on the recent visit to Europe by the Wright brothers. On p393 the Reverie of Rosamund column; still anonymous but definitely by a new writer - it has a more gossipy tone, less coverage of the Ladies' Automobile Club and more discussion of what women should wear to go motoring while still looking fashionable. I wonder if William was getting anxious about the Automobile Owner... 's finances? - on p394 the magazine offered its list of 15,000 readers to traders. On the back page, the last of three full-page adverts by the British Diamond fire extinguisher company. The advert was the last time the company was even mentioned in the magazine.

THROUGHOUT 1909 and EARLY 1910

There was no coverage whatsoever in Automobile Owner... of any fire extinguisher, dry powder or otherwise. It's often difficult to spot an absence, but this one really caught the eye after the amount of space given to the British Diamond company's product during most of 1908. However, the silence was definitely not the result of William no longer being interested; quite the reverse, I'd say.

1909

EARLY 1909

William had articles on the same subject in the January, February and March issues of Automobile Owner..., looking ahead to a legal case being brought by the Mercedes car company, owner of a patent on a gate change.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 3 number 11 January 1909 pp425-26; volume 3 number 12 February 1909 p464 with a reply from Mercedes; and volume 4 number 1 March 1909 pp16-19, declaring that 50,000 motorists would be affected by the outcome of the case; and with many letters on the subject.

DURING MARCH 1909

Though it was rather outside his area of expertise, William went to Olympia to cover an aeroplane show for Automobile Owner...

Source: see April 1909.

PROBABLY 9 MARCH 1909

William was elected a member of the Institute of Journalists.

Comment by Sally Davis: within the Institute's membership was a large sub-group of people based in London. This group had its own committee and held regular social events: a monthly meeting for example, conversaciones and an annual dinner. The Institute as a whole came together for an annual conference in August of each year.

Source for his membership: Scoop! database, held by the British Library, and based on the Institute of Journalists' records. The database says that William was a member between 1909 and 1913. However, it doesn't give the exact date he joined.

Source for the Institute's social life; I only looked through 1909 but I daresay the events that year were typical of any year up to the first World War:

Times Sat 6 March 1909 p6 a London group conversazione 1430 at the Trocadero.

Times 9 March 1909 p8 a report on the day before's meeting of the Institute's London group. 27 new journalists were elected members, including the editors of Punch and The Observer. None were named; however, it's likely William was one of them.

Times Sat 21 August 1909 p13 announcement of this year's annual conference, to be held in Plymouth at the end of the month. 300-400 members plus guests would be attending. The announcement mentioned a decision reached at last year's conference, to provide members with insurance against unemployment.

Times Mon 29 November 1909 p6 Public Dinners, including a short report on the Institute's annual dinner at the Criterion Restaurant the previous Saturday. William isn't on the list of named guests, which included the publisher John Murray and the Antarctic explorer Ernest Shackleton.

The Times is very well informed about the Institute's events: I should imagine most of the newspaper's staff were members.

?APRIL 1909

Automobile Owner... company limited held its AGM. It was still running at a loss and William made up the year's loss from his own money.

Source for the magazine making a loss: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader p273 evidence of William Humphrys.

Comment by Sally Davis: I haven't got a date for this, but the company's AGM should have been held on or near the anniversary of its registration.

?APRIL 1909

The ACA held its AGM at the Prince's Hotel Piccadilly. In his chairman's speech, de Meray announced that the ACA would be paying a dividend of 15% to its share-holders.

Comment by Sally Davis: a nice wind-fall for William.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 3 May 1909, Supplement pvii. And on pv of the supplement, a report on the ACA's annual meeting held at the Prince's Hotel Piccadilly.

APRIL 1909

William's report on the Olympia air show included a confession that he didn't know anything much about aeroplane chassis.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 2 April 1909 pp54-55: Castles in Spain and Motors Not in the Air.

Comment by Sally Davis: just confirming that when engines took to the air, they lost the interest of William Humphrys.

FRIDAY 9 APRIL TO MONDAY 11 APRIL 1909

William went to the Easter race meeting at Brooklands.

Source: see May 1909

MAY 1909

William had two credited articles in this month's Automobile Owner..., both of which involved worries about money. His report on the Brooklands race meeting noted that it had been crucial for the survival of the company that owned the track. And his article on the recent Budget said gloomily that he hadn't expected car owners to be hit so hard. This issue had a supplement, which William would have had to put together for the printers in addition to preparing the main magazine: coverage of a dinner held in Brussels on 9 March 1909 to launch the International Co-operative Federation of Motorists. Most of the supplement was verbatim reports of the speeches made that evening.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 3 May 1909. Pp100-02 on the Easter race meeting at Brooklands. On p112: the Budget's consequences for car owners. Supplement pi-vii.

Comments by Sally Davis: William's suggestions (made in 1908) about taxing vehicles according to their horse power had largely been followed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. However, William thought that the lower horse-power vehicles were going to be charged at too high a rate; and the rise in the price of petrol from 1d to 4d per gallon was far too much, especially in one go.

This month's supplement illustrates the type of reader Automobile Owner... had: the speeches of those who spoke in French, were printed in French with no English translation. The ICFM was the result of de Meray's hard work in Europe over the previous year. He attended the dinner and made one of those speeches in French. There was a short list of the most important guests: Sir Wroth Lethbridge was on the list; but William was not and I don't think he was there.

JUNE 1909

William had no credited articles in this month's issue of Automobile Owner...

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 4 June 1909.

23 JUNE 1909

Jules and Mary Ann de Meray gave a reception at their house at 1 Rutland Gate Knightsbridge:300-400 guests were there. The evening included a concert and the display of Solomon Solomon's portrait of Mme de Meray.

Source: see July 1909 though there was no guest list.

Comment by Sally Davis: unless he had a prior engagement it would have been rather rude of William not to attend this event. And I'm just noting here that of the three men who had run the ACA on their own for a couple of years, Jules de Meray was the only one with a functioning wife! William was a bachelor; and Sir Wroth Lethbridge's marriage problems must have been well-known to his acquaintances by now.

SUMMER 1909

If William had been a close enough friend of Frank Rutter, he will have been invited to Sussex to be a guest at Frank's wedding to suffragette Thirsa Sarah Tiernan.

Source: freebmd but without the full date of course.

JULY 1909

This issue of Automobile Owner... had an article by William in which he returned to the vexed question of patents, with a legal case involving de Dion-Bouton now pending as well as the earlier one brought by Mercedes.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 5 July 1909. Pp176-77 for William's article on patents. P182 for the short, uncredited report of the de Merays' reception, with a photo of the portrait.

AUGUST 1909

William's credited article in this month's issue of Automobile Owner... was a cautionary tale about what happened if you didn't take extreme car buying parts for your car.

Comment by Sally Davis: some time earlier William had been out on one of the group-drives that were so popular, when his car broke down to the extent that even he couldn't fix it. He could see what was wrong - the coil had broken - but when he took it apart he found that was not at all what it had seemed when he had bought it. It had the name of an English firm on the outside, which he had taken as a guarantee of its quality; but inside it had French-made parts, held together with "the leaves of a French washing book" full of instructions on how to wash ladies' underwear. What use - he wrote - was that to an English bachelor stranded on the roadside? Accepting defeat, he and his car underwent the ignominy of being towed to a garage by an ancient Panhard. Back in London, he took the offending coil to S J Williams and Co of Shepherd's Bush and was shown how to make a coil properly.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 6 August 1909 p216

11 AUGUST 1909

Sir Wroth Lethbridge, representing all the directors of the ACA, gave evidence for the ACA in a court case brought by the IAG Syndicate Ltd.

Times Thurs 12 August 1909 p2 Law Reports on cases heard 11 August [1909]: IAG Syndicate Ltd v Lethbridge.

Comment by Sally Davis: the issues in the case aren't important, but that such a case was brought at all illustrates the strong feelings aroused by the ACA in motoring firms; a hostility that William was to regret in 1910. IAG Syndicate Ltd's case was that ACA should stop referring to itself in such a way that potential customers were confusing it with their firm. Perhaps references to the ACA in Automobile Owner... were amongst the references that IAG Syndicate Ltd considered were detrimental to their business.

SEPTEMBER 1909

William's article in Automobile Owner... this month was about synthetic rubber and the chances that the use of it would lead to cheaper tyres.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 7 September 1909 pp256-57.

OCTOBER 1909

Automobile Owner... published another article in which William assessed the possibility that another fuel might supercede petrol. This time it was a gas made from solid fuel.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 8 October 1909 p300; William means coal gas, I would suppose.

NOVEMBER 1909

William's regular preview of the motor show was published in Automobile Owner..., focusing on points potential car buyers should watch out for.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 9 November 1909 pp336-37; with the dates of the exhibition from the back page which had an advertisement for Daimler's stand at the show.

10 NOVEMBER 1909

The ACA held its fourth annual dinner at the Criterion Restaurant; on the same evening the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders held its annual dinner, and theirs got more coverage in the Times.

Sources:

Times Thurs 11 November 1909 p10 reports on both dinners. Just noting for future reference that the ACA's president, making the keynote speech this year, was the barrister Edward Marshall Hall. William was one of the named guests on the partial-list published by the Times.

Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 10 December 1909 pp394-98, including little cartoons of some of the notable guests. An important feature of this year's dinner was the number of European notables who were present, some of whom gave speeches.

Comment by Sally Davis: two such organisations both holding an important event on the same evening does illustrate the depth of hostility the ACA aroused in the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders. Or did someone in one or other organisation just make a dreadful administrative blunder, picking the same date?

12 to 20 NOVEMBER 1909

The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders motor show at Olympia.

Source: see November 1909.

DECEMBER 1909

The Automobile Owner...’s report on the motor show was credited to a writer calling him or herself ‘Cynic’. No articles credited to William appeared in this issue.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 10 December 1909 pp380-81.

Comment by Sally Davis: This was the first time since the magazine had been published that the report had not been credited to William. Either he didn’t write it; or he did write it, but didn’t want his name to be associated with it in public. Not only were relations between the ACA and the Society of Motor Manufacturers very bad; but this year, William had his own reasons for feeling hostile towards them - for more on that, see November 1910.

For Part 3 of this three-part life-by-dates of William Humphrys, return to my GD introduction page.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn’s administrative records and its Members’ Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it’s now in the Freemasons’ Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe’s The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke’s Peerage and Baronetage; Burke’s Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

22 November 2015

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

This is the third and last part of my life-by-dates biography of Golden Dawn member William Evans Hugh Humphrys. It covers 1910 to 1950. The two earlier parts cover 1876 to end 1906 including his period in the GD and 1907 to end 1909 the period for which there is most evidence and during which he was most busy.

To look at those, return to my GD introduction page and follow the links there.

Three short-forms used a lot in this file are:

1 = ACA. That's the Automobile Co-operative Association, formed in 1906 as a joint-stock company and friendly society, to supply its members with cars and car parts at list price. William Humphrys was on its management committee and Automobile Owner... magazine was very closely associated with the ACA.

2 = Automobile Owner... That's short for the full title of William's magazine: The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review. William was a part-owner of the magazine, one of its main creditors, and its managing director between 1907 and mid-1912; he wrote a lot of the articles that were published in it.

3 = Viscount M and F is the Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, editor of Automobile Owner... from late 1908 to mid-1912. For a fuller account of him, see Part 2.

CONTINUING AT 1910, a year which for William was dominated by court cases.

DURING 1910

10000 readers of Automobile Owner... were ACA members.

Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader p273. No one was asked to give a figure for the total readership, unfortunately.

JANUARY, FEBRUARY AND MARCH 1910

The Automobile Owner... had no articles in it which were credited to William. A new, uncredited column started up in the February issue: Law and Locomotion.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 4 number 11 January 1910; volume 4 number 12 February 1910 especially p484; and volume 5 number 1 March 1910. Some uncredited articles in these issues do look like his work, the kind of uncredited news items that he'd probably been writing since the magazine's first issue; though I don't think he was writing Law and Locomotion.

MARCH 1910

The price of Automobile Owner... dropped from 3d to 1d per monthly issue.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 1 March 1910, front page.

DURING MARCH 1910

The ACA held its 4th AGM. In his speech as its chairman, Jules de Meray said that business during 1909 had been twice that of 1908. As a result, the ACA had plenty of capital and also some cash in the bank. William would have been at this meeting though no guest list was published.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 2 April 1910 p48.

APRIL 1910

A new fire extinguisher was advertised in this month's issue of Automobile Owner... after 15 months in which no fire extinguishers of any kind had had any coverage in the magazine. The new one was made by the Radium Fire Extinguisher Co, of 67 Chancery Lane. Also in this issue was an uncredited article on the company's product, claiming that its fire-extinguishing powder was 700 times more effective than similar powder-based products; and that (unlike similar products) its powder did not absorb water.

Comment by Sally Davis: for 67-69 Chancery Lane, see the two previous files. On the 1911 census form William said he was the proprietor of a company that made fire extinguishers; and the Radium Fire Extinguisher Co has got to be the one he meant. The British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co still existed; in 1912 it was re-registered; and it only went into voluntary liquidation in 1928. So William's company was making a rival product to the one his magazine had promoted so vigorously in 1908. The existence at the same time of two companies making dry powder fire extinguishers does suggest that the basic formula for the powder wasn't patented. And in fact there was a third company making a similar product, the Kyl-Fyre company of Eastbourne.

Why call it the 'Radium' fire extinguisher? It's most unlikely that the dry powder mixture contained any radium - see wikipedia for why. Radium was new though (discovered 1898), exciting but puzzling; it was news. I think William chose the name with that in mind:

'radium' would catch the public eye and stick in the public's mind.

Sources:

Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 2 April 1910 p38 for the advert which asserted that one canister of Radium Fire Extinguisher powder could put out flames 30 feet high in 10 seconds. Canisters cost 7/6 each or you could buy 12 for £4. It became clear later on that used canisters could be sent back to the firm to be refilled. P43 for the article on the Radium fire extinguisher; which was about a recent demonstration. It mentioned the powder's inventor, a Cambridge University chemistry graduate. The inventor wasn't named but might have been one of William's fellow students. I don't think William invented the product himself, though: the article described the man who had invented it as having devoted himself to the study of how to put out fires; which doesn't strike me as a good description of what William had been doing since he graduated. What the powder was made of was not discussed, of course. The only thing the article would say was that it worked by producing a gas which took oxygen out of the nearby air. The Radium fire extinguisher's main claim to fame, according to the article, was its ability to resist water, making the powder more effective and longer-lasting when stored.

Kelly's PO Directory 1911 Trades Directory p1581 fire extinguisher makers has The Radium Fire Extinguisher Ltd at 67-69 Chancery Lane. It's also there on the street directory p241, together with the firm Automobile Owners (London) Ltd. There must have been a separate depot where the powder was prepared and the canisters filled and stored; but I haven't found out where it was.

The continued existence of the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd:

Redbooks of the British Fire Prevention Committee volumes 120-129 issued by HMSO 1907 p366 an account of a meeting of the Committee named P E Parr, Robert Paterson CA and Joseph Whaley as representing the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co.

Redbooks of the British Fire Prevention Committee volume 127 issued HMSO 1908 p20 the same three men from the firm were at a meeting held on 4 March 1908, around the time of the demonstration to the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Via google a snippet showing several adverts by Automobile Owner... 's insurance business in The Englishman issues 1-22 1908 p39, p63, p111; announcing that you could get a 25% rebate on your insurance payments if you used the British Diamond's fire extinguisher in your car.

Just glancing at paperspast.natlib.gov.nz to its New Zealand newspaper collection: several references to the diamond dry powder fire extinguisher appeared in papers in November 1908.

This is more problematic: I noticed several references during 1909 to a Diamond Dry Powder Fire Extinguisher Co in publications of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario: was this the British Diamond... company setting up a sep firm to promote and sell its fire extinguisher in Canada? Or is it a Canadian based rival producer?

Website www.cineresources.net has a booklet publicising the Diamond dry powder fire extinguisher, as supplied to the king (that's Edward VII). The booklet isn't dated but there's a list of the firms using the product, with testimonials; including a satisfied letter from Mann and Overtons dated 22 January 1909 and sent to the Manager, British Diamond... at 69 Chancery Lane WC. List of customers pretty impressive. William must be the Manager referred to.

The company appears in a list in Papers by Command House of Commons issued HMSO 1914 volume 79 p104.

London Gazette issue of 6 November 1928 in list of liquidations: the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co (1912) Ltd was going into voluntary liquidation. A meeting of shareholders and creditors would be held at 52 Bedford Square on 10 December 1928 at which the liquidator would make his last report and bring the process to an end by getting those present to decide how to dispose of the company's assets. The Bedford Square address is the office of the liquidator; no address was given for the company which perhaps had not actually been in business for a while.

Did William buy shares in the British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Company in 1908, when its offices moved to that 67-69 Chancery Lane address? He must have done, surely. But then, between the end of 1908 and mid-1910, he upped and got involved with a rival product and set up and invested in a rival firm. Maybe the British Diamond... company didn't much like it when this newcomer started making suggestions about how to improve the product, so he and his fellow Cambridge graduate went off on their own. And after he had started a firm to make a rival product, did William still have shares in British Diamond... in 1912, say, when it was re-registered as a limited company? The records are all thrown away now, so I'll never know.

On the third dry powder fire extinguisher firm I found from William's time, Kyl-Fyre:

Kyl-Fyre is the only one of the three firms to be in Grace's Guide to British Industrial History, see its pages at www.gracesguide.co.uk, by virtue of being listed in Whitaker's Red Book: Who's Who in Business issue of 1914, which the website uses as a source. You can't see the original text, unfortunately but the firms featured in it are listed by the type of product or work they do. Kyl-Fyre were based at 12 Elms Buildings Eastbourne. They specialised in extinguishers and other fire-fighting equipment for cars.

Seen via google: Kyl-Fyre make fire blankets too.

The earliest mention of Kyl-Fyre's dry powder product that I could find was in the Journal of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene volumes 12-13 1909 p297 issue of 1 October 1909: coverage of a demo.

I saw it mentioned in The Spectator volume 115 1915 p412 with the firm claiming their product was the "original dry powder extinguisher".

The ACA promoted Kyl-Fyre but not the other two products: Automobile Co-operative Association Review, beginning with issue number 7, December 1911 (p17) and continuing to its last issue, of October 1912 (p33). It suggests to me that the ACA had done a deal with Kyl-Fyre to be the only dry powder fire extinguisher supplied to its members; perhaps because unlike the other two firms, Kyl-Fyre also made other fire-extinguishing products. I wonder how William felt about that?

Finally, just confirming that in the midst of all this hubbub over a different company, that Automobile Owner... magazine was still being run from 67-69 Chancery Lane, and William was still in charge of monthly production.

Frank Rutter found William's involvement with fire extinguishers completely mystifying! Source: Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927: p54.

FROM APRIL 1910 FOR THE REST OF THAT YEAR

The Radium Fire Extinguisher Co and its fire extinguisher were mentioned in every issue of Automobile Owner.... Most issues had a full-page advert; but there were also small news items about the product, and mentions of it in some editorials.

Sources: see rest of 1910 below.

Comment by Sally Davis: perhaps the Viscount Massereene and Ferrard had invested in William's company.

APRIL 1910

The Motor Trades Association was founded by the main car manufacturers to stop the ACA and other organisations like it setting up deals to get discounts for their members.

Times Mon 18 April 1910 p12.

30 APRIL 1910

Automobile Owner... v The Long Acre Autocar Company was heard at Westminster County Court. Jules de Meray gave evidence; and probably William too.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 4 June 1910 p114, an uncredited account of the trial.

Comment by Sally Davis: the relationship between Automobile Owner... and the ACA had always been very close and Automobile Owner... was widely seen as the publishing arm of the ACA. The Long Acre Autocar Company Ltd had bought some advertising space in Automobile Owner... on the understanding that doing so would commit the ACA to buying 10 of its cars. When the ACA didn't buy any cars from them, they refused to pay the bill for the adverts. So William sued them, possibly on the advice of Jules de Meray whose barrister was anxious to emphasise the harm done to the ACA by the case. The Judge decided that The Long Acre Autocar Co must pay up because ACA and Automobile Owner... were independent organisations. However, the idea that they were essentially the same thing wasn't that easily killed off.

MAY 1910

A series of full-page adverts for the Radium Fire Extinguisher began inside Automobile Owner... William hadn't had time to write any credited articles for this issue.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 3 May 1910 p76.

JUNE 1910

A small paragraph appeared in Automobile Owner..., inserted at the request of the Radium Fire Extinguisher company, denouncing rival powders which used sand, oxide of iron or ashes in their mixture, none of which resisted water. This was another issue which didn't have an article credited to William.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 4 June 1910 p115.

22 JUNE 1910

The Radium Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd staged a demonstration chimney fire on the Strand near the Aldwych.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 5 July 1910 p135.

JULY 1910

William was back writing for Automobile Owner..., arguing on behalf of owners of steam cars against the year's change to the way motor tax was assessed, saying that it penalised steam in favour of internal combustion engines. In subsequent issues, there were other articles and letters on this theme; the beginnings of a campaign. This issue and the next few all had a full-page advert for the Radium fire extinguisher on the coveted back page. Viscount Massereene and Ferrard's editorial mentioned the Radium fire extinguisher as the only one capable of putting out a petrol fire.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 5 July 1910. Pp140-41 for William's article: New Motor Taxation. The Injustice to Steam. How Owners Should Act. For the editorial comment p135.

12 JULY 1910

William's acquaintance from Cambridge University days, Charles Stewart Rolls, died of head injuries when his aeroplane fell out of the sky at the Southbourne Aerodrome in Bournemouth.

Source for the death: Times Thursday 14 July 1910 p4 - short report on the inquest.

Comment by Sally Davis: Rolls' death - one of the first in a flying accident - received a great deal of press coverage; as did his funeral, at his parents' home at Llangattock; and the memorial service at St James Piccadilly, both of which took place on Saturday 16 July. The Times reports on these had comprehensive guest-lists but I couldn't see William on either of them. William's 1907 interviewee for Automobile Owner..., Mrs Assheton Harbord, and her husband, were amongst those sending a wreath to the funeral.

Times Monday 18 July 1910 p13.

AUGUST 1910

An article by Viscount Massereene and Ferrard was printed - a rarity, as he usually stuck to just being the editor. It published a letter he had sent to the Treasury about the taxing of steam cars. There was no article credited to William in this issue.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 6 August 1910 p171; on p179 a lot of aggrieved letters on the subject were printed.

SEPTEMBER 1910

No articles credited to William appeared in this issue but there was a review of GD member Florence Farr's book Modern Woman. Her Intentions. The back-page advert for the Radium fire extinguisher had been altered to feature the demo of June; and there was first mention of a publicity booklet for it. A new series began: Confessions of a Motor Trader.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 7 September 1910 p213 the review of Florence Farr's book was uncredited but I can't imagine who else but William could have written it. I haven't found a copy of the publicity booklet issued by the Radium Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd but I daresay it looks very like the one issued for the British Diamond... company when William was manager of it.

15 SEPTEMBER 1910

The Radium fire extinguisher was demonstrated to a group of potential and actual customers, by the Thames at Millbank.

Source: Automobile Owner...volume 5 number 10 December 1910 p292.

OCTOBER 1910

The campaign against the new motor tax continued in Automobile Owner... but mostly through articles and comment by Viscount Massereene and Ferrard; once again William had no articles credited to him in this month's magazine. Radium Fire Extinguisher Co Ltd's full-page advert was back on the inside pages of the magazine.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 8 October 1910 p236.

19-20 ?OCTOBER 1910 (POSSIBLY NOVEMBER 1910)

Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader reached court. William was suing the trade magazine for libel. ACA member Edward Marshall Hall was the other side's main barrister in the case. William's magazine lost.

Sources: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 pp270-77. The main witness for Automobile Owner... 's side of the argument was William himself. George Polsue gave evidence about the take-over of the previous magazine. Robert George Whitcombe, company secretary of the ACA, spoke about the editorial independence of Automobile Owner... And Harry Edward Morris confirmed that despite having no connection with the ACA, his firm had been given coverage by Automobile Owner... and had been able to advertise in it.

For Edward Marshall Hall see his wikipedia page. He must have cost a lot to hire! Though he was not yet as famous as he was to become.

Comment by Sally Davis. The case was about words published in an issue of The Motor Trader as long ago as January 1908. Judge Ridley decided that the article that had worried William so much contained neither a special nor a general libel; and even William had been obliged to admit when he'd been giving evidence, that what he'd taken exception to in the article was insinuation and innuendo, not insult in so many words. The usual procedure in this kind of case was that the losing side should pay both sides' costs; serious money for Automobile Owner... which William might have paid up out of his own funds. The great thing about the case from my point of view was that it all hinged on how independent, financially and otherwise, the magazine was from the motorists' association. So a lot of financial and legal information came out in the evidence that I could never have found anywhere else.

NOVEMBER 1910

William's yearly preview of the motor show at Olympia was published in the Automobile Owner... but most of the issue was taken up with a verbatim report of Automobile Owner... v The Motor Trader.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 9 November 1910 pp267-69 for the preview of Olympia. And pp270-77 for coverage of the libel case. On p263 the issue's advert for the Radium fire extinguisher had a photo of a motor cycle burning after an accident on the Brooklands race track. The fire had been put out using the "new Radium method".

DECEMBER 1910

After several months in which individuals had lobbied the Government about its heavy taxation of steam cars, the idea of forming an official pressure group began to surface. In this month's issue of Automobile Owner..., William published his usual article summing up the Olympia motor show. And the full-page advert for the Radium fire extinguisher featured the September demo at Millbank.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 10 December 1910 p293 in Viscount Massereene and Ferrard's editorial; and volume 6 number 2 April 1911 p57.

1911

During which, some outcomes of the recent libel case began to affect Automobile Owner...'s financial position.

JANUARY 1911

With the court case over, William was able to go back to writing regularly for his motoring magazine. This month he wrote about how to make solid petrol. The Radium fire extinguisher was advertised on the back page of this issue; and all subsequent issues this year; with references to users such as electrical companies, railway companies and the tube. This year's Automobile Owner's Chauffeur's Blue Book had gone on sale.

Source: The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review (just reminding readers of the magazine's full name) volume 5 number 11 January 1911. On p329 William's Solid Petrol and How to Make It (which sounds very dangerous). Advert for the Blue Book: inside the back page.

FEBRUARY 1911

In this month's issue of Automobile Owner... William wrote a short follow-up to the previous month's recipe for making solid petrol. He also considered whether nitrogen could be used to power cars; his conclusion was that it couldn't be (it certainly hasn't been). And he also wrote his assessment of the most notable cars likely to be produced this year. There was an advert for the new steam car pressure group, the Steam Car League; and also an article on it, uncredited but likely to be by William as he was its honorary secretary, to Viscount Massereene and Ferrard and Sir Charles Knox as its vice-presidents. The back-page advert for the Radium Fire Extinguisher Company listed some of its users for the first time and they were an impressive bunch: the War Office; Vickers Sons and Maxim; St Thomas's Hospital; City and South London Railway; the London General Omnibus Co; and the London County Council whom William must have poached from a rival as they had previously been customers of the British Diamond fire extinguisher company.

Comment by Sally Davis: I might be making too much of this, but on this month's back page the Radium fire extinguisher company's address had changed from 67 Chancery Lane to 67a. Perhaps William had decided to rent another room in the building for his multi-farious business concerns.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 5 number 12 February 1911 pp360-61 for nitrogen powered cars; p367 for the follow-up on solid-state petrol; pp378-379 for the Steam Car League. Those who paid their 5 shillings to join the Steam Car League would receive one year's-worth of issues of Automobile Owner... as part of their membership. Back page for the list of firms using the Radium fire extinguisher.

MARCH 1911

As part of its promotion of the Steam Car League, in this month's issue Automobile Owner William returned to the question of how the Government taxed motorists.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 6 number 1 March 1911 pp8-11.

22 MARCH 1911

A group of steam car owners crowded into William's rooms in 69 Chancery Lane to attend the first formal meeting of the Steam Car League. William described himself as an ardent believer in steam, when he gave the talk explaining the League's aims. William became the League's honorary secretary.

Comment by Sally Davis: just noting that a few of the League's founding members were women. There were no women on its committee but that was usual in this kind of group at that time.

Source: Automobile Owner volume 6 number 2 April 1911 p57.

NIGHT OF 2-3 APRIL 1911

On the day of the 1911 census, William was living in two habitable rooms at 67 Chancery Lane. He was the only person in that household. His sources of income were: as a journalist on a monthly motor magazine; and as a manufacturer of fire extinguishers. He didn't give a name to either the magazine or the fire extinguisher but their details both appear in Kelly's PO Directory. In both cases he was an employer of others, not an employee; and he worked at home.

Sources:

1911 census data. Just noting that he was the only member of his immediate family who was in England on that day. I presume his parents (both still alive) were in Ireland.

Kelly's PO Directory 1911 street directory p241 listing for 67-69 Chancery Lane which begins with the Allied Artists' Association; and also has the Automobile Owners (London) Ltd; and the Radium Fire Extinguisher Ltd. William Humphrys is also listed separately from all those.

Comment by Sally Davis: I haven't been able to discover how long William had been living on top of his work in this way. Perhaps he had been there since 1907 when he'd taken over George Polsue's magazine. I can't shake off the feeling that it might have been a temporary arrangement, though; and after losing the case against The Motor Magazine he might have decided to doss in his office rather than continue to pay two sets of rent.

Perhaps here is as good a place as any to put in what little information I've been able to find on William's younger brothers Julian and Hugh:

Julian Shirley Lombe Humphrys.

While checking him out Familysearch I saw a lot of references to arrivals by sea at New York City and other ports; and eventually he took up permanent residence in the USA:

Familysearch had a marriage registration for him: on 18 March 1930 in Manhattan, he married a widow, Ethel Tod McBride.

US Census 1940 Digital Folder 005456307; Julian appears on it in a household in Pasadena California. His wife wasn't with him.

Although he seems rather old to have been called up, Familysearch had a draft registration for him, dated 1942 in New York City. This gave his full date and place of birth: 6 June 1882 in East Dereham Norfolk.

I wasn't able to find, from any of those sources, what if anything Julian did for a living.

Hugh Everard Humphrys was in the army for a while before emigrating to New Zealand. He has descendants there:

He appears on the 1901 census as a pupil at Oundle School. Dublin University Calendar volume 2 1907; Hugh was an undergraduate there: p18 and p94.

Times Sat 16 June 1906 p13 quoting the London Gazette of 15 June 1906: Lt H E Humphrys had been appointed Instructor in Musketry in the Royal Canadians Regiment.

Times Sat 22 August 1908 quoting London Gazette 21 August 1908: Lt H E Humphrys had been promoted to Captain.

Although I searched the Times for several years after 1908 I didn't find anything more about Hugh Humphrys in it.

Via www.aucklandmuseum.com evidence that Hugh was living in New Zealand in 1916, and had married. His war service number was 22538 and he served with the New Zealand Rifle Brigade. He left New Zealand with the NZ expeditionary force in August 1916 and survived the fighting. His pre-war occupation was given as farmer.

Use google to find evidence that he returned to New Zealand after the war and was still living there several decades later.

APRIL 1911

For the rest of 1911, Automobile Owner... carried full-page adverts for the new Steam Car League. As the League's hon sec William probably wrote the uncredited report on its meeting of 22 March. He also had a credited article, mostly photographs, describing the amenities of the Royal Automobile Club's new headquarters.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 6 number 2 April 1911. Pp45-46 for William's report on the new RAC building; pp56-57 for the Steam Car League.

28 APRIL 1911

The divorce proceedings between Sir Wroth P C Lethbridge and his wife Alianore reached court. She brought the petition, on grounds of desertion and adultery which he did not contest. The divorce was granted.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm not sure how far a divorce would have hampered Sir Wroth Lethbridge's social career; it certainly will have hampered his wife's, even though she was acting the injured party role in the case. I do wonder whether the Steam Car League might have decided against having Sir Wroth too obviously involved; and in any case, the costs of a divorce case were only one of Sir Wroth's problems at the time and he may have had little time to spare for worrying about the taxation of cars. Later in 1911 he more or less confirmed his wife's allegations by marrying Kathleen O'Hara, possibly the woman he'd been spotted with in a hotel in Hamburg during 1909.

Times Fri 28 April 1911 p3

See www.thepeerage.com for the marriage of Wroth Lethbridge to Alianore Chandos-Pole.

They had three children.

MAY 1911

The Automobile Co-operative Association published the first issue of its Review. Its editorial thanked Automobile Owner... for its support in the past; but declared that it was time that the ACA published its own magazine, which members could use as a forum.

Source: Automobile Co-operative Association Review issue 1 May 1911; p3 for the editorial. One copy of the new magazine was sent to Ham House where the Earl of Dysart was a member of the ACA despite being unable to drive (he was blind). The Earl was the employer of GD member Wilfred Praeger. See discovery.nationalarchives.gov.uk - records of the Tollemache family.

Comment by Sally Davis: William was still a member of the ACA's management committee but the decision to start the ACA's own magazine can't have been one he welcomed from a financial point of view. It certainly showed the motoring world that the ACA was not the same entity as the Automobile Owner.. magazine, after the libel case of November 1910; which was presumably what the ACA wanted. It also meant that Automobile Owner... could no longer rely on the ACA for quite so much advertising and copy as the ACA had paid for in the past. Since the management committee had been expanded to include several senior ACA employees, the influence William had had before had been watered down. The ACA Review was trying to be different from Automobile Owner... - it had adverts for products not directly concerned with motoring, for example - cigarettes, luggage. It was printed on cheap paper and had very few photos, at least to start with; and it was not printed by Polsue Limited which printed the Automobile Owner... And it never had an advert for the Radium fire extinguisher; I suppose William wouldn't or couldn't pay for one.

MAY 1911

There was no article by William in this month's issue of Automobile Owner...

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 6 number 3 May 1911.

PERIOD MAY TO DECEMBER 1911

During the year, the ACA moved further away from its original focus on motoring. By December 1911 it had set up ACA (Auxiliary Supply) Co Ltd, which sold household goods and gardening equipment on the basis of the same kind of deal with suppliers that the ACA had had with cars and car product makers. The ACA also added a fire extinguisher firm to its sales base: Kyl-Fyre of Eastbourne, whose dry powder fire extinguisher was a direct rival to William's Radium fire extinguisher.

Sources: Automobile Co-operative Association Review issues 1-7, May-December 1911.

JUNE AND JULY 1911

Automobile Owner... magazine wasn't issued at all. During this time William abandoned Polsue Ltd and went to a new firm of printers.

Source for the new printers: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 1 August 1911 back page: The Chancery Lane Press (Bonner and Co) 1-3 Rolls Passage Chancery Lane.

Comment by Sally Davis: the libel case decision and its consequences were beginning to bite Automobile Owner... hard. And I don't know where the new printing deal left George Polsue - head of the jettisoned printing firm while also being a shareholder in and possibly a creditor of Automobile Owner... Perhaps William bought Polsue's shares.

AUGUST 1911

William's magazine reappeared after its two-month absence. William's article in this issue was about a new lighting system for cars.

Comment by Sally Davis: some things hadn't changed when William's magazine reappeared after its unannounced two-month absence. It still had its original title: The Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review. It was still being edited by Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, it was still being run from 67-69 Chancery Lane, and William was still writing regularly for it. But after the two-month hiatus, the magazine had started with a new volume number, as well as new printers, and the quality of paper was noticeably lower from now on.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 1 August 1911. Pp10-11 for William's article.

LATE AUGUST 1911

William Humphrys married Jessie Alice Holliday at Holy Trinity Kingsway London WC.

Source: freebmd but also Times Fri 1 September 1911 p1a for the venue; though it didn't give the date of the marriage.

Comment by Sally Davis: William Humphrys, his solicitor acquaintance Elliott C Gray, and his wife Jessie, all had one thing in common: a father who was a Church of England clergyman. But the ways and places in which the three of them grew up illustrate just how much difference there could be between one career in the established church, and another.

Jessie Holliday's father Ezra was the son of a working man, William Holliday, who was employed as a labourer in an iron works in the Wisbey district, later absorbed into Bradford Yorkshire. By 1861 Ezra's sister Alice, 14, was working as a worsted spinner; his brother Nathaniel who was only 10 was working at a coal mine (though not, presumably, at the pit face); and Ezra (aged 16) was clawing his way out of this grim background by way of being an apprentice teacher in a National School. Ezra married Margaret Alice Stephenson in 1869 when he had left Bradford for a job at Oswaldtwistle, Lancashire; I'm presuming he was still a teacher at this time. Ezra and Margaret had four children: Margaret; Jessie; Clara Annie; and James Harry. Jessie was born in 1875, so she was a little older than William Humphrys. Ezra Holliday never went to university but there were some rather limited ways in which a non-graduate could follow a Church of England vocation, and (though I haven't been able to find out the details) Ezra must have taken advantage of one of those ways: he was ordained as a curate in 1878 and as a priest in 1880. After two short periods spent as a curate, at Linthwaite in Yorkshire; and at Rawtenstall in Lancashire, where he founded a day-school, in 1883 he was appointed vicar of Dale Head, Clitheroe. In 1886 he was moved on to become vicar of Cloughfold in Manchester where he stayed until being promoted to be rector of St Luke's Miles Platting Manchester. He died in December 1903, still only in his 50s.

I find it a curious feature of the Holliday family that in 1911, Jessie, her mother, and her unmarried sister Margaret could all claim to be living off private means - it niggles at me that I don't know where the private means might be coming from, in a family with such a modest social background. On the day of the 1911 census the two Margarets (mother and daughter) had moved to the Fairhaven district of Lytham and could afford, between them, to employ the one basic general servant. Clara Annie had married Rev Charles Paul Keeling in 1903; they were living with their three sons at Todmorden, where he was the vicar. James Harry had qualified as a civil engineer in 1898; I couldn't find him on the 1911 census so he may already have moved to Canada, where he died in 1929. Perhaps Jessie was the most adventurous of the Holliday daughters. She was living in London on census day 1911, lodging in the boarding house run by William Henry Warren at 45-46 Guilford Street Bloomsbury, only a short walk from Chancery Lane.

How did Jessie and William meet? - two single people living very near each other in London but from such radically different backgrounds? Mr Warren's lodgers at 45-46 Guilford Street were a diverse bunch which included some actors - perhaps the actors were friends of William. Or did Jessie work as a volunteer somewhere in London? - for the WSPU, like Frank Rutter's wife Thirsa? Or even the Allied Artists' Association? - I imagine that in the weeks before its annual exhibition, the AAA needed all the volunteers it could get. Or did William and Jessie just meet in a local café where both of them regularly ate lunch? We'll never know; but meet they did.

Despite the problems Automobile Owner... was having, William's income from other sources must have been good, because at some point between 1911 and 1916 he and Jessie moved out of London, to Hendon; and the most likely time for a clean break like that is immediately after their marriage. When they moved there, Hendon was a rather isolated area, with poor public transport links, on the very far outskirts of London, but William at least is likely to have known it and perhaps visited it, as the site of several car factories and a couple of airfields. Hendon had been popular since the Middle Ages as a place for London residents to spend the summer, and there were plenty of villas to rent, often standing in large gardens. William and Jessie moved into Cranbourne Lodge, one of a group of houses built in the 1820s (all since demolished). In 1908 barrister Ernest Bevir and his family had been living in it; but by census day 1911 they had moved to another house in Hendon. Perhaps Cranbourne Lodge had been empty for a few months when William and Jessie moved in.

Sources for the Holliday family:

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1470816 for the marriage of Ezra Holliday to Margaret Alice Stephenson 21 September 1869 at Oswaldtwistle Lancs.

At www.rossendale-fhhs.org.uk a history of Rawtenstall.

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1886 p579.

Crockford's Clerical Directory 1901 p666.

Probate Registry 1904, 1919, 1939.

For James Harry: Minutes of Proceedings of the Institution of Civil Engineers volume 131 issued 1898 p270.

Source for Hendon:

Middlesex volume V in the Victoria History of the Counties of England series. Published Oxford University Press and the Institute of Historical Research University of London; 1976: pp3-28. Cranbourne Lodge is not mentioned by name in this account; neither is the house that Ernest and Ellen Bevir were living in in 1911. I conclude that neither house was very big, or of any particular architectural or historical importance.

Cranbourne Lodge:

Gentleman's Magazine 1825 shows that it was already in existence at that date.

Royal Blue Book issue of 1908 p642 has barrister Ernest Bevir, living at the address.

Seen via google: a house called Cranbourne Lodge with the address 1 Cranbourne Gardens

NW11. From its photograph, the house doesn't look like something built in the 1820s, more like a house built with the rest of the Gardens, in the late 1920s.

SEPTEMBER 1911

William did manage to prepare an article for this month's Automobile Owner.... He began a two-part series on a problem his readers will have been all-too-familiar with - how to start an uncooperative engine. The second part appeared in the October issue.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 2 September 1911 pp32-33; and volume 7 number 3 October 1911 pp56-67.

SATURDAY 23 SEPTEMBER 1911 AND FOR THE NEXT FOUR WEEKS

There was a large exhibition at Olympia of the latest developments in electricity supply. Some at least of the exhibitors had been given Radium fire extinguishers to display on their stalls.

Source for the dates and exhibitors: Times Monday 25 September 1911 p4 Electrical Science and Industry. The report mentioned that both Marconi and Edison's firms would be exhibiting; and that visitors would also be able to examine the first ever storage battery to go on public display. The Times had produced a supplement to go with the exhibition, focusing on telephone and telegraphic equipment.

Source for Radium Fire Extinguisher Co's involvement: Gas Journal volumes 115-116 1911 p61. Comment by Sally Davis: my science advisor, Roger Wright, tells me that a powder fire extinguisher would be particularly good at putting out electrical fires. Given Radium Fire Extinguisher's involvement - which presumably William had negotiated - and the work he was doing around the first World War, I'd be surprised if William stayed away from this exhibition. The Times felt a visit to it was a must for anyone working in the industry or excited about the latest technologies.

NOVEMBER 1911

In this issue of Automobile Owner William did his customary preview of the Olympia motor show. The full-page advert for the Radium fire extinguisher added some new customer names for its list: the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary; Great Western Railway; Great Northern Railway; Great Eastern Railway; and the Metropolitan Railway in London.

Source: Automobile Owner...volume 7 number 4 November 1911 pp80-81 and back page.

BEFORE DECEMBER 1911

William must have bought some shares in the Automobile Co-operative Association's new venture, the ACA (Auxiliary Supply) Co Ltd; because he had been elected onto its board of directors. He was also on its management committee which was essentially the same men as were on the ACA's management committee.

Comment by Sally Davis: surely it must have been rather galling for William to find his own Radium fire extinguisher being ignored by the ACA in favour of its Kyl-Fyre rival. In this month's ACA Review there was an article praising it.

Source: Automobile Co-operative Association Review issue no 7, December 1911, back page and p17.

DECEMBER 1911

William's article in this month's Automobile Owner... reported on the general feeling of discontent amongst car owners at the lack of cars for sale at the Olympia show.

Comment by Sally Davis: the UK was actually in the middle of an economic slump at this time; obviously car owners weren't feeling it as much as car manufacturers.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 5 December 1911 pp104-105.

1912

DURING 1912

The British Diamond fire extinguisher company may have been re-registered at Companies House.

Source: London Gazette issue of 6 November 1928 the British Diamond (1912) is in list of liquidations.

And just confirming the continued existence of the Radium Fire Extinguisher Co:

The Railway News volume 98 1912 pv it was in a list of 4 firms making "fire appliances"; the British Diamond company was not in the list, perhaps because it didn't pay to be listed; or because it didn't happen to have any railway companies its customers.

Comment by Sally Davis: it's been impossible to discover whether William still had anything to do with the British Diamond fire extinguisher company. This whole business of why William should be involved with two rival fire extinguisher companies is very puzzling.

AGAIN, DURING 1912

Frank Rutter got a job as curator of Leeds City art gallery. He and his wife Thirsa left London. As part of the move, Frank resigned from his job as secretary of the Allied Artists' Association, where he'd been responsible for organising its yearly exhibitions.

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927 p193 for his resignation.

Wikipedia for the new job in Leeds.

3 JANUARY 1912

An insurance company staged a demonstration of the Radium Fire Extinguisher company's fire extinguisher on waste ground near Lambeth Bridge.

Source: Automobile Owner... pp132-33 and p131 for a full-page advert with 'satisfied customer' letters as well as a full-page advert on the back page. The insurance company's representatives built a wooden shed, filled it with inflammables of all sorts, dowsed it all with petrol and set it alight. Although employees of the Radium firm had offered to do the work of putting the fire out, the insurance company preferred to ask a youth from the crowd to do it, which he did very quickly, using only two canisters.

JANUARY 1912

Automobile Owner... magazine cut its price to 1d per issue. William's article was on what was likely to go wrong with a carburettor. There was a report on the Chancellor of the Exchequer's committee of enquiry into car taxation; it was uncredited and I think that Viscount M and F was its most likely author.

Source: Automobile Owner.. volume 7 number 6 January 1912 pp128-29 for William on carburettors; p136 for the Committee of Enquiry article which encouraged readers to join the Steam Car League.

FEBRUARY 1912

There was no issue of the Automobile Owner... this month.

MARCH 1912

Automobile Owner... was published again and William began a series called Motoring for the Beginner; which continued until July and would have gone on longer but July 1912 was the last issue of the magazine. In his first article for the series, William considered Cost. There was a small item reminding Steam Car League members that their subscriptions for 1912 were due; uncredited but must be by William, still the League's honorary secretary.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 7 March 1912 pp152-53 Motoring for Beginners; 162.

APRIL 1912

William's article in the Motoring for the Beginner series was a very detailed comparison of car insurance policies. He mentioned in passing how often cars caught fire after a collision. This month he had a second article printed, in which he called for a Government effort to secure a home-based supply of oil; suggesting benzol as a good one.

Comment by Sally Davis: the fighting in north Africa had got William worrying about security of oil supplies - he mentioned in his visionary article that oil-fuelled aeroplanes were being used to bomb Tripoli. The Government didn't heed William, and chose another route to secure supplies - meddling in the Middle East; the consequences of which we live with, daily.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 8 April 1912 pp176-78 for Motoring for the Beginner; and p179 for William on security of oil supplies. Radium Fire Extinguisher Co still had its advert on the back page but there was no coverage of it inside, in this and the last two issues.

MAY 1912

William's Motoring for the Beginner series considered which car was the most reliable for a first-time buyer and simplest for them to repair when necessary. Even many years after he had probably ceased to drive them, William unhesitatingly recommended the De Dion-Bouton.

Source: Automobile Owner... volume 7 number 9 May 1912 pp195-96.

JUNE 1912

For the second time that year, there was no issue of Automobile Owner... in June.

JULY 1912

Automobile Owner Steam and Electric Car Review was published for the last time. William's article in the Motoring for the Beginner series was on Maintenance. He stressed the importance of the owner knowing more about maintenance than the chauffeur, if they employed one; if your chauffeur knew more than you, it would lead to unnecessarily high bills. He also advocated the 'little and often' approach to keeping the bodywork and engine clean. This needn't mean getting messy yourself: William explained that he didn't employ a chauffeur, but he didn't clean his car himself either.

Comment by Sally Davis: now William was married and living in a large house in the suburbs, I imagine he employed a handyman to do things like cleaning the car. As for the end of Automobile Owner.. I can't believe it came as such a surprise to its producers; but there was no indication at all in the July 1912 issue that it would be the last - not one word. Quite the opposite: William had promised that his Motoring for the Beginner series would have an article on tyres; but in July 1912 the series hadn't got as far as that. On p217 there was even an advert for Automobile Owner...'s insurance service. How long did that carry on for, I wonder, without the magazine?

Source: Automobile Owner Steam and Electric Car Review volume 7 number 10 July 1912. On pp211-12 Motoring for the Beginner. On the back page was the usual full-page advert for the Radium fire extinguisher. And inside the back page there was the usual full-page advert for the Steam Car League, with William still as its honorary secretary.

OCTOBER 1912

The Automobile Co-operative Association Review also published its last ever copy; again with no indication that no more issues would be printed.

Source: ACA Review issue 15 October 1912.

Comment by Sally Davis: Automobile Owner... had its own problems, and perhaps so did ACA Review. But the magazine, Motor Car Journal, which was published by Cordingley and Co, also printed its last issue in 1912. The earliest years of the 20th century had seen a huge boom in motoring and the motoring industry; this was followed by a decline - a relative one only, but people are so quick to get used to 'boom' as the norm!

Source for the relative slump: The Transport Revolution 1770-1985 by Philip Bagwell. Routledge 2002 p30.

Comments by Sally Davis: how much influence did William Humphrys have on the sudden cessation of two magazines he was associated with? He might not have much say at ACA Review but he was still Automobile Owner..'s managing director. However, he was also very likely its major creditor, still, and perhaps this tipped the balance. I haven't found any evidence that the magazine went bankrupt or even into voluntary liquidation; the company was wound up (I don't know when) with less hubbub than that. But I doubt if William came out ahead; and he lost a regular advertising outlet for his fire extinguisher firm.

And with Automobile Owner...'s demise I lose my most exhaustive source for William's life. After World War 1, 100-year rules, copyright issues and the way the electoral roll had been organised and kept, mean that there are fewer sources anyway. So my evidence for the rest of William's life - nearly 40 years of it - is pretty threadbare and tends to feature death far more than it ought.

ANOTHER DATE DIFFICULT TO ASCERTAIN but probably after William and Jessie moved to Hendon

William began to investigate electricity and wireless, particularly valves.

Source: see June 1914.

Comment by Sally Davis: I rather suppose that William didn't have any room for this kind of research until he was living at Cranbourne Lodge. It was probably while doing this research that he began to see himself as an engineer rather than as a journalist; though he still had the entrepreneurial touch and still wrote articles for magazines from time to time.

1913, which involved further cutting of the old cords that had bound together William's working life during the 1900s; and saw him embarking on a new phase of his life.

DURING 1913

The Institute of Journalists seem to have lost sight of William, suggesting that he stopped being a member.

Source: Scoop! Database at the British Library.

DURING 1913

The ACA's offices were shaken by accusations of financial irregularities; ending with the prosecution of two senior employees

Source: Times Fri 22 August 1913 p6.

Comment by Sally Davis: as William was still a member of the ACA's management committee, this crisis will have landed in his lap as well as in the laps of others. One of the men suspected had joined the management committee recently; presumably William had taken part in the recruitment process that had ended with his being offered the job. The decision to bring the police into the matter will also have been one that William helped to make.

? FEBRUARY ?MARCH 1913

At the annual meeting of the Allied Artists' Association, William, and his solicitor acquaintance Elliott Gray, were voted off its management committee.

Since I was Twenty-Five by Frank Rutter. London: Constable and Co Ltd 1927: p195. Frank doesn't name the "two old friends", "business men" who were dumped from the committee, but William, and Elliott Gray, must be the people he means.

JULY 1913

The London Wireless Club was founded in West Hampstead, as a forum for amateur wireless enthusiasts. In 1922 it changed its name to the Radio Society of Great Britain and at least in 1924, William seems to have been a member.

Source for the founding of the club: wikipedia. The Society still exists - see its website at www.rsgb.org.

AUGUST 1913

The prosecution of ACA employees Robert George Whitcomb or Whitcombe, and Henry Evans Walmsley, for embezzlement reached court. Court proceedings went on from time to time for the next three months.

Sources: Times Fri 22 August 1913 p6 and 27 November 1913 p14. The reports are very short items. They don't give any detail of the cases and they don't name any witnesses. Exactly what the cases were against the two men is not clear.

NOVEMBER 1913

All the charges against the ACA's Whitcomb or Whitcombe and Walmsley were dropped for lack of evidence.

Times 27 November 1913 p14.

Comment by Sally Davis: so the trial petered out with neither man found either guilty or innocent - the most unsatisfactory result that could have been imagined, for all concerned. I presume neither man was still working for the ACA. It all gives me the impression of an organisation that had most decidedly lost the plot, for which William had to bear his share of the blame. The ACA did survive this calamity and the unwelcome publicity, however, and still existed during the first World War.

1914

14 JUNE 1914

William made the first of two applications to the British Government for a patent on a new design of thermionic valve (a piece of equipment known in the USA as a vacuum tube).

Source: via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent, to the Espacenet database of past patent applications, which contains 7 made by William. See GB221571 (A) which includes a short abstract and a diagram. The patent was granted and until it ran out, William would have had an income from anyone using his design in their equipment.

WORLD WAR 1

What William did during the war is almost a complete mystery.

Comment by Sally Davis: if William volunteered or was conscripted, he did not fight - the records of serving soldiers in World War 1 are well-covered on the web and William isn't in them. It's possible that he volunteered or was called up, but failed his medical. Given his expertise and experience, he would have been wasted in the trenches anyway. I can't quite see him standing aside and letting the war go on without him. Roger Wright and I have talked it over and we agree that William did do war work of some kind; but that either it was a secret, or the records of it have been lost, or both.

One thing William might well have been doing is using his wireless equipment to intercept messages being sent by the German army in Flanders. At the beginning of the war, many members of the Radio Society of Great Britain were recruited into MI8's branch, the Radio Security Service, to use their home-built equipment to listen in to enemy transmissions. See 1924 for some evidence that William was a member of the Society, at least during that year.

Sources are rather hard to find for this kind of work during World War 1: World War 2 is far better covered. But see the wikipedia pages on MI8 and on Radio Society of Great Britain for brief mentions of it.

1915

While still living in Leeds, Frank Rutter took over control of the Allied Artists' Association again.

Source: Frank's biography in the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 48 p421 although the AAA, like every other such organisation, was in all-but-abeyance for the duration of the war. William and Elliott Gray are not mentioned in the ODNB coverage of Frank so I suppose that neither of them had anything more to do with the AAA after they had been ousted in 1913. The AAA was wound up in 1919 and Frank - back in London again - founded the Adelphi Gallery instead.

JUNE 1915

William made patent applications to the authorities in Britain and Switzerland, for a device that could strengthen a "cushion tyre" ("tire" in the USA) to make it more able to withstand pressure at its edges.

Comment by Sally Davis: just noting that the strengthened tyre was not something William invented for any war work he might have been doing; any such invention would be the Government's property not William's personal property.

Sources:

Britain: via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to Espacenet. <http://www.gov.uk/search-for-patent>. See GB191508950 (A) which includes an abstract of the original information that accompanied the application.

Switzerland: again via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to the Espacenet database. See application (in German) CH90825 (A) dated 17 June 1915; published 17 October 1921.

More detailed information on the device is available from William's US patent application:

JUNE 1916

William made an application for his cushion tyre/tire device to the patent authorities in the USA and France.

Sources:

USA: patent number US1248863, dated 15 June 1916 at www.freepatentsonline.com and also via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to the Espacenet database. US patents are well-covered on the web, so it's also at google.com.gh/patents/US3234989 which gives fuller details of the device, William's address when he made the application (Cranbourne Lodge Hendon) and his current occupation (engineer). Although I think it must have run out, this patent was important enough to be referred to as part of the examination of US patent application (US3234989 made 1963) for a missile-proof ground wheel.

France: via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to the Espacenet database. See FR482058 application (in French) dated 16 June 1916.

26 SEPTEMBER 1916

William and Jessie's son was born - Hugh William Humphrys, named after his father, and his Humphrys grandfather.

Comment by Sally Davis: when Hugh was born, Jessie was 41 and William 40. I did check as far as 1920 without finding any other children born to them. Given Jessie's age, it's likely Hugh was an only child.

Source for DOB: death registration for Hugh William Humphrys, registered October-December 1970 in Hove Sussex.

OCTOBER 1916

Having lived in New Zealand for several years, William's brother Hugh arrived in England with the New Zealand Rifle Brigade, on his way to the war.

Comment by Sally Davis: perhaps William and Hugh were able to meet, briefly.

Source: via www.aucklandmuseum.com to service record of Hugh Humphrys, service number 22538. He survived the fighting but returned to New Zealand. See google for evidence that he was still living in New Zealand several decades later.

1917

Frank Rutter resigned from his job at the Leeds art gallery.

Source: wikipedia and Frank's biography in the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 48 p421. Throughout his time in Leeds Frank had continued to write on art for a wide range of newspapers and magazines, so he was able to just carry on doing so when he returned to London.

DECEMBER 1917

William's patent application to the US authorities was finally granted.

Sources:

See June 1916 above

Patent Office Journal issued by the US Government Printing Office volume 9 1920.

1 JULY 1918

Jessie's mother, William's mother-in-law Margaret Alice Holliday, died, in Prestwich, Lancashire.

Source: Probate Registry records for 1918. Jessie's sisters Margaret and Clara Annie were the executors.

AFTER WORLD WAR 1

London began to engulf Hendon.

Source: Middlesex volume V in the Victoria History of the Counties of England series. Published Oxford University Press and the Institute of Historical Research University of London; 1976: pp3-28. Early moves towards this had been made with the Hampstead Garden Suburb Act of 1906, and building had begun in what is now Golders Green in 1911. Stopped dead by the war, in the 1920s the expansion started up again, concentrating now on Hendon. The Underground Electric Railway (now the Northern Line) was extended from Golders Green to Hendon Central in 1923; but in general car ownership was assumed, with Hendon Way and the North Circular Road being begun in 1924 and the Great North Way in 1926.

?OCTOBER 1919

Evidence that William was still doing the odd spot of journalism - he was asked to comment on the new, cheap, "Speedy Car" for the Pall Mall Gazette.

Comment by Sally Davis: William's comments, and those of other journalists who wrote about motoring, were taken up by the firm that made the car, and put into a full-page advert which appeared on p17 of the Times on Saturday 25 October 1919. There had already been a smaller advert for the car, on p5 of the Times Saturday 13 September 1919. The Pullinger

Engineering Co was the manufacturer and they would be selling it at 110 guineas - 10 guineas in advance, in cash, to their registered office at Holborn Viaduct; and the rest when the car was delivered. What William had written in the Pall Mall Gazette could have applied to any such car: "A post-war scheme of this kind is what is wanted to bring down car prices and encouraging cheap motoring". He had not seen the car - and thereby hangs a tale because the Speedy Car was a scam! See Times 10 November 1919 p26 for a big advert for the Pullinger Engineering Co's share issue; and for the Times' financial reporter's reservations about it; and

The Transport Revolution 1770-1985 by Philip Bagwell. Routledge 2002 pp30-31 (I think though I found it hard to see the page numbers on the snippet I found) for the story of how the attempted fraud was exposed by the magazine The Motor.

If William could see what the consequences of bringing down car prices and encouraging cheap motoring - for example, the west-bound M4 at the start of the Easter weekend - he might have thought again!

18 OCTOBER 1919

Jessie's sister Clara died in Stockport where her husband, Rev Charles Paul Keeling, was the Rector; she was only in her fifties.

Source: freebmd and Probate Registry records but not until 1939 - see 1939 below. In 1921 her widower, the Rev Charles Paul Keeling, married Hilda Drinkwater.

DURING 1920

The Radium Fire Extinguisher Ltd was still in business providing William, Jessie and son Hugh with part of their income.

Source: The Electrical Review volume 87 1920 p270 listed the Radium Fire Extinguisher Ltd as one of the creditors of W Dennell and Co, engineers, of Sheffield, which had just gone bankrupt; so it wasn't all plain sailing for William and his fire extinguisher company.

JUNE 1920

William, Jessie and Hugh were still living at Cranbourne Lodge.

Source:

Patent Office Journal issued by the US Government Printing Office volume 9 1920. This is also a source for William describing himself as an engineer; though of course you wouldn't want to call yourself a journalist while applying for a patent on a piece of electrical equipment.

31 JANUARY 1922

William's father, Canon Rev Hugh Humphrys, died while spending a few days in Leamington Spa. At some point after his death - probably quite soon after - William's mother Louisa settled in Golders Green.

Comment by Sally Davis: probate was to William's mother and was granted in Dublin; so I take it that most of what the Rev Hugh had to leave was in Ireland. He left relatively little property in England - personal effects worth about £5000. Louisa Humphrys' income after her husband's death was probably from sources in her own family.

Sources:

Times Friday 3 February 1922 p1a death notices.

Probate Registry 1922.

DURING 1923

William was one of a group of journalists who were present when a statue of Frederick Henry Royce, one of the founders of Rolls-Royce, was unveiled.

Via google to www.rrht.castlewoodconsultants.com, copies of Archive, the newsletter of the Rolls Royce Heritage Trust. Newsletter 92 2013: The Unveiling of the Royce Statue. It was a very unusual occasion - the subject of the statue was still alive. It's a pity that the article doesn't give a date for the ceremony; though beginning on p11 it does list all those people who were invited. William was representing Pall Mall Gazette. A special train was hired to take the London-based guests to Derby. The Earl and Countess of Birkenhead were the most senior guests and the Countess unveiled the statue.

JUNE 1923

William made a second patent application for a design of thermionic valve (vacuum tube in the USA); presumably an improvement on the patent of 1914.

Source: via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to the Espacenet database. See GB223337 (A) priority date 25 June 1923, with an abstract and a diagram.

The Year-Book of Wireless Telegraphy and Telephony 1925 pubd by The Wireless World mag; Iliffe and Sons Ltd of Dorset House, Tudor St EC4. On p813 in its list of British patent specifications published during 1924. Just noting what a large number of these were held by individuals rather than companies.

DURING 1924

Building began on what is now known as Cranbourne Gardens, and Cranbourne Lodge was knocked down.

Comment by Sally Davis: this is a bit speculative; but I think the houses of Cranbourne Gardens were built on the site of the old Cranbourne Lodge and its gardens. Using google you can see a house that's called Cranbourne Lodge, but Roger Wright reckons it's a 1920s building. I'm not so sure but it doesn't look much like a house built in the reign of George IV.

Source for the building of Cranbourne Gardens: Middlesex volume V in the Victoria History of the Counties of England series. Published Oxford University Press and the Institute of Historical Research University of London; 1976: footnote on p14 quoting the planning permission given by the local Urban District Council. I couldn't find direct information that Cranbourne Lodge was knocked down; nor that Cranbourne Gardens is on its old site; but there are plenty of references to old houses in the Hendon area being replaced by new streets of houses.

JULY 1924

William's drawing of a valve socket was the illustration to an article (by someone else) on how to built your own crystal unit.

Comment by Sally Davis: I'm basing my assumption that William was a member of the Radio Society of Great Britain on the fact that he was asked to contribute to the Society's official weekly magazine, Wireless World and Radio Review. The Society was very active in north London, with branches in Golder's Green, North Middlesex and Hendon; it held more formal meetings in central London.

Source: the article for which he supplied the drawing was: An Experimental Crystal Unit, by an author just described as "S.A.C." Wireless World and Radio Review volume 14 part 2 issue of 23 July 1924 pp482-484; with William's drawing on p484. And for the local societies and their busy programme of meetings: p31; and Wireless World and Radio Review volume 14 part 2 issue of 9 April 1924 p59-60. Though I must note that I didn't find William's name in any issue of the magazine in 1924.

?MID-LATE 1920s

William, Jessie and Hugh moved to 32 Sunny Gardens, Hendon.

Source though not for the date they moved there: Probate Registry 1950.

21 DECEMBER 1925

William's old colleague on the ACA management committee, Jules de Meray, died.

Source for the date: The British Chess Magazine volume 46 1926 p139 obituary of Jules de Meray of 48 Sussex Gardens.

JANUARY 1926

William made his final patent application, showing that wireless equipment was now his main interest. The application was for getting rid of background noise when using wireless equipment plugged into the mains supply.

Source: via www.gov.uk/search-for-patent to the Espacenet database. See GB262979 (A) priority date 27 January 1926, with an abstract.

Comment by Sally Davis: William's son Hugh was now 10. He became a professional engineer so perhaps he was involved in these experiments with wireless. I think the application also indicates that wherever the Humphrys were living, it was a house fully wired with an electricity supply. Perhaps it was at William's instigation that Cranbourne Lodge - if that's where they still were - had had electricity installed.

1927

William had an article on 'the wireless engineer' published in the magazine Electronic Technology.

Source: Electronic Technology volume 4 1927 p189 originally published March 1927. The British Library doesn't seem to have copies of this magazine, at least not from around this time; so I haven't been able to check out the contents. It is a pity as this looks like the last piece of writing he ever had published.

AUTUMN 1928

The British Diamond Fire Extinguisher Co (1912) Ltd went into voluntary liquidation.

Source: London Gazette issue of 6 November 1928 in a list of liquidations there was advance notice of the final meeting to be held by the liquidator, at 52 Bedford Square on 10 December 1928. IF William still had any shares in this company, he will have needed to be at the meeting to help make the decisions about how the company's assets should be disposed of.

JUNE 1929

Jessie's brother James Harry Holliday died in hospital in Montreal.

Source: Probate Registry 1939.

11 JULY 1934

William (but apparently not Jessie) went to the funeral of Walter Beresford Annesley, the 7th Earl Annesley.

Sources for the funeral and William's presence at it:

Times Tues 10 July 1934 p21 and Times Thursday 12 July 1934 p17c a very short report of the funeral, which had been held at the burial ground in Eversley near Basingstoke. Very few of the mourners were named in the report. Most were close family, of course.

Comment by Sally Davis: while I've been searching through my sources for William I've kept an eye out for this man but not seen a single mention of him. That's not to say he wasn't an investor in one or more of William's businesses; but Companies House doesn't keep that kind of evidence for very long after a small company has ceased to trade and been wound up. The 7th Earl was a much older man than William - born in 1861 - so he won't have been a contemporary at Rugby or Cambridge. He doesn't seem to have been interested in cars; that is, not more than any man who has to drive one. So how did the two men know each other? I've got two suggestions, both with an Irish connection. Although the 7th Earl was born in England and spent most of his life living there, the peerage that he inherited (unexpectedly in November 1914) was an Irish one, with estates at Castlewellan, county Down. So that's one way. The other is by a family relationship more distant than I've investigated; perhaps through the Mears family, several of whom were at the funeral.

More about the mysterious Earl:

Times Tues 28 August 1934 p3 an notice under the Trustee Act 1925. Such a notice indicates that the late Earl had been receiving income from a trust fund; probably an Annesley family one.

Wikipedia on the Earls Annesley, though there's no additional page for the 7th Earl so he was not a public man. The 7th Earl did have an heir; but the 8th Earl died in 1957 without any children.

How the 7th Earl inherited the title from a very distant cousin: Times Wed 9 December 1914 p10.

Who Was Who 1929-40 p29 does have an entry for the 7th Earl but with very little information in it and nothing which sheds any light on how William might know him.

At www.onegreatfamily.com/Walter-Annesley/583844147 has a bit more on how he was descended from earlier earls but nothing showing how he might be related to the Humphrys family.

Probate Registry 1934, which shows that the 7th Earl left virtually no personal effects.

JULY 1936

William attended the triennial dinner of the Rugby School old boys' society, at the Café Royal, Piccadilly.

Times Saturday 11 July 1936 p19d.

18 APRIL 1937

William's old friend Frank Rutter died. He and his second wife had been living in Golders Green, and on the south coast where Frank used to go to get some relief from bouts of bronchitis.

Times Tue 20 April 1937 p1 death notices; with details of the funeral to be held on 21 April. And see part 1 of this life-by-dates for the sources for Frank's life.

26 FEBRUARY 1938

William's mother Louisa died, at 41 Woodstock Road Golders Green.

Comment by Sally Davis: though I suppose it must have been divided between William and his two brothers, Louisa's personal estate was valued by the probate registry at over £40,000 - a very nice sum in those days. William - the only one of her children still living in England - was her only executor. By this time, William was describing himself as a "radio engineer".

Probate Registry 1938.

22 DECEMBER 1938

Jessie's elder sister Margaret Stephenson Holliday died, in the Hendon Cottage Hospital, Hendon Way; leaving Jessie the sole survivor of her siblings.

Comment by Sally Davis: since their mother's death Margaret Holliday had been living in Sutton; perhaps she became ill while on a Christmas visit to her sister, brother-in-law and nephew. Probate was granted in May 1939 and seems to have led to the tidying up of two estates left very untidy for many years: those of Clara Keeling (dead since 1919) and James Holliday (dead since 1929). Jessie took the lead in sorting out James' estate, the most complicated of them all as he had left no Will and had died abroad.

Sources: Probate Registry 1939 for Margaret Stephenson Holliday; James Harry Holliday; and Clara Annie Keeling. Clara Annie's husband, Rev Charles Paul Keeling, died in August 1941.

SUMMER 1944

William and Jessie's son Hugh married Doris Hackett. They don't seem to have had any children.

Source: freebmd.

DURING 1946

There was what seemed to be a reference to William's thermionic valve (vacuum tube) holder in the magazine The Electrician.

Comment by Sally Davis: I came across the reference while googling on the web. When I checked it out at the British Library, the volume numbers didn't match and the magazine had no index, so I wasn't able to find the reference. The Electrician was a weekly magazine, published by Benn Brothers Ltd of Bouverie House, 154 Fleet Street and aimed at professionals in the field.

21 MARCH 1950

William Humphrys died, suddenly, at home at 32 Sunny Gardens Road Hendon. He was cremated at Golders Green on Monday 27 March.

Comment by Sally Davis: William's personal estate was valued at about £63000. In the terms of the time, he was a wealthy man. It would be interesting to know how much of it was his inheritance from the Evans-Lombe family; and how much was his own doing, from the Radium fire extinguisher and his patented inventions.

Sources:

Times Thursday 23 March 1950 p1a death notices; emphasising the Evans-Lombe inheritance.

Times Friday 24 March 1950 p1a death notices: emphasising Hugh and Louisa Humphrys; and as the "dear husband" of Jessie.

Probate Registry 1950.

1958

The Radium Fire Extinguisher Ltd, which William had founded to sell a dry-powder fire extinguisher, was wound up.

Source: London Gazette 9 December 1958 p7515.

Jessie Humphrys continued to live at 32 Sunny Gardens until her death in December 1962. Hugh William Humphrys died in 1970.

Sources: Probate Registry 1963 for Jessie. Hugh Humphrys was her executor, described as an "engineer". And freebmd for Hugh.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

22 November 2015

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

George Jacob was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 6 October 1894; he chose the Latin motto 'Polemonium caeruleum'. John Hugh Armstrong Elliot (known as Hugh) was initiated on the same evening and the two men might have known each other beforehand. George Jacob never got as far as making it into the inner, 2nd Order; but he was still a member in 1903.

This is one of my short biographies. I've found out virtually nothing about George Jacob, not even a birth registration or baptism I'm sure of. There is more information out there, for someone to follow up if anyone's interested. Seen April 2016 via discovery.nationalarchives.gov.uk: at the Ipswich branch of Suffolk Record Office there are some records of George Jacob:

- HB 54/E34/1 - household and personal bills 1908-09, 1921-27

- HB 54 E34/2 - letters to him 1912-15, 1928
- IC/AA2/181/P283, Will of Emma Garrod Venn. At spw-surrey.com on the Bateman family home page there were Probate Registry details 1911 re death of Emma Garrod Venn, widow, of Ipswich. George Jacob, solicitor's clerk, was her executor: acting in his personal capacity rather than for his employer.

Sally Davis

April 2016

This is what I have found on GEORGE JACOB.

IN THE GD

George Jacob lived in Ipswich and probably worked there too. This would have limited the number of GD rituals he could attend in London. He kept a very low profile as a GD member, neither causing nor taking an active part in any of the controversies that rocked the Order between 1895 and 1903. He was not amongst the fourteen GD members who in July 1903 announced their intention of setting up a separate order, the Independent and Rectified Rite; the fourteen were all 2nd Order members so George Jacob may not even have known what was going on, at that time. However, he was one of eight members of the now-ex-GD who joined the IRR during the order's first year. Only a few records of the IRR have survived, so I can't tell for how long he was a member of it. The IRR was wound up in 1914.

Source: R A Gilbert's The Golden Dawn Companion (see the Sources section below for further details). Apart from the details published in Gilbert's book there are no records of George Jacob the two main GD collections I have access to.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Not that I've found. Unlike many other GD members he was never in the Theosophical Society; and if he was a freemason, he kept his involvement local to Ipswich.

Sources:

Theosophical Membership Registers 1890-1901.

The Freemasons' Library database which had nothing that was either by him or about him: follow the links to it at www.freemasonry.london.museum. Individual lodges kept their own records.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

No, though there might be some in the local papers.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

I've no idea! The census data isn't consistent about his year of birth or the place. The year varies between 1862 and 1866; and the place is usually Ipswich when I can find him at all, but in 1911 he changed it to 'Suffolk'. Looking on Familysearch and freebmd, I couldn't find a birth registration or baptism which completely tied in with the census data.

In addition, by as early as 1871 George Jacob was not living with his parents. He's not on the 1881 census at all as far as I can see. And on the census days of 1891, 1901, 1911 he's living where he was working, in Ipswich; either as a lodger or in a household on his own.

So I haven't a clue as to who his parents were; and whether he had any siblings.

Sources though mostly without any information: Familysearch; freebmd; Probate Registry.

The least unlikely birth details were at Familysearch: England-EASy GS film number 1526610. A child called George Jacob was baptised on 27 November 1864 at Wiggerhall St Peter Norfolk; son of Charles and Mary. I searched the census data 1871 and 1881 and couldn't find Charles and Mary; perhaps they lived abroad.

EDUCATION

Again, unknown although perhaps the 1871 census is an indication of where he was educated: on that day, George Jacob aged 9 was in the household of Henry Knevett and his wife Maryam, at St Matthew's Square, Westgate in Ipswich. Henry Knevett was a shoemaker. George Jacob was described by the census official as a "visitor" - he was not related to the Knevetts. Perhaps he was lodging with them while he was at a day school.

WORK/PROFESSION

George Jacob was a clerk in a solicitor's office; presumably one in Ipswich, seeing that's where he lived. By 1901 he was the managing clerk and presumably had clerks working for him. But he never became a solicitor. Some clerks were able, in the end, to become articled and take the solicitor's exams: the GD's Percy William Bullock did so while he was a GD member. But Percy Bullock worked for a large law firm in the City of London, where opportunities to do that were likely to be greater than in Ipswich.

I have no evidence but I would suppose that George Jacob worked for the same firm of solicitors all his working life; and that the firm's offices were in Ipswich.

Source: census entries 1891, 1901, 1911. While I was looking through the Law Lists at the Society of Genealogists, I kept an eye out for George Jacob; but he didn't appear in them between 1897 and 1911; and 1911 was, I think, rather late in the day to start qualifying.

ADDRESSES

WHEN INIT??

On the day of the 1891 census, George Jacob was a lodger in the household of George Scott and his wife Jeanie, at 5 Wilberforce Street, Westgate, Ipswich. George Scott worked as a manager in a wholesale grocery firm. By the day of the 1901 census he had moved from there and was living on his own at 7 Arcade Street St Mary Elms Ipswich. There were two households at that address and although George Jacob's was listed first, it's likely he was renting a room or two from the other householder, Samuel Robert Prom, who worked as a labourer for a railway company. George Jacob was still a lodger on the day of the 1911 census, but had moved to 18 Broom Hill Road Ipswich. He completed a form as the head a household with only himself in it, so I can't tell who his landlord or landlady was; perhaps it was the Mrs Venn whose Will George Jacob was executor of when she died later that year.

Sources: census 1891, 1901, 1911 and Suffolk Record Office items at Ipswich, see the top of this file.

FAMILY

I've found no evidence that he ever married.

DEATH

George Jacob died in Ipswich in 1939. It was probably as a result of his own efforts that his household accounts and letters were deposited at the Suffolk Record Office, showing that he had a sense of the importance to social history of records of everyday life.

Source: freebmd.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

1 April 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Lewis or Louis Stanley Jastrzebski (known as Stanley) was the brother of GD member Bogdan Edwards. Stanley was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn in September 1889 at its Horus Temple in Bradford, which Bogdan Edwards had helped to set up. Stanley chose the Latin motto 'Fiat lux'. He took a few years to do the study necessary to be eligible for the GD's inner, 2nd Order and was not initiated into it until January 1897.

Like his brother Bogdan, Stanley found his Polish surname rather a handicap as he tried to build up a career. Also like Bogdan, he decided to change it, in 1895. However, he came up with a different solution to the one opted for by Bogdan, shortening it to Jast (pronounced with a 'J', not a y or an I).

Stanley Jast became quite a prominent figure in his profession and consequently there's a biography. However, it's not easy to come by a copy so I've decided to do a 'life by dates' for Stanley for those who are interested. I've leaned very heavily on the biography, which was compiled by two former colleagues, with input on his early life from Stanley's niece Elsie, Bogdan's daughter. The biography is: Louis Stanley Jast: A Biographical Sketch turned out to be m longer than I'd expected. Published London: The Library Association 1966. By W G Fry and W A Munford. It has been very useful to me; but there's no mention of the Order of the Golden Dawn in it. I've also used Stanley's entry in ODNB which is based on Fry and Munford's work.

With my 'life by dates' lists, the event is in italics and the source of the information in my normal Times New Roman. Unless I say otherwise, the source is the biography of Stanley Jast by Fry and Munford.

1850s Stanley's father, Stefan Louis de Jastrzebski, arrived in England, after taking place in the 1848/49 attempt by Hungary to free itself from the Austrian empire.

March 1859

Stefan de Jastrzebski married Elizabeth (Lizzie) Morgan in Kidderminster.

1859/60

Stefan and Lizzie Jastrzebski moved to Halifax. Stefan opened a tobacconist's shop.

20 August 1868

Louis (or Lewis) Stanley Jastrzebski born in Halifax; the youngest of three brothers. The oldest of the three was Bogdan Jastrzebski, later Edwards.

Bogdan Edwards was initiated into the Golden Dawn in 1888.

Source: GD Members' Roll at the Freemasons' Library; transcribed by R A Gilbert for his The Golden Dawn Companion p134.

1870s The Jastrzebski brothers were at school in Halifax, firstly at the Park Chapel School, then at Field's Academy.

For more information on Field's academy see Malcolm Bull's Calderdale Companion at freepages.history.rootsweb.ancestry.com

Probably 1885 or 1886

Stanley failed the Civil Service entrance exam.

1887 Stanley started work at the Halifax public library as assistant librarian.

1887-89

Stanley was introduced to theosophy and astrology by his boss, James Whiteley.

For further information on Whiteley: his obituary in Library World volume 14 1912 p17.

1888 Stanley was promoted to be librarian-in-charge at Halifax Library.

1889 Stanley joined the Theosophical Society; which at that time operated in London only.

Source: TS Membership Register volume for January 1889 to September 1891 p114.

September 1889

Stanley was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. His brother Bogdan Edwards was already a member.

August 1890

Stanley's article Dogmatism and the Theosophic Brotherhood, was published in the magazine

Agnostic Journal. Three more articles by him were published in the magazine in January 1891.

Source: Lucifer: A Theosophical Journal volume VII September 1890-February 1891 p80 and p515.

December 1890

Stanley's humorous dialogue A Dream and its Interpretation was published in Lucifer.

Source: Lucifer: A Theosophical Journal volume VII September 1890-February 1891 pp309-14.

July 1892

Stanley was appointed Peterborough Council's first-ever librarian, with the brief to set up a library service in the town.

Other sources: ODNB.

1892-98

Stanley was working at Peterborough Library. In 1892 he joined the Library Association - the professional association for librarians. At its meetings and in journals, he began to promote the Dewey system of library book classification, against several other rival systems.

1893 Stanley's first published work: Catalogue of the Landing and Reference Departments of Peterborough Public Library.

1894 Stanley met James Duff Brown at a Library Association meeting in Belfast.

Duff Brown was the first big personality of the expanding world of professional librarianship. After beginning his career in his native Scotland, he was chief librarian of Finsbury and then Islington boroughs. He founded several library magazines in his time including The Library and Library World. Before librarianship was taught at college, he ran correspondence courses for professionals; and his book Manual of Library Economy (published 1907) was the standard work on the subject for many years. Duff Brown and Stanley became good friends.

Other sources for Duff Brown: his entry in ODNB.

1895 On Duff Brown's advice, Stanley Jastrzebski shortened his surname to Jast (pronounced Jast not Yast or Iast).

SO FROM THIS TIME ON HE'S KNOWN AS STANLEY JAST.

Stanley's mother Lizzie also changed her surname to Jast.

Sources: 1901 census; death registration.

1895 Publication:

Classification in Public Libraries with Special Reference to the Dewey Decimal System.

This had originally been an article in The Library.

1896 Publication:

The Up-to-date Guide to Peterborough Cathedral, city and neighbourhood including the Crowland and Thorney Abbeys. 6d. Published by Taylor and Downs of 28 Westgate Peterborough. Undated, but the introduction, by "L.S.J." is dated "Sep. 16, 1896".

1897 Stanley read a paper on the Dewey classification system at the International Library Conference, challenging the arguments being put forward against its use.

January 1897

Stanley was initiated into the Golden Dawn's inner, 2nd Order. It wasn't until you were a member of this order that you were allowed to try some practical magic.

Source: The Golden Dawn Companion for details see the Sources section.

July 1898

Stanley was appointed chief librarian of Croydon public libraries.

The records of the Golden Dawn don't seem to know about Stanley's move to Croydon so I suppose he ceased to be an active member around 1898.

Source: The Golden Dawn Companion for details see the Sources section.

October 1898

Stanley joined the TS's Croydon Lodge. Talks that he gave at Lodge meetings were published in 1941 as What it All Means.

Around 1898

Stanley and James Duff Brown were founder-members of The Pseudonyms, a lunch club for librarians working in the London area. The idea was that all members were known by a pseudonym. Stanley's was Orlando Furioso.

Comment from Sally: that members should be known by a pseudonym rather than their usual name echoes the GD's use of mottos rather than names. Orlando Furioso was the hero of Ludovico Ariosto's epic poem of the same name, which Stanley must have read. 'Furioso' means 'mad' not 'angry' - Orlando is driven mad by his love for Angelica.

1898-1915

Working for Croydon library service.

During Stanley's time in Croydon he was in charge of an expansion of the service including moving the libraries to new buildings; installing telephones; and setting up a monthly magazine. Croydon libraries became a model of what a publically-funded library service should be.

Other source: ODNB.

1902 Stanley became honorary curator of the Photographic Survey and Record of Surrey; a joint effort by a voluntary committee and Croydon Libraries Committee.

1902 Publication, though Stanley seems to have done nothing but edited some prepared speeches:

Inauguration of Edward Edwards' Monument.

Edward Edwards' pamphlet on public libraries had paved the way for the Free Public Libraries Act of 1850. The inauguration of his monument took place on 7 February 1902.

June 1904

Stanley was elected hon sec of the Library Association; he remained in post until 1915.

September-October 1904

As the Library Association's hon sec, he made a study-trip to the USA, visiting libraries and attending the International Congress of Arts and Science.

Sources: Fry and Munford. Stanley's own Who's Who entry, undated but probably 1940-41; printed as part of the title pages of his What it All Means (published 1941).

Further information on the the Congress: via archive.org to the transactions of the International Congress of Arts and Science published St Louis 1904 in 13 volumes. The Congress was held in St Louis from 17 to 22 October 1904 as part of the world fair.

1907 Publication:

A Classification of Library Economy and Office Papers

1910, probably in April

Stanley met Ethel Winifred Austin (known as Winifred) at a Library Association meeting.

Winifred Austin was Librarian and Secretary of the National Library for the Blind. For more on her work at the Library, see her entry in ODNB and my file TITLE WHAT IS IT?? Here I'll just say that Stanley's relationship with Winifred flourished despite the opposition of her family.

1913 Stanley was the Library Association's representative at a conference of librarians in the USA.

Sources: ODNB and Stanley's own Who's Who entry, undated but probably 1940-41; printed as part of the title pages of his What it All Means (published 1941).

1914 James Duff Brown died, aged only 51. Stanley edited the Library Association's memorial volume: Memoir and Appreciations of James Duff Brown 1862-1914.

August 1914

Like many others, Stanley was on holiday in Europe when the first World War broke out. He was stranded in Geneva for several weeks.

October 1915

Stanley accepted the job of deputy chief librarian of Manchester library service; on the understanding that he would succeed its chief librarian on his retirement.

1915-31

Working in Manchester.

1916 Stanley and Winifred Austin agreed to marry when the War was over.

1916 Stanley was one of the founders of the Manchester-based experimental amateur dramatic society, The Unnamed Society.

The Unnamed Society was the brainchild of designer Francis Sladen-Smith. Other members during the 1920s were: illustrator/designer William Grimmond; artist/designer Karl Hagedorn; designers Georgia Pearce and Lilian Reburn; and drama historian Geoffrey Whitworth. The Society's members wrote most of the early plays that the Society put on but they also produced works by H R Barbor and Harold Brighouse (author of Hobson's Choice).

Source for further information on The Unnamed Society: the book The Unnamed Society

(See the Sources section for details).

1916 Though he was no longer a member of Surrey photographic survey's committee, Stanley was joint author with H D Gower and W W Topley of The Camera as Historian, a 'how-to' book for groups wanting to carry out photographic surveys of their district. It was based on their experiences doing the survey of Surrey. Published London: Sampson Low, Marston and Co Ltd 1916.

1917 Publication:

The Origin of British Trade: the Commercial Library.

May 1918

Winifred Austin died of complications following a burst appendix.

Summer 1918

Stanley's mother Lizzie Jast died, aged 80. She had lived with him in Croydon and Manchester.

These two events seem to have released a spring of creativity in Stanley; to help deal with the grief, he started to write plays and possibly poetry as well.

October 1918

Stanley's play The Lover and the Dead Woman was performed by the Manchester-based amateur drama group The Unnamed Society.

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

December 1918

The Unnamed Society's Christmas pantomime was a version of Aladdin, prepared by Stanley.

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

1919 Stanley supervised the opening of Manchester's first library of commerce.

Source: ODNB.

March 1919

The Unnamed Society did a production of Stanley's play The Geisha's Wedding

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

December 1919

The Unnamed Society did a production of Stanley's play The Loves of the Elements

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

1920

Stanley became a member of The Clarion Table, a lunch club for professional people in Manchester. Millicent Murby was the club's only female member.

Source for the date: ODNB.

February 1920

The Unnamed Society performed three plays by Stanley on the same bill: The Call of the Ninth Wave; The Eugenic Cupid; and Estelle Discovers Herself

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

April 1920

Stanley's boss Charles Sutton retired and Stanley took over as chief librarian of Manchester library service.

January 1921

The Unnamed Society did a production of Stanley's Venus and the Shepherdess

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

October 1921

The Unnamed Society performed Stanley's Noh-theatre inspired play Harbour

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

April 1922

The Unnamed Society did a short season at the Margaret Morris Theatre in Chelsea. Stanley's The Lover and the Dead Woman, and Harbour, were amongst the plays they performed there

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

October 1922

The Unnamed Society performed Stanley's play The Room. It was on the same bill as artist Gwen John's A Tale That Is Told.

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

1923 First publication of fictional works by Stanley: The Lover and the Dead Woman, and Five Other Plays in Verse. London: George Routledge and Sons Ltd. NY: EP Dutton and Co.

April 1923

The Unnamed Society did a production of Stanley's play about the death of Lorenzo de Medici: A Florentine Irony. It was on the same bill as Harold Brighouse's The Happy Hangman

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

November 1923

The Unnamed Society performed Stanley's play The Repentance of Melpomene.

Sources: book The Unnamed Society and the published edition of The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays 1923

1924 Stanley was president of The Unnamed Society when it was moving to new, bigger premises and trying to raise its profile nationwide

Early 1925

Stanley Jast and Millicent Murby were married, in Kensington.

1926-31

Stanley was librarian in charge of Manchester Corporation's project to build the famous circular central library.

1927 Publication: The Child as Reader

1927 Publication: The Planning of a Great Library

November 1927

Stanley's play A Florentine Irony was performed by the Festival Theatre Cambridge.

1928 Publication: The Provision of Books for Children in Elementary Schools

1929 Stanley was a member of a delegation sent by Manchester Corporation to the USA.

Source: Stanley's own Who's Who entry, undated but probably 1940-41; printed as part of the title pages of his What it All Means (published 1941).

January 1929

Stanley's five-act play Shah Jahan, based on the life of the emperor and builder of the Taj Mahal, was performed by The Unnamed Society; the last play by him they put on.

Millicent Jast acted as producer.

Source: Shah Jahan: A Play in Five Acts. London: Grafton and Co 1934. The book is dedicated to Millicent Jast.

1930 The foundation stone of Manchester Corporation's new library was laid. Stanley was made president of the Library Association.

1931 Stanley made two radio broadcasts, later published as Libraries and Living.

1932 Stanley retired. He and Millicent went to live at Beckington, just outside Bath.

Date unknown but probably after Stanley retired: he (and presumably Millicent) made a trip to the West Indies and Mexico. At some time during his life he also visited Morocco.

1932 Publication: Libraries and Living.

1934 Shah Jahan was published; Stanley's last play.

1935 Stanley wrote the introduction to Henry A Sharp's Cataloguing: A Textbook for Use in Libraries

1939 Stanley's last book on library organisation was published: Libraries and the Community. There was a second edition of this, published 1945.

1939 Stanley attended the annual meeting of the Library Association for the last time. He had been the Association's dominant personality since James Duff Brown's death.

1939 Stanley and Millicent lived for a short time in Penzance, while Stanley was working preparing his theosophical talks for publication.

1940 Stanley and Millicent moved to Twickenham.

1941 Stanley's talks to the TS groups in Croydon and Manchester were published as What It All Means.

Source: What it all Means. London: T Werner Laurie Ltd of Cobham House, 24-26 Blackfriars Lane.

25 December 1944

Stanley Jast died.

Probably June 1946

Stanley's Poems and Epigrams was published, privately.

Source: Poems and Epigrams, printed for private circulation by Wadsworth and Co, The Rydal Press Keighley. There's no printed publication date but 'June 1946' is written in pencil inside the front cover; it's not clear who by.

1966

Fry and Munford's biography of Stanley Jast published as part of a series on noted librarians.

I found two pictures of Stanley Jast, both from late in his life, both published in books and - unfortunately - both difficult for the man or woman in the street to gain access to though there are copies of both of them in the British Library. The first picture is a drawing of Stanley in relaxed mode, with a cigarette hanging out of his mouth. It's by artist, illustrator and designer, and fellow member of The Unnamed Society, William Grimmond. Done around 1924 it was published on p8 of The Unnamed Book (see the Sources section). The second is a photograph taken by F W Schmidt of Manchester and printed on p11 of the 1946 book of Stanley's poems. The photo is undated but likely to be from before 1932 and may have been taken in connection with Stanley's retirement. It's more formal than the drawing, of course - he's wearing collar and tie, and there's no cigarette. Both show a man with thinning hair on top, a bushy moustache and a slight slouch in his posture. In the photo, though, there's less hair, and the moustache has gone grey.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. The records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived beyond 1896 either, but there's a history of the TS in Bradford on the web (though originally written in 1941) at www.ts-bradford.org.uk/theosoc/btshisto.htm in which a lot of the same people who joined the GD are mentioned. After surviving some difficult times in the 1890s, Bradford TS still seems to be going strong (as at December 2012). In April 2012 the History page was updated with the names of all the members at least up to 1941.

The members of the GD at its Horus Temple were rather a bolshy lot, and needed a lot of careful management!

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR LEWIS/LOUIS STANLEY JAST

Fry and Munford:

Louis Stanley Jast: A Biographical Sketch turned out to be m longer than I'd expected. Published London: The Library Association 1966. By W G Fry and W A Munford. Fry is former deputy City Librarian Manchester Public Libraries; Munford is Director-General of the National Library of the Blind.

ODNB volume 29 which has Fry and Munford as a source but also has some different information: p816

ON JOHN WHITELEY

The Library World volume 14 1912 p17 reported the death of John Whiteley, formerly chief librarian of Halifax borough council.

JAMES DUFF BROWN has a biography in the same series as Jast's own: James Duff Brown 1862-1914: Portrait of a Library Pioneer by William Arthur Munford published Library Association 1968. There's a wikipedia page using Munford as a source.

World Encyclopaedia of Library and Information Services by Robert Wedgeworth 1993: pp149-150.

CLARION TABLE

Fry and Munford used the Minutes of the Manchester Clarion Club 1913-21. Plus a typescript by S J Berry: The Clarion Table: the Record of a Manchester Luncheon Club, written at the request of some members. Both these items are in the manuscript collection of Manchester Corporation. I haven't seen either of them myself.

UNNAMED SOCIETY later the Manchester Library Theatre see its website www.librarytheatre.com: founded 1952; performs in that circular library built during Jast's tenure; still in operation.

My main source: The Unnamed Book printed for the Unnamed Society by Sherratt and Hughes, 34 Cross Street, Manchester. 1924.

There's information on The Unnamed Society in British Theatre and the Red Peril: the Portrayal of Communism 1917-45 by Steve Nicholson. Exeter: University of Exeter Press 1999. P22-24 in the chapter The Revolution Will Not be Dramatised. The incident being discussed took place in 1931. Stanley isn't mentioned by Nicholson but was probably still a member of The Unnamed Society at the time.

8 October 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

ï»¿

Stanley Jast: Ritual, Magic, Drama and Love

RITUAL AND MAGIC

Very few of the members of the Order of the Golden Dawn ever wrote down exactly what had caused them to accept the offer of initiation into a magical order. Stanley Jast is one of the few: his What it all Means is not necessarily what every GD member believed - they were a pretty independent-minded bunch - but what one member did.

What it all Means was published in 1941. Its origins were in talks Stanley had given to Theosophical Society lodges in the 1900s and 1910s, but he still believed the same things after 30 more years' contemplation of Life's big questions. You can describe Stanley's beliefs as a mixture of theosophy and magic. Spiritualism, was another option for those seeking the answers that Christianity no longer seemed to give, but Stanley had no time for it or those who believed in it. He wrote:

“Spiritualism might be good enough
If spirits didn't talk such silly stuff.”

“A more convincing note they couldn't strike
They must be real dead people, they're so like.”

Between theosophy and the western hermetic tradition Stanley worked out some answers that he was satisfied with. He was a member of the GD and the Theosophical Society at the same time in the 1890s and may have considered the two of them complementary: GD for the Western occult tradition (including the Kabbalah - a part of the GD magical curriculum but Stanley was probably already familiar with it before he was initiated), TS for the Eastern; GD for practical magic, TS for theory and debate. His involvement with the TS lasted longer, though.

What it all Means begins with a chapter called 'many lives'. As far as I know, none of the senior members of the GD ever made any statement on reincarnation; so members were free to believe in it if they chose. As a member of the Theosophical Society, though, Stanley would have been aware that it was a contentious subject amongst TS members. Stanley himself was quite sure that “Reincarnation, with its complementary doctrine of Karma [is] the only working explanation of the mysteries of our life on earth”.

A belief in magic was something East and West had in common. In his chapter on magic, Stanley explained the three basics which underpinned it, which both East and West acknowledged: the existence of worlds and planes on different levels of matter and energy; man as microcosm of the macrocosm; and correspondences. East and West might describe and use the three basics differently but spells, for example, were a western equivalent to the mantras of Hinduism and Buddhism.

Stanley believed in magic, which he saw as a “revolution against a too prosaic world”. He could see that magic was still widespread in that prosaic modern world, though it was (and is) referred to by other names. The recently-founded profession of chemistry annoyed him with its refusal to admit its alchemical roots. He acknowledged that there was a qualitative difference between the old practice of alchemy and the work of the modern chemist, but in his opinion, that was nothing for modern chemists to feel pleased about: they concerned themselves solely with physical processes; while the “true alchemists” who had been their forebears had seen the physical processes as an expression of metaphysical truths.

For Stanley, the best illustrations that magic was still alive and well in the prosaic world, were people’s belief in prediction and charms. Why else the visits to the astrologer, and the mascot on the car’s dashboard? Modern rationalism had not rid people of the hope that astrology would tell them their future. And while rejecting the “hocus-pocus” of charms sold by dubious “professors”, Stanley himself believed that “suitable objects...utilised as reservoirs of power” could be very powerful talismans, particularly those which had been a “personal possession of someone we love or have loved”, and which held something of the loved one’s personality and spirit. How to consecrate an object as a talisman was magic taught in the GD. Perhaps it was a magical practice that Stanley continued to carry out even after he had ceased to be an active member of the GD.

Another thing all GD initiates learned was how to conduct a magical ritual to keep themselves safe and get best results. Stanley gave a brief description of how you do it. One of the purposes of magical rituals was to create enough psychic energy for the participants to make contact with other planes of existence. Conversely, powers from these planes of existence needed a human agent through which to work, to reach the material world.

Stanley saw worship as a human attempt to reach these other planes of existence, which he thought of as “the divine”; but he was sure that without the use of ritual there was no chance of success. He preferred the Eastern rituals for getting there: an individual working alone (meditating, for example), rather a congregation attempting to get there using a mediator like a priest. To Stanley, the chances of a Protestant congregation getting there and experiencing the divine were very small, now that Protestant religious practice had been “shorn of all its magical elements”.

Stanley’s carefully-considered beliefs in reincarnation and karma, magic and meditation, and the existence of something or things out there beyond the material world, carried him through some tough times: tragic bereavement; and years of suffering with angina - death at his elbow, so to speak. His wife Millicent thought that he was better prepared for death than most people. She wrote to W A Munford that Stanley had been, “ready to pursue his enquiries into ultimate things on that higher plane to which he believed that physical death gives passage”.

RITUAL, MAGIC AND DRAMA

Although What it all Means doesn’t have a section on drama and theatre, it’s clear from his other writings that Stanley thought that ritual and theatre could complement each other. Drama in ritual heightened the psychic tension; ritual in drama gave it depth. He doesn’t seem to have written any dramatic works, however, until he was coping with two deaths that occurred in 1918: that of Winifred Austin (see below) whom he would have married, had she lived; and his mother Lizzie who had lived with him and kept house for him since the 1890s.

Stanley was already a member of the experimental amateur dramatic group The Unnamed Society, which was looking for new theatre-works to perform. Stanley chose to channel some of his grief through plays: six in the three years from autumn 1918 to autumn 1921.

The Unnamed Society's financial means were very limited, and until 1923 their performance space was small and had not been built as a theatre. Plays written for the Society couldn't ask for much in the way of scenery and props. Stanley's plays were all short - three could be put on in the same evening. Trying to sum them up - having read them but never seen them performed - I'd say they were like tableaux, or 17th-century masques - there was not much plot, not a great deal of action, and virtually no characterisation. Several had Choruses, which Stanley used in the Greek manner to comment on action that had taken place elsewhere. Stanley himself said of all of them that they needed "decorative grouping" - as if the characters were meant to stand like statues for at least part of the time - and he described one in particular (Venus and the Shepherdess) as "a play of poses". Dance figured in nearly all of them; Stanley was a fan of dance and wanted it incorporated into theatre more than it was - he called it "that lovely but still too isolated art". His plays were not examinations of human personality, but "dramatizations of purely philosophic theses". He even tried, in Harbour, to write a play about the Buddhist process of achieving enlightenment; and wrote it in the manner of a Noh play, a very stylised form of Japanese drama with music. He could have read about Noh theatre in English by the early 1920s though I don't know whether he could have seen any. The actors in a Noh play all wear masks; Stanley's play The Love of the Elements also required the actors to be masked. And there's one other indication of Stanley's interest in Japanese culture: one of the plays is The Geisha's Wedding.

Stanley actually described The Loves of the Elements as a "lyrical Ballet-Masque" rather than a play. In it he was trying to put centre-stage elements of theatre which are usually incidental if they're there at all - poetry, music, dance, design and lighting. Some music was composed specially for it by Georgia Pearce. The 'characters' were taken from magic: the elements earth, water, fire and air (in that order), and their elemental spirits.

Well, The Unnamed Society was asking for experimental plays.

Perhaps the most orthodox of the plays is the one that was the most personal: The Lover and the Dead Woman. It begins with the Lover mourning at his love's grave, unknowingly watched by the dead woman's Spirit. In what must be a reflection of Stanley's own beliefs about death, the Spirit says that she prefers to be remembered in people's memories, rather than commemorated in stone; and in any case her Spirit was never in the grave, only her body which is now dust. There's a painful meeting between the Spirit and her Lover, and there's no happy ending - when the Spirit says she must go now, the Lover accuses her of being "Death's paramour...The grave thy adulterous bed". They part in bitterness, he to regret having accused her like that, and she to "tread the dim and shadowy realms of wandering and unhappy ghosts.

Alone,

Waiting until he comes."

Between 1920 and 1923 the Unnamed Society performed several other plays by Stanley. He decided against publishing them and as far as I know, none of the texts or stage directions exist any longer. They were: The Eugenic Cupid (which I'd love to read); Estelle Discovers Herself; The Room; A Florentine Irony; and The Repentance of Melpomene.

Stanley's magnum opus as a writer of plays was Shah Jahan which - though put on by The Unnamed Society - was a more traditional style of play, with five acts, a couple of plot-lines and recognisable characters. It's about the reign of Shah Jahan, who built the Taj Mahal in memory of his dead wife Mumtaz, but Stanley hadn't wanted to write a history play and he took some liberties with historical events. Like in many of his earlier plays, there's a philosophical element to Shah Jahan: there's a long scene where a Jesuit priest and a Muslim mullah describe their beliefs at Shah Jahan's command (he ends up criticising both of them). And the play ends with a scene that harks back to The Lover and the Dead Woman: Shah Jahan, now deposed by his son as unfit to rule (having bankrupted the state with his building projects), is inside the Taj in the dark, talking to Mumtaz's ghost. She calls his name, and he realises that as long as - though dead - she still loves him, they will be reunited when he dies. He asks for death to come:

“Let the pendulum
Of my spent spirit stop
Now.”

Shah Jahan was the last play Stanley wrote. The published edition is dedicated to his wife Millicent, who had produced the Unnamed Society's performances of it: Mumtaz to Stanley's Shah Jahan perhaps.

LOVE: THE WOMEN IN STANLEY'S LIFE.

Stanley came very late to love and was acutely aware of it: in his epigram Belated Love he says:

If that my love too fierce appears,
Remember 'tis so late
The love of all my loveless years
On thee is concentrate.

I think that he had to wait, for the type of woman he could be attracted to, to come along. She was rather rare at the time. I thought the two women Stanley loved deserved their own section in his biography though neither of them were ever in the Golden Dawn.

ETHEL WINIFRED AUSTIN

Several of the sources I found for Winifred Austin said she had been born in 1875, but the correct year is 1873. She was born in Blackheath, one of the nine children of George Austin and his wife Mary Anne. George Austin had been a partner in Austin Brothers, of Gracechurch Street and then Gresham House Old Broad Street in the City of London: ship brokers, insurance agents and coal shippers; but he retired from the business in 1878 leaving his brother Charles William to carry it on. Most of Winifred's childhood was spent in Hove. On the day of the 1881 census, the Austins were living there in some style, employing a cook, a housemaid, a parlourmaid and a nurse. However, the Austins moved back to south London, to Clapham, where George Austin died in 1887 aged 62. Three years later Winifred's mother died, at an even younger age - she was only 56.

One of the articles I read about Winifred said that the early deaths of her parents had meant that - in addition to all the difficulties and unhappiness of being orphaned while still a teenager - her schooling didn't go according to their plans, and finished earlier than it might have done otherwise. Instead of going to an expensive finishing school, as was apparently her parent's intention, Winifred spent a year as a governess in Switzerland - possibly around 1891 when she was not in England on the day of the 1891 census.

In 1901, aged 27, Winifred was still leading the life an unmarried woman of the middle-classes was expected to lead. She was living at 10 Rusholme Road Wandsworth, with her elder sister Beatrice, and her brothers John, Charles and Francis, none of whom were married; and she wasn't contributing to the household expenses by earning any money. All the brothers were now working and could afford to pay for a cook and a housemaid. But even if the money coming into the household had been much less, Winifred would not have been expected to do anything but voluntary work. When she went out and got herself a job with a wage, her family deeply disapproved of it although it meant she could contribute to the family finances. It didn't make any difference to them that the job Winifred took was one that made an important contribution to bettering the lives of the disabled.

In 1906, Winifred was offered and accepted the job of librarian and secretary to the National Lending Library for the Blind (NLLB), which at that time was at 125 Queen's Road Bayswater. The household she had been living in probably for nearly two decades was beginning to break up - eldest brother John got married that year - but Winifred was still making a very big leap for a woman of her class. And why was she offered the job at all when she had - apparently - no experience of the work? It's clear none of the articles on Winifred's life can quite understand how that happened, and Winifred's entry in ODNB states specifically that she had no experience of the tasks that the job required. If it hadn't been for this statement by ODNB, I'd have said that she had been one of the NLLB's volunteers - it was a small charity, heavily dependent on donations and voluntary work; and voluntary work was something middle-class families would allow their unmarried daughters to do. The ODNB entry seems adamant, though, so why Winifred got the job will have to remain a mystery.

However little understanding Winifred initially had, of the NLLB and of the rapidly expanding field of librarianship, she threw herself into her new job in a way that suggests pent-up energy and organisational ability at last being given a purpose. In the next few years she revolutionised not only NLLB but library services for the blind all over England. She raised money. She bought and got donations of books, and shelves to put them on. She learned braille to better supervise the volunteers who transcribed books into braille for the library's users. She set up new branches of NLLB outside London. She brought all the libraries for the blind that were in existence into one umbrella group, helping to set up the Federation of Libraries for the Blind in 1913. Around 1909 she joined the Library Association - the professional organisation for librarians - to keep up to date with developments in the field, and to make her library and the problems of blind people better known.

Winifred's salary did not make her financially independent: at least in the early years she was employed at the NLLB, she earned £75 per year. In 1911 she was still living with her brother Francis at 70 Redcliffe Square, off the Old Brompton Road. On census day, Francis completed the census form - he was head of the household; but Winifred made sure he wrote down the full details of her job title and who her employers were. Probably to her brother's great irritation, she took a pride in the fact that she was a working, salaried woman.

Winifred and Stanley Jast met, through the Library Association, probably in 1910. By this time Stanley was the senior librarian of Croydon Library Service and an important figure in the world of professional librarianship. Both were very busy so the relationship between them progressed slowly, at Library Association meetings and during long country walks. In 1916, marriage began to be discussed between them when Stanley was offered the job of deputy-director of Manchester Corporation's library service, to succeed as director when his boss retired around 1920. But there were problems.

When they met, he had been 42, she had been 37 - it wasn't exactly young and hormone-driven love - but all the articles on Winifred agree that the Austins were strongly against her marrying Stanley Jast, for two reasons. The first was based on typically Victorian snobbery about the infinite gradations of the class system. Stanley was the son of a man who kept a tobacconist's shop in a northern industrial town. His relationship with the daughter of a City businessman - even one who had earned some of his money by brokering shipments of coal - was exactly the sort of consequence middle-class families were trying to prevent by not letting their daughters and sisters go out into the world of work. The second was more personal. Stanley's biographers Fry and Munford describe him as a 'big man'. They don't just mean his height: Stanley had a personality to match. He was dynamic; he was one to take a lead; he had strong opinions and didn't hesitate to maintain them at length; he dominated his company; he was impatient; he didn't suffer fools gladly. In Fry and Munford's word, he was "overwhelming", and Winifred's family just didn't like him.

That might have been enough to put many women off, but I think there were other reasons why Winifred hesitated to commit herself to marrying Stanley. The first was the war, which swelled the number of blind people in Britain with soldiers injured in the fighting. This crisis added to Winifred's sense of the importance of her work; it gave her a sense of urgency; and it added to the amount of work she was doing. In addition to her normal duties she did volunteering work teaching braille to newly-blinded soldiers. She became a member of the Local Government Board's advisory committee on the blind. When other libraries started to have staffing problems she took in books from them until the NLLB building was absolutely full. So in 1916 she got a grant to move the NLLB to bigger premises at 18 Tufton Street Westminster, and negotiated with the local council to have it exempted from paying rates. While the war continued, there was no question of her stopping working.

Winifred was going to have to stop work when she married, and move to Manchester. Stanley's salary in Manchester was perfectly able to support the two of them, but that wasn't the difficulty. I get the impression that Winifred really didn't want to give up her work and all that she was achieving for blind people. It gave her life purpose and fulfilment.

In 1916 Winifred did agree to marry Stanley, but she said she would not do so until the war was over. And therein lies the tragedy. In May 1918, just before she and Stanley were going to go away for a few days' holiday, Winifred was taken to hospital with pains in her abdomen. She died a few days later, probably from the results of a burst appendix.

To say that Stanley was devastated is putting it mildly, I think. But he wrote out his grief in plays and poetry, and that aided his mourning so that he was able to put his grief behind him in a few years. In 1920, he met a woman who was similar to Winifred in many ways, though very different in others; and this time, he did get married.

MILLICENT BEATRICE MURBY of whom Stanley said, in a birthday ode

In a world that's at odds

She's a gift from the Gods.

Winifred Austin and Millicent Murby were exactly the same age: born in the autumn of 1873. They were both born in south London. Both were middle children in large families. And both their fathers had been businessmen. But - as regards how and where they grew up - the resemblance between them ends there.

Millicent Murby's father Thomas was the owner of Thomas Murby and Co the publishing firm. In the mid-19th century it made its reputation publishing school and examination texts. It was still in existence in the 1960s, concentrating by then on geology and travel - it published Heyerdahl's book The Kon-Tiki Expedition. The family's financial means were rather more modest than the Austins' - or perhaps Thomas and his wife Emma were just more careful. On the day of the 1881 census the Murbys were living at 26 Canterbury Road in Lambeth and although they had eight children under 15 at home that day, they only employed a general servant (to do the heavy cleaning) and a nursemaid.

I've had to make more guesses about how Millicent grew up: she's not in ODNB, I haven't been able to find out where she went to school, and neither she nor her parents are on the census in 1891 or 1901: I suppose they were away, as a family, somewhere in Europe, on both days. This habit that the GD members and their associates have of going away over Easter has been a plague on my research! In this case it has meant that I can't say what the Murbys' financial circumstances were during the 1880s and 1890s, nor when Millicent started work.

For start work she did, and not in the manner of Winifred Austin. The sources on Millicent that I have found don't mention that there was any trouble in the family about Millicent and her sisters doing paid work. Millicent took the exams, passed them, and went into the Civil Service and although I don't know the date she did so, I think it's likely that it was when she was in her 20s. In 1911 she was working in the War Office. Thomas Murby had died in 1909 and the family had broken up. On the day of the 1911 census Millicent was living at 135 Ramsden Road Balham with her sister Grace Marian, who was also working, as a clerk to an accountant. They were earning enough to be able to employ one domestic servant who lived-in.

It is a pity I haven't been able to find out more about Millicent's working life. I do know that she ended her career in the Civil Service as a health inspector, possibly taking a post made available by men volunteering for the War. And that her job had moved her to Manchester possibly by 1916, definitely by 1920.

It's been much easier to find out what Millicent did in her leisure time. Long before they met, she and Stanley shared an interest in theatre; though as far as I know, Stanley never acted in plays, he only wrote them; and Millicent never wrote any plays, only acted in them and produced them.

It was through her interest in amateur dramatics that Millicent came to know the actress and performer Florence Farr, one of the most senior members of the Golden Dawn in the 1890s; though I'm quite sure Millicent was unaware that Florence was a member, and in any case Florence had left the Golden Dawn by the time the two women met. Florence and Millicent were involved in two productions in early 1905. Florence Farr was in charge of both of them, choosing the plays and the actors and directing the performances. The first of the two plays which brought her and Millicent together was one of the earliest productions of George Bernard Shaw's The Philanderer, written in 1893 and banned until 1902. It was staged for one performance only, on 20 February at the Court Theatre, and Millicent played the role of Sylvia Craven.

Then in May 1905, Florence Farr chose Millicent to become the first actress to play the title role in an English-language production of Oscar Wilde's Salomé. There were two performances of it, on 10 and 13 May, at the Bijou Theatre in Archer Street, Bayswater. Robert Farquharson played Herod and Louise Salom Herodias. At the time, professional productions of Salomé were banned in the UK; Florence's production was allowed because it was an amateur one. Salomé was a controversial role - still is - and I suppose that Florence Farr chose Millicent to play it partly because Millicent was willing to do so when other actresses might not have been; though she must also have had more experience than just playing in The Philanderer. Perhaps Millicent had bitten off rather more than she could chew though; or perhaps she was just busy with other things a year later when the production was revived for a few more performances. Someone else - a Miss Darragh - played Salomé. That wasn't the only cast change: Florence Farr played Herodias herself. Max Beerbohm reviewed both sets of performances for the Saturday Review; he didn't think Florence's Herodias was villainous enough, and he preferred Miss Darragh's Salomé to Millicent's.

George Bernard Shaw went to one of the last rehearsals of The Philanderer so Millicent could have met him then. But she was probably acquainted with him already because they were both members of the Fabian Society. I couldn't find any evidence for Winifred Austin as an active political campaigner, but Millicent Murby was an active feminist. She was treasurer of the Society's women's group for many years and a member of its Executive Committee. A campaigner on issues around women's work and working conditions, in 1906 she gave evidence to the Select Committee on Wages and Conditions of Employment in the Civil Service. She also lectured on specific problems and wrote on the subject for the journal The New Age in 1908. Her pamphlet The Commonsense of the Woman Question was published in 1908. And in 1912 she had an article in the feminist review The Freewoman. She had to be careful, though: as a civil servant she couldn't get too publicly involved in political campaigning. For example, I couldn't find any evidence that she let her commitment to votes for women take her as far as joining the Women's Social and Political Union (WSPU), in the years before the first World War the most high-profile and violent campaigning group on the subject.

I presume it was through friends she made at the Fabian Society that Millicent was recommended to the French philosopher and academic Henri Bergson to oversee an English translation of his book Creative Evolution, to be published in the USA. She was working on this project in 1912 (in addition to her day job, of course).

Although they shared an interest in theatre and were both acquainted with Florence Farr, Stanley Jast and Millicent Murby didn't meet until 1920, when Stanley joined The Clarion Table (or Club), a lunch club for professional people based in Manchester. Millicent was its only female member (how did she stand it?!)

By 1922 they were close enough friends for Stanley to ask Millicent to be secretary to a society he was helping to found; and for her to agree to his request. The society was the Manchester and District Regional Survey Society. It was founded to do for Manchester what Stanley and fellow volunteers had done for Croydon in the 1900s - put together a pictorial record of local buildings, to be kept in the local library (the collection is now in Manchester Local History archive).

In the late 1920s Millicent will have found herself with more time on her hands to fill with this kind of voluntary work. In 1924 she had agreed to marry Stanley Jast provided he didn't expect her to go all domestic and do cooking and cleaning; and women civil servants had to give up their job on marriage. They married in London early in 1925 - he was 56, she was 51 - and the marriage gave Stanley at least a great deal of happiness.

Stanley's salary was a good one and meant that he and Millicent were well able to employ servants to carry out the household work Millicent had successfully avoided doing all her life. So she was now free to campaign on an issue she may have felt strongly about for many years; but had been unable to pursue actively while she was employed by the government. She began to campaign for what in due course became the clear air acts. In 1933, for example, she gave a talk at the annual conference of the National Smoke Abatement Society (founded in 1928) called 'The Altar of Fire Worship'. Her pamphlet How the Citizen Takes the Air, subtitled The Personal Significance of the Smoke Problem was published by the Society in 1934.

Another thing marriage gave Millicent more time for was theatre production. Stanley had been a member of The Unnamed Society since 1916; if Millicent had been a member at that early stage, they would have met sooner. Millicent could have joined the Society any time after 1920 but the book I consulted for the early 1920s didn't mention her. Either she wasn't a member at that time; or she worked back-stage - the names of the people who did stage management, built props and scenery and sewed costumes weren't mentioned in the book. By January 1929, however, she was a member; she oversaw The Unnamed Society's performances of Stanley's play Shah Jahan at the Little Theatre that month.

Stanley was due to retire in 1932 and neither he nor Millicent had put down any deep roots in Manchester. They decided to move south once he had retired. In 1931 they found a house in Beckington, just outside Bath. Millicent moved there to get it ready while Stanley worked his last few months.

Stanley's retirement meant that he could work on his writing. His main efforts went on Shah

Jahan - published in 1934 and dedicated to Millicent - and What It All Means, based on much earlier talks he'd given at the Theosophical Society and finally published in 1941. I think he wrote more poetry, too, but this is just a guess of mine, as none of his poems are dated. I assume - again without definite dating evidence - that it was during the 1930s that the Jasts travelled: to the West Indies and possibly México, and to Morocco.

Stanley and Millicent lived in Beckington for several years. Then, in 1939, they moved to Penzance. This might have been to give Stanley the peace he needed for his latest attempt to finish What It All Means, but both he and Millicent were urban people really, and after only a few months and despite the risks with war about to break out, they moved back to London, to Penryhn House, 3 Riverdale Road Twickenham.

Stanley died, very suddenly, on Christmas Day 1944. He had been suffering from angina for several years. In remembrance of him, Millicent got together all the poetry he had written and prepared a book of them, a private edition to send to his friends and the libraries he had worked for. Louis Stanley Jast: Poems and Epigrams doesn't have a publication date but it was probably printed in 1946. There were poems written for and dedicated to both Millicent and Winifred Austin in it.

Millicent continued to live at Penrhyn House until her death in 1951.

I'm no judge of poetry - it seems to pass right over my head unless I hear someone read it out. However, I did like some of Stanley's poems and epigrams so I've written some out. If you'd like to read them, the link is HERE.

SOURCES FOR THIS FILE

What It All Means by L Stanley Jast MA. London: T Werner Laurie Ltd of Cobham House, 24-26 Blackfriars Lane EC4. 1941.

The ditty on spiritualism is from Louis Stanley Jast: Poems and Epigrams subtitled "Yet Speaketh". Inside the front cover is a pencil note with the only date the book has on it: "Mrs M Jast June 1946". On pii: printed for private circulation only, by Wadsworth and Co of The Rydal Press Keighley.

Millicent Jast's comment on Stanley's preparedness for death was made in a letter to W A Munford, who later co-authored the biography I have relied on so heavily: Louis Stanley Jast: A Biographical Sketch by W G Fry and W A Munford. London: The Library Association 1966. P61 there's no date for it, unfortunately, but the quote reads as if Millicent wrote it very soon after her husband's death - perhaps in reply to a letter of condolence.

THE GROUP OF SIX PUBLISHED PLAYS

The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays in Verse by L Stanley Jast. London: George Routledge and Sons Ltd. NY: EP Dutton and Co. 1923.

About Japanese Noh theatre: it is poss that Jast knew something about it by 1920s via these works in English:

Certain Noble Plays of Japan, from the manuscripts of Ernest Fenellosa, chosen and the work finished by Ezra Pound with an introduction by W B Yeats. Published Dundrum: Cuala Press 1916.

Noh Theatre of Japan: with Complete Texts of 15 Classic Plays by Ernest Fenellosa and Ezra Pound. Dover Publications 1917.

For Ernest Fenellosa, see his wikipedia page. It's possible that Stanley had even met him on one of Fenellosa's visits to London. Fenellosa died in London in 1908 and his widow handed over his notes to Ezra Pound and W B Yeats. Yeats was a member of the Golden Dawn.

SOURCE FOR THE UNPUBLISHED PLAYS 1920-23

The Unnamed Book published Sherratt and Hughes of 34 Cross St Manchester 1924. As well as text there's drawings, illus of costume design etc and a drawing of Stanley Jast who was the Society's president that year.

SHAH JAHAN

Shah Jahan: A Play in Five Acts. London: Grafton and Co 1934. First performances of the play had been given by The Unnamed Society at their Little Theatre Manchester; first night was 14 January 1929.

ETHEL WINIFRED AUSTIN

Austin Brothers:

Via google I saw the firm listed in several directories including the 1873 issue of Griffith's Guide to the Iron Trade of GB; seen via archive.org

London Gazette 9 July 1878 p4061 in a list of dissolving partnerships, a notice issued 4 July 1878 ending the partnership of George Austin and Charles William Austin of 152 Gresham House Old Broad St. Charles William Austin would continue the business on his own.

Via google I saw that a firm called Austin Brothers had existed until relatively recently, though as part of a bigger firm.

Winifred:

Oxford Dictionary of National Biography volume 2 p1011 [Ethel] Winifred Austin 1873-1918. Friend of novelist Naomi Royde Smith; Smith's 1948 novel Love in Mildensee is dedicated to Winifred's memory. The main source for the ODNB's article is W A Munford, Library World volume 60 1959 166-70: Portrait of a Woman Librarian: Ethel Winifred Austin (1875-1918). The other sources are other works by Munford on the National Library for the Blind (the NLLB's title from 1916); he seems to have made quite a study of it.

Short biography of Winifred in The Library World volume LIX 1958 pp 166-70; and a response by letter from E A Savage, who seems to have known both Stanley and Winifred in volume 60 May 1959 pp250-51, disputing the year that they met.

MILLICENT BEATRICE MURBY is not in ODNB, except for a brief mention in Stanley

Jast's entry.

THOMAS MURBY AND CO

Plenty of references on the web to books published by the firm, which seems to have been in business until relatively recently. The earliest publication by the firm that I saw on the web was an edition of Murby's Scripture Manuals designed for students preparing for exams. The firm continued to publish books even during World War 1 when paper was very scarce except for contributions to the war effort : Andrews' Schoolroom Chart of Geographical Illustration an edition published 1915. The firm was then at 32 Bouverie St.

Eruptive Rocks by S James Shand; 3rd edition 1947 published by Thomas Murby and Co now of 40 Museum St WC1.

Via www.reading.ac.uk its archive and museum database; Thomas Murby and Co described as "the leading geological publisher" of the post 2nd World War era.

MILLICENT AS AN ACTRESS

About Florence Farr's involvement: Florence Farr: Bernard Shaw's New Woman by Josephine Johnson. Gerrard's Cross: Colin Smythe 1975. Pp114-119.

Bernard Shaw Theatrics: Selected Correspondence by Shaw and Dan H Laurence. Toronto: University of Toronto Press 1995. One letter to Murby is included in the selection: number 37, on p59-60, written on 13 February 1905 to "Miss Murby" (so they weren't on first-name terms).

For information on Salomé see wikipedia and also Wilde: Salome by William Tydeman and Steven Price. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press 1996: beginning on p184 is a list of the play's performances, with cast lists.

I haven't been lucky finding any information on the New Stage Club.

MILLICENT AND THE FABIAN SOCIETY

Educate, Agitate, Organiz: 100 Years of Fabian Socialism by Patricia Pugh. London: Methuen 1984 pp107-108

The Public Organisation of the Labour Market: Being Part 2 of the Minority Report of the Poor Law Commission, editors Sidney and Beatrice Webb. London and New York: Longmans Green and Co 1909. This contains a paper by Murby: Disabilities of Women as Workers.

The Common Sense of the Woman Question by Millicent Murby; originally a lecture delivered to a Fabian Society meeting, published as a pamphlet London: New Age Press 1908.

Website www.modjournal.org is the Modernist Journals Project of Brown University and the University of Tulsa. Searching for 'Murby' on its search facility I found a lot of references to Millicent in The New Age of 1908, an article by her - True Gospel of Feminism; reviews of her pamphlet The Commonsense of the Woman Question; and a lot of responses to the review. There was nothing by or about her later than 1909. See wikipedia: The New Age started out in 1907 as pro-women's suffrage but by 1912 was against it. Also on website www.modjournal.org, The Freewoman: a Weekly Feminist Review; article by Millicent published in 1912.

AS TRANSLATOR OF BERGSON

The Feminist Avant-Garde: Transatlantic Encounters of the Early 20th Century by Lucy Delap. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press 2007. Pp121 in the chapter Individualism in Feminist Political Argument.

Via google to www.abebooks.com a page offering for sale an autographed letter by Henri Bergson dated "Paris 19 Nov. 1912" to "Chère Miss Murby".

The fact that she's not the translator so much as an editor of someone else's translation is made clear at website www.brocku.ca/MeadProject/Bergson... And the book referred to in the letter is named as Bergson's Creative Evolution. Arthur Mitchell of Harvard University thanks Millicent for her "great assistance". She had "studied the translation phrase by phrase" and her revision had "resulted in many improvements".

THE REGIONAL SURVEY OF MANCHESTER

Via archive.org to the Manchester Archives and Local History Studies page reference M18. The Archives hold the papers of the Manchester and District Regional Survey Society. The Society existed 1921-30, and Stanley Jast had been the the prime mover in its foundation. Millicent was the Society's Secretary.

AIR POLLUTION

British Politics and the Environment by John McCormick 1991 p89 in the section Privatization and Pollution. The National Smoke Abatement Society was formed in 1929 by the merger of two organisations that had been campaigning on air pollution issues for some years: the Coal Smoke Abatement Society and the Smoke Abatement League.

Medicine, the Market and the Mass Media editors Virginia Berridge and Kelly Loughlin 2013 p224 the importance of local campaigning groups to keep the issue of air pollution alive. The NSAS was based in Manchester from 1929 to 1927 when it moved to London. It campaigned for smokeless zones and rigorous enforcement of legislation that had already been passed.

Times Monday 25 September 1933 p9 The Altar of Fire Worship: talk by Millicent Jast given at the 5th annual conference of the National Smoke Abatement Society.

How the Citizen Takes the Air, the Personal Significance of the Smoke Problem by Millicent Jast. Manchester: National Smoke Abatement Society 1934.

There's a short obituary of Millicent Jast in Library Association Record 1951 p102.

17 October 2013

***

Stanley Jast as Poet

Like his brother Thaddeus de Jastrzebski, Stanley Jast was a poet. It's possible that he wrote poetry all his life, but I've found it a bit difficult to tell. I'm no expert! And none of his poetry is dated.

Poetry mostly goes straight over my head. I liked some of Stanley's work, though and I wrote out some of the shorter poems: see below.

A few poems Stanley were published in 1923 along with some plays he'd written during the previous five years, in The Lover and the Dead Woman and Five Other Plays in Verse. On page 2 of that volume, is To My Lady of Skiddaw, with a note by Stanley to say that, from some points along the eastern side of Derwentwater, Skiddaw looks like a woman, lying down with her face towards the sky.

Above the lake, below the sky,
With the hills for her bier, doth my lady lie.
Was ever death-bed so free and so high?

Her winding sheet of purple and grey
Is shot with the sparkling lights of day,
And stirred by the winds in their autumn play.

Her head to the East, and her feet to the West,
And her beautiful limbs in their last sad rest,
And never a heave of the cold, still breast.

Alone with the stars, and close to the sun,
And love and lover are over and done,
Though the lake still gleams, and the streams still run.

And many the lovers shall come as we,
And as fair to them shall the landscape be,
But never again, ah God, to me.

Although he doesn't say so, Stanley wrote My Lady of Skiddaw in remembrance of his fiancée Winifred Austin, who'd died in 1918.

The other poems in this volume are very short. They're all dedicated to women who had been involved in productions of the plays - a couple of the actresses, and one of the costume designers, all members of The Unnamed Society amateur dramatics club that had put the plays on.

The rest of the poems I've picked were all published in Louis Stanley Jast: Poems and Epigrams. They were collected by Stanley's widow Millicent, and published for private circulation amongst their friends, probably in 1946. There are a few long ballads including one about Judas Iscariot and one about the River Thames. Millicent also included an unfinished attempt to write a masque in the 17th-century style, Fragments from a Masque on the Virtues and Vices; beginning with a long speech made by "Murder", followed by two more, to be spoken by "Scandal" and "Avarice". However, most of the poems are short. I thought I detected - as I read through the volume from front to back - a move away from 'thee' and other rather Victorian phraseology towards a more natural, speech-like use of language influenced by 20th century modernism; but I'm probably wrong!

Stanley was inspired to write a poem by a wide range of different places and happenings. There are poems about the sea and about foreign places - the West Indies, several towns in Morocco, more on the Lake District, and a town in Holland; and English ones - Manchester ship canal, the woods at Mapledurham House, Holmbury Hill in Surrey. Some are on philosophical subjects - usually taking them not very seriously; including one called 'Bacon and Shakspere' (sic) which Stanley may have been inspired to write by remembering Golden Dawn member Robert Masters Theobald, who wrote many pamphlets and letters arguing that Bacon had written Shakespeare's plays. Some poems were dashed off for special occasions - particularly as birthday presents for Millicent, with references to her as Stanley's equivalent to Dante's Beatrice - Beatrice was Millicent's second forename. Other literary references show the range of Stanley's reading: Omar Khayyam, Wordsworth, Goethe, Descartes, Byron's Childe Harold and H G Wells. In the poem 'On the Destruction of British Libraries in the German Air-Raids' Stanley meditated on a bi-product of war that had hit him particularly hard.

I preferred the more humorous ones.

The Engineer and the Sea

Said the sea:

"I hate that mole you've thrust in me.

It is a slight

Both on my dignity and might,

And I will smash it in despite."

The engineer

With half a smile and half a sneer,

Said: "Don't talk tall,

I've measured to a decimal

Your darndest rage against my wall."

Then the sea

Called on the winds and moon to be

His partners, and

Rolled in his fury on the land,

And broke that mole in his great hand.

It was in vain.

The engineer brought truck and crane,
Lifted the blocks,
And others quarried from the rocks.
The mole intact at the ocean mocks.

The engineer
Said to the sea: "Just look you here.
Power is not sense.
You're mighty strong but mighty dense.
I've power and intelligence."

Then the sea
Said sulkily: "Well that may be."
And drew away
His flooding waters from the bay,
And high and dry the harbour lay.

If I Had Known, which could be about Winifred, or Millicent:

If I had known
That in your garb of white,
Alone,
Over your window-stone,
You had leaned on the amorous breast of Night,
And gazed into his thousand eyes,
So passionate-deep and secret-wise;
The while the wind played with your unbound hair,
And with a subtle care,
As seeming unaware,
Stirred the light draperies there;
If I had known,
How feverish-jealous would my heart have grown,
That while I'm far away,
Even as was then the Day,
You did requite
The ardent wooing of the stealing Night.

A wry comment, possibly about Sir Richard Burton, in Unexplored:

Famed for his great discoveries, far and wide,
Himself he'd not discovered, when he died.

And another, this time about urban regeneration, in Town Planning:

The Devil, tired of Hell's monotony,
Decided for a change to study botany,
And being fond of-----*, he flew
Where on a time, some pleasant things grew.
"Phew!" cried the Devil, "What's the matter, what
On earth has happened to my favourite spot?
Has slumdom spawned? Or is't a hideous dream?"
"That," said a passer-by, "is our town-planning scheme."
"This," quoth the Devi, "I did not expect.
Who are the committee? Who's the architect?
No matter, in due course the lot I'll see.
Hell needs extending. They shall plan for me."

* Fill in your own place-name!

On Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin, in The Dictators:

When God said
In His wisdom, dark and dread,
"Let the Dictators be!"
The Devil he Heard the decree
With zest
For he could rest.

And finally, Stanley's Eyes are for Crying:

Eyes are for crying.
Heart is for sighing.
Body's for dying.
Earth is for lying.

17 October 2013

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

George Cecil Jones (who was called Cecil, not George) was initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London on 12 July 1895. He chose the Latin motto 'Volo noscere'. He did the work necessary to reach the inner, 2nd Order quickly - he almost certainly knew a great deal of it already - and was initiated into the 2nd Order on 11 January 1897. It's not clear from the GD records that have survived but it's likely that he dropped out of the GD after Samuel Liddell Mathers was expelled from the GD in May 1900.

UPDATE DECEMBER 2017

I've recently found out a whole lot more about Cecil Jones' family.

CECIL JONES' EARLY LIFE

Cecil Jones' father, George Cecil Jones senior, was born in Cirencester in 1847. By 1871 he had moved to London to work, and was living as a lodger at 55 Jasmine Grove Penge in the household of Joseph and Joanna Goodenough. One of the other two lodgers in the household that day was a William Jones, also born in Cirencester and perhaps George Cecil's brother. All three of the lodgers worked as clerks in a bank; perhaps the same bank.

In 1872 George Cecil Jones married Sarah Matthews at St Swithin's in the Walcot district of Bath. Sarah's father, Thomas Matthews, was land agent at the Bathurst Estate near Cirencester. Sarah had worked before her marriage as a governess in the household of William Gaynor (or Gayner) of Filton, near Bristol. The GD's George Cecil Jones, was born in Croydon on 10 January 1873; events conspired to make him George Cecil Jones senior and Sarah's only child.

In 1871, George Cecil Jones senior was probably already employed by the National Bank of Scotland, because the inquest on his death mentioned that he had been at the Bank for many years. He was promoted several times so that on the day of his death he was one of the bank's accountants; having worked his way up, I would imagine, from a beginning as one of the many clerks in its accounting office. In terms of the average Victorian office, this was a rapid rise up the hierarchy. Perhaps too rapid. The inquest heard that George Cecil Jones senior had been working very hard recently, and had at the same time been suffering from "great depression of spirits" about the Bank's future.

A man with depression: still a very much resisted concept even today. In her book "Shattered Nerves" Janet Oppenheim describes how attitudes towards depression in men changed during the mid to late 19th century; and what contortions of explanation were needed by the medical profession to square the existence of men with depression, with male stereotypes in which mental breakdown called not only the individual's manliness into question, but also the future of the Empire. In 1878 when George Cecil Jones senior decided he could not carry on living, he had reached a position of responsibility at his work, but he probably wasn't high enough up the hierarchy to be in one of power: it was the classic depression-inducing combination. In that mental state it's difficult to admit you need treatment; besides which, treatment for George Cecil Jones would have been expensive and finding the money for it would have added to his worries. I doubt if he went to a doctor.

That George Cecil Jones senior should suffer from depression was bad enough; that he should decide to kill himself made it all much worse; and that he should do it almost in public, at his place of work... The verdict at the inquest was one of suicide while in a state of temporary insanity.

In 1878 mental illness was shameful, especially in a man; and suicide was illegal. However, I think the National Bank of Scotland made sure that Sarah Jones and her son didn't suffer financial distress in addition to all their other trouble: on the 1881 census, she is listed as having an income from an annuity, which is likely to have continued until her death. Sarah did try to leave the past behind: on the day of the 1881 census she told the official that her name was Mabel Jones; and that her son's name was George. On that day she was living at 117 Ramsden Road, near Clapham Common. Her brother Edward Matthews, an accountant, was living with her, and so was her nephew, another Edward Matthews. The younger Edward was 9 and perhaps had come to London to provide companionship for Cecil Jones.

In 1887 Sarah Jones married again. Her second husband, Frederick William Gayner, had a farm at Filton, just north of Bristol; he may have been related to the family who had employed Sarah before her marriage. The marriage was a failure and husband and wife separated.

END UPDATE 4 DEC 2017

EDUCATION

Where Cecil Jones first went to school is another thing I don't know, but when he was a bit older, he attended the City of London School, run by the Corporation of London for the sons of men in business and the professions; and he stayed at the school even after his mother's remarriage. All applicants had to have a reference from a Corporation councillor or alderman: I imagine the Bank had arranged that in Cecil Jones' case. The school assumed that pupils could already read and write; it concentrated on adding to the basics with a broad and in-depth preparation for a life in work. English, Latin, French, Greek, German, even Sanskrit were taught; and elocution lessons were available to rid pupils of accents that might restrict the range of jobs open to them. The school offered a wide range of science subjects: maths, arithmetic, drawing, basic chemistry and natural philosophy. For this, the pupils' parents had to find fees of 10 guineas per year although several scholarships were available. It was an education better than could be had at many public schools.

One of Cecil Jones' fellow pupils at City of London School was Julian Levett Baker, the son of another man who worked in a bank (though not the same bank). Cecil and Julian were exactly the same age and perhaps in the same class, and shared some interests; they formed a friendship which lasted the rest of their lives.

WORKING LIFE

Cecil Jones and Julian Baker had both decided that they were going to be chemists by the time they left City of London School; and for them that didn't mean training to be a pharmacist, it meant chemistry in its modern sense, which is based on laboratory analysis of substances to assess their constituent elements and their properties. Perhaps Cecil and Julian were already curious about alchemy but even if they hadn't been, he might have been excited by the possibilities of a working life in chemistry. Modern chemistry was still in its infancy and was a very fast-moving field at that time: anyone working in it would be breaking new ground on a regular basis. And at the same time, more jobs for chemists were being created in local government, by new legislation, and also in industry, by the need to understand and control industrial processes: a new profession was in the process of being created. Living in London was again an advantage: they were both able to get one of the best specialist educations in chemistry available in the UK, though not at the same institution. While Julian Baker trained at the Finsbury Technical College, from 1889 to 1893, Cecil Jones did City and Guilds exams at the Central Technical College of the London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education, one of the myriad and diverse colleges that (by 1900) were making up the University of London. The earliest source I could find for Cecil Jones' education says that he also went to Birmingham University; but doesn't give dates for when he was there, and I'm not even sure whether he was a student there or - which would have been much later in his life - an examiner.

Leaving college well qualified, Cecil Jones went to work for Heinrich Bernhard Helbing and Francis William Passmore, who were in partnership as analytical chemists. Helbing had been born in Darmstadt and had - I presume - trained as a chemist in Germany. Francis William Passmore had trained in England with B H Paul, the expert on quinine and caffeine, before some time working for Emil Fischer in Wurzburg, Germany, at the time Fischer was doing research on sugars which by the 1920s was seen as classic. Later in his career, Passmore was called as an expert witness in legal cases on sugars and saccharins; and gave evidence to the House of Lords on the chemistry of dried milk. During Cecil Jones' time at the partnership, Passmore and Helbing published a series of booklets which indicated the kind of analysis the partnership was doing: on chloroform (in French); on disinfectants; on Symphoral (also called Symphorol), a newly-discovered diuretic; and on malakine, a new preparation for getting rid of parasitic worms. At some stage (the copy I saw didn't have a date on it) the partners also published a 12-page pamphlet on how to prepare English herbs and drugs; which might have been of particular interest to Cecil Jones.

After 18 months working for the Helbing and Passmore partnership, Cecil Jones left London in 1894 and moved to Hampshire. In July 1895, when he was initiated into the GD, he was living in Vyne Road Basingstoke, a few minutes' walk from his new workplace. He had taken a job with a firm which seems to have gone quickly through a number of names, but which in 1910 was called Dowson Economic Gas and Power Co Ltd. Joseph Emerson Dowson had founded the firm to manufacture a steam boiler he had designed to generate gas from high-quality anthracite coal. Coal tars and ammonia were bi-products of the process; they could be sold on for use in the chemical and dyeing industries. The steam boiler went into production in 1878 and was the first gas generator of its kind to be built in the UK; it was soon being sold in North America as well.

In 1884, the Dowson firm's headquarters were at Great Queen Street, Westminster. The equipment was built at Kingsclere Road Basingstoke; or so Roger Wright and I think - we couldn't find much information about the site at Kingsclere Road on the web and the factory doesn't seem to exist any more. On the 1901 census, Cecil Jones is described not as a chemist but as a chemical engineer and Roger, as my science advisor, suggests he may have been working on improvements to the equipment's efficiency. I add that he may also have been required to improve its safety: in 1901 he wrote a paper on The Need for Greater Care in Introducing Gas-firing into Small Gasworks. By the day of the 1901 census, he had moved a little way out of town and was living at 57 Waterloo House, Cliddesden Road in the Greenbank district of Basingstoke, an address shared by Arley Short although Short and his family kept a separate household. Perhaps it was at this address that Aleister Crowley had come to stay with Cecil Jones and learn some basic alchemy, late in 1898.

In 1902, Cecil Jones changed employers again. Moving from job to job every few years like this was very unusual at the time; it's important to remember that he was working in a profession where new job opportunities were being created all the time. However, this latest move was also a promotion, to a post as managing chemist, perhaps in charge of a department and taking decisions on policy and development. It may have been on the strength of this promotion that he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of Chemistry in 1902. The move he made was from Hampshire to Essex and from gas power to brewing. Julian Baker had already taken a job with a brewery firm; after a scare about arsenic in the coal used to fire the brewing process, those brewers who could afford it had thought it wise to hire experts to do routine analyses, not only of the coal that was being used, but also of the malt. Cecil Jones' new employer was the very rapidly expanding firm of Free, Rodwell and Co Ltd, whose maltings were at Mistley on the River Stour in Essex, below the house owned by Robert Free, one of the company's founders. Following a stock market flotation in 1893, in which £75,000 was raised, Free, Rodwell and Co began to build big-time at Mistley, turning it one of England's most important brewing centres in only a few years. Robert Free was particularly keen to build units where East Anglia's large barley crop could be stored while awaiting processing; the firm's eight-storey maltings and kiln number 1, the most technically advanced of their kind when they were built around 1896, are now Grade II listed. Free, Rodwell and Co raised a further £30,000 by a second share issue in 1898 and used it to finance the building of a small village, New Mistley, for the firm's workers. The village had several different styles of house in it, from small houses for its labourers, to detached houses for more senior staff. Robert Free died in 1902 and the decision to appoint a chemist may have been taken by his son, who took over the firm that year. Cecil Jones was still working for Free, Rodwell and Co, and probably living in one of the houses at New Mistley, when he got married.

In January 1905, George Cecil Jones married Julian Baker's sister Ethel Melinda. He continued to work for Free, Rodwell and Co for two more years. He and Ethel lived in Mistley and their daughter Eileen was born there late in 1905. However, in 1907, Cecil Jones resigned from his job, and the family moved back to London. I think this was probably a joint decision, influenced by a number of factors: Ethel might have been finding it hard work and rather lonely, living with a small baby a long way from her family in south London; Aleister Crowley was spending more time in England, based in London; and Cecil Jones had decided to go into business for himself as an analytical chemist - a very common move amongst chemists of his generation.

As a married man with a family to support, perhaps 1907 was not the best time for him to be deciding to go self-employed, but I think he might have been planning for it and moving towards it all his working life. It would explain why he had changed jobs several times: he had been gaining as varied an experience of industrial chemistry as possible, and making his name known to as wide a field of potential clients as he could. He continued to keep his name in the profession's public eye until the mid-1920s with a series of publications, mostly on aspects of brewing chemistry, some written on his own and some with co-authors including A R Ling, who had been Julian Baker's boss in the laboratory of the London Beetroot Sugar Association in the 1890s. He and Julian Baker prepared a series of tables on specific gravities, for use by the brewing industry, following the budget of 1914; as Cecil Jones' name is listed first on this work, I think he did most of the calculations necessary to prepare the tables.

Between 1910 and 1920, Cecil Jones did some work for Julian Baker, reading long and complex articles on chemistry and reducing them to a quickly-read abstract for publication in the magazine Julian was editing at the time, The Analyst. Cecil Jones' last published article, asking Is Forced Malt Objectionable in the Brewery? was published in 1925 in the Journal of the Institute of Brewing; again Julian Baker was the journal's editor.

Compromises had to be made once Cecil Jones had founded his own business, not only because he no longer had a regular income and possibly a rent-free house, but also to cover the legal fees of a libel case he instituted late in 1910 (see below for much more on that). On the day of the 1911 census, Cecil, Ethel Melinda, their daughter Eileen and their son George Alan (born in 1910) were living - not in a new, possibly detached, house in Essex but at 41d London Road Forest Hill, a small flat in a converted suburban villa. It was near Ethel's family, however; south of the worst of the London smog; and convenient for Forest Hill station and trains into the City, where Cecil Jones' business was based in rooms on the top floor of 43-45 Great Tower Street. Completing his census form, Cecil Jones described himself as an 'employer', not as self-employed, so he had at least one person working for him - probably a trainee recently out of technical college, like he had once been himself.

The day chosen for the 1911 census was a few weeks before the libel case Jones v The Looking Glass and others, which ended the association for which Cecil Jones is most famous: his magical friendship with Aleister Crowley.

CECIL JONES AND THE GOLDEN DAWN

Before I start this section I want to say a little about the sources for it. Elaine Simpson and Cecil Jones were the two GD members who knew Aleister Crowley the longest. As neither of them wrote any memoirs or autobiography, the main source for their lives in esoteric circles is Crowley's writing. Even if Crowley had been a scrupulous memoir-writer, to have only one source is always unsatisfactory and all memoirs are a justification of the writer's actions and opinions in the face of contemporary or future criticism. There are added problems with Crowley, the main one being not so much the hostility he shows to ex-friends of his; but his inability to see anyone as having a life outside what he wants from them. That said, Crowley is a source and I suppose that's better than nothing. There's very little mention of him in the GD archives at the Freemasons' Library, and the only other source there is that you could use to build up a picture of Cecil Jones as a person doesn't do him any favours - it's a transcript apparently taken by the Times newspaper's court reporter, at the libel trial Jones v The Looking Glass and others, of April 1911.

Either Allan Bennett or Julian Baker could have recommended Cecil Jones to the GD hierarchy as a candidate for initiation: they were both already members when Cecil Jones was initiated. All three spent their working days doing modern chemistry. Unlike most of their co-professionals, however, they maintained an interest in the origins of their profession; and unlike most members of the GD, they had a practical understanding of alchemy. They didn't regard ancient alchemy as solely about chemical processes. Cecil Jones, certainly, was open to the idea that alchemical texts were as much metaphorical as practical. He also had no problem with the idea that magic could be used to make contact with other beings, who might hand over - to the right candidate - the kind of information that would bring great power. His interest in magic wasn't confined to alchemy, he read more widely than that. For example, he was familiar with one at least of the 17th-century manuscripts which helped develop the legend of Christian Rosenkreuz; though he had no particular desire to be a member of a Rosicrucian order and didn't see the GD as such a thing - which, indeed, it wasn't by the time he joined it, it had moved away in several different directions from its Rosicrucian foundations.

During the time that he was a member of the GD, Cecil Jones was living and working outside London. The number of rituals and meetings he could attend was limited. In addition, he was rather quiet and retiring by temperament, not a genial friend-to-all like Julian. So he was not as well known to other GD members as Julian was. However, he was a much-respected member, and his help was called on by Florence Farr in March 1900 when she was facing the biggest crisis of her GD membership - what to do about a letter she had received from Samuel Liddell Mathers claiming that all the documents on which the GD had been founded had been faked by William Wynn Westcott. Mathers had warned Florence never to tell anyone this; but of course, she felt she really couldn't leave such accusations just lying there unchallenged. She decided to hold a meeting on 3 March 1900, to tell a few 2nd Order members what Mathers was saying, and ask them what they should all do about it. The people she invited were a very select band, whom she knew well and trusted: Dorothea Hunter and her husband Edmund; Marcus Worsley Blackden;

W B Yeats; Percy Bullock - and Cecil Jones. Cecil Jones didn't attend that meeting - it was probably organised at such short notice that he couldn't make it. He was told of its outcome however: those who were there agreed that they would have to investigate the allegations. They formed themselves into a committee, and on behalf of the group Percy Bullock wrote to Mathers to explain their decision and ask him to explain further. The investigating committee met again on 10 March 1900 and this time Cecil Jones was able to go. But never again. I guess that until he'd read Mathers' letter, he hadn't realised exactly what was happening. Once he did, he wanted no more part in it. He might not have been as worried that the GD's foundation was based on forged documents as he was about Mathers' part in allowing and perpetuating and possibly even writing the forgeries. What did you do when your magical masters were proved to have aided and abetted a fraud and benefitted from it in money and other terms? Did you denounce him and seek another master? Did you stay loyal, thus aiding and abetting the fraud yourself? Faced with a dilemma, Cecil Jones withdrew. He may have written to Florence Farr to say he wouldn't take part in the investigation. If he did write, the letter hasn't survived; and at the 2nd Order meeting of 21 April 1900 he was replaced on the investigating committee by Charles Rosher. Cecil Jones didn't attend that meeting. He certainly knew that it was due but I imagine he didn't want to be there and find himself very much put on the spot. Although it was a regular 2nd Order meeting, scheduled some time before, it took place in the wake of the struggle for possession of the 2nd Order rooms at 36 Blythe Road, between supporters and opponents of Mathers' one-man rule of the GD: another problem which Cecil Jones would have found difficult to deal with, if he had known what was happening, and one which leads us neatly to his relations with Aleister Crowley.

CECIL JONES AND ALEISTER CROWLEY 1898-1900

If you've read the introduction to my web pages on the GD you will know that I don't 'do' magic - I'm not an occultist, just a historian. I'm not going to write the story of the magical partnership between Cecil Jones and Crowley. I'll just say that Julian Baker introduced Aleister Crowley to Cecil Jones in October 1898 and that the two men continued to do magic together, from time to time, until an incident in November 1910 brought their magical friendship to an end. The friendship extended to each of them meeting the other man's wife; though I don't know whether the two wives knew each other. I refer anyone who wants to read more about the magical aspects of the friendship, to Richard Kaczynski's Perdurabo, which I have used myself. What I'm going to look at is something slightly different.

Even using Crowley's writings I get the impression that there was more of a meeting of minds between him and Cecil Jones, than between him and Julian Baker. It was Cecil Jones, not Julian Baker, that recommended Crowley to the GD hierarchy (which as I've said above, essentially meant Mathers, by this time) as a potential initiate. However, Crowley was friendly with both Baker and Cecil Jones in 1899 and until he met Allan Bennett, regarded them as the only GD members with anything to teach him. At this early stage in Crowley's magical career, he also thought of them as experienced and knowledgeable and deferred to their opinion. When he got impatient with the study required to reach the stage where he could be initiated into the GD's 2nd Order, he went to them and argued that he should be allowed to skip it, as he already knew most of it. But he bowed to their dictat that - however dull the study was - he must obey the GD rules and submit to the discipline of carrying on doing it. It may have been in response to Crowley's frustration that Cecil Jones gave him 116 pages of notes, drawings and diagrams he'd made in July 1898 on various aspects of GD magic; by the 1960s they were owned by John Fuller, who collected Crowley memorabilia.

In both Crowley's memoirs - The Spirit of Solitude (1929) and The Confessions - Crowley uses the same phrase to describe what Cecil Jones' first impressions of him were: "that I had a tremendous natural capacity for Magick". Maybe that is Crowley being wise long after the event, but there is evidence from 1899 to back up the idea that Cecil Jones recognised Crowley as someone with special gifts for magic. And it was Cecil Jones who first put it to Crowley that he carry out the Abra-Melin rituals. This was a radical suggestion. He made it in 1898 or 1899, when Crowley's knowledge of magic, though expanding rapidly, was still only a few months old; and Mathers' translation, The Book of Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage had only been published a few months before. If Crowley did the rituals - which were complex and time-consuming - he would become one of the only living people to have carried them out: so Cecil Jones was assuming a great deal in urging Crowley venture into this virtually unknown territory. As far as I know, Cecil Jones never carried them out himself.

About the meeting of minds, here's a tale from The Spirit of Solitude suggesting that both men were on the same wave-length when it came to magical manifestations. Crowley mentions an occasion (which must have occurred some time during 1899) when he and Cecil Jones were about to leave Crowley's flat in Chancery Lane to go out for something to eat, when they noticed "semi-solid shadows on the stairs; the whole atmosphere was vibrating". Returning from their meal they found the flat had been ransacked and its contents strewn all over the place. I'm not going to speculate on the semi-solid shadows, but if I'd come back to my flat and found it turned upside down, I'd have supposed that burglars had been and gone. However, Crowley interpreted it as Abra-melin's demons seeking him out already, even though he'd not yet begun the Abra-melin rituals; and apparently Cecil Jones agreed with the way Crowley saw it. They watched "semi-materialised beings... marching around the main room in almost unending procession".

In 1899 Crowley was not a member of the GD's 2nd Order and consequently was not yet allowed to do practical magic under GD auspices. However, he and Cecil Jones were doing magical rituals together. For example, anxious about Allan Bennett's health (he suffered terribly from asthma), they invoked the spirit Buer, who was supposed to heal the sick.

However, there were constraints on how much of a magical partner Cecil Jones could be to Crowley. Crowley was planning to do the Abra-Melin rituals in 1900, but when Crowley asked Jones to stay with him as he carried them out, as magical assistant cum bodyguard, Cecil "did not see his way to come". I suppose it's possible that Crowley offered to pay Cecil's living expenses during the six months the rituals were supposed to take, but if he did, Cecil Jones turned the offer down. I think myself that Crowley won't have made that offer; he still had a private income at that time and he was always inclined to forget that other people did not have that privilege, and thus needed to work for a living. If Cecil Jones had agreed to give up his job to spend six months as a magical assistant, he would have severely dented his career as a chemist and left himself completely dependent on Crowley for money. No wonder he couldn't see his way to come.

By early 1900, Crowley was ready and very willing to have his second GD initiation and be allowed into its inner, 2nd Order. The 2nd Order members in London refused to initiate him. I imagine Cecil Jones approved of Crowley's decision to go to Paris and be initiated by Mathers. When Crowley returned and found himself still excluded from the 2nd Order, Cecil Jones and Julian Baker both felt a certain responsibility for the impasse. They tried to negotiate with Florence Farr (the GD's most senior figure in London) a way round the continued refusal; but couldn't come up with a solution acceptable to all parties. And it was at this point in the saga of Crowley and the GD that Florence Farr received Mathers' letter about the forged documents.

Cecil Jones didn't take any active part in Crowley's attempts to seize the 2nd Order's rooms in London on Mathers' behalf, in mid-April 1900. Did he know about the attempts in advance? - none of the accounts of what happened suggest that he did. Once he found out - probably from Crowley and after the event - what did he think? He might still have been in favour of reinstating Mathers' rule, but - in view of what he knew by then about the GD's fraudulent foundation documents - he might just not have known what outcome to hope for, and thanked his lucky stars that his work meant that he didn't have to make a decision. However, when both Mathers and Crowley were expelled from the GD in May 1900, a line was crossed in Cecil Jones' mind.

In Cecil Jones' eyes, the GD without Mathers would be a useless organisation: Mathers' skills as a magician and occultist outweighed all his considerable downside; and in any case, an apprentice should remain loyal to his or her master. GD members Edward William Berridge and John William Brodie-Innes shared that understanding of the magical apprentice/master relationship. After May 1900 they continued to defer to Mathers in magical matters and to consider themselves as part of a magical order still led by Mathers. The evidence in the GD archives suggests that Cecil Jones ceased to be a member of the GD after May 1900; and he also never joined either of the GD's daughter orders, A E Waite's Independent and Rectified Rite/Order, or Robert William Felkin's Stella Matutina. I don't think any papers of Mathers' survive other than those in the GD archive at the Freemasons' Library; so we can't tell whether Cecil Jones and Mathers continued to have any kind of relationship, magical or otherwise, after 1900. Cecil Jones' main magical relationship in the next few years was with Crowley; although because Crowley was so often abroad, he mostly practised alone.

In the late spring of 1900, rumours reached some at least of the GD's members that the police were allegations that Crowley had been involved in homosexual relationships while at university. Homosexual acts were illegal. Edward William Berridge spoke to Crowley about the rumours - asking him if they were true - and got an answer that he remembered a decade later, so ambiguous had it been. Crowley's memoirs say that he contacted several GD members, asking them if he should be worried, though the memoirs don't say how specific he was, on the question of what exactly he should be worried about. Cecil Jones was one of the people Crowley went to, and - like the others - he used either tarot or astrology to answer Crowley's question. He reached the same conclusion as the others: no, Crowley shouldn't be worried. However, in late June or early July 1900 Crowley left England for Mexico, and spent almost all the next three years abroad. A few months after he left, at a time while he was trying to do magic and not getting anywhere, Crowley was glad to receive a letter (apparently out of the blue) from Cecil Jones. I daresay they continued to correspond, but Crowley's memoirs suggest that he and Cecil Jones didn't meet again for nearly six years. And when Crowley was faced with a magical crisis, in 1905-06 - whether to accept that the entity he called Aiwass as a genuine emissary from the spirit world, announcing a new world order - he chose not to go to Cecil Jones to discuss his dilemma. Instead he took his troubles all the way to Shanghai, to Elaine Simpson.

In mid-1906 Crowley and his wife Rose came back to England intending to spend at least a few months there. Much had happened, magically speaking, in Crowley's life. Because he left no records, we don't know what had been going on in Cecil Jones' magical life, though in the work-a-day world, he (like Crowley) had got married and had a daughter. Crowley and Cecil Jones began meeting again; but now their original magical roles were reversed. Crowley describes how in December 1906, Cecil Jones urged him to admit that he had reached the 8th level of the 3rd Order, a level of magician-ship thought until then to be unattainable by any human - a uniqueness that Crowley actually resisted for several years though in the end he succumbed.

Cecil Jones might have come to regard Crowley a magician who was something more than human; but he was not a slavish acolyte - perhaps the events of 1900 had taught him to examine potential magical masters for their feet of clay. The role of slavish acolyte was soon to be taken by others, beginning with Victor Neuberg whose role in Crowley's life was later described by John Fuller as "a cross between a disciple and a maid of all works". Jones still thought of himself and was still thought of by Crowley at this stage, as a person to take note of. When he challenged Crowley to do a particular magical practice, suggesting self-harming as a punishment for failure, Crowley did the practice and when he failed at it, carried out Jones' suggested punishment. Crowley ended with cut-marks all over his arms - which got Cecil Jones in hot water with Rose Crowley. Crowley doesn't record whether he, in his turn, suggested particular magical practices to Cecil Jones. During 1906 and 1907 Jones and Crowley met regularly to compare what they were doing, and the idea gradually emerged of forming that 3rd magical order that Cecil Jones believed Crowley was now eligible for. This was the order known as Silver Star or A...A, and as the two saw it in 1907, it would have themselves and one other person as its three worldly chiefs. It took a while to find a suitable third person, but once John Frederick Charles Fuller had been chosen, they were able to launch the A...A in 1909.

I think that the founding the A...A was another turning point in the relations between Cecil Jones and Crowley. John Fuller (looking back from the distance of 1966) remembered it as Crowley's order. The evidence from 1909-11 certainly shows Crowley as the order's most important member, acknowledged as its most senior magician and working hard as its publicist and its organiser. Both Cecil Jones and Fuller were background figures in comparison; but of course, they had to go to work (Fuller was in the army and didn't see much of Crowley at all during 1910). I'm not suggesting that Cecil Jones objected to this; I don't suppose he even saw it like that; but there was beginning not to be room in Crowley's life for other magicians with experience.

A distraction from the idea of the new magical order was the final collapse of the marriage of Aleister and Rose Crowley, in 1908-09. Crowley spent a lot of both those years abroad and was in North Africa in November 1909 when Rose got her divorce and custody of the marriage's only surviving child, Lola Zaza Crowley (born 1906). As part of the divorce settlement, Crowley borrowed money against a sum of £4000 he would inherit when his mother died; the borrowed sum was put into a trust fund to provide income for Crowley himself, and Lola Zaza. Crowley's mountaineering partner Oscar Eckenstein agreed to be one of the trust fund's two trustees; and Cecil Jones was the other. These two were Crowley's most trusted friends in 1909.

Two strands contributed to the ending of the magical friendship between Crowley and Cecil Jones very shortly afterwards: Crowley's plans for the A...A, which became very ambitious and very public; and the homosexual relationships that he'd always had alongside and in between his heterosexual ones, from his time at Cambridge University up to and including 1910.

The staging of the Rites of Eleusis at Caxton Hall in Westminster in October and November 1910 brought the A...A a lot of newspaper coverage. The coverage included a series of articles in a racing paper called The Looking Glass, which got more and more personal about Crowley and the people he knew. As a senior member of the A...A, Cecil Jones must have gone to see the Rites; but he did not appear on the stage in any of them; and Allan Bennett had left magic far behind and was now a Buddhist monk, living in Asia. Somehow, though, their names became known to The Looking Glass, with details of how close they had both been to Crowley years before. I wonder who had been talking to the press indiscreetly? In its article published on 26 November 1910, The Looking Glass named both Cecil Jones and Bennett as close friends of Crowley during 1899; and did a bit more than hint that Crowley and Bennett had had a homosexual relationship. The gist of that article was taken up by the moralist and fraudster (isn't it interesting how often the two go together?) Horatio Bottomley and published in his magazine John Bull. In The Confessions Crowley was sure that he himself was the real target for all The Looking Glass's mud-slinging - that Cecil Jones and Bennett were just collateral damage - and he was probably right. A lot of the legal case that followed turned on the fact that Crowley and Bennett had been given plenty of grounds to sue for libel, especially by The Looking Glass, but that neither of them had done so. But Cecil Jones did so.

Cecil Jones consulted Percy William Bullock of Bullock and Co solicitors. Percy William had been one of the most senior, most hard-working, and best-liked members of the GD during the 1890s. Although he seemed to favour studying manuscripts rather than practical experimentation, he had always had an interest in alchemy, so he and Cecil Jones had that in common and may have remained friends after the expulsions of 1900. Though they never did magical work together as far as I know, Percy William may have been Cecil Jones' solicitor for his business affairs. Even if he wasn't, Percy William was a solicitor Cecil Jones knew; it would have been easier to go to him for advice about taking these particular legal proceedings. The evidence that might come up if the case got to court might result in Crowley being arrested; Bennett wouldn't be arrested but only because he now lived in Asia. It would probably also involve making the existence of the GD public again (it had already been made public at least twice).

The offending paragraph in the article in The Looking Glass was worded so that Cecil Jones actually stood outside the allegations it made against Crowley and Bennett. It would be interesting to know what advice Bullock offered Cecil Jones when they originally spoke about the article. As time went on and Crowley didn't show any signs of suing despite having grounds, but Cecil Jones still wanted redress for the implied insult, Bullock seems to have decided that he needed an opinion from a barrister on whether Cecil Jones stood any chance of receiving an apology and damages if Crowley wasn't demanding them. The barrister Bullock conducted decided that Cecil Jones should still be able to demand an apology and damages both from The Looking Glass, and from John Bull that had repeated the gist of it.

It was down to Cecil Jones, as the client, to decide whether to take the next step. No doubt hoping it wouldn't come to court, he chose to continue with the legal proceedings. Only a letter from Bullock and Co was needed to persuade Bottomley, as editor of John Bull, to publish a retraction of the article they had printed. John Bull also printed a statement saying that Cecil Jones was no longer an associate of Aleister Crowley - a statement which turned out not to be true. However, The Looking Glass' editor and publishers wouldn't retract what had appeared in their magazine.

Cecil Jones wouldn't back down either, and the case reached court in April 1911. Cecil Jones had to go into the witness box and help put his own case: he was asked questions to this end by Mr Simmons, his own barrister; and then asked more difficult ones by Mr Schiller, barrister for The Looking Glass' publishers. It's very difficult to come out of such an ordeal with dignity. Cecil Jones was under a great deal of stress - had been for several months, I imagine - but reading a verbatim report of his cross-examination, I thought he didn't help his own cause at all. What you need in these circumstances (or so it seems to me) is a convincing performance of innocence wronged which gains the jury's sympathy. Cecil Jones (in my view) came over as irritable, argumentative and a bit too clever for his own good. He sounded brusque, if not arrogant, and created the wrong impression.

Schiller was building a case on the basis of guilt by association. He focused much of his cross-examination on eliciting what kind of relationship there had been between Cecil Jones and Crowley, around 1899 and also more recently. He asked what Cecil Jones thought of Crowley, what he'd known about him, then and now, and whether they were still in touch. Cecil Jones' replies were that, yes, he still considered Crowley a friend of his. When Schiller asked what exactly that meant, Cecil Jones told him that he still saw Crowley every two months or so and spoke to him regularly on the phone. Schiller made quite a bit out of the fact that Cecil Jones had introduced Crowley to his wife and that she knew him quite well; giving the jury the impression that if she knew Crowley, Mrs Jones was not quite a lady. And then de Wend Fenton, the editor of The Looking Glass (acting as his own barrister), got Cecil Jones to admit that he had continued to associate with Crowley despite thinking of him as (to quote de Wend Fenton) "a notoriously evil person".

When Cecil Jones was finally able to leave the witness box, Samuel Liddell Mathers and then Edward William Berridge were called as ex members of GD - to give evidence on the side of The Looking Glass. Mr Schiller wanted to ask them what sort of an organisation the GD was, and what was known about Crowley by its members in 1899-1900. Mathers contradicted some statements Cecil Jones had made earlier, about whether or not the GD had been a Rosicrucian organisation. I can't quite see why the exact nature of the GD should matter to the trial, but the fact that Mathers was so sure something Jones had said in the witness box was wrong, can't have gone down well with a jury probably already prejudiced against Jones.

And Berridge's evidence - although stopped by an objection made by Cecil Jones' barrister - made it clear that in early 1900 some members of the GD at least had heard rumours that Crowley was homosexual.

Crowley was in court for both the days of the trial. In his memoirs he said that he went in disguise and no one recognised him, but that isn't true. During his cross-examination Cecil Jones admitted that he could see Crowley in the court-room. The jury were probably aware that Crowley had chosen not to sue and Mr Schiller left them wondering why Cecil Jones hadn't asked Crowley to give evidence on his behalf. There was a moment, after Berridge's evidence, when Cecil Jones' barrister Mr Simmons hovered on the brink of asking the judge to call Crowley as a witness; but he didn't actually do so, and as a result, the only person who was called to speak on Cecil Jones' side was John Fuller. Kaczynski suggests that Fuller's evidence came too late to counter all the insinuations that had been made by earlier witnesses. I'd also point out that Fuller had only known Crowley since 1906. The case was about events and 'who knew what' during a period before Fuller and Crowley had met.

Mr Schiller's summing-up on behalf of The Looking Glass' publishers persuaded the judge (if he hadn't made up his mind already) that, "If a man values his own reputation so cheaply that he does not mind associating with that kind of creature, he must not complain if comment is made about it". The jury agreed as well, and decided that the offending words in The Looking Glass were fair comment, and consequently not a libel. Normally, the loser of such a case would have to pay the legal costs of both sides, so the penalty Cecil Jones might have faced would have been heavy financially as well as in terms of his reputation; though the decision about costs is up to the judge and he may not have ordered Jones to pay for all the lawyers.

By not suing for libel, Crowley had saved himself from the kind of outcome to a libel trial that had engulfed Oscar Wilde in 1895. By not calling him as a witness, Cecil Jones too had prevented Crowley being arrested for homosexual offences. By not volunteering to be a witness, Crowley had saved himself by bringing down public humiliation on his friend. When the trial was over, John Fuller asked Cecil Jones why he hadn't had a subpoena issued, forcing Crowley to be a witness or face charges of contempt of court. Jones had replied that if Crowley wouldn't volunteer to help him, he certainly wasn't going to beg. Fuller thought that Jones had been very honourable, though misguided.

Cecil Jones had said in his cross-examination that he had been one of those GD members who had heard the rumours of Crowley's homosexual relationships; but he had dismissed them as malicious gossip. Anyone might assume that a friend of theirs couldn't be a criminal, but I think that maybe Cecil Jones had shut his eyes to things about Crowley that he wouldn't have dismissed so lightly in another man. As with Mathers, so with Crowley: the great magician outweighed the human failings. Cecil Jones could have seen - but he was not looking - that Crowley tended to leave people to their fate if helping them would put him on the spot - though of course, the 'spot' was a considerable one in this case and might have ended like it did for Oscar Wilde, in Reading gaol.

A large number of papers reported on the trial. You would expect papers like the Daily Mirror, the Daily Mail and the Daily Express, perhaps, to cover it, but even heavy-weight papers like the Daily Telegraph and the Morning Post published reports; and both the London papers, the Evening News and the Standard. So Cecil Jones' clients, his acquaintances and his neighbours at work and at home would have been able to find out what was being said about him and his friends; and people learned his name who would otherwise have gone their entire lives without hearing anything about him. And seeing he had lost the case, a large number of the people who now knew his name will have got the wrong impression - I do think it was a wrong impression - of what Cecil Jones and his friends got up to; and what magicians get up to.

You just have to live these things down.

After April 1911, did Cecil Jones and Aleister Crowley continue their friendship as he had described it in court? - meeting every so often to discuss their magical progress, and having weekly chats in the meantime on the phone? If you believe The Confessions, they did not, because Crowley dropped him, annoyed at what he saw as a betrayal by two old friends, Cecil Jones and the editor of The Looking Glass. Those who write their memoirs write them with the intention of having the last word. After ten years of receiving from him magical cooperation, and support both in his magical career and his private life, Crowley dismissed Cecil Jones, the man who got him into the GD and helped teach him the basics of what he knew about magic, as a “pompous imbecility”; and - apparently - never had anything to do with him again. According to Kaczynski’s biography, they didn’t even meet when (from January 1945 to December 1947) they were again living in the same town.

Cecil Jones might have wanted to move on after the disaster of April 1911 and erase the name of Crowley from his mind, but he couldn’t do so completely. He was still a trustee of Lola Zaza Crowley’s money. He could also have refused to carry on at the task; but after the trial he probably saw more clearly than before, why trustees were needed. He did not have to meet Crowley, most of the work was done by solicitors; it was decisions about how the money in the fund should be spent that the trustees were required to make. As a trustee, Cecil Jones will have had some dealings with Rose Crowley, who had custody of Lola Zaza until she came of age in 1927; and with the artist Gerald Kelly, Rose Crowley’s brother, who seems to have done his best to act as a father-figure to Lola Zaza. Financial and legal work on the trust fund was required after the death of Lola Zaza’s grandmother, Emily Crowley, in April 1917; but again, Cecil Jones will have been dealing with Emily’s brother Tom Bond Bishop, whom Emily had named as her executor. After Cecil Jones’ first co-trustee, Oscar Eckenstein, died (in 1921) he may have been sole trustee for several years, until Gerald Yorke replaced Eckenstein in 1928. Cecil Jones might have expected to have to face some conflict between himself as an ex-friend, and Yorke as a new friend of Crowley, but Yorke took an independent and serious view of his duties as trustee. After Rose Crowley died in 1932, Crowley wrote to Yorke (but apparently not to Cecil Jones) suggesting that all the income from the trust fund be paid to him, now that Lola Zaza had inherited money from her mother; but both trustees agreed to refuse the request.

Unless all parties come to an agreement to terminate a trust fund, it continues until all its beneficiaries are dead or any other requirements have been fulfilled. I couldn’t find any evidence as to when Lola Zaza’s trust fund was wound up. It didn’t happen at her coming-of-age. It might have happened when she married Frank Hill in 1934 but I don’t think it did. Most trust funds benefiting women are not terminated when they marry and in any case the other beneficiary, Crowley himself, would have had to agree the terms. Another possible date for a winding-up was after Aleister Crowley died in 1947. However, the trust fund could have continued, with trustees being replaced as they died, until Lola Zaza Hill died in 1990.

As far as I can tell, Cecil Jones never published anything on magic or alchemy. Assuming that he is the author identified as "G.C.J." in the July 1909 issue of Occult Review, he did contribute one book review. However, even this was under special circumstances: the book he reviewed was Crowley's book of correspondences, 777, which Crowley had worked on from notes compiled several years before, mainly by Allan Bennett but also by Cecil Jones and other GD members. Like so much in the occult world, the review was an in-joke, Cecil Jones pretending not to know who wrote the book or what the A...A was. With the exactitude of the scientist, he noticed some misprints, but excused them by saying that - given the nature of the work - he was surprised not to find more (perhaps Crowley should have asked him to copy-edit the manuscript before it went to the publishers). He applauded the supposedly unknown author, saying that the book brought into the public arena much "that has been jealously and foolishly kept secret in the past"; although he ended his short piece by warning future readers of 777 that of course, in the occult, there were some facts that could never be learned from books.

AFTER CROWLEY

If Cecil Jones continued to take any interest at all in magic and alchemy after 1911, he kept it quiet and worked either alone or with people he could trust. He continued to run his business until he retired in 1939 - and his timing in choosing that year to stop work was impeccable, because the premises he'd last been based in were destroyed soon after, in the Blitz. Cecil Jones' daughter Eileen, rather than his son George Alan, seems to have been the one to be a chip off the old alchemical block: in 1926 she graduated in chemistry at the University of London. In 1935 she married Stanley Breach Lewis, who I think was a teacher. It's been difficult to find out much about George Alan Jones but in 1949 he was working as the general manager of a dairy. On the probate registry record for his father's Will, he's described as a grocer; perhaps he was still with the dairy firm.

World War 1 was a conflict in which chemistry - and the chemists who could make it work and/or make it deadly - were an important factor. Alas, though, I have no idea what Cecil Jones did during that war: I haven't found a single reference to it, it was probably classified in any case. It's possible that he just continued to work at his business, though I find that difficult to believe.

The bomb that wrecked the building where Cecil Jones last worked probably destroyed all the records of his business, if he had not tidied them away as waste already. I have hardly found any information on the kind of clients Cecil Jones had, and the sort of analysis work they needed him to do. Perhaps a great deal of his work was on the materials of brewing - not all breweries were big enough to afford to employ a full-time chemist. The one piece of work I did find a reference to, was from the years just before Cecil Jones retired, and it can't have been typical of his daily routine: he was chosen by the geologists of the University of Cambridge's British East Greenland Expedition to analyse rock samples they had collected on the Skaergaard Peninsula in 1935 and 1936.

Not immediately, but soon after he retired, Cecil Jones and Ethel Melinda moved to Hastings, probably to 14 Elphinstone Road, his home address when he died. Perhaps Cecil's mother Sarah Gayner went with them. She died in 1949 at the age of 100; though she did not die in Hastings.

Cecil Jones kept active, at least during the first years of his retirement, developing new interests and keeping up old ones now he had more time. He enjoyed listening to music (both live and on the radio), corresponded with a large number of people, and continued to read widely. He kept his brain active by working on his French and Italian, and learned enough to be able to communicate in Esperanto (I wonder where he took lessons in that?) 1952 was a very sad year for him though: Ethel Melinda Jones died; and then an operation reminded Cecil Jones again of his mortality by restricting his mobility, so that he could no longer dig his garden.

Not only did Cecil Jones outlive Aleister Crowley (died 1947) - that might have been expected. He also survived his own wife, his sister-in-law Muriel Albinia Baker, both of Julian Baker's wives and even Julian himself (died 1958). He was able to write the best obituary of Julian Baker, but it must have been a melancholy task. He lived on for three years after his friend, dying aged 87 in St Helen's Hospital, Hastings, on 30 October 1960.

At the end of the process of doing what I could to build a biography of Cecil Jones, I still find him a very elusive personality. Even the two descriptions of his character that I found don't entirely agree. Many years after their friendship had ended, Crowley described him thus: "a Welshman... [with] a fiery but unstable temper, [he] bore a striking resemblance to many conventional representations of Jesus Christ. His spirit was both ardent and subtle. He was very widely read in Magick; and, being by profession an analytical chemist, was able to investigate the subject in a scientific spirit". Crowley also credited him with a wry sense of humour.

See the Sources section below for a poem by Crowley dedicated to Cecil Jones; undated but written before 1910 when they were still speaking to each other.

The other description is from one of Cecil Jones' obituaries and is based on the memories of people who knew him through his work; it's also obeying the dictat de mortuis nil nisi bonum. A rather different picture of him emerges from it than that written by Crowley: amongst his colleagues in chemistry, Cecil Jones was known for his sound judgement and good advice, and for combining "great physical caution with outstanding moral courage". The writer of the obituary remembered Cecil Jones as "tolerant and always contented": perhaps this calmness - so different from Crowley's memory of him - was the wisdom of age and experience. However, it agreed with Crowley on the "whimsical sense of humour". So I'll leave Cecil Jones making a remark in the witness box in 1911, about the time in 1899 when Crowley, seeking to baffle his creditors (of which he had a large number) signed the lease on a flat using a flamboyant Russian alias. Cecil Jones said of this: "a wiser man would have called himself Smith".

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR GEORGE CECIL JONES

Who's Who in Science (International) editor H H Stephenson. London: J and A Churchill 1912 p148. This notes that Cecil Jones was FIC, FCS and a member of the Society of Chemical Industry, the Institute of Public Analysts and the Institute of Brewing.

THE OBITUARY

The Royal Institute of Chemistry Journal volume 85 numbers 1-38 1961: p122 in the March 1961 issue.

BUT HE'S MUCH LESS OF A PUBLIC FIGURE THAN BAKER

For example, between 1905 and the late 1930s Julian Baker's name appeared in the Times quite often; but I never saw Cecil Jones referred to.

And he wasn't involved very much in this huge conference of professional chemists:

Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry published in 6 volumes London: Partridge and Cooper Ltd 1910. It was held in London from 27 May 1909 to 2 June 1909 and was a HUGE event with a gruelling series of social occasions as well as days full of lectures. The great and the good of chemistry from all over the world attended this. Neither Julian Baker nor Cecil Jones was important enough to give a lecture or dominate the social occasions; though Baker did speak at the final session, on 2 June 1909 at the Imperial Institute. Cecil Jones was a member of the Congress, but unlike Julian Baker he hadn't served on its organising committee. Mrs Baker may have served on the Congress' women's committee but Mrs Jones didn't - she was expecting her second child at the time.

GEORGE CECIL JONES SENIOR (assuming I have found the right person)

Times 9 April 1878 p1a in the deaths column: George Cecil Jones aged 30 of the National Bank of Scotland, accountant, had died “on 1st April 1878 at 37 Nicholas Lane Lombard Street”. Times 3 April 1878 p10 in a series of reports on inquests.

VICTORIAN ATTITUDES TO DEPRESSION

“Shattered Nerves”: Doctors, Patients, and Depression in Victorian England by Janet Oppenheim. New York, Oxford: Oxford University Press 1991. Chapter Five: Manly Nerves, especially pp150-152.

BACK TO CECIL JONES

EDUCATION

Re City of London School: Our Schools and Colleges: Volume I Boys by Frederick Shirley de Carteret-Bisson. London: 1879: p703.

The University of London 1858-1900: the Politics of Senate and Convocation by F M G Willson. The Boydell Press 2004 p462 begins a list of institutions that made up the University of London in 1900: p463 Central Technical College of City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education is one of them.

At www.britannica.com US based website of Encyclopedia Britannica: the City and Guilds of London Institute is now part of Imperial College.

EMPLOYERS

A good statistical introduction to chemistry as a profession in this period is on the web at www.euchems.eu, article by Anna Simmons of the Open University: Working in a Transitional Territory? Chemical Consultants in the United Kingdom 1870-1914. Read at the 6th International Conference on the History of Chemistry. I think the publication's title is Neighbours and Territories: the Evolving Identity of Chemistry: pp555-563. The statistics in this article seem to be showing that - after the gaining of experience in the field - self-employment as a consultant was the preferred option for chemists in the early days of the modern profession.

Passmore's training with B H Paul. The articles below seem to have been particularly important in establishing Paul's reputation:

Seen at pubs.rsc.org, Analyst vol 2 1877: 7-8: The Presence of Cinchonidine in the Quinine Sulphate of Commerce, by B H Paul, PhD.

Via archive.org to Year-Book of Pharmacy 1886-87 p70: The Amount of Caffeine in Various Kinds of Coffee, by B H Paul and A J Cownley.

I didn't see any publications in which B H Paul and F W Passmore were the authors.

In the British Library catalogue and on web, a series of publications by H Helbing FCS and F W Passmore:

BL 1893 Facts About Disinfectants

BL 1894 Malakine: Its Physical, Chemical and Therapeutical Properties

Information on malakine and what it is from The Medical Bulletin: A Monthly Journal of Medicine and Surgery volume 17 1895 p341, p529.

BL 1894 The Properties and Advantages of Symphoral, the New Diuretic

The web shows symphoral or symphorol preparations are still widely available. Chemical Synonyms and Trade Names by William Gardner. Crosby Lockwood and Son 1924 p243.

Not BL 1892 Recherches...sur le chloroforme médicinal. 11-page pamphlet

Not BL and I couldn't see a publication date: The Growth and Preparation of English Herbs and Drugs. 12-page pamphlet.

The Helbing and Passmore partnership was legally dissolved, probably a long time after the partners had gone their separate ways, at a rather telling date: London Gazette 10 March 1916 p2595 dissolved by mutual consent as of 1 August 1914; although this official notice of it had not been issued until 22 February 1916.

Later career of F W Passmore:

Reports of Patent, Design and Trade Mark Cases volume 23 1906 p274.

Journals of the House of Lords volume 151 1919 p17.

At www.nature.com volume 108 issued 17 November 1921 p379 short obituary of Francis William Passmore wh'd died on 29 October [1921] at his home at Bexley Heath.

Dowson Economic:

I found very little information on Joseph Emerson Dowson; or on his invention for the production of coal gas, which doesn't seem to have been patented.

British Library catalogue does have this: Joseph Emerson Dowson as co-author with Alfred T Larter: Producer Gas published London: Longmans and Co 1906.

The Health Exhibition Literature volume 18 1884 p248.

At www.gracesguide.co.uk information originally published by the Iron and Steel Institute in 1935: Dowson Economic Gas and Power Co Ltd, of Basingstoke had amalgamated with Mason's Gas Power Co Ltd of Levenshulme in 1910 to form Dowson and Mason Gas Plant Co Ltd.

Metallurgia: British Journal of Metals volumes 61-62 1960 p34.

Via www.nationalarchives.gov.uk to a list of building control documents held at Hampshire Record Office: couldn't see the exact number of file, but the Dowson's plant was in Kingsclere Road.

Remediation of Former Manufactured Gas Plants... by Allen W Hatheway 2011 p183 Table 3.10

Free, Rodwell:

Website list.english-heritage.org.uk using information from Industrial Archaeology of East Anglia by John Booker. Batsford 1980.

The British Malting Industry since 1830. Christine Clark 1998 p85-88, p107, p110, p192, p255.

Familiar Past? Archaeologies of Later Historical Britain, editors Sarah Tarlow, Susie West 2002 Article by Shane Gould on Mistley: p148.

Essex by Nikolaus Pevsner and James Bettley 2007 p601.

AND IN BUSINESS AS AN ANALYTICAL CHEMIST

Kelly's Directory of London 1908 street index p452 in which he is not listed as a resident of 43-45 Great Tower Street though 2 other analytical chemists are.

Kelly's 1910 street index p365 in which G C Jones, analytical chemist, occupies the 5th floor of 43-45 Gt Tower Street. Opposite this building is the one in which Bernard Dyer worked, the best-known analytical chemist of his day.

PUBLICATIONS

Perdurabo: The Life of Aleister Crowley by Richard Kaczynski. Berkeley CA: NAH Books originally 2000; the one I looked at was the revised edition, 2010: pp580-81 has a good list of articles.

Allen's Commercial Organic Analysis edited by Alfred Henry Allen 1913 seems to be a reprint (possibly with additions) of Commercial Organic Analysis 1912; there's also a 3rd edition 1918. The 1913 edition contains 2 articles by G C Jones: Alcohols; and Wines and Potable Spirits and -Glucosidal Bitters.

The Brewers' Journal 1915. Article by George Cecil Jones and Julian Baker (in that order, so I think Cecil Jones did most of the work on it): Original Gravity Tables Computed to Hundredths of a Degree. It was later published as a pamphlet: Original Gravity Tables Computed to Hundredths of a Degree, from the table attached to the Finance Act 1914.

The Analyst volumes 41-42 1916 pi editor is Julian L Baker; and G C Jones is on the list of those who are preparing abstracts for publication from articles published in other chemical magazines: this is what The Analyst magazine does. You can see back copies of The Analyst at pubs.rsc.org. There are examples of G C Jones doing review work for The Analyst in 1910, 1911, 1913 and 1920 as well as 1916.

Journal of the Institute of Brewing volume 31 1925 p189 article by G C Jones: Is Forced Malt Objectionable in the Brewery?

The work for the British East Greenland Expedition may not have been published in Cecil Jones' lifetime.

At journals.cambridge.org the journal Polar Record volume 2 no 13 January 1927 pp24-26 has genl information on the expedition of 1935-36.

This was the earliest reference I could find to Cecil Jones' work being published: Geoscience issue 12 1984 in Dn as Meddelelser Om Gronland translated as Syenitic and Associated Intrusions of...E Greenland p3 with authors as W A Deer, D R C Kempe and G C Jones. I did find a reference in Greenland Geoscience volume 1 1979 p4 to a publication by Wager in 1937 which may have mentioned Cecil Jones' analysis work, but I cldn't find any more information on the web. IF the 1937 paper mentioned Jones, then he must have done the work around 1936.

Region of East Greenland by W A Deer, D R C Kempe and G C Jones: p14.

EILEEN CECIL JONES

University of London Calendar issue of 1920 p318; issue of 1926 p314. And issue of 1932 p459 in an alphabetical by surname list probably of graduates: Eileen Cecil Jones 1924-26 2nd class chemistry.

GEORGE ALAN JONES

This was too common a name for me to identify him with confidence. He is described in Cecil Jones' Probate Registry listing as a "grocer", but no address is given for him.

THE OTHER EXECUTOR, Cecil' son-in-law Stanley Breach Lewis

No probate entry as far as 1966 and only 1 other item: London Gazette 26 January 1973 p1314 notice probably issued under the Trustees Act 1925 re the death of Gertrude Dora Lewis, spinster of West Wickham Kent, who'd died on 28 January 1972.

JONES AND THE OCCULT

In the Golden Dawn Collection now at the Freemasons' Library:

GD 2/4/3/2 is typed letter to SLM composed by PWB and dated 4 March 1900. In it SLM is told that "yest anoon" Florence Farr had told the flwgd GD members the contents of SLM's letter of 16 Feb 1900 alleging the GD founding docts were forgeries. Pp were: Dorothea and Edmund Hunter; MWB; WBY; PWB. GCJ had been asked to be present when Florence F told the others; but he hadn't turned up. The group wld be asking him to attend their next mtg.

GD 2/4/3/6 is Mins of mtg of 10 March 1900, after no response had been rcvd from SLM when the group asked him if the allegs were true. Those present at the mtg decided to give SLM one more week to make a response: GCJ was at this mtg.

GD 2/4/3/16a mins of mtg of 29 March 1900 of the group now a cttee investigating the allegs. Those present: Florence F; Dorothea and Edmund Hunter; PWB. GCJ didn't attend this one.

GD 2/4/3/26a dtls of resolns passed at a 2nd Order mtg 21 April 1900 at which 22 pp were present. The ((investigating)) cttee constituted on 12 March 1900 was approved to run the 2nd Order until a m prop constituted execv took office; except that 2 orig members were deemed no lgr to want to be on it, and 2 were elected to replace them. The 2 that were deemed no lgr on the cttee were: Blackden and GCJ; the 2 who replaced them were Helen Rand and Charles Rosher. Rosher spcfc to replace GCJ. GD 2/4/3/35 is the Mins of the 2nd O mtg of 21 April 1900, heavily annotated and n actually having a list of all those who attended. However, from the a/c of those who took an active part I managed to make a list; and GCJ wasn't one of them, I think he didn't go to the mtg.

And he seems to have tkn no fur active part in the events of 1900 in the GD.

-

Apparently there is an article on him in Welsh Occultists LLC Books 2010. The British Library hasn't got a copy of the book so I haven't been able to check it out.

THE TWO EDITIONS OF ALEISTER CROWLEY'S CONFESSIONS

The first one, published during his life-time, only reaches early 1904.

The Spirit of Solitude: an Autohagiography subseq re-Antichristened The Confessions of Aleister Crowley. In two volumes published London: Mandrake Press Museum St 1929. This is on the web at hermetic.com/crowley/confessions.

THE MORE FAMILIAR VERSION PUBLISHED AFTER HE HAD DIED

The Confessions of Aleister Crowley: An Autohagiography. I used the edition edited by John Symonds and Kenneth Grant, published London, Boston, Henley: Routledge and Kegan Paul 1979.

The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage translated by Samuel Liddell MacGregor Mathers. When Cecil Jones suggested that Crowley try doing its rituals, the book was hot off the press: published London: J M Watkins 1898.

<http://Www.hermetic.com/crowley/confessions>: A time-line of Crowley's life is at Www.lashtal.com/wiki/Aleister\_Crowley\_Timeline which is the website of the Aleister Crowley Society. I think it's based on Crowley's papers.

There are plenty of biographies of Crowley already. The one I have consulted is Perdurabo: The Life of Aleister Crowley by Richard Kaczynski. Berkeley CA: NAH Books originally 2000; the one I looked at was the revised edition, 2010.

The Winged Beetle poems by Aleister Crowley. 350 copies privately printed 1910. The whole book is dedicated to John Fuller, a great admirer of Crowley's poetry. Most of the poems are dedicated to one person or another. Only three members of the Golden Dawn are honoured thus: Cecil Jones; Allan Bennett; and Elaine Simpson. None of the poems are dated. P22-23 The Hermit: An Attack on Barbercraft is dedicated to Cecil Jones:

p22 At last an end of all I hoped and feared!

Muttered the hermit through his elfin beard.

Then what art thou? the evil whisper whirred.

I doubt me sorely if the hermit heard.

To all God's questions never a word he said,

But simply shook his venerable head.

God sent all plagues; he laughed and heeded not,

Till people took him for an idiot.

God sent all joys; he only laughed amain,

Till people certified him as insane.

But somehow all his fello-lunatics

Began to imitate his silly tricks.

And stranger still, their prospects so enlarged

That one by one the patients were discharged.

God asked him by what right he interfered;

He only laughed into his elfin beard.

P23

When God revealed Himself to mortal prayer

He gave a fatal opening to Voltaire.

Our hermit had dispensed with Sinai's thunder,
But on the other hand he made no blunder;

He knew (no doubt) that any axiom
Would furnish bricks to build some Donkeydom.

But! — all who urged that hermit to confess
Caught the infection of his happiness.

I would it were my fate to dree his weird;
I think I will grow an elfin beard.
None of the poems in the colln are dated.

CECIL JONES' PUBLISHED WORK ON THE OCCULT

Occult Review volume 10 July-December 1909. Editor is Ralph Shirley. Published by William Rider and Co Ltd. Volume 10 number 1 July 1909 p54-55 a review by "G.C.J." of the anonymous 777 Vel Prolegomena Symbolica ad Systemam Sceptico-Mysticae Viae London: Walter Scott Publishing

THE RITES OF ELEUSIS

Occult Review volume 12 number 4 October 1910 p213-15 on the Rites of Eleusis, describing what would happen at them and giving the dates of the performances and where to get tickets.

JONES v THE LOOKING GLASS

Times Thursday 27 April 1911 p4a in the law notices section: King's Bench Division, before Mr Justice Scrutton and a jury: Jones v The Looking Glass Publishing Co (Limited) and others which had "commenced yesterday [Wednesday 26 April] and concluded to-day". This article was short - just a summary of the judgement. The alleged libel appeared in The Looking Glass on 26 November 1910. Mr Simmons was Jones' barrister. Mr Schiller was the barrister for the publishers of the The Looking Glass. The Looking Glass' editor, Mr de Wend Fenton, appeared in his own defence and on behalf of The Looking Glass' printers. Jones' solicitors were Bullock and Co.

On the web at www.100thmonkeypress.com there is what is described as a transcription by the Times' court reporter of some (but not all) of the evidence: far more than appeared in the Times' report. The cross-examination of Jones is there, and the evidence given by Samuel Liddell Mathers and Edward William Berridge; but not the evidence of Jones' witness John Fuller.

Small pamphlet 666 Bibliotheca Crowleyana a catalogue of books pamphlets etc by or about Aleister Crowley, collected and with an Introduction by Major-General J F C Fuller with copyright Fuller 1966. It's a typescript, published Delectus Books: Introduction is pp2-8; Cecil Jones' 1898 manuscript file p25; Fuller's coverage of the Jones v The Looking Glass trial p27.

LOLA ZAZA'S TRUST FUND

See Kaczynski for the details and for the death of Eckenstein and the appointment of Gerald Yorke. Probate Registry record for the death of Emily Bertha Crowley and the identity of her executor.

3 December 2017

Email me at

Amandragora@attglobal.net

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

<http://www.wrightanddavis.co.uk>

***

END JONES

***

Frank Jubb was offered initiation into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn in 1890 by members of its Horus temple in Bradford. But he turned it down - probably the only person in the G membership lists who never actually became a member. R A Gilbert in his list of members (see the main Sources section at the end of the file) suggests that Frank might have got as far as signing a pledge form before changing his mind; and so had to be recorded in the archives.

I imagine the normal procedure, if someone refused the chance to join the GD, was to throw away any paperwork involving them; so that except in one case, we now don't know who they were. The one case is Arthur Conan Doyle. There's nothing in the GD files to indicate he had the chance of initiation but decided against it; but he wrote about the incident himself many years later.

This is one of my short biographies. They mostly cover GD members who lived in Bradford, Liverpool and Edinburgh though Frank Jubb didn't live in any of those places, he grew up in Halifax before moving to London. I've done what I can with Frank Jubb, using the web and sources in London. I'm sure there's far more information on him out there, but it will be in the Halifax and south London record offices, the local papers...I'd need to be on the spot to look at them, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

April 2016

My basic sources for any GD member are in a section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources for this particular member are listed at the end of each section.

This is what I have found on FRANK JUBB.

IN THE GD

Nothing! Frank Jubb didn't get as far as being initiated. However, unlike with most GD members, I can hazard a guess as to who he knew who might have put his name forward as a possible recruit. Frank had grown up in Halifax. There were two GD members living in Halifax around 1890. One was Lewis Stanley Jastrzebski (pronounced Yast-shemb-ski) who was employed in the Council's library. Given Frank Jubb's background, the more likely one was Stanley's brother, Bogdan Edwards, who was a GP.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Not that I've found; and perhaps this is the point: Frank Jubb didn't have any interest in the occult.

Sources checked:

Theosophical Society membership registers 1890-1901.

The catalogue of the Freemasons' Library. Frank Jubb wasn't in it though that doesn't necessarily mean he was not a freemason, it might just mean that he kept his involvement very local. My own feeling is that he wasn't a freemason.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

There may be some in the Peckham local papers. I haven't found any elsewhere.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Frank Jubb was a son of Abraham Jubb and his wife Hannah. Abraham Jubb had been born in Mirfield, between Huddersfield and Dewsbury. He trained as a doctor, qualifying in 1847, by which time he was working as a surgeon in the Halifax Infirmary. He joined the Provincial Medical and Surgical Association to keep up with the latest developments in his profession.

Abraham Jubb was a member of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society and seems to have been particularly interested in fossils: some fern species and shells found by Dr Jubb in the seams of the Halifax coalfield, were donated to the Society's collection.

Abraham Jubb married a local woman, Hannah Phillis Ambler, in Halifax in 1849. They had a large family. Frank was one of the youngest of their children, born in 1864.

I think that the Jubb family lived on Akeds Road in Halifax for several decades. They may even have lived in the same house. The house numbers are different in different censuses but that may just indicate that the houses were renumbered by the Post Office at some stage. I think the street name is the same in the censuses of 1871 to 1891; but in 1871 in particular, the census official's handwriting leaves everything to be desired; so I'm not sure.

On the day of the 1871 census, Hannah and two of her daughters were away from home; but the Abrahams, father and eldest son, were at home, with Catherine (11), Frank (7) and the youngest child Ada (aged 2). Abraham senior and Hannah were comfortably off, employing a nursemaid, a cook and a housemaid. By 1881 both their sons had left home. Daughters Emily, Catherine and Beatrice were all still unmarried and living at home; and the Jubbs were employing just a cook and housemaid, the services of a nursemaid no longer being needed.

Hannah Jubb died in 1889 and loosened the family's ties with Halifax. Abraham Jubb junior was working as a commercial traveller and by census day 1891 he was living in Cheetham in Manchester with his wife Ellen. Abraham Jubb senior was still at Akeds Road in 1891, with daughters Emily, Catherine and Ada who were all still unmarried. By 1901, however, Abraham Jubb senior had retired and had moved to Morecambe with Emily and Ada; where he died in 1906.

Sources for Frank's family in Yorkshire and Lancashire:

At Familysearch England-ODM GS film number 0990708, 0990757: baptism of Abraham Jubb, 1 June 1823 at Mirfield Yorks. Parents Thomas and Mary; Mary's surname before her marriage wasn't given.

General Medical Council registers began in 1859. Abraham Jubb was registered between 1859 and 1903 though census data indicates he had retired a few years before his last entry. He was Licensed to practice by the Society of Apothecaries of London and by the Royal College of Surgeons of England, in 1847.

Provincial Medical and Surgical Journal number 34 1844 issue of 20 November 1844: Abraham Jubb was listed as having gone to Derby Town Hall on 14 November for a meeting of the Association, called to consider a parliamentary bill intended to increase regulation of the medical profession.

Transactions of the Provincial Medical and Surgical Association 1845 p358: Abraham Jubb as senior surgeon at the Halifax Infirmary.

Leisure:

The Naturalist 1839 p445.

Probate Registry 1906.

EDUCATION

What schooling Frank Jubb had I do not know; I would presume he went to a school in Halifax. Unlike his elder brother, Frank went into his father's profession. He's not on the census in England in 1881 so I guess he was already in Ireland, studying medicine. In 1881 he passed the English Royal College of Surgeons' exams but he didn't get licenced to practice until 1888, by the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland.

Source:

GMC Registers 1891 to 1932.

Medical Times and Gazette: A Journal of Medical Science, Literature, Criticism and News 1881. London: J and A Churchill of 11 New Bond Street. 1881 volume 2 p425 issue of 1 October 1881.

WORK/PROFESSION

Frank's GMC registration for 1891 lists him at his father's address - 28 Akeds Road Halifax - but his census return for that year shows that he had his own household, of which he was sole member, at 4 Hopwood Lane. He was working as a physician. He was probably gaining some GP experience in his father's practice though he might have been working at a hospital instead or aswell - I haven't been able to discover whether he was employed elsewhere. Abraham Jubb senior was likely to retire quite soon and Frank could just have inherited his father's patients and stayed in Halifax. He chose otherwise, moving south to establish himself in the relatively new London suburb of Peckham. Though he moved house several times, he remained in practice as a GP in Peckham for the rest of his life.

Frank was 50 when the first World War broke out; rather old to volunteer and of course he had his family and his patients to think of. However, he was able to contribute to the war effort. In April 1915 he and a large number of other men - all presumably qualified doctors although the list doesn't specifically say so - were given military rank in the Royal Army Medical Corps. Frank was made a lieutenant. As more and more casualties were brought back to England for treatment, these men spent time working for the Home Hospitals Reserve in addition to their normal work.

Sources:

GMC Registers. Frank's listed for the first time in 1891 at 28 Akeds Road Halifax. Unfortunately there are then a few Registers in which he isn't listed, until he reappears in 1899 at 35 Nunhead Crescent Peckham Rye. In the Registers of 1903 and 1907 he's at 125 Evelina Road Nunhead. By 1911 he'd moved to 135 The Rye Peckham. The next Register available at Ancestry is that of 1923. In that issue, and throughout the 1920s, Frank's at 241 Peckham Rye SE15 which might be the 1911 address renumbered. His last appearance in the Registers is in 1931, still at 241 Peckham Rye.

125 Evelina Road and 135 The Rye Peckham are Frank's home addresses on the relevant census: his medical practice was based in his own house.

The Lancet 1915 volume 1 January-June p1255 issue of 12 June 1915.

ANY PUBLIC LIFE/EVIDENCE FOR LEISURE TIME? Bearing in mind, of course, that most leisure activities leave no trace behind them.

No, though this is because the evidence is lacking. On the web, membership of such societies as the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society is better covered in the mid-19th century than later. The activities of local groups like choirs, friendly societies, sports or social clubs are covered by the local papers and haven't made it onto the web as yet.

FAMILY

In 1897, Frank Jubb married a woman called Lucy Donovan.

I haven't been able to identify Lucy Donovan on a census before her marriage to Frank; so I know nothing about her background except that her family was probably Irish. Even her name has been a bit of a problem: she was registered as Lucy Donovan in Greenwich in 1873; but her marriage registration has her as Violet Lucy A R Donovan. I wasn't quite sure what name to look for on census returns so I searched using both her forenames; but I couldn't find her.

Frank and Lucy had one child, a daughter born in 1898 and named Phyllis after Frank's mother. On the day of the 1901 census they were living at 125 Evelina Road in Peckham where they employed just the one, live-in servant girl. They had moved to 135 Peckham Rye by 1911. Phyllis was at school, of course. And the Jubbs were still being cautious with their expenditure, employing one general servant.

I found a marriage registration in Camberwell for a woman transcribed as Phyllis O (sic) Jubb in 1920. Jubb is not a common surname especially in south London and I think the bride may have been Frank's daughter, whose birth was registered as Phyllis Dorothy. If so, she married Robert Comrie.

DEATH

Frank Jubb died in King's College Hospital in May 1932. Lucy Jubb acted as his executor; and after that she disappears from view. Perhaps I should have searched freebmd further than 1960, but I couldn't find a death registration for her before then. I checked 1932-40 but she didn't remarry in England during those years.

DESCENDANTS? AND WHAT (IF ANYTHING) HAPPENED NEXT.

If it was Frank's daughter who married Robert Comrie in 1920, he may have descendants. I wasn't sufficiently confident that it was her in that marriage registration to check that out.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

10 April 2016

Email me at

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Probably Vera possibly Foster definitely Kelly who was initiated into the Golden Dawn in October 1899 and chose the Latin motto 'Veritas simile'.

The name says it all, when it comes to the problem of identifying the lesser-known members of the Golden Dawn. When compiling his list of GD members R A Gilbert couldn't read this woman's handwriting, and transcribed a best guess. I hoped that I might do a bit better when I finally got to see the GD Members' Roll which R A Gilbert had as his original source; but I couldn't make anything more of her name than Gilbert had.

I didn't see much point in trying to follow up someone whose name I couldn't be sure of.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

This is the second of my three files on Florence Elizabeth Sherard Kennedy, who was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in May 1891. As well as Florence, five other people were initiated that evening: Florence's sister Cecilia Macrae; Cecilia's sister-in-law Louisa Ida Macrae; Augustus Montague Cooper; Agnes Alicia de Pallandt; and Emily Katherine Bates.

Florence chose the Latin motto 'Volo'. She was not the first person to have opted for it - Oliver Firth, initiated in 1888, had got there first. However, Florence was allowed to have her choice because Firth was a member of the GD's Horus, temple in Bradford, so that references to them weren't likely to get mixed up.

Florence and her sister were committed Isis-Urania temple members during the 1890s. They both did the necessary study and were initiated into its inner, 2nd Order, in the autumn of 1892. However, whereas Cecilia Macrae was involved with Stella Matutina, as late as the 1920s, Florence did not join any of the GD's daughter orders.

Believe it or not, this is one of my short biographies. It covers Florence's life until the death of her first husband. She lived for 50 more years! With access to Florence Kennedy's papers, I am sure I could have written a full-length book. However, the papers are in Athens. I'd love to go and work through them, but I can't afford to stay in Greece long enough to do them justice.

Short it may be, but this biography is still in three pieces:

- the Laings, which you can find on my GD Index page under 'the two Macraes'. It includes coverage of Cecilia, Florence and their siblings growing up in a very wealthy family; and also of their first cousin Agnes Cathcart, née Baxter, who was a GD member in Edinburgh.

This file is the second one of the three:

- Florence in the GD and TS, and her early art training.

And then there's the third one:

- Florence and her husband Edward Sherard Kennedy; their work as artists; and the last few years of the marriage.

Sally Davis

June 2017

My basic sources for any GD member are in a section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources for this particular member are listed at the end of each section.

Just reiterating here that this is the second file of three: what I have found on FLORENCE ELIZABETH SHERARD KENNEDY, née Laing; who was known as Flo or Floy to her friends.

IN THE GD

Florence and her elder sister Cecilia joined the GD together and they tended to act as a duo within the Order. In order to be allowed into the GD's inner, 2nd Order, members had to study a wide range of occult texts and pass a series of exams. In May 1892, Cecilia borrowed a large number of manuscripts from William Wynn Westcott's unofficial GD library (essentially, his own collection of occult books) in order to begin this daunting programme. I'm sure she intended to work through them with Florence. The careful study of difficult documents, and the being examined on them by experts in the field, were not something either sister is likely to have done before. They both passed the exams, though, and became 2nd Order members in the same month.

In 1893, with the GD looking for a new set of rooms for meetings and rituals, the sisters were entrusted with the task of inspecting a possible venue in Albert Street, just behind Mornington Crescent station. They visited it together, and agreed that it wasn't suitable. The search eventually ended with the renting of rooms in Oakley Square, a few minutes' walk away.

They also tended to act as one during the various controversies that engulfed the GD in the mid-1890s.

The first of those was GD founder Samuel Liddell Mathers' expulsion of Annie Horniman from the GD in the autumn of 1896. It was thought at the time, and has been the general view since, that Mathers did it because Annie had stopped paying him and his wife Mina/Moina the allowance she had been giving them for the last few years. I think there's also evidence that Mathers felt threatened by Annie's increasing influence within the GD, where she was respected for her understanding of magic and as a hard-working member of Isis-Urania temple.

Mathers tried to out-flank those who were likely to criticise his decision, by widening his field of attack - he made charges of insubordination against quite a few other GD members, including both Florence and Cecilia. The sisters were some of Annie's many personal friends in the GD - presumably that's why Mathers accused them. But it was Florence that Annie wrote to later, telling her that the cutting off of her supply of money to the Mathers was the real reason why she had been ejected; which suggests that Florence was the sister that Annie knew best. In December 1896/January 1897 Frederick Leigh Gardner organised a petition that pleaded with Mathers for Annie to be reinstated. Florence and Cecilia both signed it; but when Mathers made it a matter of obedience that the petition be dropped, both submitted to his authority. However, the necessity for submission to Mathers had made Florence very angry, more so than Cecilia: Florence had thought that the wording of the petition had been sufficiently humble to appease even Mathers, and was disgusted to find that it wasn't. She went to William Wynn Westcott (the other founder of the GD) to ask him to intervene; only to find Westcott doing what he usually did in a GD crisis - nothing, thereby avoiding conflict with more aggressive personalities. Westcott told Florence that the GD members should bow to Mathers as a great magician, even on issues that didn't really involve magic.

Mathers' fury at Annie Horniman's refusal to finance him any more was because he had no other income. He did not intend to get paid work and perhaps even thought it was his and Mina's right to have their magical work supported by the Order with money. The end of Annie's funding meant that for the rest of the 1890s, GD members regularly found themselves having to send money to the Mathers, to finance their occult work, their rent and their other expenses. Though it must have gone against the grain with her, Florence did send £10 to them to tide them over one of these crises, in 1897.

The later 1890s in the GD's Isis-Urania temple were characterised by the growth of groups within the larger group, where small numbers of members would meet regularly to pursue particular interests. The first such group was begun by Frederick Leigh Gardner and Frederick William Wright, in the spring of 1897. They invited Westcott to join them, he invited Reena Fulham Hughes and Cecilia Macrae to join, and the group ended by being Westcott's group. Florence was the last to be recruited into this sub-group: I expect Westcott was aware that he had disappointed her in the uproar over Annie Horniman. She agreed to join, though, provided the group met at times that were convenient. Monday afternoons were convenient to her and during 1897 the group mostly met at those times. However, by March 1898 Florence and Mrs Fulham Hughes had both given up going; Florence possibly doing so for reasons not connected with the GD.

Florence and Cecilia got on reasonably well with Frederick Leigh Gardner, but they seem to have been in a minority. Others - particularly the younger women - complained so often about his rudeness, arrogance and militaristic way of ordering the rituals, that in the end, in 1897, Florence Farr (now in charge of the GD's daily administration) decided she couldn't have such a divisive personality in the Isis-Urania temple any longer, and sent him to run the Horus Temple in Bradford instead.

It was Florence Kennedy that Gardner wrote to on 14 October 1897, complaining that Florence Farr had made her decision without hearing his side of the argument, and demanding that he have his say. But it was Cecilia who wrote back to him to say how sorry she was to hear that he had been ordered out of Isis-Urania. Cecilia was wondering how much longer the GD could continue in the face of so many upheavals and arguments. The sisters discussed whether they should both send in their resignations. In the end, they decided they wouldn't, in case their departures should be the final straw when it seemed that the GD might unravel at any moment.

Cecilia sent a second letter, telling Gardner what she and Florence had decided to do. The letter didn't contain any suggestion that Florence shared her sadness at Gardner's enforced departure. If Florence wrote back to him, the letter hasn't survived. There were reasons for why Florence's views may have differed from Cecilia's on this issue. Florence may have shared the majority view of Gardner's behaviour. It's also likely that Florence would have supported Florence Farr's decision in any case: the two Florences had become good friends. I'm sure Gardner was aware of this, which is why it was Florence's help he had tried to obtain, rather than Cecilia's, in fighting his dismissal.

In the late 1890s Florence Farr often visited Florence and Edward Kennedy at their country home - The Cottage, Edenbridge, in Kent. In fact, Florence Farr had written the letter dismissing Gardner from the Isis-Urania temple, at The Cottage, when she was staying there in August 1897; and had probably discussed the problems caused by Gardner's behaviour with Florence Kennedy. Florence Farr went to stay with Florence Kennedy for a longer period in 1900, to support her in the months after husband had died.

The friendship between the two Florences made it inevitable that Florence Farr should invite Florence Kennedy to join her Sphere Group, set up to delve further into Egyptian magic, a branch of magic that Florence Farr had researched. The records of this group - if there were any - haven't survived, but it's thought to have been in existence between 1897 and 1901, and the members of it are known, more or less, as Robert Felkin made a note of their names. As well as the two Florences, and Cecilia Macrae, there was Marcus Worsley Blackden, another expert on Egyptian magic and one who had actually been to Egypt; Harriet Butler; Robert Felkin; Edmund Hunter; Dorothea Hunter; Henrietta Paget; Helen Rand; Robert Palmer Thomas; and Ada Waters. Though Felkin didn't include her name in his list, it's possible that Reena Fulham Hughes might also have been in the Group. When Mathers himself was ejected from the GD in 1900, it was members of the Sphere Group who took over the management of the Order; though Florence Kennedy was not one of those appointed.

AFTER THE GD

Florence's husband Edward died in January 1900 and she was not an active member of the GD after that. However, friendships made through the GD were still important to her. In 1902, W B Yeats mentioned in a letter that Florence had been paying £3 a week for the last year, for Althea Gyles to be cared for in a sanatorium. Margaret Alethea Gyles, known as Althea Gyles (1868-1949), was from an Anglo-Irish family and was a related to Florence and Cecilia in a distant way; but she was also a friend of Annie Horniman; and for a short while had some kind of relationship with Aleister Crowley, who was in the GD from 1898 to 1900. She was an artist and illustrator, poet and novelist; but her chaotic lifestyle and self-neglect made her the despair of all who knew her and were probably the reason why she was not thought suitable to join the GD herself. In 1900 she had been sent to the Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, on City Road in London, and perhaps this was the treatment that Florence's money was funding. I don't know how long the payments went on.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

THEOSOPHY

The membership registers of the Theosophical Society show both Florence and Cecilia joining the TS between 1898 and 1901. That registers may not tell the whole story though. Handwritten notes on Florence's record describe her as a long-serving member, and as a member of London Lodge. London Lodge was founded in 1876, before the TS itself was set up in London, and for many years it held itself aloof from the TS in general, had its own finances and kept its own records. So there's actually no telling when the sisters first joined the TS. Later on (the TS's records don't say exactly when) Cecilia and Florence moved from London Lodge to join Blavatsky Lodge, where Helena Petrovna Blavatsky herself held sway from May 1887, when she settled in London, to her death in May 1891, around the time the sisters joined the GD. William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers were both active members of Blavatsky Lodge during the 1880s, and that it was most likely through them that Florence and Cecilia were invited to join the GD.

The GD records that have survived don't seem to know about Florence's remarriage (in December 1902); but the TS knew her new surname. In December 1900 Florence acted as co-sponsor for a new member, so she must still have been going to TS meetings regularly at that time. The new member was Miss Margaret Scott-Kerr of St James's Park; Florence's co-sponsor was Katherine Burke. Florence continued to send the TS a £20 donation/subscription each year until February 1909. At that point she resigned, one of the many members to do so when Annie Besant was elected TS president for life, in succession to Colonel Olcott. Cecilia resigned a few weeks later. Despite the change of lodge, and despite her resignation from the TS, Cecilia kept up a friendship with Alfred Percy and Patience Sinnett, who had been London Lodge's foremost members in the 1880s. Florence, however, doesn't seem to have been particularly friendly with the Sinnetts.

SPIRITUALISM

I haven't found any evidence that Florence was a spiritualist. It is hard to tell whether people were spiritualists as spiritualism was a very locally, even family-based pursuit and there was no over-arching organisation with a membership list that can be consulted now. However, it's unlikely that Florence and Cecilia Laing's family held seances at home: their father, Samuel Laing, did not believe that the dead were trying to contact the living through the agency of spiritualist mediums.

Sources:

GD

Freemasons' Library: GD collection GD2/2/8a Receipts for items borrowed from William Wynn Westcott during period 1891-1892. Receipt signed 1 May 1892 by Cecilia Macrae.

Women of the Golden Dawn: Rebels and Priestesses by Mary K Greer. Rochester Vermont: Park Street Press 1995: p184 quoting Yorke Collection: New Springback Folder, letter Florence Kennedy to Frederick Leigh Gardner 6 January 1897. Beware her p246 though: she says that Florence Kennedy died in 1900; it was Florence's husband who died.

Howe (publication details in Sources section): p102; pp142-44; p170; p173; pp181-82.

Warburg Institute Gerald Yorke Collection catalogue number NS73 - letters mostly to Frederick Leigh Gardner, but occasionally copies of letters sent by him:

- copy of a letter from Frederick Leigh Gardner to Florence Kennedy 14 October 1897.
- letters William Wynn Westcott to Frederick Leigh Gardner 17 May 1897 and 31 May 1897 about the group Gardner and Wright were trying to bring together.
- two letters from Cecilia Macrae to Frederick Leigh Gardner, 19 October and 24 October 1897; from Oakhurst Oxted.

FLORENCE'S EGYPTIAN/SPHERE GROUP:

Cauda Pavonis was the newsletter/journal of the Hermetic Text Society. At www.alchemywebsite.com/cauda.html there is a list of articles published in it, beginning 1982 but it's not published any longer. When it was published it was issued by the Department of English, Washington State University at Pullman. Volumes 11-16 1992 pp7-12 article by Sharon E Cogdill on Florence Farr's Sphere Group.

The Alchemist of the Golden Dawn: Letters of the Revd William Alexander Ayton to Frederick Leigh Gardner and Others 1886-1905 edited and with introduction by Ellic Howe. Aquarian Press 1985: p93, letter from William Alexander Ayton to Frederick Leigh Gardner of 9 October 1900.

Althea Gyles:

There's a wikipedia page, saying that she moved to London in 1892 and studied at the Slade. She's also in ODNB.

There's no mention of Florence Kennedy in Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume I. Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume II 1896-1900 does mention Florence and Althea Gyles on p611 footnote 8.

Collected Letters of W B Yeats Volume III 1901-04 p32 footnote 4 another list of Sphere Group members, with the same 12 names but also suggesting p33 Reena Fulham Hughes, who is not on the Cauda Pavonis list. Florence's payments towards Althea Gyles' treatment: P198 and footnote 1; letter dated 9 June 1902.

THEOSOPHY

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1898-February 1901 p37

Autobiography of Alfred Percy Sinnett, unedited version published by the Theosophical History Centre London 1986. Mostly written 1916 but an addition starting again from p1 at the end. There's no mention of Florence in this account, though several of Cecilia. A P Sinnett was still going to stay with Cecilia and her husband as late as 1918.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Cecilia Macrae (born 1848) and Florence Kennedy (born 1853) were two of the five daughters of Samuel Laing (1812-97) and his wife Mary Dickson Cowan (1819-1902); there were also five sons, three of whom died young.

FLORENCE AS AN ARTIST: PART 1

I've said in my file on the Laing family that I haven't got any certain information about how the Laing sisters were educated: what they learned and who taught it them is a mystery. However, in the 1880s paintings by Florence were accepted by major galleries for exhibition; and she must have learned that standard of painting somewhere. This is a piece of speculation, but I'm going to suggest that Florence attended painting classes in Dresden during the winter of 1869-70. She certainly was in Dresden at that time, because she met the American artist Anna Lea (later Anna Lea Merritt) there that winter. Anna had gone to Dresden specifically to learn to paint in the studio of Heinrich Hofmann. In her Memoir, Anna doesn't actually say that Florence was a fellow art student; but I think it's a reasonable assumption to make.

Heinrich Hofmann was famous for most of his career as a painter, but changing styles in art were making his work look very old-fashioned by the end of his life and have caused him to be forgotten since. After a training in Germany, Belgium and Italy, he settled in Dresden in 1862 and remained there until his death in 1911. His religious paintings were much admired at the time and much copied, especially his paintings of scenes from the life of Jesus. He was appointed to a professorship at the Dresden academy, but not until June 1870; so Anna Lea - and Florence, if my hunch is correct - must have been private pupils, working in his studio.

Florence was the only member of the Laing family that Anna Lea says she met that winter. Anna's Memoir reads as if Florence was in Dresden on her own, but I'm sure she was not - she was only 16. The Laings often visited Germany and had many friends there. I doubt if Florence's parents would have let her go to Dresden for a stay of - possibly - several months, if she had not been able to stay with people they knew.

Anna Lea left Dresden for Paris early in 1870. She was settling in nicely there when the Franco-Prussian War broke out and caused her to have to opt for England as the place to continue her painting lessons. Hearing of Anna's unexpected arrival in London, Florence invited her to Sunday tea with the whole Laing family. In her Memoir, Anna describes both Florence and Cecilia Laing (later Macrae) as becoming life-long friends as a result of that tea party; but in the Memoir Cecilia is mentioned far more, and Florence not at all after around 1900. It's likely that Anna Lea Merritt and Florence Kennedy were close friends in the 1880s. However, a break-point in their relationship came in 1891, with both Anna and Florence renting houses in the country but not near each other. Anna moved permanently to Hurstbourne Tarrant on the edge of Salisbury Plain; she mentions Cecilia visiting her there, but not Florence. Florence and her husband took a house in Kent near the border with Surrey; while keeping a house in London as well.

In the 1880s Anna Lea Merritt was living in Tite Street Chelsea, where her friends included the artists Whistler, Burne-Jones, G F Watts, Lord Leighton, Holman Hunt and others. It's possible (see the third file in this sequence) that Florence knew them already but if she didn't, she could have met them through Anna.

As part of her training, Anna Lea asked many of her acquaintances to sit for their portrait. She was especially pleased with the one she did of Florence, and Florence allowed it to be shown at the Royal Academy in 1879.

If Florence and Anna continued to train as painters together, in England, in the early 1870s, Anna doesn't mention it in her Memoir. One critic spoke in 1879 of Florence's painting A Quiet Corner as being "French-like in execution". He also described her technique as "delicate" but that doesn't mean anything in particular: it was something frequently said by male critics of paintings by women, signifying that their work had not stepped outside the allotted female sphere of the small and the un-heroic. I haven't come across anything that says where, when or with whom Florence might have acquired the ability to paint in a style that British critics associated with France; though I do put forward some suggestions below, in my third file on Florence Kennedy.

Sources:

Love Locked Out: the Memoirs of Anna Lea Merritt with a Checklist of Her Works ed Galina Gorokhoff. Boston: Museum of Fine Arts. No publication date but the British Library stamp has "Sep [19]83": pxiv for Anna's account of her art training, and the sudden enforced move to London. On pxv: Anna Lea married the painting conservator and art critic Henry Merritt in 1877 but he died only a few months afterwards. On pxvi for Anna's Chelsea based artist friends. Ppxix-pxix: the move to Hurstbourne Tarrant, where died on 7 April 1930.

Mentions of Florence: p55, p77, p81, p195. Just noting here that Edward Sherard Kennedy is not mentioned at all in Anna's Memoir.

The books' checklist of paintings begins p239 with works from 1867. Anna's portrait of Florence Laing: p241.

Anna Lea Merritt's portrait of Florence must be the one you can see at this blog:

//nataliavogelkoff.com/tag/florence-laing-gennadius. Florence kept it and it is now in the Gennadius Library in Athens. See also www.acsa.edu.gr

On Heinrich Hofmann, there's a wikipedia page with the correct training and professional details but the wrong name: Heinrich Karl Johann Hofmann. The man who taught Anna Lea Merritt and perhaps Florence Laing was Johann Michael Ferdinand Heinrich Hofmann.

Allgemeines Lexikon der Bildenden Künstler. Siebzehnter Band 1924 p260 in German so I couldn't read the list of his works.

Benezit Dictionary of Artists volume 7. Published Gründ 2006 in English: p196 with the same name as in the Lexikon but with very little information.

Building News and Engineering Journal volume 38 p535: review of the 1879 exhibition at the Grosvenor Galleries. Florence's oil painting A Quiet Corner was in the exhibition.

The third file in this sequence on Florence Kennedy looks at the years 1879 to 1900, the period in which Florence was married to her first husband, Edward Sherard Kennedy.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

For the GD members who were freemasons, the membership database of the United Grand Lodge of England is now available via Ancestry: it gives the date of the freemason's first initiation; and the craft lodges he was a member of.

To take careers in craft freemasonry further, the website of the the Freemasons' Library is a good resource: //freemasonry.london.museum. Its catalogue has very detailed entries and the website has all sorts of other resources.

You can get from the pages to a database of freemasons' newspapers and magazines, digitised to 1900. You can also reach that directly at www.masonicperiodicals.org.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

To put contemporary prices and incomes into perspective, I have used www.measuringworth.com/ukcompare which Roger Wright found for me. To help you interpret the 'today' figure, measuringworth gives several options. I pick the 'historic standard of living' option which is usually the lowest, often by a considerable margin!

3 June 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

This is the last of my three files on GD member Florence Elizabeth Sherard Kennedy (born 1853) who was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London, in May 1891 and chose the Latin motto 'Volo'.

It might not look like it, but this is one of my short biographies. It covers Florence's life until the death of her first husband. She lived for another 51 years! With access to Florence Kennedy's papers, I am sure I could have written a full-length book. However, the papers are in Athens. I'd love to go and work through them, but I can't afford to stay in Greece long enough to do them justice.

Short it may be, but this biography is still in three pieces. The first two are:

- the Laings, which you can find on my GD Index page under the heading 'the two Macraes'. It includes coverage of Florence, GD member her sister Cecilia Macrae, and their siblings growing up in a very wealthy family; and also of their first cousin Agnes Cathcart, née Baxter, who was a GD member in Edinburgh.

- Florence in the GD and TS and her early art training.

This third one is:

- Florence and her husband Edward Sherard Kennedy; their work as artists; and the last few years of the marriage.

Sally Davis

June 2017

Florence married the man who was usually called Edward Sherard Kennedy in 1879.

EDWARD SHERARD KENNEDY

In official documents Edward Sherard Kennedy appears as Edward Sherard Calcraft Kennedy. With what names he was baptised, I can't say, as I haven't found any records of a baptism and - given his parents' circumstances - there may not ever have been a baptism.

Edward Sherard Kennedy was the illegitimate son of an earl and a singer: Robert Sherard, 6th Earl of Harborough; and the contralto/actress whose professional name was Emma Sarah Love. Emma Sarah had made a name for herself in oratorio and for her work in opera at Covent Garden and Drury Lane. She married Captain Granby Hales Calcraft in 1828 but eloped with the Earl of Harborough in 1829. Accounts differ as to how long the relationship between Emma Sarah and the Earl lasted. It lasted long enough for three sons to result from it, Edward being the youngest, born either 1836 or 1837; and even after it ended, the Earl saw to it that Emma Sarah and their children were looked after financially. I haven't been able to find out why Emma Sarah and her children ended up with the surname 'kennedy'.

Edward's life would have been very different if his parents had married, but Emma Sarah and Captain Calcraft were never divorced. The Earl finally married Mary Eliza Temple, a woman of his own social class, in 1843, and again, Edward's life would have been very different if the Earl and his countess had had any children; but they didn't. When the Earl died, in 1859, there were no legitimate heirs to the family's land; he could do what he liked with it, and he chose to leave the estates to his two surviving sons. Edward's elder brother, Bennet Sherard Kennedy, got the Sherard family's main estate at Stapleford Park in Leicestershire; though it appears that he didn't get the house and contents, at least, not all of them and not in 1859 - those were left to the earl's widow. Edward and Emma Sarah jointly, were left the manor of Teigh in Rutland and 1288 acres; plus 700 more acres around the village of Whissendine. I doubt if Edward could have done so well if he had been his father's legitimate younger son.

I haven't seen the sources that would prove this definitively (I'm meaning the Wills of the last earl and last countess) but I think that Edward and his brothers were left the Sherard family's art and antiques by the countess. Edward may even have had a friendly relationship with Mary Eliza: he and Florence Kennedy spent part of 1884 living in Exmouth, where Mary Eliza had settled with her second husband, Major Thomas William Clagett. In 1894, Christie's dealt with the sale of a wide range of antiques owned by Edward. He might have been an avid collector himself, but I do think that the items sold in 1894 were left to him by Mary Eliza.

The last Countess of Harborough had died in 1886. It took three years for the amount of her estate to be calculated and her Will to be enacted fully by her executors, probably because of the time it took to assess the art and antiques that were in the house at Stapleford Park and her London residence in Manchester Street. In 1889 Mary Eliza's personal estate was finally valued at £76,643, a sum the measuringworth website calculates at about £7,774,000 in 2017 money. As well as the antiques Edward sold in 1894, he and Florence may have kept others, including a drawing by Sir Thomas Lawrence of Edward's grandmother Eleanor, the wife of Philip, 5th Earl of Harborough.

The sale at Christie's took place over several days. It included old mezzotints and engravings; old silver plate; porcelain, majolica, metalwork and faience; and books. Edward's collection of theatrical costumes was also in the sale. They are more likely to have been items Edward had bought himself, for use as props in his paintings. One report on the sale describes the costumes as Georgian; and there's actually a portrait of Edward by John Pettie RA in which he's wearing 17th century fashions - it was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1875. Clearly, Edward had inherited his mother's taste for dressing up!

Apparently the sales didn't go well: the sale prices were low. Edward and Florence didn't need the money, of course. I think the disposal of so many Edward's antiques was part of a move they were making, out of London. If they were putting their London house out to rent, while they moved to the country, they wouldn't have had so much room to display them all.

Sources:

There's a wikipedia page on the Sherard earls of Harborough. Bennet is a name often used in the Sherard family; though Edward isn't.

Peerage and Baronetage of Great Britain and Ireland 1839 p501 on Robert Sherard 6th Earl of Harborough: born 30 August 1797; succeeded his father aged 10.

At www.crafcroftpeerage.com: more details on the 6th Earl, whose parents had both died by the time he was ten. In 1843 he married Mary Eliza, daughter of Edward Dalby Temple. The 6th Earl died 28 July 1859. Illegitimate sons can't inherit titles so the earldom went extinct.

None of those sources mention Emma Sarah Love or the 6th Earl's illegitimate family.

EDWARD SHERARD KENNEDY'S MOTHER EMMA SARAH LOVE

Better men and women than I have failed to find anything certain about Emma Sarah Love's early life and family!

At //people.stfx.ca/kobrien/ESL%20article%202011.pdf, there's the full text of an article on Emma Sarah Love by Kevin H F O'Brien and Ann Johnson, originally published in Theatre Notebook volume LIV number 3 2000 pp146-61. My page numbers are from the online version of the article. O'Brien and Johnson p1 gives Emma Sarah's dates as 1798 to 1881; with a summary of her career, which was ended by her elopement with the Earl of Harborough. On p3 they raise doubts about the accounts of her early life that Emma Sarah herself gave the press. On p9 and p21 they say that Emma Sarah's husband did begin divorce proceedings but decided he couldn't afford the expense. Emma Sarah died on 31 March 1881.

O'Brien and Johnson refer to two accounts of Emma Sarah Love's life in well-known volumes:

- Boase's Modern English Biography volume 2: for which entry she knocked several years off her age!
- Biographies of the British Stage which names a completely different man as her father from the name Emma Sarah gave contemporary magazines.

They couldn't find any information about Emma Sarah's mother at all, not even her name; and they couldn't confirm the existence of either of the men supposed to be her father.

O'Brien and Johnson used these contemporary accounts, though again they found that the information supplied by Emma Sarah couldn't be trusted:

La Belle Assemblée court magazine volume XXVIII number 177 issue of July 1823 p1.

Oxberry's Dramatic Biography volume III 1824 p163.

Death of Emma Sarah Calcraft's legal husband: Harwicke's Annual Biography for 1856 p121: he died in January 1856. He was the younger son of John Calcraft, MP for Wareham in Dorset.

EMMA SARAH AND HER CHILDREN on the census.

I couldn't find Emma Sarah and her 2 sons on the censuses in 1841, 1851, 1861 and 1871; I wasn't quite sure who I was looking for so I searched under Love, Sherard, Kennedy and Calcraft. Emma Sarah died a few days before the 1881 census.

Edward's elder brother Bennet Sherard Kennedy:

Trials of Oscar Wilde by Harford Montgomery Hyde 1972 p44 footnote 1.

At www.mytrees.com some dates though without sources: 1832-1886, married 1855 Jane Stanley Wordsworth 1833-1912.

Jane Wordsworth was a grand-daughter of the poet: see wikipedia on William Wordsworth. Wordsworth's eldest son John Wordsworth (1803-75) was married 4 times. Jane Stanley Wordsworth was the eldest child of the first wife, Isabella Curwen, who died in 1848.

Edward's nephew Robert Sherard Kennedy, son of Bennet and Jane - wrote as Robert H Sherard.

The Literary World volume 54 1896 some details: born 1861; friend of Oscar Wilde.

Men and Women of the Time: A Dictionary of Contemporaries published G Routledge 1899 says that Bennet Sherard Kennedy went to school at Queen Elizabeth's College Guernsey when his family were living there.

The Real Oscar Wilde by Robert Harborough Sherard. T Werner Laurie Ltd of 8 Essex St Strand. No date but BL stamp gives 3 APR 17. On p52: Robert H Sherard met Anna Bonus Kingsford at one of Lady Wilde's famous 'at homes' in the mid-1880s. Anna Bonus Kingsford knew many people who in due course joined the GD. Robert Sherard was never a GD member himself though.

The Sherard family estates:

Kelly's Directory of Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Rutland and Derbyshire 1881 entry for the village of Stapleford states that Rev Bennet Sherard Kennedy of Stapleford Park owns the whole village.

Seen at www.british-history.ac.uk, information from the Victoria County Histories series: A History of the County of Rutland volume 2 pp151-53 published 1935: pp151-53 on the parish of Teigh, which had come into the hands of the Sherard family by 1595. The manor of Teigh and its advowson were bequeathed to Edward Sherard Calcraft Kennedy and Emma Sarah Kennedy (sic) in the Will of Robert, 6th Earl of Harborough. The two of them sold the manor and advowson to Richard Thompson of Stamford.

The sale of the manor of Teigh was not immediate:

At www.rutlandhistory.org details from the 1871 census returns p26: Owners and their Holdings. A list of landowners who didn't live in Rutland included Edward Calcraft Kennedy. P9 of the same list shows Mary Eliza, Countess of Harborough, as the absentee-owner of Stapleford Park.

London Gazette 1875 part 4 issue of 16 November 1875 p5450: list of sheriffs. Edward Sherard Calcraft Kennedy of Whissendine is one of three in Rutland. Same information was published in Law Journal 18 November 1876 pp659-60.

Via genesreunited to Leicester Chronicle 17 November 1877 and several other Leicestershire papers: Edward Sherard Kennedy is still a sheriff of Rutland. And he still is in a list published in Leicester Chronicle 24 December 1881 and he is also still the lord of the manor of Teigh.

THE LAST COUNTESS OF HARBOROUGH AND EDWARD'S ANTIQUES COLLECTION

Mary Eliza, Countess of Harborough's second marriage: via genesreunited.co.nz to Northampton Mercury 23 April 1864 marriage announcement; Countess of Harborough to Major Thomas William Clagett, Indian Army.

Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940. Antique Collectors' Club 1976. Florence Kennedy née Laing's entry on p287 gives her address in 1884 as Exmouth.

Probate Registry 1887 with the Will and codicil resworn 1889: death of Mary Eliza Countess of Harborough 1 July 1886 at 22 Manchester Street; late of Stanley Lodge Exmouth.

London Gazette 3 May 1887 p2480 two legal notices issued in connection with the deaths of Major T W Clagett of Stanley Lodge Exmouth (he died 16 May 1885) and the Countess of Harborough. The solicitors dealing with both estates were Smith Symes and Smith of Crediton.

The sale of Edward's collection:

The Athenaeum January-June 1894. London: John C Francis.

- pp98-99, in number 3457 issue of Sat 27 January 1894, in the list of forthcoming auctions at Christie Manson and Wood of King St, St James's Square
- p129 in number 3458 issue of Sat 3 February 1894 p131
- p229 in number 3461 issue of Sat 24 February 1894 p230
- p261 in number 3462 issue of Sat 3 March 1894 p263 just a change of date for the last sale.

On each occasion, items owned by Edward were part of a bigger sale including other people's antiques.

British Architect volume 41 1894 p92 calls Edward "the well-known artist". There were also tapestries in the sales, though the report didn't say that Edward was their owner.

Sir Thomas Lawrence's portrait of Eleanor Countess of Harborough; though the sitter's identity is still disputed, apparently.

Earlier British Paintings in the Lady Lever Art Gallery by Alex Kidson. National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside 1999: p94 refers to the painting as formerly owned by Edward and bequeathed to him by a countess. The only countess that could have bequeathed it to Edward is Mary Eliza.

Journal of the Walpole Society volume 39 1962 pp3-5, pp9-11, pp13-336: Catalogue of the Paintings Drawings and Pastels of Sir Thomas Lawrence; compiled by Kenneth Garlick. On p101 the painting in question is in the list as definitely of Eleanor Countess of Harborough (1772-1809). Garlick describes it as probably executed after 1805. 20inches by 16. It's of her head only, and not finished; Garlick thought there had been a lot of repainting (not by Edward, I hope!). Now in the Lady Lever Art Gallery.

The Year's Art... volume 64 1945 compiled by Marcus Bourne Huish, David Croal Thomson and Albert Charles Robinson Carter. Macmillan and Co. On p46 Lawrence's head of Eleanor Countess of Harborough is in a list of paintings acquired by the Lady Lever Art Gallery since 1939; which leaves open the question of when it left the Kennedys' possession.

You can see the portrait at //artuk.org/discover/artworks/portrait-of-a-lady-102565 where it's described as "after Lawrence"; adding to the level of uncertainty about the painting and the sitter.

The portrait of Edward dressed in 17th century clothes:

John Pettie RA by Martin Hardie. A and C Black 1908 p149.

EDWARD'S FIRST MARRIAGE

Edward Sherard Calcraft Kennedy married Emily Paul at St Benet, Paul's Wharf, city of London in June 1857. I haven't been able to identify Emily Paul for certain, but perhaps it doesn't matter as they may have been divorced. The Public Record Office has records of a divorce case brought by Edward against Emily and a co-respondent called Mr Cheetham, in 1861. I haven't been to the PRO to look at them to see if the divorce was granted. I assume it was, but if it was refused - which some were - Edward would have had to wait until his wife died to remarry, even if they were no longer living together.

As far as I can tell, Edward and Emily Sherard Kennedy had no children.

Source:

Familysearch England-ODM GS film numbers 547508, 574439, 845242. At St Benet Paul's Wharf London on 10 June 1857: Edward Sherard Calcraft Kennedy to Emily Paul.

Familysearch England-ODM GS film number 855942-944, baptisms at St Matthew Bethnal Green: had an Emily Paul daughter of James and Henrietta Paul baptised on 23 January 1835. She was the only emily paul with no other forenames baptised near London in the 1830s; though I saw one at Brighton, 5 July 1835: Emily Paul daughter of Walter and Ann.

At the National Archives, PRO: J77/31/K19 record of proceedings in Divorce Court 1861.

See www.cflp.co.uk, web pages of the Cambridge Family Law Practice for a brief history of divorce through the courts in England, which began with the Matrimonial Causes Act 1857. The only court given power in the 1857 law to try a divorce case was the High Court in London; where proceedings were open to the public.

I couldn't find any coverage of the case in the Times.

EDWARD SHERARD KENNEDY AND FLORENCE LAING

Florence married Edward Sherard Kennedy in the spring of 1879. I think that on their honeymoon they spent some time in Paris.

My account of Edward's interesting family background will - I hope - have given you the impression that he wasn't short of money. Neither was Florence: her father Samuel Laing had made a fortune through his shrewd investments in railways, the telegraph and the iron and steel industry, and on her marriage Florence will have been given an income to match. In 1902 it was £8000 per year (about £800,000 in 2016 terms) but that sum probably included money she had inherited from Edward.

The only year I was able to find Florence and Edward at home on census day was 1881, when they were living at 24 Westbourne Terrace. Florence's sister-in-law, GD member Louisa Ida Macrae, was living with her father Alexander Charles Macrae at number 119. Given Florence's probable income - never mind Edward's - their address and their household were quite modest: a house in a road near Paddington Station, and just two female servants, whose tasks weren't specified but cook and housemaid was a typical division of labour. They were only living in Westbourne Terrace temporarily though - perhaps while building work was being done on 6 Bedford Gardens, off Kensington Church Street. Art exhibition catalogues give 6 Bedford Gardens as Edward's address from 1872 - he may or may not have been living there with his wife; and as his and Florence's address until mid-1884.

In 1881 Florence and Edward may already have been planning and setting money aside for the house they had built between 1882 and 1884 to designs by architect Richard Norman Shaw. Norman Shaw designed the early houses in the hugely influential Bedford Park suburban estate at Turnham Green, west London, where several future members of the GD lived in the late 1880s and 1890s, including three more artists: Isabel de Steiger, and Henry Marriott Paget and his wife Henrietta.

For artists to commission an architect to design them a house wasn't a new thing. On the contrary, the Sherard Kennedys were the latest in quite a long line of them; Kate Greenaway was another who chose Norman Shaw for such a project. Florence and Edward bought land on a corner site in Chelsea near Pont Street, where Walton Street meets Lennox Gardens Mews. The brief they gave Norman Shaw was for a house with two artists' studios, with access to the studios separate from the house's front door. Richard Conder built the house that Richard Norman Shaw designed, with the two studios built one above the other, a staircase with its own door giving access to both of them, but not to the rest of the house. The total cost of the design and build was £173 and the Sherard Kennedys kept Walton House as their London residence until 1894; not as long as they'd expected to live there, I think, but I'll go into the reasons for that below.

The Kennedys might both be referred to in a modern assessment as "Sunday painters with private incomes", but having Walton House built for them was a very obvious statement of how Edward and Florence saw themselves and wished to be seen. They also both described themselves as artists to the 1881 census official. Florence as well, I mean: the census official may not have asked her about her sources of income - they often didn't, with married women, assuming they were dependent on their husbands - but Florence told him anyway.

Sources: freebmd; censuses 1881-1901; measuringworth.com for modern approximations of Florence's income in 1902.

Their addresses: 1881 census and:

The Royal Academy of Arts Exhibitors 1769-1904 Volume 2 E-LAWRA compiled by Algernon Graves FSA. Orig pubd Henry Graves and Co Ltd and George Bell and Sons London 1905. BL's ed is SR Pubrs Ltd; Kingsmead Reprints 1970: p315 entries for Edward Sherard Kennedy and Florence Kennedy; paintings shown 1872.

Royal Society of Arts Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1884 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son. List of exhibitors p76 E Sherard Kennedy at 6 Bedford Gardens for the last time.

A History of the County of Middlesex: Chelsea Patricia E C Crook. Oxford University Press for the Institute of Historical Research 1911 p103 for the disparaging description of Florence and Edward, and the exact whereabouts of Walton House.

The wikipedia page for Richard Norman Shaw (1831-1912) has a good list of the places he designed. However, it doesn't include Walton House; perhaps because the building has been so much altered since.

Richard Norman Shaw by Andrew Saint. Revised edition 2010. Published New Haven and London: Yale University Press for The Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art. Chapter 4: The Pattern of Practice: p173; p447 in which Saint describes Walton House as an "Unpretentious though large brick house at angle to road. Much altered from the first design. Converted to flats". The plans for Walton House are in the Norman Shaw papers at the Royal Academy.

Metropolitan Board of Works Minutes of Proceedings 26 June 1884 and 15 October 1884.

Familysearch: electoral roll listings - for Edward only of course - London Borough of Chelsea 1890-94.

FLORENCE AS AN ARTIST: PART 2

I think the History of the County of Middlesex's dismissal of both the Sherard Kennedys as Sunday painters is a harsh judgement on Edward. He seems to have painted consistently and exhibited regularly from the early 1860s to the 1890s; and then may only have been stopped by ill-health. Florence, though....there were so many other calls on a married woman's time; even if she had no children; and there was always the problem of a woman gaining and maintaining her confidence in her ability, in the face of the assumption that only men could do great art.

As Edward Sherard Kennedy was never a member of the GD, I shall list his exhibited works at the end of this file. Here I shall just say that I think he had an important influence on Florence as a painter. She might actually have worked as a pupil in his studio but what I'm meaning is that with his encouragement, Florence became a 'professional' artist, at least to the extent of doing work of a high standard and submitting it to galleries to be seen and bought by the public.

Here is a list I've put together of the paintings Florence exhibited; with dates, which exhibitions they were shown at; and one or two suggestions as to what the paintings might be about. All the paintings are in oils unless I say otherwise.

The one mentioned in one of my art dictionary sources:

|      |                 |                           |
|------|-----------------|---------------------------|
| 1866 | Up the Carnival | Exhibition venue unknown. |
|------|-----------------|---------------------------|

The earliest work I've found evidence of:

|         |                |                           |
|---------|----------------|---------------------------|
| 1879/80 | A Quiet Corner | Grosvenor Gallery, London |
|---------|----------------|---------------------------|

A Quiet Corner was described at the time as depicting "rabbits on the borders of a wood; birch trees and ferns". Perhaps some of Florence's other works are in similar vein: In the Shade, for example, A Warm Day, and others.

|      |                                 |             |
|------|---------------------------------|-------------|
| 1880 | Paysage dans le comté de Sussex | Paris Salon |
|------|---------------------------------|-------------|

|      |          |             |
|------|----------|-------------|
| 1880 | L'Alarme | Paris Salon |
|------|----------|-------------|

|         |                |  |
|---------|----------------|--|
| 1882/83 | Autumnal Tints | Royal Society of British Artists, London |
|---------|----------------|--|

The title may be a reference to the 1862 poem by Henry David Thoreau.

|      |                        |                                 |
|------|------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 1883 | A Corner of Sutherland | Society of Lady Artists, London |
|------|------------------------|---------------------------------|

|      |            |                               |
|------|------------|-------------------------------|
| 1883 | Spilt Milk | Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool |
|------|------------|-------------------------------|

|      |              |                                     |
|------|--------------|-------------------------------------|
| 1884 | In the Shade | Royal Society of Artists Birmingham |
|------|--------------|-------------------------------------|

|      |              |                               |
|------|--------------|-------------------------------|
| 1884 | A Shady Path | Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool |
|------|--------------|-------------------------------|

I wonder if these two were actually the same painting.

|      |                 |                             |
|------|-----------------|-----------------------------|
| 1885 | Beatrice Esmond | Manchester City Art Gallery |
|------|-----------------|-----------------------------|

Beatrice Esmond is a character in W M Thackeray's historical novel The History of Henry Esmond published 1852. It's set in Queen Anne's time. Beatrice is Henry's cousin, supposedly the most beautiful woman in England in 1712. Later in the novel she is married, as Madame Bernstein.

|      |            |             |
|------|------------|-------------|
| 1885 | A Warm Day | RBS Artists |
|------|------------|-------------|

|      |                  |               |
|------|------------------|---------------|
| 1885 | Thinking it Over | Royal Academy |
|------|------------------|---------------|

|                |                    |                                      |
|----------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|
| 1886London | A Song of Long Ago | Royal Institute of Painters in Oils, |
|----------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|

|      |                   |                                     |
|------|-------------------|-------------------------------------|
| 1887 | Bacchante Resting | Royal Institute of Painters in Oils |
|------|-------------------|-------------------------------------|

|      |                      |             |
|------|----------------------|-------------|
| 1887 | My Mother's Portrait | RBS Artists |
|------|----------------------|-------------|

|      |                    |             |
|------|--------------------|-------------|
| 1887 | A Song of Long Ago | RBS Artists |
|------|--------------------|-------------|

|      |                      |               |
|------|----------------------|---------------|
| 1889 | Love me, love my dog | Royal Academy |
|------|----------------------|---------------|

|      |                            |  |
|------|----------------------------|--|
| 1889 | Psyche                     | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1889 | Interested                 | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1890 | Six O'Clock in the Morning | Royal Institute of Painters in Oils            |
| 1890 | Rest in Due Season         | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1890 | Ophelia                    | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1891 | A Summery Idyll            | Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool                  |
| 1891 | The Morning After          | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1891 | Where the Bee Sucks        | Royal Institute of Painters in Oils,London |
| 1892 | Where the Bee Sucks        | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1892 | Wisdom and Folly           | RBS Artists                                    |
| 1892 | Pleased with a Feather     | Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool                  |
| 1893 | Silentia                   | Royal Academy                                  |

As far as I can tell, Silentia was the last painting Florence ever exhibited.

Some other comments on the list:

I have not seen a single one of these paintings; either on a gallery wall, or on the web, or even as mentioned in recent sale catalogues. The ordinariness - the sheer banality - of the titles Florence picked for her paintings made finding them online almost impossible, but I'm not sure that was the only reason why I couldn't find a painting of her's to look at. Most were for sale when they were exhibited. Where the Bee Sucks was exhibited more than once, so might not have sold first time round. But in general, either Florence kept her paintings herself; or they were all bought and are probably still in private hands, if they haven't been thrown away.

Although Florence is not listed in the book on genre painting I mention in the section on Edward Sherard Kennedy, her work is described in some of the main art dictionaries as 'genre painting'. Genre painters in the 19th century catered for the middle-classes, who had money for such luxuries but no real interest in or understanding of what was thought of as 'great' art - large canvases depicting myth and legend, historical and religious subjects. Genre painters could earn very large sums of money from their work and were famous in their day. They have largely been forgotten and despised since, as their style and use of colour was very conservative. Popular 'genre' subjects included picturesque peasants, children and pets; scenes of domestic life; and scenes based on novels and poems. Even from Florence's titles I think you can see that she did paint some 'genre' subjects; though there are also titles that sound like portraits and landscapes and even a couple with what might be 'great', classical subjects.

Florence had work accepted by the Royal Academy and the Paris Salon. It means I can safely say that her work was not a part of any new trend - Impressionism, Symbolism etc. Both the RA and the Paris Salon were becoming notorious in her day for their rejection of such new ways of painting. The big city art galleries - the Walker, the Manchester City Art Gallery - also tended to stick with what they were familiar with, though the Walker always championed the pre-Raphaelites.

In the early 1890s Florence was taking part in a trend I'd already noticed when checking out the exhibited works of the GD's other artists: once they had committed themselves to the GD, they exhibited less paintings, presumably (definitely, in Isabel de Steiger's case) because they were concentrating on their GD study and consequently weren't painting so many. However, I think that in Florence's case, there were other reasons for the decline (see the section on Edward, below).

Sources:

Florence is in the basic art dictionaries, but the entries don't always square with information I've got from elsewhere; and I'm also missing some information.

Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940. Antique Collectors' Club 1976. Florence isn't listed at all under Laing; p297 only under Kennedy née Laing p287. As a figure, domestic and landscape painter.

10 at Royal Society of Artists Birmingham

2 at Dudley Art Gallery

1 at Grosvenor Gallery

5 at Walker Art Gallery Liverpool

1 at Manchester City Art Gallery

4 at Royal Academy

1 at Royal Society of British Artists

4 at Royal Institute of Oil Painters

I've managed to find more details of most of these. I haven't found the two Florence showed at Dudley Art Gallery: she isn't in the index to its exhibitors. The Dictionary doesn't give which years it refers to and I'm reluctant to work through 20 years' worth of catalogues; even if I did do, I'd probably miss both entries.

Dictionary of British Art. Volume IV: Victorian Painters I: The Text. By Christopher Wood. Antique Collectors' Club 1995. And also on p292 Mrs Edward Sherard Kennedy; Florence Laing, fl 1880-93. Genre painter. This volume only lists four of her works.

Victorian Painters: the Text by Wood Newall and Richardson 2008; p292 entry for Mrs Edward Sherard Kennedy mentions one painting - Up the Carnival - exhibited in 1866; though it doesn't say where. If they are correct, it is the only painting Florence felt brave enough to show in public before she married Edward.

FLORENCE: EXHIBITS BY GALLERY

DUDLEY GALLERY

The information in the Dictionary of British Artists isn't confirmed by Algernon Graves' handwritten index of exhibitors at the Dudley Gallery 1865-1882. There's no entry for Florence either as Laing or as Kennedy, in the index's Volume I-L. So I am probably missing two paintings by her from the list of works I've given above.

GROSVENOR GALLERY/GALLERIES

Grosvenor Gallery New Bond Street. Summer Exhibition 1880. London. Printed at the Chiswick Press which turned out to be nothing to do w W4: Charles Whittingham and Co of Tooks Court Chancery Lane: p21, p63. This was the first ever exhibition at the Grosvenor Galleries and Florence was in very good company. Works by G F Watts, Spencer Stanhope, Alma-Tadema and his wife, Millais, Louise Jopling and her husband, Leighton and Burne-Jones were also shown.

Confirmed as Florence's only Grosvenor Gallery exhibit as far as 1894:

Grosvenor Gallery [etc] exhibitors compiled by Algernon Graves; covering the exhibitions to 1894 but not any later. Handwritten entries in three leather-bound volumes and without page numbers. Now in the National Art Collection at the V&A catal says covers exhns at the Grosvenor to 1894. Volume 2 G-P:

1879 catalogue number 104 A Quiet Corner.

I found more references to this painting than to any other work by Florence:

Building News and Engineering Journal volume 38 p535 for its technique.

Grosvenor Notes issue of 1878, edited Henry Blackburn and designed to be a companion guide to the exhibition: p33 for its subject.

MANCHESTER CITY ART GALLERY

Corporation of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 3rd Autumn Exhibition 1885. Manchester: Blacklock and Co: p90, p39 Florence's Beatrice Esmond; catalogue 525, price £13/13.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS BOSTON

This I spotted on the web but I don't know what works the Kennedy's sent to the exhibition.

10th Annual Report of the Trustees of the Museum of Fine Arts Boston Mass; to 31 December 1885. Boston: Alfred Mudge and Sons 1886. On p22 begins a list of Contributions to the Loan Exhibitions of the Year 1885. On pp25-26: Collection of English Water Colors and Drawings in Black and White, lent by the individual artists through Henry Blackburn of London. None of the names of the works on loan are mentioned. Both Kennedys are in the list.

PARIS SALON

I think that getting work into the Paris Salon was a real coup for Florence. Edward never exhibited anything there!

Les Peintres Britanniques dans les Salons Parisiens des Origines à 1939 by Béatrice Crespon-Halotier. Paris: L'Echelle de Jacob for the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art. 2002. On p307, entry for "Mistress Edward Sherard ou Florence" Kennedy: two works both shown 1880:

1999 Paysage dans le comté de Sussex

2000 L'Alarme.

ROYAL ACADEMY

Having work accepted by the RA was difficult too.

The Royal Academy of Arts Exhibitors 1769-1904 Volume 2 E-LAWRA compiled by Algernon Graves FSA. Originally published Henry Graves and Co Ltd and George Bell and Sons London 1905. I went through the British Library's edition: SR Publishers Ltd; Kingsmead Reprints 1970: p315 entry for Florence Kennedy; on p357 confirming there's no entry for Florence Laing.

1885 catalogue number 1249 Thinking it Over

1889 510 "Love me Love my Dog"

1891 1068 A Summer Idyll

1893 878 Silentia.

Royal Academy Exhibitors 1905-70 volume 3 p138: there's no entry for Florence as Gennadius (her surname after 1902). Volume 4 p178: there's no entry for Florence as Kennedy.

ROYAL INSTITUTE OF OIL PAINTERS which was called the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours when it was founded in 1883.

Index of exhibitors at "Institute of Oil Colours" 1883-1891. Compiled by Algernon Graves and held at the National Art Library in the V&A. Hand-written - very badly, I could barely read it. Volume I-L, the page with ?p2559 written in blue pencil: entry for "Miss Florence S Kennedy" corrected several times to "Mrs", further down the page. The index has no entry for Florence as Laing.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF ARTISTS BIRMINGHAM which changed its name in the spring of 1885 to ROYAL BIRMINGHAM SOCIETY OF ARTISTS. It held exhibitions in the spring and autumn of most years between 1880 and 1900.

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1884 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son. List of exhibitors p76:

P24 100 £15 oil In the Shade

RBS Artists Autumn Exhibition 1885. List of exhibitors p73; catalogue p19.

The set of catalogues I was going through at the V&A was lacking the one for the autumn exhibition of 1886.

RBS Artists 61st Autumn Exhibition 1887. List of exhibitors p80; catalogue p30, p46.

RBS Artists 63rd Autumn Exhibition 1889. List of exhibitors p73; catalogue p21, p58.

RBS Artists 64th Autumn Exhibition 1890. List of exhibitors p78; catalogue p33, p46.

RBS Artists 65th Autumn Exhibition 1891. List of exhibitors p79; catalogue p47.

RBS Artists 66th Autumn Exhibition 1892. List of exhibitors p79; catalogue p32, p50.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS

The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917. Joint volume compiled by Jane Johnson. Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First printed 1975; the copy I was looking at in the V&A was the reprint of 1993: p267 entry for Mrs Edward Sherard Kennedy:

1882/83      234    £21            Autumnal Tints.

For the painting's possible reference to the poetry of Henry David Thoreau (1817-62) see his wikipedia page.

SOCIETY OF WOMEN ARTISTS which at the time Florence exhibited there was known as the Society of Lady Artists.

The Society of Women Artists, Exhibitors 1855-1996 editor Charles Baile de Laperrière compiler Joanna Soden. Hilmarton Manor Press 1996. Volume 2 E-K p326 entry for Florence Kennedy.

Volume 3 L-R p3: there was no entry for Florence Laing.

WALKER ART GALLERY

13th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1883. List of exhibitors p120; catalogue p80.

14th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1884. List of exhibitors p161 entry for "Miss F S Kennedy"; catalogue p55.

Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 21st, 1891. The page number corners had fallen off the copy I saw but Florence was in the list of exhibitors; catalogue number 898.

Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 22nd 1892: again with no page number corners. Florence was in the list of exhibitors; catalogue number 519.

EDWARD SHERARD KENNEDY AS A PAINTER

I haven't been able to find out where Edward learned his trade as a painter. I think that if he had spent any time as a student at the Royal Academy, I would have come across information on it; so he probably didn't train there. And he's too early for the Slade School of Art. My hunches are:

- he trained in the studio of one or more genre painters - something quite tricky to prove;
- his training took place in Europe, perhaps in more than one country. He could certainly afford to spend the necessary length of time abroad.

Unlike Florence, Edward does appear in Popular 19th Century Painting: A Dictionary of European Genre Painters. The book's contention is that genre painters tended to stick to one sub-section of genre painting once they had established a reputation in it. In Edward's case, I don't think I agree: he appears in the book in the chapter on painters of 18th-century subjects, mostly literary, following in the tradition begun by Louis Ernest Meissonier (1815-91); and he certainly did do paintings in that mode. However, the list below shows that he did far more paintings on Shakespearean themes. Twelfth Night and As You Like It were two plays he returned to and I wonder if there was a nod to his mother in that: during her stage career in the 1820s, Emma Sarah Love had been well-known for her 'breeches' roles.

Edward also painted some historical subjects - in the arbitrary distinctions of the academies of that time and before, history paintings were classified as 'great art' not genre. He exhibited landscapes, which the authors of the book on genre painters didn't include in their genres; and a couple of portraits.

EDWARD: LIST OF EXHIBITED PAINTINGS

This isn't a full list: the two works you can find on the web most easily are not on it. In my own searches, the earliest exhibited work I found was 1863; and the latest 1892.

KEY: year/catalogue number/price (if known)/title/gallery

'?': couldn't read it very well

-: information not included in the source I used.

|                                  |      |        |  |                                  |
|----------------------------------|------|--------|--|----------------------------------|
| 1863                             | 149  | -      | Norah  | RA                               |
| 1864                             | 45   | -      | La Tireuse des Cartes. With a quote from Antony and Cleopatra.   |                                  |
| RA                               |      |        |  |                                  |
| 1865                             | 453  | £26/5  | Waiting for the Boats  | Royal Society of British Artists |
| 1866                             | 520  |        | Louis XI endeavouring to obtain the secret of her lover's name from Marie de Comines                                   | RA                               |
| 1866                             | 563  | -      | Viola and Olivia; with a quote from Twelfth Night  |                                  |
| RA                               |      |        |  |                                  |
| 1867                             | 385  | £21    | Olivia Unveiling to Viola  | Royal Society of British Artists |
| 1867                             | 398  | £10/10 | The Forgotten Lesson   | Royal Society of British Artists |
| 1868                             | 496  | -      | Hubert de Burgh...overhears the rumours of Prince Arthur's death; with a quote from Shakespeare's King John            | RA                               |
| 1868                             | 126? | £22    | At bay you naughty varlet!   | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1868                             | 476  | £40    | Rosalind, Celia and Touchstone. With quote from As You Like It Act 3 Scene 2 ending with Rosalind saying, "Out, fool!" |                                  |
| Royal Society of British Artists |      |        |  |                                  |
| 1869                             | 55   | ?£124  | Strolling Acrobat en route   | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1869                             | 124  | £20    | Brittany 1869  | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1870                             | 312  | -      | Louis XI. His one good deed.   | RA                               |
| 1870                             | 444  | £80    | Olivia and Viola. With quote from Twelfth Night Act 1 Scene 5.   |                                  |
| Royal Society of British Artists |      |        |  |                                  |
| 1870                             | 141  | £35    | The Eavesdropper   | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1870                             | 213  | ?£20   | The Beggar (then one word I couldn't read)   | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1871                             | 1082 | -      | The Wolf in the Fold   |                                  |
| 1871                             | 307  | £40    | Love Leads the Way   | Dudley Gallery                   |

|  |  |        |   |                                    |
|--|--|--------|---|------------------------------------|
| 1872   | 234  | £52/10 | Love Leads the Way  | Royal Society of British Artists   |
| 1872   | 391  | -      | An Escape after the Night of St Bartholomew                   | RA                                 |
| 1872   | 573  | -      | Frederick Flowers Esq   | RA                                 |
| 1873Liverpool  | 230  | £75    | Love's Labour (sic) Lost                                      | Walker Art Gallery                 |
| 1874   | 82   | -      | "For Those at Sea"  | RA                                 |
| 1874   | 605  | -      | Broken Up   | RA                                 |
| 1875RA   | 892  | -      | Mr Hardcastle tells the Story of "Old Grouse in the Gunroom". |                                    |
| 1876   | 1311   | -      | Angling   | RA                                 |
| 1876Liverpool  | 210  | £84    | Who Shall be Fairest?   | Walker Art Gallery                 |
| 1877   | 210  | £10    | Near Boulogne   | Dudley Gallery                     |
| 1877   | 302  | £50    | Sauve qui peut  | Dudley Gallery                     |
| 1877   | one other work whose details I couldn't read |        |   | Dudley Gallery                     |
| 1877RA   | 578  | -      | The Cross Roads. Waiting for the Coach                        |                                    |
| 1878   | 372  | -      | A Quiet Corner in Sussex                                      | Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts |
| Florence exhibited a work with a very similar title. It's possible this is her painting not his. |  |        |   |                                    |
| 1878   | 478  | -      | The Cross Roads   | Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts |
| 1878Liverpool  | 451  | £105   | The Cross Roads   | Walker Art Gallery                 |
| 1879   | 81   | £31/10 | Tambour Worker  | RSA Birmingham                     |
| 1879   | 238  | £120   | The Cross Roads   | RSA Birmingham                     |
| 1879   | 445  | £21    | Sigh no more Ladies   | RSA Birmingham                     |
| 1879   | 219  | -      | An Outpost Disturbed  | Grosvenor Gallery                  |
| 1879Gallery  | 37   | £100   | A Village (then one word I couldn't read)                     | Dudley                             |
| 1879Liverpool  | 48   | £105   | A Sad Maid Sat Sighing  | Walker Art Gallery                 |
| 1879   | 326  | £21    | A Labour of Love  | Walker Art Gallery                 |

Liverpool

|            |  |        |  |                                  |
|------------|--|--------|--|----------------------------------|
| 1879       | 1238   | £21    | Music Hath Charms                        | Walker Art Gallery               |
| Liverpool  |  |        |  |                                  |
| 1880       | 1073   | -      | Darby and Joan                           | RA                               |
| 1880       | 319  | £15    | Marking the Situation                    | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1880       | 108  | £200   | The Cradle of a River                    | Walker Art Gallery               |
| Liverpool  |  |        |  |                                  |
| 1880/81    | 368  | £25    | In Glory's Footprints                    | Royal Society of British Artists |
| 1881       | 486  | £84    | Love's Labours Lost                      | Royal Society of British Artists |
| 1881       | 44   | £105   | Darby and Joan                           | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1881       | 820  | £31/10 | One Touch of Nature                      | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1881       | 209  | £31/10 | "Returning Thanks"                       | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1881       | 1089   | £63    | Master of the Situation                  | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1882       | ?231   | £10    | Under the Apple Tree                     | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1882       | one other work whose details I couldn't read |        |  | Dudley Gallery                   |
| 1883       | 188  | £21    | A Breezy Day on Moel Garmon              | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1883       | 222  | £21    | A Salmon Pool on the Conway              | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1883       | 523  | £73/10 | Day Dreams                               | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1883       | 810  | £10/10 | Near Barmouth; watercolour               | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1883       | 835  | £10/10 | A Silent Highway; watercolour            | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1883       | 1044   | £21/10 | Dogberry and Vergis; watercolour         | Walker Art Gallery Liverpool     |
| 1883       | 1383   | £84    | The Wolf in the Fold                     | Walker Art Gallery               |
| Liverpool  |  |        |  |                                  |
| 1883       | 1  | -      | Tempora Mutantor                         | RI/Oil Colours                   |
| 1884       | 17   | £7/7   | Near Barmouth; possibly a watercolour    | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1884       | 337  | £7/7   | A Silent Highway; possibly a watercolour | RSA                              |
| Birmingham |  |        |  |                                  |
| 1884       | 738  | £21    | A Silent Pool                            | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1884       | 299  | £42    | A Village Genius                         | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1884       | 371  | £15/15 | A Reverie                                | RSA Birmingham                   |
| 1884       | 1616   | -      | Sally in our Alley                       | RA                               |
| 1885       | 332  | -      | Grandmamma Sits for her Portrait         | RI/Oil Colours                   |
| 1885       | 71   | -      | Rosalind                                 | RI/Oil Colours                   |

Edward's painting Rosalind caught the eye of George Bernard Shaw, who made this baffling comment on it: it "almost makes one feel before the line at the Royal Academy".

1885 885 £200 Sally in Our Alley Manchester City Art Gallery

1885 - - watercolours and/or drawings Boston Museum of Fine Arts

1885 147 £84 Viola and Malvolio - "I Left No Ring!" Twelfth Night
19th Century Art Society

1886 164 - The Shadow on the Path RI/Oil Colours

1886 126 £100 "He Loves, But He Rides Away" 19th Century Art Society

1886 75 £25 Puzzled 19th Century Art Society

1887 1086 - How Grandmama sat for her Portrait RA

1887 158 £52/10 Rosalind R Birmingham SA

1887 335 £63 oil Tempora Mutantur R Birmingham SA

1887 707 £52/10 My (sic) Grandmother Sits for her Portrait; a watercolour
R Birmingham SA

1887 421 - Jacob and Esau RI/Oil Colours

Edward's only venture into a religious subject.

1888 437 £25 All On A Summer's Day; watercolour

Royal Society of British Artists

1888 1?35 1?56 Return of the Revellers RI/Oil Colours

1888 771 £25 All on a Summer's Day Walker Art Gallery Liverpool

1890 808 £51/20 Clarissa; a watercolour R Birmingham SA

1891 567 £150 Love's Young Dream R Birmingham SA

1891 683 £25 The Age of Gallantry; a watercolour R Birmingham SA

1892 637 £58 Times and Men are Changed R Birmingham SA

List ends

I found one reference to Edward as an illustrator. However, even this may have been a painting originally, made into a print for publication by someone else. In 1876 Edward was one of eight artists whose works were used to illustrate Samuel Carter Hall's An Old Story, a Temperance Tale in Verse.

I haven't found many references to Edward in the papers of other artists that you can access online. Of course, if you're seeing your artist friends all the time because you all live near each other, you won't appear in their papers because there won't be exchanges of letters. However, there is one item in the collection of Whistler's correspondence now at the University of Glasgow Faculty of Arts; probably from 1874-76.

Sources:

Popular 19th Century Painting: A Dictionary of European Genre Painters. By Philip Hook and Mark Poltimore. Antique Collectors' Club 1986. The only other GD member who's listed in the book is Henry Marriott Paget; he's described as a specialist in paintings of children, which isn't correct, I think the authors have confused him with his wife, GD member Henrietta Paget, who did paint children. For Edward Sherard Kennedy: passim and especially p298 in a list of painters doing work in the '18th century' genre; he's not mentioned in the text.

Dictionary of British Artists 1880-1940. Antique Collectors' Club 1976. P287 Edward Sherard Kennedy exhibiting 1880-95. Please note that when I was looking through individual galleries' catalogues I actually came up with more paintings by Edward than are in this list, except in the case of Dudley Gallery where I found less.

10 at Royal Society of Artists Birmingham

3 at Dudley Art Gallery

2 at Grosvenor Gallery

9 at Walker Art Gallery Liverpool

1 at Manchester City Art Gallery

3 at Royal Academy

3 at Royal Society of British Artists

4 at Royal Institute of Painters in Watercolours

6 at Royal Institute of Oil Painters

I didn't confirm the paintings at the Royal Institute of Painters in Watercolours, as Florence didn't exhibit there, and she's the GD member.

Dictionary of British Art. Volume IV: Victorian Painters I: The Text. By Christopher Wood. Antique Collectors' Club 1995. On p292 Edward Sherard Kennedy; fl 1863-1890.

This work says Edward exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1880; but that was Florence.

DUDLEY GALLERY

Algernon Graves' Index of Exhibitors at the Dudley Gallery 1865-1882. Handwritten, very badly - I couldn't read a lot of the details. All exhibits are in oils. Not published; now in the National Art Library, at the V&A. Volume I-L with page number 2559 added in blue pencil: entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy.

GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS which I find with google, the dictionaries above didn't have listings for it.

17th Exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts 1878 editor George R Halkett: p34; p61.

GROSVENOR GALLERY/GALLERIES

Grosvenor Gallery [etc] Exhibitors, to 1894. Compiled by Algernon Graves; not published but now in the National Art Library at the V&A. Handwritten; 3 volumes; no real page numbering system; no details of prices. Volume 2 G-P: entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy.

MANCHESTER CITY ART GALLERY

Corp of Manchester Art Gallery, Royal Institution 3rd Autumn Exhibition 1885. Manchester: Blacklock and Co. On the back cover is a list of current members of Manchester Academy of Fine Arts; Edward is not on the list. In the list of exhibitors p90; catalogue p59.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS BOSTON

10th Annual Report of the Trustees of the Museum of Fine Arts Boston Mass; to 31 December 1885. Boston: Alfred Mudge and Sons 1886. Beginning p22 Contributions to the Loan Exhibitions of the Year 1885. On pp25-26: Collection of English Water Colors and Drawings in Black and White lent by the individual artists through Henry Blackburn of London.

NINETEENTH CENTURY ART SOCIETY also seen as 19th CENTURY ART SOCIETY; formed 1883. Catalogues extant for exhibitions to 1887. Edward was a member of the Society at least during the period 1885 to 1887, though he only exhibited in 1885 and 1886.

Times 12 December 1883 p2: report on the Society's inaugural exhibition at the Conduit St galleries.

1885. Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Autumn 1885 at the Conduit Street galleries, 9 Conduit Street. In the list of members p47. In the catalogue: p3, p16.

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Summer 1886. In catalogue: p3, p14.

Nineteenth Century Art Society Exhibition Catalogue Autumn 1886. In list of members p47. In the catalogue: p3, p9.

ROYAL ACADEMY

The Royal Academy of Arts Exhibitors 1769-1904, compiled by Algernon Graves FSA. Originally published Henry Graves and Co Ltd and George Bell and Sons London 1905. I used the British Library's edition: SR Publishers Ltd; Kingsmead Reprints 1970. Volume 2 E-LAWRA: p315 entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy.

ROYAL INSTITUTE OF OIL PAINTERS which when it was founded was called the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours.

Bernard Shaw on the London Art Scene 1885-1950 edited and with introduction by Stanley Weintraub. University Park and London: Pennsylvania State University Press 1989: p55 says that the Institute's exhibitions were held at Prince's Hall Piccadilly.

Handwritten index of exhibitors at the "Institute of Oil Colours" 1883-1891 amongst other galleries including the Dudley Gallery. Compiled by Algernon Graves. Volume I-L in which writing was so bad I couldn't read a lot of the details. That volume's has page numbers in blue pencil: ?p2559, entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF ARTISTS BIRMINGHAM which changes its name spring 1885 to ROYAL BIRMINGHAM SOCIETY OF ARTISTS.

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1879. 6d. On a title page, a list of current members; all full members are men, Edward isn't one of them. In the list of exhibitors p51; and in the catalogue p20, p25, p32.

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1881 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son. List of exhibitors p76; catalogue p23, p63.

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1883 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son of Edmund St. In list of exhibitors p74; catalogue p28, p80.

RSA Birmingham Spring Exhibition 1884 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son. List of exhibitors p68; catalogue p8; p35; p54.

RSA Birmingham Autumn Exhibition 1884 printed Birmingham: Hudson and Son. List of exhibitors p76; catalogue p34, p37.

Just noting that the change of name to Royal Birmingham Society of Artists came here, 1885. The set of catalogues I worked through at the National Art Library lacked the one for the autumn exhibition of 1886.

Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 61st Autumn Exhibition 1887. List of exhibitors p80; catalogue p29, p39, p58.

Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 64th Autumn Exhibition 1890. List of exhibitors p77; catalogue p59.

Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 65th Autumn Exhibition 1891. List of exhibitors p79; catalogue p47, p53.

Royal Birmingham Society of Artists 66th Autumn Exhibition 1892. List of exhibitors p79; catalogue p51.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS

The Royal Society of British Artists 1824-1893 and The New English Art Club 1888-1917, compiler Jane Johnson for the Antique Collectors' Club Research Project. First published by the Club 1975; I was using the copy at the National Art Library, a reprint from 1993. On p267: entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy.

WALKER ART GALLERY

[3rd] Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Oil and Watercolours 1873. In the list of exhibitors p44; catalogue number 12.

6th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1876. List of exhibitors p52; catalogue p11.

8th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1878. I looked at this on microfilm at the Tate Gallery Archive; the list of exhibitors and which pages of the catalogue their exhibits were on was missing, so Edward may have shown more than the one in the catalogue p29.

9th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1879. List of exhibitors p106; catalogue p11, p27, p75.

10th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1880. List of exhibitors p93; catalogue p15.

11th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1881. List of exhibitors p106; catalogue p21, p65.

13th Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1883. List of exhibitors p120; catalogue p37, p50, p51, p61, p78.

Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of Modern Pictures 1888, which didn't have a list of exhibitors. Catalogue p5, p36.

For Shaw's odd comment on Edward's Rosalind:

Bernard Shaw on the London Art Scene 1885-1950 edited and with introduction by Stanley Weintraub. University Park and London: Pennsylvania State University Press 1989. In the 1880s, Shaw was doing art criticism work for The World and other magazines. About Rosalind: p54, pp56-57. The actual comment was published in The Dramatic Review issue of 5 December 1885.

Whistler: www.whistler.arts.gla.ac.uk the web pages of Glasgow Faculty of Arts' collection of Whistler's correspondence.

Edward as an illustrator:

An Old Story, a Temperance Tale in Verse by S C Hall [Samuel Carter Hall]. 2nd edition published 1876; British Library catalogue doesn't give the publisher's name.

FLORENCE AND EDWARD'S PAINTINGS - WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

A good question. The short answer in Florence's case is: I don't know. In Edward's case, I don't know apart from two works, neither of which are in my list of exhibited paintings above.

At artuk.org/discover/artworks there's a database of over 200,000 works of art by about 35000 different artists. All are in public collections in Great Britain though not necessarily on display. The website doesn't have any entries for Florence Kennedy. It has two for Edward Sherard Kennedy: Mr Micawber, now in the Dickens Museum; and Fading Away, which is in the collection of the Wellcome Institute. They are both illustrated; in their subjects and their styles they are fine examples of 19th century genre painting.

Sources:

British and Irish Paintings in Public Collections compiled by Christopher Wright with Catherine Gordon and Mary Peskett Smith. New Haven and London: Yale University Press 2006 for the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art: p477 entry for Edward Sherard Kennedy, but it only lists Fading Away: oil on canvas 112 x 90 cm. In the Wellcome Institute for the History of Medicine see also catalogue.wellcome.ac.uk/search/o45039i which is the accession number. It's only 'attributed' to Edward Sherard Kennedy. However I can state that he is the "E Kennedy" who painted it because the artist's address - 3 Upper Phillimore Gardens Kensington - is where Edward was living in the 1870s; it appears in a lot of the catalogues I list above. Fading Away was bought by Henry S Wellcome between 1900 and 1936.

London for Dickens Lovers by William Kent 1972. London: Methuen and Co Ltd. New York: Haskell House Publishers Ltd. In the chapter on Dickens House and other Memorials p115 the House is in Doughty Street and the author is taking a tour through the house room by room. Pp126-127 section on the front room on first floor; paintings in that room include "a capital painting of Wilkins Micawber by E Sherard Kennedy". The artuk web pages give these details: painted 1873. Oil on canvas 89 x 69 cm. Charles Dickens Museum accession number DH 507. Gift of J W Ellis 1933.

Checklist of Painters c 1200-1994 Represented in the Witt Library Mansell 1995.

Bénézit Dictionary of Artists a vast work, now in English, published Editions Gründ Paris 2006.

Volume 7 Her-Koo p1173 has an entry for Edward but not for Florence. There's a list of "auction records" up to 2002 which includes some more works not on my list of exhibited paintings:

|      |         |  |
|------|---------|--|
| 1907 | London  | Flight after St Bart's Day                           |
| 1910 | London  | as Prayer for those at Sea; 1874 oil                 |
| 1979 | London  | as Prayer for Sailors; 1874 oil                      |
| 1983 | NY      | Summer Afternoon; no date or medium                  |
| 1989 | London  | Travelling Comedians on their Way; no date or medium |
| 2002 | Detroit | Sudden Showers; no date or medium                    |

THE LAST YEARS OF THE MARRIAGE

I'm sure that when his books, silverware and theatrical costumes went under the hammer it was not because Edward and Florence had lost all their money. There must be another reason for them dispensing with so much art paraphernalia and I'm going to suggest one: they were needing to live a quiet life with more time spent out of town, because Edward's health was failing. Here are some reasons why I think that:

- the Kennedys both stopped sending their paintings to exhibitions and probably stopped painting altogether.
- they bought or leased a house in the country from the early 1890s. After 1894 Edward was not on the Electoral Roll in the London Borough of Chelsea, suggesting that their country house was now their main residence.

Of course, the process may just have been one of retirement, or getting fed up with the air and noise pollution of London and its speed of life. Florence took up residence in London again after Edward died, though, as if it was mainly for his sake that the move to the country had been made. I think Edward was ill, and getting iller.

The house the Kennedys leased or bought was The Cottage, at Edenbridge in Kent. Although in the country, it was within easy distance of London. The GD's Florence Farr often visited them there and at the end of the 1890s Cecilia and Charles Colin Macrae leased a weekend house a few miles away, in Oxted Surrey. Edward Sherard Kennedy died at The Cottage, on 11 January 1900, aged 63 or 64. He left personal estate worth £32133; which the measuringworth website translates as £3,191,000 in 2016 terms. Florence, Cecilia's husband Charles Colin Macrae, and Joseph John Morgan were his executors. He and Florence didn't have any children so I suppose Florence inherited everything.

Sources: census 1891, probate registry 1900.

Electoral roll evidence from London Borough of Chelsea seen at Familysearch.

Familysearch England-EASy GS film number 1851041: burial of Edward Sherard Calcroft (sic) Kennedy at Edenbridge, 15 January 1900.

FLORENCE'S SECOND HUSBAND

Florence married Ioannes or Joannes Gennadius on 27 December 1902. Joannes was born in 1844 in Athens, and moved to London 1862 to work for Ralli Brothers. He was later employed as a diplomat, twice; being sacked once and resigning once, as a result of disputes with his employers. He's best known now, though, as the man who gave the Greek nation the collection of books that's now in the Gennadius Library in Athens. The Library was opened in 1926. Joannes Gennadius died on 7 September 1932. Florence lived until she was 98, dying on 14 January 1952.

For more on Joannes Gennadius, see The Book Collector volume 13 number 3 autumn 1964: Portrait of a Bibliophile XII: Joannes Gennadius. By Francis R Walton, who was Librarian at the Gennadius Library at that time.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

For the GD members who were freemasons, the membership database of the United Grand Lodge of England is now available via Ancestry: it gives the date of the freemason's first initiation; and the craft lodges he was a member of.

To take careers in craft freemasonry further, the website of the the Freemasons' Library is a good resource: //freemasonry.london.museum. Its catalogue has very detailed entries and the website has all sorts of other resources.

You can get from the pages to a database of freemasons' newspapers and magazines, digitised to 1900. You can also reach that directly at www.masonicperiodicals.org.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

To put contemporary prices and incomes into perspective, I have used www.measuringworth.com/ukcompare which Roger Wright found for me. To help you interpret the 'today' figure, measuringworth gives several options. I pick the 'historic standard of living' option which is usually the lowest, often by a considerable margin!

3 June 2017

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

Dr Herbert KNEVETT who was initiated into the Golden Dawn in September 1897, giving as his address 4 Elm Villas Ealing. He took the Latin motto 'Recte et Fortiter'.

I could not find this man anywhere, despite his having a doctorate which probably made him either a physician or a vicar and suggested where I should start to look. I looked, but couldn't find him in either profession. I kept trying! With different spellings as well: Knivett, Knyvett. Still nothing. I'd now take the view that he was a figment of someone's imagination, but for two possible clues (or am I getting that desperate?) which might also answer the question WHO DID HE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN?

Firstly the motto: which is a reversal of the one picked by Annie Horniman - Fortiter et

Recte; he might be a friend of hers (or even an enemy!)

Secondly the address: A E Waite also living in Ealing at about this time and they may have known each other. A very long shot, this one, as a recommendation from Waite would not have done the person he was recommending any favours with the GD hierarchy.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate and for Knevett the General Medical Council practitioners' list); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

Crockford's Clerical Directory in case he was a priest in the Church of England. There aren't really equivalent directories for priests of other denominations.

Law Lists, General Medical Council information.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Herbert Knevitt was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn on 22 September 1897 at its Isis-Urania temple in London. He took the Latin motto 'Recte et fortiter'. He never followed up his initiation.

This is one of my short biographies, where I haven't found very much information on the GD member concerned. I've done what I can with those people, using the web and sources in London. I'm sure there's far more information on them out there, but it will be in record offices, the local papers...I'd need to be on the spot to look at them, and I've had to admit that life's too short!

Sally Davis

March 2016

This is what I've found out about HERBERT KNEVITT.

IN THE GD

I couldn't find any documents mentioning Herbert Knevitt. Just noting, however, that 'recte et fortiter' is 'fortiter et recte' the other way round. 'Fortiter et recte' was Annie Horniman's GD motto. Perhaps they knew each other.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

Not that I've found. The Freemasons' Library has nothing in its collection which was either by him or about him. So if he was a freemason, he kept his involvement very local. I didn't find his name in the lists of Theosophical Society members that I checked.

Sources:

Freemasons' Library catalogues. Theosophical Society Membership Registers 1890-1900.

ANY OBITUARIES/BIOGRAPHIES?

No.

BIRTH/YOUTH/FAMILY BACKGROUND

Herbert Knevitt was the eldest child of Herbert Price Knevitt and his wife Isabella Ellen, née Hardman, who had married in 1866. He was born at Berwick-upon-Tweed in 1867. He had several younger sisters but was the only son.

The GD member's father Herbert Price Knevitt was born in 1834. He joined the Royal Navy and served in the East Indies and the Pacific in the 1850s and 1860s. He was still at sea in 1871 and his family were living with relatives in Lewisham while he was away. He retired early, perhaps due to illness or injury. He was appointed Superintendent of the Industrial Training Ship based at St Germans; was living there in 1881. Herbert Price Knevitt retired to Ealing and died there in 1896. Isabella Ellen Knevitt died in 1922.

Sources: freebmd; census 1861, 1871, 1881; probate registry entries.

Information at www.atu.com.au names Herbert Price Knevitt's parents as Thomas Lepard Knevitt and wife Elizabeth Williams Price. It's not clear where the information came from.

At www.pdavis.nl Herbert Price Knevitt's naval postings came up as part of the family background of William Loney RN.

At search.ancestry.co.uk there's a photo of Herbert Price Knevitt as a midshipman.

Website users.isp.net.au lists the sisters of Herbert Knevitt the GD member. It also names a woman called Una Knevitt as his daughter. Una's dates are 1885-1978 (see freebmd): she's another sister.

EDUCATION

The GD's Herbert Knevitt attended the Royal Naval School at Dartford. Then London University.

Sources: census 1881 and Work/profession section below.

WORK/PROFESSION

The GD's Herbert Knevitt studied at London University and London Hospital. He qualified as Member of the Royal College of Surgeons and was licensed to practice by the Royal College of Physicians and the Society of Apothecaries in 1891.

I couldn't find the GD's Herbert Knevitt on the census of 1891 so I don't know what he was doing then. Perhaps he was working for P&O (see Sources below). By 1901 he was working as a GP at 4 Elm Villas Ealing Green. That was still true in 1911 and 1913. I haven't been able to find any information from later than 1913.

Sources: census 1891, 1901, 1911.

Lancet 1888 volume 1 January-June; p805 issue of 21 April 1888:

Lancet 1888 volume 1 January-June; p805 issue of 21 April 1888. Just noting that this volume, p703, issue of 7 April 1888 shows GD member Herbert A W Coryn in a list of students passing the exams of the Society of Apothecaries and thus being licenced to practice. It looks as though Knevitt and Coryn were both studying medicine at the University of London at the same time, and may have been friends.

At www.mocavo.co.uk p179 in a list dated 1910 of fellows and members of the Royal College of Physicians.

Seen via findmypast at British Library: General Medical Council's Medical Register issue of 1913.

Sources:

At users.isp.net.au I found information on the GD's Herbert Knevitt, which I am worried about. On the subject of his working life, it says that he first worked for the East India Company. This is wrong on two counts: firstly, by the time Herbert Knevitt has qualified it's not the East India Company it's the Indian Medical Service. Secondly, I can't find any evidence that he worked in India in any capacity. I checked these sources: Roll of the Indian Medical Service 1615-1930; India Office List editions 1892, 1895, 1897 and 1910; Thacker's Indian Directory editions of 1895 and 1901. There was no sign of him on any of them. I take that to mean that he definitely didn't work for the Indian Medical Service and probably never lived in India at all. The website also says that he later worked (as a doctor) for the P&O shipping line. Information from the census indicates he was in practice as a GP in Ealing from the mid-1890s. This doesn't discount the P&O information, but I did notice a Herbert Pakeman Knevitt (born 1891 Lewisham) who definitely did work for P&O as a pursar; I wonder if the two Herbert Knevitts have got mixed up? For Herbert Pakeman Knevitt see www.atu.com.au.

ANY PUBLICATIONS?

I haven't found any.

ANY PUBLIC LIFE/EVIDENCE FOR LEISURE TIME? Bearing in mind, of course, that most leisure activities leave no historical traces.

I couldn't find any evidence.

ADDRESSES

1881: Royal Naval College Deptford.

1901-11 and probably much later: 4 Elm Villas Ealing Green.

?in retirement 1920s 1930s: South Lodge Ealing Green.

At death: Freeland Nursing Home, Freeland Road Ealing.

Sources: census 1881, 1901, 1911. GMC Register 1913 seen at findmypast. Probate Registry entries 1943.

FAMILY

The GD's Herbert Knevitt was married twice.

His first wife was Alice Ada Spencer, born Hackney 1873. They were married in 1897. However, in 1903 Alice Ada Knevitt filed for divorce. The petition was thrown out but in 1904 they tried again, this time with Herbert Knevitt as the appellant; Alice Ada Knevitt as the respondent; and a co-respondent (none was mentioned in 1903), a man called Rothwell. It's not clear whether the second attempt at divorce was successful. On the day of the 1911 census, Alice Ada and Herbert were not together; and he was employing a cook/housekeeper which he hadn't been before and which I take to mean that his wife was not living with him. He also employed a parlourmaid. I searched for Alice Ada on the 1911 census but couldn't find her; she's probably there, living with the co-respondent but using a surname that's not Knevitt or Rothwell.

Alice Ada died early in 1914; her death was registered with the surname 'Knevitt'.

Herbert Knevitt's second wife was Alice Marion, daughter of the late Rev W Thorp. They were married at St Benedict's Ealing in January 1916. They had one child.

Sources:

Seen via findmypast at the British Library: the Divorce Index application number 4246 dated 1903. Alice Ada Knevitt as appellant; Herbert Knevitt as respondent; no co-respondent.

Seen at discovery.nationalarchives.gov.uk Divorce Index application number 4934 dated 1904. Herbert Knevitt as the appellant; Alice Knevitt as the respondent; co-respondent, no forenames, surname Rothwell. Reference: J77/820/4934.

The Lancet January-June 1916 p276 issue of 29 January 1916.

DEATH

The GD's Herbert Knevitt died in an Ealing nursing home, on 9 December 1943. Alice Marian Knevitt died in 1957, in the British Home for Incurables.

Sources: probate registry entries.

DESCENDANTS?

Just the one, I think: Herbert John Knevitt, born 1917. He was probably at school at Stonyhurst College. He then went to Imperial College London: B Sc mechanical engineering ?1938. Joined the RAF as a career officer. Retired 1962 as a Wing-Commander.

Sources:

At www.stonyhurst.ac.uk, website of Stonyhurst College, a donation in his memory.

At //workspace.imperial.ac.uk p12 a list of donors from the Annual Fund-Raising Report 2011-12 includes a donation in memory of the late Wing-Commander Herbert John Knevitt.

London Gazette Supplement 10 April 1962 p2930.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. I have recently (July 2014) discovered that some records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have survived, though most have not; however those that have survived are not yet accessible to the public.

For the history of the GD during the 1890s I usually use Ellic Howe's The Magicians of the Golden Dawn: A Documentary History of a Magical Order 1887-1923. Published Routledge and Kegan Paul 1972. Foreword by Gerald Yorke. Howe is a historian of printing rather than of magic; he also makes no claims to be a magician himself, or even an occultist. He has no axe to grind.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

Find the web pages of Roger Wright and Sally Davis, including my list of people initiated into the Order of the Golden Dawn between 1888 and 1901, at:

www.wrightanddavis.co.uk

***

John Valentine Lacy (known as Valentine, I think, rather than John) was initiated into the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn at its Isis-Urania temple in London, on 22 March 1898. The motto he chose was 'Main teyar Mun'; I'm not sure what language that is though it's likely to be a transliteration of an Indian one. It's not clear from the GD's administrative records how keen a member of the Order he was; he was certainly never initiated into its second, inner order. Marian Charlotte Vibart was initiated on the same day. The Vibart family had known Valentine Lacy for many years. See Marian's biography for more details of her life although her investment in Biltor Ltd is in this file as Valentine Lacy was involved in the firm too.

JOHN CLEMENT LACY

It has been difficult to find out about Valentine Lacy's family, for reasons that make them almost unique. Valentine's father was a very rare bird indeed - a Hindu from the Brahmin caste, who became a Christian convert. As such, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel thought he merited a memoir after he died; but I haven't been able to find a copy of it, only a review of it in the SPG's journal, so my understanding of this remarkable man's life is a sketchy.

As far as I can make out, John Clement Lacy was born in 1825 and at that point his name was Chandi Deen. He started to train as a priest, but against his family's wishes abandoned it to become a doctor. An East India Company surgeon, Thomas Saumarez Lacy, was important to Chandi Deen at this point in his life: probably by taking Chandi Deen on as an apprentice, in Agra (where he was stationed) in the 1850s. Agra was certainly the place where Chandi Deen changed religions for the first time, and as a convert to Islam he played a prominent part for several years in Muslim agitation against the power Christianity was getting with the East India Company in charge in north India. So the next step is all the more baffling: Chandi Deen was baptised as a Christian in Agra in 1859, and took the name John Clement Lacy. Thomas Saumarez Lacy stood as John Clement's god-father and it was at T S Lacy's suggestion that the new Christian took the 'lacy' surname.

John Clement Lacy married and had a family, some of whose Christian baptisms can be seen via familysearch. I'd love to know more about his wife - was she a woman he had married while he was still a Hindu, a suitable woman chosen by his family? Was she another Indian convert to Christianity - probably, in that case, from a lower caste. Was she Anglo-Indian? - one parent British (usually the father) one parent Indian? Or was she? - I have to say I find this very difficult to believe - an Englishwoman? I haven't been able to find out anything about Valentine's mother - I'm not even sure what her name as a Christian was, because it's given differently in each baptism record. However, it is certain that John Clement Lacy's son John Valentine Lacy was born at Agra on 28 April 1867 and for this particular baptism, the name of the child's mother was recorded as Katherine Evelyn Lacy. Valentine was a middle child in a large family, mostly of boys but there was at least one daughter.

Dr John Clement Lacy practised medicine in Agra and from the 1870s also ran a pharmacy and dispensary called Lacy's Medical Hall. The memoir of his life is, of course, anxious to show him as a model Christian - a devoted family man, hard-working and humble - and as never regretting his conversion. There are hints that he didn't have an easy time: he had financial troubles and was also - inevitably, I think - the subject of open hostility from people who were not identified but were probably members of Agra's Hindu and Muslim communities.

In the mid-1880s, John Clement Lacy took one of his sons into partnership, probably Joseph (see below for a bit more on him) was in partnership with him and the business continued for some years after John Clement's death in 1902. John Clement's eldest son, Benjamin, became a Church of England clergyman and spent part of his career working for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at Cawnpore (now usually rendered as Kanpur though I have also seen Khanpur), a name of dread memory for the 19th-century British and particularly for the Vibarts.

Two of John Clement Lacy's sons were sent to be educated in Britain. Given the mention in the memoir that he had financial troubles, the funding for this must have come either from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, or as a result of a more personal effort by British residents of Agra and their friends, who saw him as somewhat of a martyr as well as a convert. By 1881, John Clement's sons Joseph and Valentine Lacy were at school in Edinburgh, and were boarding with George Forbes Vibart and his wife Annie.

The men of the Vibart family had been working for the East India Company in India for several generations by the late 19th-century. Although none of those I have traced spent time stationed in Agra, it's likely that they had all heard of the cause célèbre John Clement Lacy. George Forbes Vibart never worked for the East India Company. He chose to live off investments inherited from his father, John Vibart, instead. Shortly after his marriage, George Forbes Vibart and his wife Annie lived for a time on Jersey. Thomas Saumarez Lacy had been born on Guernsey and had many Saumarez relations living in the Channel Islands, some of whom George and Annie probably met while they were on Jersey. One way or another, George Forbes and Annie had heard of John Clement Lacy and they probably regarded it as their Christian duty to take in his sons when they reached Britain; though they may also have been glad of the extra income. As well as the two Lacy boys, two other boys were boarding with George Forbes and Annie on census day in 1881. George Forbes' and Annie's own two sons were only a few years older than the Lacy boys. George was training to be an engineer, and James Henry (known as Henry) was working for Scottish Widows (where, however, he would not remain for long - see below). Valentine Lacy and Henry Vibart became close, perhaps as much like brothers as was possible in the circumstances.

In due course, Joseph Lacy went back to India and was, I think, the son who went into John Clement Lacy's business. Valentine Lacy, however, never lived in India again. He was still in Edinburgh on the day of the 1891 census, lodging with Thomas Wight and family at 25 Tarvit Street. He told the census official he was a medical student. I suppose he must have been at Edinburgh University, where he would have listened to lectures by GD member Robert William Felkin, who was a lecturer in tropical medicine.

I couldn't find any evidence that Valentine Lacy qualified as a doctor, let alone practised as one, so I think he must have dropped out of university or - worse from his father's point of view - failed his exams. If he had been destined by his father to join the family medical practice, perhaps that's why he didn't go home - if he still thought of India as home. Elder son George having gone to work in India, George Forbes Vibart and Annie had moved south to be near their younger son Henry. Valentine Lacy followed them to London and got a job working in the office of a firm called Biltor Ltd.

As the company called Biltor Ltd that Valentine Lacy worked for no longer exists, I haven't found much information on it. It's also been difficult to find much about its founder, Emil Alexander Wüterich. It seems, though, that Valentine Lacy may have got the job with Biltor Ltd through George Forbes Vibart, as Marian Charlotte Vibart - who was George Forbes Vibart's first-cousin - was persuaded to buy shares in the company.

I found two patent applications made in England by Wüterich. One for a parlour game and its equipment seems to have been refused, but the other was granted, in February 1889, for a "device...for tobacco pipes or cigar or cigarette holders to prevent nicotine reaching the mouth of the smoker". There's a cutaway picture of a pipe with the device inside it, on the web - it looks like an inner tube. Following the grant of the patent, Wüterich decided to set up a limited company to exploit his patented device. He founded Biltor Ltd, with capital of at least £15,000, and Marian Charlotte Vibart and a woman called Anna Wüterich - Emil Alexander's wife, perhaps - as its other major investors. Wüterich may already have owned the tobacconist's shop at 93 Oxford Street (on the corner with Dean Street) that appears in some adverts for Biltor Ltd. Either that, or the shop was opened to sell pipes fitted with the patented device as well as all the other paraphernalia of smoking.

The patent of 1889 had been granted for a fixed number of years, and in 1902 as the time drew near for it to expire, Biltor Ltd and Marian Charlotte Vibart applied to the Patent Office to have it renewed. As was usual in such cases, the Patent Office sent an employee to look at Biltor Ltd's accounts. However, the accounts had been made up in such a way that you couldn't tell what income the company drew specifically from sales of the patented device, and what was from other items sold in the shop. So the renewal of the patent was refused. Someone - several someones - had been rather careless in doing office admin. On the 1901 census, Valentine Lacy had described his occupation as "Secretary to Biltor Ltd". If he meant that he was acting as the firm's company secretary, he must bear a share of the blame for what happened and for the shareholders' loss of future income; although Wüterich, too, had been lackadaisical, as the company's most active director. Nor did either of them get very good advice from their solicitors.

Biltor Ltd's shareholders had made efforts to make the patented device more widely known: they had exhibited it at the Paris International Exhibition during 1900, and it had won an award. After the blow of losing the renewal application, they decided to expand the business in England and by 1908 had opened a second shop, at 88 Queen Street Cheapside, in the City of London. The company was still going at both addresses in 1913 and continued, at least at 93 Oxford Street, until Emil Alexander Wüterich died in November 1927. Valentine Lacy acted as administrator of Wüterich's estate and was probably kept busy in 1928 as Wüterich had left no Will. How he earned a living after that - whether he took on the business himself, or just wound it up, sold the shop and retired - I don't know. He was 60, and - provided he and Biltor Ltd had paid his national insurance contributions - was entitled to a pension.

George Forbes Vibart and Annie had settled in Barnes and on the day of the 1891 census were living at 2 Carshalton Villas on Cambridge Road. I haven't been able to establish when Valentine Lacy moved to London. He was probably still living in Edinburgh in June 1894 when he joined the Theosophical Society's Scottish Lodge. The lodge met at 14 Royal Circus, Edinburgh, the home of John and Frances Brodie-Innes. John Brodie-Innes had been in the Order of the Golden Dawn since 1890. However, Valentine Lacy also knew other GD members. At the time he joined the TS, all applicants needed two sponsors who were already members. Valentine Lacy's two were Hugh Elliot and Florence ffoulkes; Hugh Elliot was initiated into the GD later in 1894 and Florence ffoulkes became a member in 1895. Florence ffoulkes' husband Henry was related to the Vibarts: his uncle Henry had married one daughter of Edward and Frances Lloyd and Marian Charlotte's mother was another daughter of the Lloyds. It's not at all difficult to see how Valentine Lacy might have been picked out as a suitable person to be initiated into the GD.

What Valentine made of the TS and the texts by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky that were its main source of spiritual ideas I can't imagine: amongst the many influences on her work was the Hinduism that his father had rejected for Christianity. However, once he had converted, John Clement Lacy had been (according to the memoir) an "earnest" Christian; and I would suppose that included banning his children from any reading of the texts of Hinduism. In that case, Blavatsky's work would be as new to Valentine as to any English born and bred member. He remained a member of the TS after he left Edinburgh, only giving up paying his subscription in 1902. He may have been a regular at TS meetings in London but I think probably not, because he never told the TS his new London address. Perhaps he tried the GD because theosophy didn't satisfy him and that brings me to wondering - how devoted a Christian was he, the son of a man who had all the zeal of the new convert and who had rejected his Brahmin family for religious reasons? Although the teachings of the TS had Hindu influences they had plenty of other sources, too; and the basis of the GD's teachings, although mostly Christian, was similarly wide-ranging. What did Valentine Lacy make of it all? Seeing that he was not a committed member of either organisation, perhaps he found their eclecticism unconvincing; or even alarming.

The Vibart family seem to have been one certainty in Valentine Lacy's life; perhaps the only certainty. If ever someone was a stranger in a strange land, it was him. I've spoken of him above as uprooted from his cultural past; but - especially if both his parents were Indian as I believe they were - he was also a black man living surrounded by white people.

George Forbes Vibart died in August 1893. By 1901, Annie and Valentine had moved, but only down the road, to 1 Napier Villas Cambridge Road. Perhaps they had a relationship, by now, that was more mother and son than landlady and lodger. Their household was a modest one, with no servants living-in. Annie hadn't wanted to move too far from her son Henry and his family; they were living just round the corner, at 29 Cleveland Road, Barnes although Henry himself was often working away or abroad.

Annie's son James Henry Vibart was the actor Henry Vibart (born 1863, died 1939 or 1943): see wikipedia and imdb for details of his career which began around 1886 in the theatre and continued for 40 years, taking in silent films (he was in 70) and even the first years of the talkies. Although he was never a great theatrical star in the manner of Henry Irving, Henry Vibart was continually in work and established a reputation for being a reliable professional.

Henry met the actress Taigi Keene in 1886 or 1887 while they were working for the theatrical impresario F R Benson. Taigi was the eldest daughter of the artist and illustrator Charles Joseph Keene and his wife Annie, a professional artist's model. Taigi's three sisters also worked as artists' models but from 1883 until her marriage Taigi was a professional actress. The family were devout Catholics and Taigi was named after the Italian Maria Taigi, known for her charity work and her visions, which came to her when she fell into trance-like states while at prayer. Taigi and Henry Vibart had eight children (three had died by 1911), so she was kept pretty busy and was probably glad to live near her mother-in-law, with Henry abroad so often working with British companies touring in the USA, Australia and New Zealand. And after Annie Vibart died, in 1910, it seems to have been natural for Valentine Lacy to move in with Taigi, Henry and their children. On the day of the 1911 census they were all living in the same household, still in Barnes but a few doors down from Henry and Taigi's 1901 address, at 24 Cleveland Road.

And that's it! More or less all I know about Valentine Lacy. It's harder to find the GD members after World War 1: no census information; google books hasn't ventured that far as yet because of problems with copyright; and I decided not to pursue even London-based GD members through the electoral registers as it would involve too much work.

Valentine Lacy outlived almost all the people he knew that I have found out about. Taigi Vibart died in 1938; and Henry Vibart in 1939 or 1943 (see below for the discrepancy) perhaps his closest 'relations'. Marian Charlotte Vibart died in 1932; Florence ffoulkes in 1936; and Hugh Elliot's wife Blanche in 1947. Perhaps he kept in touch with Hugh Elliot, who lived until late 1948. Valentine Lacy died in the summer of 1947. I don't think he ever married.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden. Please note, though, that the records of the Amen-Ra Temple in Edinburgh were destroyed in 1900/01. As far as I know, the records of the Horus Temple at Bradford have not survived either.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a wide variety of family trees on the web.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Useful source for business and legal information: London Gazette and its Scottish counterpart Edinburgh Gazette. Now easy to find (with the right search information) on the web.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

SOURCES FOR JOHN VALENTINE LACY

JOHN CLEMENT LACY, originally CHANDI DEEN

All I know about the conversion of Chandi Deen, his original name, and his subsequent career as a Christian physician, was published in A Brahman Convert: A Memoir of Dr Lacy of Agra, by Rev Benjamin J Lacy, John Clement's eldest son. It was published by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts in 1905, and reprinted in 1907; but the Society didn't send a copy to the British Library. The review I used, which reprinted the memoir's highlights, was in the Society's The East and West: A Quarterly Rvw of the Study of Missions volume 3 number 11 1905: pp357-58. Published by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, at 19 Delahay St W/m. On pp357-8 short rrw of A Brahman Convert: A Memoir of Dr Lacy of Agra, by Rev B J Lacy of Cawnpore. Rvw is anon, so prob by the editor; however, cldn't find any mention of the editor's name.

P357 It's abt a Hindu Brahman orig named Chandi Deen who was bapt Chr 1859 and took the name John Clement Lacy. B 1825 d 1902 in Agra. Educ as a brahmin pundit but abandoned that to train as a doctor ag his family's wishes; a Dr T S Lacy an imp help during his time training. Chandi Deen then went into Govt serv. Was stationed 1855 in Agra wh he conv to Islam and campaigned ag the bldg of Rev French's CofE college in Agra (Rev French later bp of Lahore). However by the time the Mutiny broke out ((May 1857)) he was on the point of being capt Chr. Mutiny delayed this; as the fighting contd he was v helpful ((no dtls)) to E India Co. Batp finally took place 1859 w T S Lacy as godfather; it was T S Lacy's suggn that the new convert take his surname. From then on, J C Lacy's exist was "the record of the family life of one who was at once a skilful doctor and an earnest Christian"; he remained in Agra and had a priv medical practice there. P358 ((however)) rvwr notes that later in his life, JCL got into fnnl trouble; he was also persecuted by "some of his enemies" ((no fur dtls of who and f what)). Rvw ends w a tale tkn from the book of JCL clearing up the mud in ch left by a careless yng male convert who didn't wipe his boots.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts was founded by royal charter in 1701 and still exists, though its name and its purpose have changed. Its early records are at Lambeth Palace Library and at the website www.mundus.ac.uk there is a short overview of the SPG until the end of the 19th century.

I did find one other reference to a man called Chandi Deen but it can't be to the man who became John Clement Lacy: Asiatic Journal and Monthly Miscellany volume 14 1822 issued by the East India Co. On p247 there was a report on the 2nd Annual Disputation, held at the Hindu College at Benares. P249 mentions a student called Chandi Deen. Perhaps he was John Clement Lacy's brahmin father.

Baptism of (the adult) Chandi Deen as John Clement Lacy is at familysearch. Baptisms of some but not all of his children are there too. The marriage of Alexander Clement Lacy, a child of John Clement Lacy whose baptism record I didn't find is also recorded at familysearch.

I checked the General Medical Council Registers for John Clement Lacy: no one on the registers with that name and that address in India was registered between the 1860s and the 1900s. There was also no one called John Valentine Lacy.

Roll of the Indian Medical Service 1615-1930 Index p684 lists only one man with the surname Lacy: Thomas Saumarez Lacy. His career details p1840: born St Peter Port Guernsey 1816. MRCS 1838. LSA 1838. Retired 1 January 1866 and died on Guernsey.

What details I could find on John Clement Lacy between 1859 and 1902, were all in issues of Thacker's Bengal Directory between 1864 and 1908 which was the last year in which Lacy's Medical Hall appeared in it.

John Clement Lacy's eldest son Benjamin John Lacy became a clergyman.

Indian Law Reports: Allahabad Series 1899 has Mr B J Lacy, son of Dr J C Lacy, living at Agra.

The death of John Clement Lacy is in records at familysearch.

Thacker's Indian Directory issue of 1908 Part 2 p2010 B J Lacy is manager of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel's mission school in Cawnpore.

Pioneer Mail and Indian Weekly News volume p 47: death notice for Rev Canon Benjamin Lacy of Allahabad; he'd died on 27 March 1920 from TB at the age of 57.

Familysearch burial records have one for a Joseph Lacy, at Agra in 1920; he was of an age to have been Valentine Lacy's elder brother.

BILTOR LTD

Companies' House keeps records of some limited companies. But it throws away the records of those whose turnover was below a certain level, after they have been wound up. I saw via google some modern companies called Biltor Ltd but they are not the one Valentine Lacy worked for.

Cosmopolis volume 8 1897 p923 has The Biltor Ltd at 93 Oxford St.

Sessional Papers House of Commons volume 31 issued HMSO 1901 p302.

London Gazette 19 December 1902 p8773: date of the hearing about the renewal of the patent.

Reports of Patent, Design and Trade Mark Cases volume 20 issued by the Patent Office p285 gave the start of the story of the renewal of the patent, and The Electrical Review volume 52 1903 p646 reported its outcome.

The cutaway picture of Wüteric's device is in Review of Reviews volume 29 1904 pviii as part of an advert. The design had been an award winner at the Paris International Exhibition in 1900. At 93 Oxford St only.

The expansion into a second shop: Spectator volume 100 1908 p756 had an ad f Biltor Ltd at 93 Oxford St ((wh is on the corner w Dean St)) and at 88 Queen St Cheapside.

The Directory of Gold and Silversmiths, Jewellers and Allied Traders 1838-1914 volume 2 based on the London Assay Office Registers. Published by the Antique Collectors' Club 2000: p45.

London Gazette 10 April 1928 p2660-2661 notice issue 5 April 1928 in connection with the estate of Emil Alexander Wüterich.

[JAMES] HENRY VIBART

See imdb and wikipedia and The London Stage 1890-1899: A Calendar of Productions by J P Wearing.

Who's Who in the Theatre issue of 1914 p592 for the year of his first professional performance.

For some information on the plays Henry Vibart and Taigi Keene appeared in while working for F R Benson, see theatricalia.com though the website doesn't give the sources of its information.

About Henry Vibart's death. All the sources I found on him gave 1939 at Chessington as the year and place of his death; they must all be quoting the same source, a source I haven't traced so far. However, when I checked through freebmd, the only person called 'henry vibart' whose death was registered between 1930 and 1943 was a Henry James Vibart, also called Henry Vibart, who died at the Royal Hospital Richmond Surrey on 30 August 1943, although his normal address was in Devon. This man was the correct age at death to be the actor Henry Vibart. Either the actor Henry Vibart died in 1939 but his death wasn't registered - which happens sometimes though more usually at the death of an infant; or the usually quoted year and place of death is wrong.

TAIGI KEENE AND HER FAMILY

The National Museum of Wales at www.museumwales.ac.uk

<http://www.museumwales.ac.uk>, Has a nice illustration of Burne-Jones' Study of a Head (catalogue number NMW A 244). On 25 February 2014 the compiler of this web page, Henry Sire, contacted me by email to point me at the blog of Mercedes Blanco, who has reconstructed the career as artists' models of Taigi Keene's mother and her three sisters. The blog is at sitioparatodo.blogspot.co.uk/2013/09/keene-mountain-nymph-sweet-liberty-identity.html.

To give you the gist of a website that's in Spanish, Taigi Keene's mother Annie was Edward Burne-Jones' favourite model and was also photographed by Julia Margaret Cameron. Taigi's sisters also became artists' models - youngest daughter Bessie was another Burne-Jones favourite - but Taigi herself only modelled for Louise Jopling (see below) as far as Mercedes Blanco could discover. I've used information about Charles Joseph Keene from Mercedes Blanco's blog; and also information about Taigi's career with the Royal Shakespeare Company, which was sent as a comment to the blog by a grand-daughter of Taigi and Henry Vibart, the actress Anne Wall. You do not need to read Spanish to appreciate the illustrations on this blog - plenty of pictures featuring Annie and her daughters, and a photograph of Henry Vibart in which I think he is dressed for a particular part (though I couldn't figure out which).

Henry Sire is a descendant of Charles Joseph Keene's first cousin Adelaide Keene. He told me that Charles Joseph Keene was a devout Catholic; and that Annie had become a Catholic after her marriage. They named Maria Taigi (born 1866) after a particularly devout Italian woman - see en.wikisource.org/wiki/Catholic\_Encyclopedia\_\(1913\)/Ven\_Anna\_Maria\_Gesualda\_Antonia\_Taigi/Ven_Anna_Maria_Gesualda_Antonia_Taigi) for some information on her life. She was beatified in 1920 but hasn't been made a saint.

For the portrait of Taigi by Louise Jopling, see: www.louisejopling.arts.gla.ac.uk Glasgow University's Jopling Research Project.

VALENTINE LACY IN THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Theosophical Society Membership Register June 1893 to March 1895 p154.

6 March 2014

AMandragora@attglobal.net

***

LAW. First names unreadable (I have tried to read them) on the Golden Dawn members' roll. Whoever they were - it's not even clear whether it's a man or a woman - they were initiated into the Golden Dawn in March 1899 and took the Latin motto 'Magnum bonum'.

It keeps niggling away at me that there's nothing I can do, really, to identify this person. But there's no doing even the basic searches with so little information. I shall have to rely on a lucky chance - spotting a name while reading about someone quite different. It has happened in this search for the Golden Dawn, though not often.

WHO DID HE OR SHE KNOW IN THE GOLDEN DAWN? - anybody's guess.

BASIC SOURCES I USED for all Golden Dawn members.

Membership of the Golden Dawn: The Golden Dawn Companion by R A Gilbert. Northampton: The Aquarian Press 1986. Between pages 125 and 175, Gilbert lists the names, initiation dates and addresses of all those people who became members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn or its many daughter Orders between 1888 and 1914. The list is based on the Golden Dawn's administrative records and its Members' Roll - the large piece of parchment on which all new members signed their name at their initiation. All this information had been inherited by Gilbert but it's now in the Freemasons' Library at the United Grand Lodge of England building on Great Queen Street Covent Garden.

Family history: freebmd; ancestry.co.uk (census and probate); findmypast.co.uk; familysearch; Burke's Peerage and Baronetage; Burke's Landed Gentry; Armorial Families; thepeerage.com; and a variety of one-family genealogy websites.

Famous-people sources: mostly about men, of course, but very useful even for the female members of GD. Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Who Was Who. Times Digital Archive.

Catalogues: British Library; Freemasons' Library.

Wikipedia; Google; Google Books - my three best resources. I also used other web pages, but with some caution, as - from the historian's point of view - they vary in quality a great deal.

23 April 2012

AMandragora@attglobal.net

Thomas William Lemon was one of the earliest members of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, being initiated at its Isis-Urania Temple in London, in April 1888. He chose the Latin motto 'Laus deo' but never followed up his initiation to any great extent. He resigned from the Order; though the date he did so is no longer known.

I have found plenty of evidence on Thomas William as a freemason; but very little on the rest of his life. He may have been known as 'William' rather than 'Thomas'.

Sally Davis

November 2016

My basic sources for any GD member are in a section at the end of the file. Supplementary sources for this particular member are listed at the end of each section.

IN THE GD

He was never a committed member but he may have given the GD's founders some useful information. Like many of the GD's earliest initiates, he was a prominent member of Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (SRIA, of which more in the next section). The GD's founders, William Wynn Westcott and Samuel Liddell Mathers, were also SRIA members. They may never have expected the SRIA's experts to be active members of the Order; but they wanted their input on the rituals they were going to develop, and their continued silence about the Order's existence.

Thomas William was known for his understanding of SRIA's ordinances and I think it's likely that he made suggestions about how to formulate the GD's rules and what to include in them.

Source:

Transactions of SRIA's Metropolitan College issue of 1920 p5 obituary of T W Lemon.

ANY OTHER ESOTERIC INTERESTS?

FREEMASONRY

Thomas William Lemon was a very active freemason, especially from the early 1870s to the mid- 1890s. Though he was a member of several freemasons' organisations which met in London, most of his activity as a freemason took place in Devon, where he was living at that time.

There's now an online, digitised database of freemasons' magazines up to 1900; you can reach it via the Freemasons' Library website - see the details in the Sources list at the end of this long section. When I started working on Thomas William Lemon in freemasonry I was overwhelmed with references to him. I decided that I would concentrate on:

- reports from 1888-89, around the time Thomas William joined the GD; though it was clear that by this time he was a senior freemason in Devon, so details of his earlier career would be lacking
- reports from earlier and later, but only when they had information on his earliest initiations or on how senior a freemason he became.

That decision cut down the responses somewhat, but there were still so many that in the end I focused on reports in The Freemason's Chronicle, which had the best coverage of freemasonry in Devon. And it was in The Freemason's Chronicle that I found the year and place of Thomas William's first initiation as a freemason: 1872, at Sincerity Lodge 189, which met in Plymouth.

For a thorough, but basic, list of Thomas William's senior rankings in freemasonry; and a list - though it's not complete - of the lodges he was a member of, use his name to search the catalogue of the Freemasons' Library; details at the end of this section.

I don't suppose that the list below of lodges etc that he was a member of is complete either; but I've tried to give some added information on each of them.

THOMAS WILLIAM LEMON'S CRAFT LODGES

Starting with those published in Quatuor Coronati 2076's members' magazine Ars Quatuor Coronati, and therefore known to the Freemasons' Library.

LODGE OF CHARITY 223

Lodge of Charity 223 was one of several based in Plymouth that had been Antient lodges, members of the Atholls Grand Lodge, in the years before the Antients and the Moderns got together (in 1813) to form the United Grand Lodge of England. Lodge 223 was founded in 1799 but was only given the name it's now known by in 1809. And of course, being so old, it has had several different numbers; '223' dates from the great UGLE renumbering exercise of 1863. It has always met in central Plymouth. I do not know when Thomas William became a member of it.

LODGE VIRTUE AND HONOR 494 AXMINSTER

The references that exist actually place Thomas William in this lodge's Royal Arch chapter; but you can't be a chapter member without being in the lodge first. Why Axminster? When he lived in Devon most of his life? Well, I'm not sure, but his birth was registered in Taunton so perhaps he was introduced to the lodge through family connections or friends, still living in the area.

Being an old lodge, 494 had another number - 725 - before the 1863 renumbering. It was founded in 1818, closed down in the 1830s, and then was founded again in 1844 through the efforts of William Tucker (1815-55) of Coryton Park near Axminster; though at least at the outset it met at Chardstock.

I haven't been able to find out when Thomas William joined this lodge.

METHAM LODGE 1205

The warrant which set up Metham Lodge 1205 was issued by the UGLE in December 1867. It met in East Stonehouse, Plymouth. I haven't been able to access much information about this lodge; so again I don't know when Thomas William became a member.

ZETLAND LODGE 1071

Lodge 1071 was based in Saltash, across the River Tamar from Plymouth. It was consecrated in November 1865 and was a very locally-based lodge with the problems besetting many places in Cornwall as the county's mining industry declined. For example, it had a lot of visitors from Australia, to which many Cornish miners and mining engineers were emigrating. And it was never a wealthy lodge, being badly hit by the short but sharp recession of 1911-12. It was a great day for the lodge when it was chosen for the May 1895 meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Cornwall. The town was decked with flags and banners and there was a procession through the streets to a service in the parish church. Thomas William was a member of the lodge but not a prominent one: he never served as WM and though he might have been in the town for the May 1895 meeting, he didn't take the church service. In December 1889 (and maybe on other occasions) he did go to a more modest affair, the lodge's annual banquet. He joined in the after-dinner musical entertainment.

The lodge had a Royal Arch chapter (founded 1877); and there was a Mark Masonry lodge attached to it. I don't know whether Thomas William was a member of either of those, but I think probably not.

MASONIC TEMPERANCE LODGE OF ST GEORGE 2025

This lodge was one of many set up in the mid-1880s by freemasons who didn't want alcohol at lodge meetings and dinners. The petition to found such a lodge in Plymouth had 48 signatures on it - an unusually large number. Unfortunately the 48 weren't listed in the lodge history I found, so I don't know whether Thomas William was one of them. However, he acted as chaplain during the lodge's consecration and served as one of its early WM's (possibly its third) which suggests he was supporter of the lodge's efforts to bring the temperance movement to freemasonry. He would also have been glad of another of the lodge's purposes: to raise money for the Devon freemasonry charities (see below for his own involvement in these, especially the educational ones). Lodge of St George 2025 was consecrated on St George's day (23 April) 1884. It had close connections with another lodge Thomas William was a member of - Lodge of Sincerity 189 - and met in 189's masonic hall during its first years.

Lodge of St George 2025 set up a Royal Arch chapter in 1886. Thomas William was not one of its founders but by the time he became a member of Quatuor Coronati 2076 only a year or two later, he had done a year as its First Principal.

THOMAS WILLIAM LEMON'S CRAFT LODGES

Continuing with lodges he was a member of, which were not mentioned in Ars Quatuor Coronati and therefore not in the Freemasons' Library catalogue.

BRUNSWICK LODGE 159

Like Lodge of Charity 223, this was one of Devon's Antient lodges, appearing on the Atholl Grand Lodge roll. It was constituted in 1802 as number 208 and got the number 159 in the 1863 renumbering. Over the years the lodge met in a number of different places, though always in East Stonehouse; until in 1879 it built its own masonic hall in Hobart Street, named Ebrington after Viscount Ebrington who had just become Provincial Grand Master of Devonshire. In 1864 it set up a Royal Arch chapter. And it has many daughter lodges in Devon. In a report in The Freemason's Chronicle in December 1887 - probably of that year's installation meeting - Thomas William was mentioned as one of the lodge's PM's.

SINCERITY LODGE 189, based in Plymouth

This lodge, the first into which Thomas William was initiated, should perhaps begin the long list of lodges he was a member of. It was a very old lodge indeed, with a warrant dated November 1769: perhaps that was part of its appeal to him. It was very proud of its pedigree.

The book on its history published in 1909 listed all its WM's so far. As a result I can say that Thomas William and GD member Thomas Walker Coffin were both members of 189 and both served as its WM. Coffin was WM from July 1872 to July 1873; Thomas William was one of the people initiated during that 12 months. Thomas William was WM from July 1878 to 1879, though he was not living in Plymouth at the time, but near Honiton. Both men were both still paying their yearly subscription to the lodge in 1909, and were listed as its second and fourth longest-serving members; though neither now lived in Devon.

In December 1893, a special dinner took place at Stonehouse Town Hall, organised by Sincerity Lodge 189. Fifty freemasons gathered to celebrate 21 years since Thomas William Lemon's first initiation into freemasonry. The guests also wanted to thank Thomas William for his donations to the lodge and to Devon's freemasons' educational charities. At different times he had given the lodge twelve photographs; including one of his distant relation, Sir Charles Lemon 2nd (and last) Baronet, a former Provincial Grand Master of Cornwall; one of the foundation-stone ceremony of Plymouth's new masonic hall at 1 Princess Square; and one apparently of the Temple of Solomon.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGES OF CORNWALL AND DEVON

Not all freemasons wanted to be awarded higher rank than could be obtained in their local lodge: higher rank brought status and its public acknowledgement; but it also brought extra duties, and financial burdens. During the years that he was able to live as a gentleman of independent means, Thomas William was willing to go that bit further for his freemasonry, and served as provincial grand chaplain and provincial grand warden. I haven't been able to confirm the dates for these, except to say that he had served in both roles by 1889. I think he may served his year as grand chaplain in 1887-88, as The Freemason's Chronicle featured him in that role on several occasions during that 12 months or so. His appointment came in time for him to be involved in the ceremonies surrounding the building of Plymouth's masonic hall in Princess Square. On the day of the laying of its foundation stone, which I think was in December 1887, 600 freemasons went in procession through the city to St Andrew's church. Thomas William was one of the group of clergy that met them at the door; and he then led the church service and read the prayers. In October 1888 he attended the masonic hall's formal opening ceremony, and made a speech.

It seems that only one new craft lodge was consecrated in Devon during 1888, the 51st craft lodge in the county. In July 1888, Thomas William was one of the officers at the consecration of the Western District United Service Lodge 2258.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY, DEVON PROVINCE

Thomas William was a Royal Arch mason but during 1888-89 he mostly figured in The Freemason's Chronicle as a man at Provincial level rather than lodge level, as Grand Principal Sojourner and Grand Provincial Second Principal. During that time he helped instal the year's Principal at Harmony Chapter 156; and at Brunswick Chapter 159, as a Past Principal of the chapters of both Brunswick and Sincerity craft Lodge 189. He also made donations to Brunswick Chapter 159, Fidelity Chapter 2230, and Huyshe Chapter 1009. All three received a miniature, hand-painted pair of Royal Arch tracing boards.; though I'm not sure Thomas William was even a member of the last two.

MARK MASONRY

The list published in Ars Quatuor Coronati says that Thomas William was a member of lodge 70, without further details. I believe the lodge in question to be Mark Masonry lodge ST JOHN LODGE 50, which is often given as '70' including in the FML database, due to its rather confused mid-19th century history. There's a valiant attempt to explain the many changes of name and number at that time, written by John G Dollery and published on the website of the Mark Masonry Provincial Grand Lodge of Devonshire. Dollery traced the lodge's antecedents back to the 1820s.

St John Lodge 50 is the only MM lodge I know for certain that Thomas William was a member of; and I couldn't find out when he was initiated. In October 1888, the Freemason's Chronicle - giving the lodge its old name (I think) reported him helping the installing officer at the installation meeting of Temple Lodge 50 (Temple was one of St John's past names); and then being installed himself as lodge chaplain for the coming year. Though the lodge now meets in Devonport, the meeting of October 1888 was one of the first to be held in the new masonic hall at Princess Square in central Plymouth.

MARK MASONRY PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF DEVONSHIRE

Thomas William had acted as MM Provincial Grand Chaplain on a temporary basis as early as 1878. He went to the province's annual meeting, presumably covering for someone unable to attend. During 1888-89 Thomas William was acting as Provincial Grand Chaplain again, this time for the whole year, while doing the same job in craft masonry: it was an exceptionally busy twelve months for him. He was one of the team of consecrating officers at the consecrations of these MM lodges: St George Lodge 303, at Stonehouse, in January 1888; St Martin's Lodge 379, at Liskeard, in February 1888; and De La Pole Lodge 372, at Seaton, in March 1888. He also helped instal Worshipful Masters at Mark Masonry lodges that year: in January 1888 at MM Sincerity Lodge 35, in East Stonehouse and immediately afterwards at the lodge's Royal Ark Mariners lodge as well; in August 1888 at Charity Lodge Plymouth 76; in October 1888 at Temple Lodge 50, in Plymouth; and in March 1889 at Hawton Lodge 100 (I'm not sure where that lodge met).

In August 1888, Thomas William was present at what was thought to be an occasion unprecedented in England. The annual meeting of the MM's Provincial Grand Lodge of Devonshire took place at Rose Ash, a rather remote village near South Moulton. Its main purpose was to lay a cornerstone with symbols of freemasonry on it, in the village's church of St Peter. Thomas William didn't lead the church service that was part of the ceremony; but he did do one of the readings.

MARK MASONRY AT NATIONAL LEVEL

Mark Masonry was rather younger than craft masonry: for example, the warrant for its Grand Masters' Lodge only dates from 1881 and as its lodge numbers show, there were not nearly so many MM lodges in Thomas William's time than there were craft lodges. Although a national hierarchy of officials quickly developed, perhaps it was still easier for MM freemasons to make the move upwards from provincial to national rank, and perhaps the expenses attached to doing so were not so great. Thomas William's name does not appear in the list of high MM officials from May 1887; but he is in a list published in 1898, and was actually appointed an MM Grand Chaplain in 1885.

CONNECTIONS WITH OTHER FREEMASONRY LODGES

FORTITUDE MARK MASONRY LODGE 66, based in Plymouth

In March 1888, Thomas William presented this lodge with a photograph of the ceremony in which the Prince of Wales was installed the Prince of Wales as Mark Masonry's Grand Master. As a result, he was elected an honorary member of the lodge. The installation ceremony had taken place in July 1886; perhaps Thomas William had been able to go to it.

ST ANNE'S LODGE 970

In 1889 Thomas William gave this lodge another copy of his photograph of Sir Charles Lemon. I don't know why he chose this lodge, which was based in Looe; perhaps it had some connection with Sir Charles. He wasn't at the lodge meeting to make the presentation himself; and I'm sure he wasn't a lodge member.

FREEMASONS' CHARITY WORK

Being on the committees that ran the freemasons' charities could get you noticed in the right quarters and in Thomas William's case it obviously did. He became well-known in Devon for the amount of work he put into Devon's charities; and the amount he donated to them. He was chairman of the Masonic Educational Fund's general purposes committee. And in 1888-89 alone he donated 100 guineas each to the national freemasons' boys' and girls' schools; and 100 guineas to the Mark Masons' Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and Widows of Freemasons. During the period 1888-89, he acted as steward at a meeting of Devon's Committee of Petitions; stewards were the agents that went around raising funds from lodges and individuals.

OTHER FREEMASONRIES

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE (AAR)

This freemasonry organisation is independent of the UGLE, with a separate masonic hall which in the 19th century was at 33 Golden Square Soho. Its lodge equivalents are known as Rose Croix chapters. Membership of the AAR is very select, being by invitation only. Only those who have been a Master Mason for at least one year are eligible; and even they have to be believers in the Christian trinity. Thomas William would have fulfilled those strict conditions by the mid-1870s at the latest.

The AAR equivalent of a craft lodge is called a Rose Croix chapter. There were two such chapters meeting in Plymouth in the 1880s, St Aubyn 20; and Huyshe 38 which met in Devonport. Although Thomas William was a welcome guest at St Aubyn 20, he was only ever a member of Huyshe 38. The AAR had several levels of initiation above the basic one and by 1880 Thomas William had reached its 30° level. It was not difficult to reach 30°, but in 1884, Thomas William reached the 31° level. Only allowed 81 AAR members could be 31° at any time; and it was the highest level in the AAR achieved by any man who joined the GD. He was still a member of the AAR, and of Huyshe 38 chapter, in 1900 after he had withdrawn from many of his other freemasonry commitments.

At the time of my sweep through The Freemason's Chronicle of 1888-89, Thomas William was High Prelate of Huyshe 38 chapter. At its March 1888 meeting he was one of four officers leading a ceremony in which three new members were elected and 'perfected'. When that part of the evening was over, he installed the year's MWS. A banquet followed, at which Thomas William took part in the singing and reciting. In September 1888 he presented the chapter with a set of photographs of current members of the AAR's Supreme Council.

RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE

As a Royal Arch and Mark Mason Thomas William was eligible to join the order usually known as the Red Cross of Constantine (its various full titles have all been a lot longer). He did join, but kept his involvement at a low level, never serving as a national officer and hardly ever attending the order's annual assemblies. The Red Cross of Constantine's craft lodge equivalent was called a conclave. I think it's likely that Thomas William and Thomas Walker Coffin were both members of Sincerity Conclave 102, founded in 1873 and holding its meetings in East Stonehouse, at least in its early years; though I haven't been able to confirm that he was a member from the annual reports of the Order that I've been able to check. Thomas William was still a member of the Red Cross of Constantine in 1899 though Sincerity Conclave 102 may have been dormant by then; and Coffin had left the order.

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS, often known as cryptic masonry

These are another group of freemasons independent of UGLE. They work the Ancient and Accepted Rite, also known as the Scottish. As with the AAR, membership was restricted and actually more demanding than the AAR with only those who were both Mark masons and Royal Arch masons being eligible. I don't quite understand the references to dates in the RSM's annual reports from the time, so I'm not sure exactly which year he was "received and acknowledged" as an RSM member. However it must have been very soon after the RSM first arrived in England - its Grand Council was only constituted in 1873. I think it's likely that he and Thomas Walker Coffin joined Sincerity Council 6, which was formed in 1876 and met in East Stonehouse; though I only have evidence for Coffin as a member of it, and that only from the 1890s.

Thomas William served as one of the RSM's two grand chaplains in 1883 and 1884; though he never rose any further up its hierarchy. In 1886, Thomas William helped at the ceremony at which future GD member Nelson Prower was admitted to the RSM. If he had ever been in Sincerity Council 6, Thomas William had left it by 1891 and joined the RSM's Grand Master's Council 1, which met in London. He was still a member of that council in 1899, the last year whose annual report I was able to find.

The evidence I've found suggests that Thomas William's most fervent commitment as a freemason was to the KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, properly known as the Order of the Temple. He donated to the Devonshire preceptory Royal Veteran Encampment 10, and may even have commissioned, a painting which embodied how he felt about the Order. I haven't been able to find a reproduction of the painting, but an article in The Freemason's Chronicle described it as showing a group of medieval templars taking their oath in time to go on crusade with Richard I. The idea of an Order of devout young men about to take up arms for Christianity would have appealed to Thomas William, both on personal grounds and as an acknowledgement of his family background.

Until 1889 all Knights Templar had to have been Master Masons for two years and also be a member of a Royal Arch chapter. Nowadays they have to be professed Christians; in Thomas William's day that seems to have been taken as read.

I haven't been able to find out exactly when Thomas William joined the Knights Templar. He was a member of the Loyal Brunswick Preceptory 24, which met in East Stonehouse. Like so many of the craft lodges of Devon, this was an old preceptory, its warrant having been granted in 1834. Thomas William had probably been recommended for membership by his mentor from Sincerity Lodge 189, T W Coffin, who was also a Loyal Brunswick 24 member. The evidence I've found shows Thomas William being installed as its preceptor in March 1888; which is so late in his knights templar career that I'm wondering if he was serving for the second time. His duties as preceptor will have added to the calls on his time in what was already an extremely busy 12 months.

In May 1887 - that is, the year before the GD was set up - Thomas William was appointed to succeed Lt-Col John Tanner Davy as the Knights Templar's most senior officer in Devon, the county's Provincial Prior. As the Knights Templar and the Knights of Malta were administered together, he also became Provincial Prior of the Knights of Malta. It's likely that T W Coffin recommended Thomas William as suitable for the post. Coffin was an elected member of the Order's governing body, the Council of its National Great Priory.

Until 1890 the National Great Priory held one meeting a year, in May, at the City Terminus Hotel in Cannon Street. After 1890 there were two meetings, the second being in December; and in 1890 the venue for both of them was switched to the Mark Masons' new hall in Great Queen Street. After each Knights Templar annual meeting, the annual meeting of the Order of Malta was held, with a banquet to follow. Thomas William attended his first National Great Priory in 1885, as a representative of Loyal Brunswick 24. Perhaps he was already being lined up to succeed Tanner Davy. During his time as Provincial Prior of Devonshire he attended nearly every annual meeting of both orders; and on each occasion he went to the banquet after the Order of Malta meeting. On a couple of occasions he was the most senior officer present at the banquet, and took the chair for the after-dinner speeches. At the same time he was having some success at getting more representatives of Devon's preceptories to attend the Knights Templar's annual meetings; and eventually one of them - James Keats from Loyal Brunswick 24 - was elected a Council member.

The years 1889 to 1894 were ones of great change at the Knights Templar, as the Order tried to make itself attractive to new members after a period of decline. The entrance requirements for prospective members were made less demanding, though the requirements for entry to the Order of Malta were actually toughened up. The entry fees Templar candidates had to pay were reduced. Efforts were made too to sort out the Order's finances and to strike off its roster those preceptories - quite a few - which had not sent in their annual subscriptions for more than three years. As Thomas William and T W Coffin continued to be active members of the Order through all these changes, they must have supported them; but other GD members who were also Knights Templar were not so keen. Nelson Prower didn't attend any annual meetings after the changes in entrance requirements came into force, and W G Lemon didn't go to any for several years. In 1890, GD members Jeremiah Leech Atherton and Francis William Wright both attended the May annual meeting (the last one, I think, before the changes took effect); but neither of them attended another one.

Back in his home county, it was Thomas William's job as Provincial Prior to call and chair meetings of all the members there; to supervise the installation of Encampment/Preceptory officers; and generally to promote the ideals of the Knights Templar and recruit new members. And in taking that on, Thomas William was up against the "lethargic condition" of the Knights Templar in the south-west, as The Freemason's Chronicle put it in 1892, in its review of freemasonry during the year 1891. Six preceptories were still going in Devon when Thomas William was appointed, though the review described them as having barely enough members to justify the existence of one. Three years into the job, Thomas William was being very zealous, the Freemason's Chronicle's reviewer said in 1891, but he wasn't getting much support. He was having some success with his own preceptory, Loyal Brunswick 24, but despite all his work, the Knights Templar's annual reports show that the Devon preceptories Royal Sussex (which met in Newton Abbot) and Trinity in Unity had stopped sending their yearly dues to the National Great Priory by 1890. Union or Rougemont preceptory stopped sending its annual subscription in 1892 and Holy Cross preceptory was declared defunct by the National Great Priory in 1893 after failing to send its dues for three successive years. The situation in Cornwall was much worse - but Thomas William hadn't been made responsible for that and was probably glad not to be.

Thomas William's work in Devon and his support of the changes in the Order led to promotion at national level. Although it was less spectacular, his rise coincided with that of the Earl of Euston whose sister, Lady Eleanor Harbord, joined the GD. In 1893 Thomas William served as Constable of the Order, one of its Great National Officers; pretty high up the Order's scale for a man who wasn't a member of the landed aristocracy. And at the December meeting that year, he was one of twelve men who were invested as Knights Commander of the Order of the Temple. The award of this title, however, seems to have been part of a carefully planned withdrawal from the Order. In the list of officers as at December 1893, Thomas William was no longer a National Great Officer of the Knights Templar and he wasn't in the list of officers for the Order of Malta either; though he did go to their banquet. He did not attend any annual meetings after that of December 1893, and by May 1894 he had resigned as Provincial Prior of Devonshire; no one was appointed to replace him. He was not named in a list of current Knights Templar drawn up in 1900.

The Knights Templar was the only freemasonry organisation in which Thomas William reached a senior national position. With that one exception, he preferred to keep his freemasonry very local.

COLLECTOR OF FREEMASONRY MEMORABILIA

I found two references to Thomas William having a collection of freemasonry memorabilia. A copy of the 1778 publication Antients Grand Lodge now in the Freemasons' Library collection was owned by him; and dated by him "1875", presumably the year in which he obtained it. He bequeathed it and his other books on freemasonry to Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia. He also lent some items to a public exhibition of freemasonry memorabilia held at Plymouth's Huyshe Masonic Temple in July 1887; one of five such exhibitions organised by his friend W J Hughan. Unfortunately, The Freemason's Chronicle's report on the exhibition doesn't give any details of the items Thomas William had lent to it.

TWO WAYS INTO THE GD

QUATUOR CORONATI 2076

The first of the two was the craft lodge Quatuor Coronati 2076. It held its meetings in central London but had a world-wide corresponding membership who were entitled to receive its magazine, Ars Quatuor Coronati and go to meetings when they were able, though they had no voting rights and couldn't serve as officers. A number of GD members were also active members of QC2076. Thomas William had become a corresponding member of the lodge by May 1888 when, in London for the annual meeting of the Knights Templar, he attended its monthly meeting at the Freemasons' Hall. Quatuor Coronati 2076 had been founded as a forum for the study of the history and symbolism of freemasonry. Thomas William was not as keen on this as he was on Rosicrucianism and never made as much effort to get to QC2076's big occasions as he did those of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (see below for SRIA): for example, he didn't go up to London for QC2076's 10th anniversary conversazione, in 1895. He let his membership lapse, probably after his marriage in 1894; he was certainly no longer a member by 1900.

SOCIETAS ROSICRUCIANA IN ANGLIA

This organisation was far more important to Thomas William than Quatuor Coronati 2076. The SRIA was an anomaly within freemasonry: it was not a lodge, and was independent of any freemasonry authority; but only freemasons could join it. In its Ordinances of 1905 - which Thomas William probably helped to draw up - SRIA stated what it had been founded for: "to give mutual aid and encouragement in working out the great problems of Life"; to discover the secrets of nature; to facilitate the study of the Kabbalah and the "doctrines of Hermes Trismegistus"; and to investigate the meaning and symbolism of "all that now remains...of the ancient world". It was organised into colleges and a number of cities had one, including Cambridge, Bristol and Glasgow. Thomas William joined its Metropolitan College in London, in July 1885.

The meetings of both QC2076 and SRIA featured a talk by a member, followed by discussion and comments; the talk was then published in the group's magazine. Thomas William gave no talks at QC2076 and only two at the SRIA's Metropolitan College; one at the meeting of 9 April 1891, on the topic of Rosicrucianism, and a second in 1919.

Despite his reluctance to give any talks, Thomas William attended the Metropolitan College's meetings very regularly for nearly 30 years, and became respected for his knowledge of SRIA's rituals and ordinances. And despite his many commitments in Devon, he worked his way up SRIA's hierarchy to serve as its Celebrant (equivalent to Worshipful Master). He was installed as Celebrant at the meeting of 12 April 1894; and at the same time congratulated on his recent marriage, with W G Lemon (his immediate predecessor as Celebrant and a man who had been married for many years) making "a very genial and humorous speech" on the subject. By 1900, Thomas William was representing the Metropolitan College on the SRIA's governing body, its High Council. From 1907, there was only one person in SRIA senior to him - its Supreme Magus, GD founder William Wynn Westcott. Thomas William was thus in line to succeed Westcott; but the Supreme Magus was appointed for life and Westcott outlived him.

In 1909, the SRIA set up a new college, the Robert Fludd College, based in Bath. Perhaps Thomas William had lobbied for this, because he took part in its consecration ceremony and visited it several times.

By 1914, the Metropolitan College's meetings had changed from monthly to quarterly; and moved into the popular freemasonry venue of Café Monico in Piccadilly. Thomas William continued to go to meetings regularly, even during World War 1, until there was a break after the meeting of January 1917. He next went to a meeting in October 1918, with the end of the fighting in sight but the country ravaged by the Spanish flu. The last meeting he went to was on 10 July 1919. It was a special one, at which the SRIA's jubilee was celebrated, and Thomas William read his paper on "Our Notable Deceased Officers and Fratres". There wasn't time to read in full two other papers that had been prepared, so precis of them were read instead. Both were by ex-GD members: George Frederick Rogers' paper on Hypnotism; and Marcus Worsley Blackden's paper on The Festival Songs of Isis and Nephthys.

SPIRITUALISM AND THEOSOPHY

I haven't found any evidence that Thomas William Lemon was involved in either of them. As an ordained priest of the Church of England he may even have thought that it was inappropriate for him to take an interest. He might also have been aware how controversial a subject spiritualism was within the Church of England: there was much debate on whether a member of the Church of England and especially the CofE clergy, could also believe in the reality of communications from the dead. I have to say, though, that it is hard to tell whether people were spiritualists: spiritualism was a very locally, even family-based pursuit and there was no over-arching organisation with a membership list that can be consulted now.

Sources for the esoteric interests section: FREEMASONRY

Database of the collections at the Freemasons' Library: go to //freemasonry.london.museum

and take the option 'Explore'. You don't have to have a reader's ticket to search the catalogue or to use the other online resources which include online copies, digitised as far as 1900, of the main freemasons' magazines, a very useful resource for some - but not all - freemasons' organisations.

General introductions to the various groupings within freemasonry.

Susan Snell and Peter Aitkenhead at the Freemasons' Library recommended these two books to me. Without them, there would have been even more mistakes in this section!

Beyond the Craft by Keith B Jackson. Published by Lewis Masonic, an imprint of Ian Allan Publishing Ltd of Hersham Surrey. First published 1980. I used the revised and expanded 6th edition, published 2012.

A Reference Book for Freemasons. Compiled by Frederick Smyth. Published London: Quatuor Coronati Correspondence Circle Ltd 1998.

Thomas William as a freemason:

Initiation: The Freemason's Chronicle December 1893 p4.

LODGE OF CHARITY 223

Websites www.brunswick159.com. And www.masonic-lodge.info

Via www.connectedhistories.org to a list originally at Lane's Masonic Records.

Lodge Virtue and Honor 494 Axminster 1844-1944 Centenary Celebrations It being in the Antient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, Province of Devonshire. By T E Mayo. Published Exeter, W V Cole and Sons Ltd 1944. Thomas William is not mentioned in the account of the lodge's history and he's not in its list of WM's.

METHAM LODGE 1205

By-Laws of Lodge Metham 1205 issued 1909, printed Plymouth: Underhill and Co. This small leaflet gives a small amount of lodge history but very few members past or present are mentioned and Thomas William isn't one of them.

The Freemason's Chronicle May 1885 p13 Thomas William as WM-elect.

ST GEORGE LODGE 2025

By-Laws of the Lodge of St George 2025 Plymouth issued 1917. Printed by Bro J H Keys of Whimple Street Plymouth. On p6, the Introduction to the booklet is by Thomas William's friend William James Hughan.

History of the Lodge of St George 2025 1884-1949 by W J Gilbert who is a PM. There are no details in the booklet of when or where it was published but the authors Foreword (p1) is dated Aug 1950. P2, p41: the account of the lodge's history is (P2) based on those lodge Minute books that survived the destruction of the Freemasons' Hall in Princess Square Plymouth in March 1941.

And on (p4) a copy of A Retrospect of the Lodge of St George 2025, 1884-1905 written by C G Withell, an early lodge member. There's a good account of the lodge's founding and (pp13-14) good lists of important members. On p19: the lodge's Royal Arch chapter was consecrated in October 1886. Thomas William is not mentioned at all in the booklet.

ZETLAND LODGE 1071

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1889 p5.

Freemasonry in Saltash 1865-1965 by Lt-Cdr T C A Waghorn as WM of 1071. I couldn't find any details of who printed it and there's no actual publication date in the booklet though 1965 is a good guess. It's a good account of all the Saltash-based lodges but as with so many of the lodges I've already listed, Thomas William's name is not mentioned in it.

BRUNSWICK LODGE 159

The Freemasons' Library has some of the lodge's earliest records in its collection, so there's a good account of the lodge's history in the FML catalogue.

Website www.brunswick159.com is the lodge's website incl a history. However, there's no coverage of the years between 1879 and 1915, just the years I most wanted to look at.

Thomas William is not mentioned in the rest of the account.

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1887 p8 has it as 158 but that's a type-setting error. Thomas William is mentioned as a PM of the lodge.

SINCERITY LODGE 189

Bye Laws and History: Lodge Sincerity number 189 by M G Endle and L R Dunstan. Published 1909. Both Thomas Walker Coffin and Thomas William Lemon are mentioned in the booklet: p6, pp16-17, p18.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1887 p4.

The Freemason's Chronicle February 1888 p5.

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p8.

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1888 p4.

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1893 p4 Presentation to Rev Dr Lemon, reprinting a report that had originally appeared in the Western Morning News.

OTHER LODGE CONNECTIONS

ST ANNE'S LODGE 970

The Freemason's Chronicle October 1889 p12.

FORTITUDE MARK MASONRY LODGE 66

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p11.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CORNWALL

The Freemason's Chronicle September 1888 p4 though not an official in Cornwall, Thomas William went to a meeting of its Provincial Grand Lodge, in Camborne.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF DEVON

The Freemason's Chronicle January 1888.

The Freemason's Chronicle July 1888 p3.

The Freemason's Chronicle October 1888 p10.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY

HARMONY CHAPTER 156

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1888 p7.

BRUNSWICK CHAPTER 159

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1888 p11.

FIDELITY CHAPTER 230

The Freemason's Chronicle June 1888 p11.

HUYSHE CHAPTER 1009

The Freemason's Chronicle July 1888 p9 Just noting here that www.brunswick159.com website, in its history of Brunswick 159, describes Huyshe Lodge as one of its many daughter lodges.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1888 p11.

MARK MASONRY

At www.devonmarkmasons.co.uk, website of the Mark Masons' Provincial Grand Lodge of Devonshire, John G Dollery's history of St John Mark Masonry Lodge, current number 50. The lodge is still active and is on Twitter.

MARK MASONRY PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF DEVON

The Freemason's Chronicle August 1878 p13.

The Freemason's Chronicle August 1888.

CONSECRATIONS/INSTALLATIONS

The Freemason's Chronicle January 1888 p8.

The Freemason's Chronicle January 1888 p6.

The Freemason's Chronicle February 1888 p10.

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p11.

The Freemason's Chronicle August 1888 p11.

The Freemason's Chronicle October 1888 p11.

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1889 p5.

NATIONAL LEVEL

I am not able to use the archives at the headquarters of the Mark Masons. The two calendars I consulted for some sense of the history of Mark Masonry are in the collection of the UGLE.

Masonic Calendar for 1888, its 3rd year of issue. Thomas William was not listed as an officer in this Calendar, but only national officers' names were published.

Masonic Calendar of 1898 showed how much Mark Masonry had expanded in the intervening decade. On p37 Thomas William as one of the Grand Chaplain; 1885. On p45 W G Lemon as the only other GD member listed.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE

Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Degrees from the 4° to 32° Inclusive under the Supreme Council 33° of the Ancient and Accepted Rite [in the British Empire etc etc]; plus a List of Members. I looked at the issues of 1880, 1885, 1888 and 1900.

Issue of 1880 pp43-44, p72

Issue of 1888 p13, p48, p57, p73,

Issue of 1900 p225.

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p4.

ST AUBYN ROSE CROIX CHAPTER

The Freemason's Chronicle September 1888 p11.

RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE properly the Imperial, Ecclesiastical and Military Order of Knights of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine. The Freemasons' Library has a volume of its annual reports purporting to cover 1868 to 1899; however, if any reports were issued between those of 1874 and 1887, they were not included in this volume.

Statement of Accounts, Annual Report and List of Officers and Conclaves Published in London by George Kenning, who was a member of the order. The annual report for 1893 contains the first published list of past officers at national level but Thomas William Lemon isn't in it.

Issue of 1891 p3 shows Thomas William Lemon at the only annual assembly of the Order that I am certain he attended; that of March 1891. GD members W G Lemon and Nelson Prower were also at the meeting.

Issue of 1895: Beginning on p24, there is the first published list of current members of the Red Cross of Constantine: p28 for T W Coffin and p36 for Thomas William Lemon; who are both in Sincerity Conclave 102 at the moment. Sincerity Conclave 102 is in the list of conclaves, on p19. However p51 there are no dtls of this conclave in the list of when and where the conclaves meet; so it might be dormant; though (p21) it's not on the list of conclaves struck off the roll, either.

The last in the volume is the Issue of 1899 p40 in the list of current members.

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS also known as the Cryptic Rite, a reference to the basic layout of one of its rituals.

Annual Report of Proceedings of the Grand Council of RSM of Engl and Wales etc. Published by George Kenning. The Freemasons' Library earliest volume of these covers 1887 to 1899.

Issue of 1887 p3; p9 notes Thomas William's apologies for absence from the annual meeting of February 1888.

The next issue with any mention of him was that of 1891: p3 has Thomas William attending the annual meeting, as a Past Grand Chaplain. Beginning on p16 was the first published list of senior RSM officers since 1871; p17. Beginning p20, list of current members; and just noting here how few are members of any of the RSM's councils at the moment. On p22 entry for T W Lemon "received and acknowledged" in the RSM's first year. P15 for details of Grand Master's Council 1 which was one of the RSM's four original ones.

Issue of 1896 re ann mtg p3 of March 1896. RSM is holding its ann mtgs at the Mark Masons hall now. On pp19-26 a list of current members: p23.

Issue of 1899: p24.

Thomas William as an RSM member helping to induct Nelson Prower: The Freemason May 1886 p12.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

If following up the references below, BEWARE The Freemason's Chronicle: it often gets the name of Thomas William's preceptory wrong, referring to it as the Royal Brunswick when it was in fact the Loyal Brunswick.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR AND ORDER OF ST JOHN OF...MALTA

Calendar of the Great Priory which changes its name in 1896. Published for the members of the Order. The report for each year contains the following:

- list of senior officers as at the annual meeting in May
- details of preceptories thus: name + number; are they still functioning; where they meet and when; date of warrant; current Preceptor
- very basic coverage of the annual meeting or (after 1890) meetings
- coverage of the meeting/dinner of the Order of Malta

- annual accounts.

I went through the Calendars from 1878 to 1900. Just noting here that Thomas William never served as preceptor of Loyal Brunswick 24 preceptory during that period.

I started with 1883, so the information on Loyal Brunswick 24 is from its p11: meets St George's Hall East Stonehouse. Warrant is dated 1830.

1884 issue pp30-31.

1885 issue p31.

1887 issue p1 in which Thomas William is listed for the first time as Provincial Prior of Devonshire.

1888 issue p16: date of Thomas William's appointment - 31 May 1887; p1 an account of Thomas William doing homage for his appointment at the December meeting of the National Great Priory. He was attended into the hall for this by (amongst others) Thomas Walker Coffin and W G Lemon. On p31 in list of those attending the annual meeting in May: Nelson Prower, soon to be in the GD, was there representing Mount Calvary D preceptory. PP32-33 Thomas William, W G Lemon and Nelson Prower also attended the meeting of the Order of Malta, in May 1888, and Thomas William presided at the banquet.

1889 issue p30; pp36-37 in which the changes to entrance requirements were first debated; pp38-39.

1890 p1, p6, p10, pp31-34; p35 ratification of the changes in membership requirements and efforts to sort out the Order's finances; p35 change of venue for meetings and p37 confirmation that there would now be two national meetings per year.

Following the 1890 issue: text of a leaflet United Orders of the Temple and Hospital, with alterations to statutes 1 and 2 and several new statutes.

1891 May issue p1, p30, p35. December issue p1, pp7-8 in which Thomas William read out a letter from W J Hughan.

1892 May issue p1, p30, p37-38. December issue p1, pp8-9.

1893 May issue p1, p31, p34, pp36-37. December issue p1, pp9-10.

1894 May issue p1, p28-29. December issue p1, p9.

Officers as at ann mtg of May 1894 p1 E of Euston as sub-prior; TWL is now "KCT" but he isn't 1895 issue p28.

With the 1896 issue the Calendar changed its name to become Liber Ordinis Templi volume 1.

Issues 1896-1900. The 1900 issue contains a list of all current members of both Orders. No GD members are on it.

The Freemason's Chronicle Jan 1892 p9 the review of freemasonry in 1891.

The Freemason's Chronicle August 1887 p4: Thomas William's installation as Provincial Prior of Devonshire.

The Freemason's Chronicle December 1887 P4 another report of Thomas William making his homage at the National Great Priory.

The Freemason's Chronicle February 1888 p4.

The Freemason's Chronicle October 1888 p10.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1890 p3.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1893 p4.

LOYAL BRUNSWICK 24 PRECEPTORY

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p13: Thomas William installed as its preceptor and also as its Prelate.

ROYAL VETERAN ENCAMPMENT 10

The Freemason's Chronicle October 1887 p7 the presentation of H Lynn's painting of Knights Templar soldiers taking their oath.

I've made some efforts to identify the artist, named only as "H Lynn" in The Freemason's Chronicle. I've looked at the British Library's collection of dictionaries of artists working in the 19th century, including those from Ireland and Scotland; miniaturists; sea painters; watercolourists, Royal Academy exhibitors...I haven't found H Lynn in any of these works. No such person has an entry in either of the DNBs, in Who Was Who, or in Boase. Perhaps it was someone working in Devon, and not exhibiting nationally at all.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA properly the Order of St John of Jerusalem, Palestine, Rhodes and Malta.

Beyond the Craft p26 says that all those hoping to be installed as a Knight of Malta must already be a Templar knight.

The Freemason's Chronicle May 1887 p4.

The Freemason's Chronicle June 1888 p10 the first Provincial Priory meeting that Thomas William organised after his appointment was the first that had been held in Devon for 12 years.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1890 p3.

DEVON MASONIC EDUCATIONAL FUND

The Freemason's Chronicle February 1888 p4.

The Freemason's Chronicle March 1888 p10.

The Freemason's Chronicle August 1889.

The Freemason's Chronicle November 1888 p11.

