ENGLISH SHIPS IN THE REIGN OF JAMES I.

Communicated by R. G. MARSDEN, M.A.

I. INTRODUCTION.

THE following list of ships' names occurring in documents of the reign of James I. (March 24, 1603, to March 27, 1625), has been compiled mainly from the following sources :

High Court of Admiralty, Records.

State Papers Domestic, Ireland, Colonial, East Indies, America, Venice.

Historical MSS. Commission, Reports.

Customs Rolls.

Exchequer, Warrants for Issues, Issue Rolls, and K. R. Memoranda Rolls.

MSS. (various) British Museum.

Letter Book of the East India Company (Birdwood and Foster).

Letters received by the East India Company (Stevens).

Purchas, his Pilgrims.

Hakluyt Society, Publications.

Camden Society, Publications.

The list includes the names of the king's ships ; for these I have relied mainly upon Mr. Oppenheim's ' Administration of the Royal Navy.' Many of the king's ships had namesakes who were merchantmen.

The number of names in the list is about 1,000 ; the number of ships bearing them is much larger—perhaps 1,200 or 1,400. Such names as ' Anne,' ' Blessing' (or ' Blessing of God'), ' Elizabeth,' ' Gift' (or ' Gift of God'), ' Grace' (or ' Grace of God'), ' Hope' (or ' Hopewell'), ' James,' ' John,' ' Margaret,' ' Mary,'

'Mayflower,' 'Thomas,' and 'William' were very common; of ships bearing those thirteen names there would seem, from the number of ports to which they are described as belonging, to have been over 300.

The tonnage of the larger ships is sometimes but not generally stated in some document relating to her; but to only about 200 of the 1,200 or 1,400 merchant ships whose names we know can a definite tonnage be assigned. Of these 200 the majority are over 200 tons, the tonnage of those below that burden being rarely given. Owing to the loose statements as to the tonnage of the same ship and to the frequent use of the same name for different ships, only a rough estimate can be arrived at as to the number of ships of a specified tonnage. Of ships over 500 tons there are about 30, of which only 6 are merchantmen; of ships between 400 and 500 tons, 12 or 15; between 300 and 400 tons, 35 or 40; between 200 and 300 tons, about 100; of those between 100 and 200 tons there are only about 80 of which the tonnage is stated, but the real number was probably 200 or 300. The largest man-of-war was the 'Princess Royal,' 1,200 tons; the largest merchantman was the 'Trades Increase,' 1,100 tons.

The ships of the Royal Navy number 50; ships noted as having sailed to the East Indies, 97; to Virginia and North America, 80; to the Mediterranean, about 50; to the West Indies, 23; to northern seas for whales or discovery, 18; to South America, 3. Owing to the voluminous records of the East India Company and to the Colonial series, most of the names of the ships engaged in those trades have been preserved.

Ships of the Royal Navy, in the records called 'naves regiæ' or 'of his majesty,' are distinguished in the list by the modern style 'H.M.S.' The column headed 'Tons' gives the recorded tonnage of the ship or ships of the corresponding name; where more than two tonnages are recorded, the highest and lowest figures (thus, '160-348') are given. The column headed 'Ports' gives, by reference to the corresponding number of the port or ports in the list of ports, the port or ports to which the ship, or ships of the same name, belonged. Many of the ships have no recorded port. The 'Voyages' column gives the voyages which the ship is known to have made: East Indies, 'E. I.'; Virginia or North America, 'Va.'; Arctic seas, for whales or discovery, 'Wh.'; South America, 'S. A.'; West Indies, 'W. I.'; Mediterranean, 'Med.' The last or 'References' column gives approximately the number of documents in which the name has been noted as occurring.

Whether or no a ship found her way into the records was largely a matter of accident, and it will be understood that the list does not purport to be a complete list of ships of the reign. Materials for compiling a complete list do not exist; probably the present list may from time to time, as new documents come to light, be enlarged. The total list of ships afloat can only be guessed at; judging from the number of recorded names, the total, exclusive of fishermen and small craft, of which there are not many in the list, must have exceeded 2,000. An estimate<sup>1</sup> belonging to an early year of the reign gives the following numbers: ships fit for war or merchandise, 800; ships between 40 and 100 tons, 800; hoys 'and other great hulks,' 150; small craft and fishermen, 1,500. This estimate, which is unsigned and of doubtful authority, is probably excessive; but the number of known ships in the list shows a very great increase over the figures of the middle of Elizabeth's reign. A list of ships<sup>2</sup> of and over 100 tons for 1588, the Armada year, gives a total of only 183 ships; another list for 1582 gives 177. The number of ships of and over 100 tons for James's reign was probably not less than 400, since the known ships of and over 200 tons were 130. In 1609 grievous complaint was made of the decay of English shipping in the Spanish and Bordeaux wine trades and in the Norway and east country trades, by reason of Dutch competition; but no mention is made of the growing East Indian and American trades.

Probably this complaint was by merchants engaged upon the older trade routes, and must not be relied upon as representing the state of shipping generally.

It is not possible in these pages to set out all the references (over 10,000) to the documents in which the ship's names occur; those which relate to a few historic ships, or are for other reasons interesting, are given at the foot of this paper. As to the character of the information supplied by the documents, it is difficult to give even a general description. A large number of the records, particularly the Memoranda Rolls, in which ships are seldom mentioned except for customs purposes, give meagre details; on the other hand, the Libels, Examinations, and other series amongst the Admiralty court records, sometimes give full particulars of a ship's career upon particular voyages. A ship's name is often useful in piecing together a story contained in documents not otherwise connected; and there is scarcely a document from which something besides the mere name may not be gleaned relating to the ship. Where little but the name is mentioned, and the name is a common one, there is often great difficulty in identifying her. For this purpose the title of the suit, in the case of the Admiralty court records, is of assistance; and where this does not appear upon the document, some or one of the following matters are commonly mentioned, and may give a clue to her identity: her building port, owners' and master's names, charter parties, bills of lading, passengers, cargo, voyages, casualties, tonnage, armament, letters of reprisal, appraisement, capture, and loss. Statements of a ship's port and tonnage are not conclusive for purposes of identification; the same ship is not always described as of the same port, and statements of tonnage are unreliable. A well-known ship, the King's 'Vanguard,' is described as of 600, 660, 701, and 832 tons; whether the less known 'Amitys,' described as of 190, 200, 203, 232 tons, are the same or different ships, it is impossible to say. Change of a ship's name is another source of confusion; but where the 'alias' is known or given, it appears in the list.

III.—LIST OF PORTS.

In connection with the preceding List of Ships.

THE ports to which the ships belonged number about 200; a list of them, with the number of ships described as belonging to each, is given below. These numbers are arrived at by reckoning each name as one ship; but for the reason stated above, namely the frequent use of certain names, this mode of reckoning understates the number of ships belonging to the larger ports.
