SIR,

25 Devonshire Street, Portland Place,
June 8, 1842.

I BEG to lay before the Society of Antiquaries a copy of the Inventory of the Goods of Archbishop Parker, exhibited by his son, John Parker, esq., as executor, in 1577. The original is on a roll of parchment (consisting of nine pieces) seventeen feet and a quarter in length, by seven inches and a quarter in breadth, and is in a state of complete preservation.

Though the subject matter is not altogether adapted for reading at any of the Meetings of the Society, yet, from the circumstance of every article being priced, and the inventory relating also to the domestic arrangements of so distinguished a person as Archbishop Parker, who, we must remember, was one of the founders, and the President, of the first Society of Antiquaries, in 1572, it appeared to be interesting as a document for reference, in illustration of the manners of his age.

It must be borne in mind, however, that in this Inventory, (as in others of the same description,) taken for the purposes of his executor,<sup>a</sup> and connected with the proof of his will, the articles were, probably, in many cases, priced much below their real value.

Any remarks on the Archbishop himself would be out of place here ; but, as the Inventory displays a goodly collection of plate, apparel, "napery," furniture, &c., handsome, but not rich or gorgeous, and well befitting his station in life, we may refer to Strype's observation on Mrs. Parker, that "When he was advanced to the high place of Archbishop of Canterbury, she ordered her housekeeping so nobly and splendidly, (her family also being enlarged,) that all things answered that venerable dignity."<sup>b</sup>

The furniture of the different rooms is very similar, varying principally in number and quality of the articles ; consisting of sets of hangings, tables with tressels, joined forms, joined stools, court-cupboards, carpets, cushions, and a few chairs ; also andirons, and other fire utensils, and several pairs of virginals in different rooms, besides a pair of organs in the chapel, and "an instrument musically" in the chamber of presence. The carpets, which are numerous, would scarcely appear to have been used according to modern custom for the floors of the apartments, Hentzner having informed us, that the presence-chamber of Queen Elizabeth herself was strewn with hay (i. e. rushes), but they were principally coverings for the tables, stools, and court-cupboards ; though they may have been occasionally used to cover some select part of a room, as in the presence-chamber for instance, where a Turkey carpet is mentioned, five yards and a half long, and two yards and three-quarters broad.

The court-cupboards, which are generally considered to have been moveable closets, answering the purpose of a side-board, were frequently much ornamented, and such an article may still be seen in old mansions, and in collections of old furniture. They were covered with carpets or cupboard-cloths, and set out with cups, salvers and plate. Some of these carpets were very handsome. In one of the inventories in that valuable authority for researches of this nature, the History of Hengrave, is mentioned, "One carpet of black velvet for the little bord, laced and fringed with silver and gould, lyned with taffita." Some of these carpets also had cloths to lay over them, probably, when not in use, in order to protect them. In the same Inventory cushions are mentioned which in richness exceed those of the Archbishop, as "two long cushions of plain black velvet, embroidered with roses, wth gould and pearle all over, with tassels of gold and silk;" but the nature of his archi-episcopal office probably induced him to avoid too much splendour in his household. There is, however, in the chamber of presence a cushion of cloth of baudkin,<sup>a</sup> and in other apartments several cushions of velvet and damask. The chair of cloth of gold and silver in the gallery was probably a state chair; and, indeed, from the paucity of these articles, they would seem to be intended only for persons of higher rank. From the "latten andirons" in the chamber of presence being valued at forty shillings, it may be inferred that they were ornamented, and in some cases we know they were richly carved. Iachimo, describing the chamber of Imogen, says:—

" Her andirons
(I had forgot them,) were two winking cupids,
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands."

The pictures are chiefly portraits of royal personages, the principal noblemen and officers of state, and the promoters of the Reformation, but the list is interesting to shew the Archbishop's selection.

In some of the bed-rooms are truckle-beds (trundle-beds, as they are called in some of the inventories of this age); these would seem to have been small beds generally appropriated to attendants, and placed at the foot or side of the standing or principal bed, and occasionally made to run under it during the day. The Host, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, in answer to an inquiry after Sir John Falstaff, says, "There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed, and truckle-bed." Hudibras also makes the distinction :—

" If he that in the field is slain
Be in the bed of honour lain,
He that is beaten may be said
To lie in honour's truckle-bed."

In my Lord's chamber the bed is a field-bed, but this sort of bed may have been so called from being a folding bed, as field-stool from fauld-stool, and not as being a camp bed, or lit de champ.

The "grene satten of bridges" in the vestrye was satin of Bruges ; and "dornix," of which there are some articles mentioned, is used for "Tournay," and applied to the manufacture of that place. The "Grene saie," in the "Grene Gallery," and elsewhere, was probably not silk, but a species of fine cloth (sagum), one of the earliest productions of our woollen manufacture, and the material of which stockings, at three shillings a pair, were objected to by William Rufus, as being, from the price, too common for a king.

Among the articles of dress are some chymmers (chymeres, or chammers), which are described by old writers as gowns cut down in the middle, and generally used only by persons of rank and opulence.

The cassock, of which there are several, was a loose coat, originally applied more particularly as a military coat, and so used by Shakspeare, although now confined to a part of the clerical dress. Grogram, of which several dresses are made, was a stuff composed of silk and mohair, a kind of taffeta ; and in the proclamations respecting excess in apparel, about this period, was classed with satin, damask, and taffeta. In "The Debate between Pride and Lowliness," by Francis Thynne, written about 1568, and published by the Shakespeare Society, the following is part of the description of a tailor, who is called "handsome in his weede," and is at first mistaken for a man of some rank—

" His upper stockes of sylken grogerane,
And to his hippes they sate full close and trym,
And laced very costly every pane :
Their lynyn was of satten, as I wyn."

Among the dresses will be observed a parliament robe of scarlet, faced with minever, a convocation robe, with a hood, faced with changeable taffeta and minever, and three rochetts, one of damask and two of holland.

The "haberdines" mentioned in the list of fish were a species of salt cod, called so from the city of Aberdeen, famous for curing them,<sup>a</sup> and the consumption in such a household as that of the Archbishop was probably considerable.

In the stables two coaches are described, one "covered with lether, and furniture for ij horses to the same," the other "vncovered, with like furniture;" but, as they were introduced a few years before the death of the Archbishop, it is natural to expect that a man of his rank would have been so provided. According to Stowe, Walter Ripon made a coach for the Earl of Rutland in 1555; though it is elsewhere stated that they were introduced in 1564 by Guiliam Booneen, a Dutchman, who became the Queen's coachman. On this subject, however, I must refer to Mr. Markland's interesting "Remarks on the early use of Carriages in England," in the twentieth volume of the Archæologia.

Notwithstanding the valuable gifts of plate given by the Archbishop in his lifetime to Bene't<sup>b</sup> and Caius Colleges and Trinity Hall, there was still a considerable quantity left at the time of his death, including bowls, cups, pots and salts of various description, gilt and parcel gilt; also a "medicyne cupp withe a cover." The hour-glass, valued at twenty shillings, was probably ornamented, as they occasionally were;<sup>c</sup> and it may be observed, that in the Bishops' Bible, printed by John Day, in 1569, the Archbishop is represented with an hour-glass at his right hand, though the — "gifted brethren, preaching by

were of a different class from his Grace. The only clock in the Inventory is one with a frame in my Lord's chamber.

Of the armour only the aggregate is given, and no numbers of the particular articles; but in 1568, when invasion and disturbances were expected, and the Archbishop devised a plan for equally rating his clergy to arms, he taxed himself at the following rate:—"Six horse, with armour; ten light horse, with their furniture; forty corslets, forty Almain rivets, forty pikes, thirty long bows, thirty sheaves of arrows, thirty steel caps, twenty black bills, twenty harquebuts, and twenty morions."<sup>a</sup>

From lists of the Archbishop's establishment, entered at length on some of his rentals, the number seems in general to have somewhat exceeded an hundred persons, including therein some of the families and attendants of the chief officers, and was altogether on a fitting scale for a nobleman; but a dry list of offices and names would not afford much interest. The amount or sum of this Inventory does not quite agree with that given in the Appendix to Strype's Life of the Archbishop. Some of the different heads accord, whilst others vary; but the copy now sent is an accurate transcript of the original, line for line, and preserving the same spelling with the exception of using ði for one half, instead of the character in the manuscript.

Begging to apologise for taking up more of your time than I had at first anticipated, being aware that the only value of the communication is in the Inventory itself,

I remain, Sir, your faithful Servant,

STR HENRY ELLIS, K.H. F.R.S.

WM. SANDYS.
