

FILEY BRIGG.

By EDWIN LITCHFIELD.

[Read December 5th, 1890.]

(Abstract.)

In this paper the author objected to the description of the Brigg as a natural breakwater, and urged that it is the work of some ancient race of men. The large blocks on the south side of the Brigg are, in his opinion, artificially shaped and arranged, and represent the removed northern half of what was originally a tongue-shaped promontory.

ORDINARY MEETING.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2nd, 1891.

T. V. HOLMES, Esq., F.G.S., President, in the Chair.

The donations to the Library since the previous meeting having been announced, the thanks of the Association were accorded to the various donors.

The following were elected Members of the Association :—
Walter Dixon, Miss Alice Mitchell, Miss Alice Smith, and Llewellyn Treacher.

Dr. Morison and Mr. C. A. Johnson were appointed auditors.

The following papers were then read :—

“On some recent sections at Dulwich,” by THOMAS LEIGHTON and JOSEPH B. OGLE.

“The British Tertiary Echinoid faunas and their affinities,” by J. WALTER GREGORY.
