This scholar's edition of the American Spelling Dictionary called for suggestions to clarify the rules & improve compatibility with traditional spelling. The greatest of these changes (all of which appear in a new PC version of ASD) is: Final-s replaces final-z in plurals (five rooms), possessives (the room's coolness), & 3d person present tense singulars (he rooms with a frog).

A Primer of Spelling Reform

We use our numbers accurately —in an orderly, logical way.

$$\begin{array}{r} 12 \\ +3 \\ \hline 15 \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} 12 \\ +5 \\ \hline 17 \end{array}$$

These spellings, too, are orderly and logical because the letters match the sounds—

But the same sounds when used in other words are often spelled with different letters:

said

100,000
words
have irregular spellings!

That's "Why Johnny Can't Write"

That's "Why Johnny Can't Read"

He can't remember all the irregularities

Johnny can't see why we always use our numbers logically
—but spell so many words

illogically!

He's got a point

Think what gobbledegook we'd have if our adding were as irregular as our spelling!

$$\begin{array}{r} 12 \\ +3 \\ \hline 15 \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} 12 \\ +5 \\ \hline 36 \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} 12 \\ +7 \\ \hline 6 \end{array}$$

We can make our spelling logical by spelling the way we speak.

Not like this—

physique

But like this—

sed

fiz
fizeek

THEN ...

Johnny can learn to write.

And Johnny can learn to read.

THE END

This proposal for an American spelling is offered in response to the widely held conviction that English spelling is more complex than it needs to be. Tens of millions share this view. Illiteracy's connection with our massive social problems makes it imperative that we now re-examine our contorted orthography in light of emerging changes in pedagogy and the very important contribution that computers can make in accelerating and easing the adjustment to reform.

This first printing of AMERICAN SPELLING, intended primarily as a scholar's edition, should not be considered a fait accompli. Spellings have been determined neither by whim nor preference, but by careful consideration of the data in the appendix combined with and guided by the contributions of respected authorities as reflected in the bibliography. We are now at the point where further fine tuning is appropriate. Recommendations are welcome from all — phoneticians, linguists, educators, publishers, those with a special interest in the subject and, very importantly, the public at large. The appendix is designed to encourage such participation. A second edition benefitting from comments received should go a long way toward supplying an authentic and much needed tool for the repair of a chronic flaw in our culture.

FOREWORD AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors of much of the background for this book do not appear on the title page. They are the phoneticians, linguists, and spelling reformers, many listed in the bibliography, who for over a hundred years and in a variety of ways have sought to improve our notation for recording speech. Special recognition is accorded the British lexicographer Walter Ripman, the American scholar and linguist Godfrey Dewey, and the too often anonymous pronunciation specialists of our great dictionaries. The writings of these dedicated persons have had a broad impact on the present research. Their wisdom and experience has helped steer a steady course through stormy phonetic seas.

In retrospect it is clear that the direction of the present work was set while visiting Dr. Dewey in Lake Placid during the fall of 1973. After a couple of days in heady discussion, the lifelong champion of spelling reform said, in essence, "Before you leave I want you to know why I invited you here. Unlike most of my colleagues, I believe that printers have much to contribute to spelling reform. Historically they are partly to blame for our confused spelling; yet they are uniquely positioned to help repair it. Without their support I doubt if the battle will ever be won. Let me illustrate my point: An airline's board of directors may order its pilots to land their planes safely and smoothly. In theory that should be enough; that should bring the planes down safely and comfortably. In reality that is not enough. The man in the cockpit — the man whose hand rests on the controls — has the last word. Not only has he the last word, but he can likely tell the board a thing or two they've never known about landing a plane; he is master of the nitty-gritty. As to your industry, it is rightly proud of Benjamin Franklin, printer. It boasts of his statesmanship and quotes his pithy maxims, but it has forgotten the great challenge he passed along to future generations of printers: the reform of our spelling. What I have seen of your work gives me hope that the visually sensitive skills and day-to-day expertise of typographers can be linked up with the academic expertise of our phoneticians and linguists. Such an alliance is our best hope."

Using new techniques and building on the wisdom of the past, this volume moves toward meeting that challenge. Generous help has come from a number of sources:

The large computer facility at Ocean County College in New Jersey forwarded the project in the late '70s when it enabled its brilliant director, Dr. Edward Lias, to pursue his interest in laying the foundation for a computer translating program — a program that promises to play a crucial role in the practical application of spelling reform by relieving the stress that changeover would otherwise cause at the keyboard.

Among those in the academic community who have been helpful are Professors Harvie Barnard, Helen Bonnema Biscard, Stanley Hess, Harry Lindgren, John Henry Martin, Olivia Patmore, Ann TenEyck, Newell Tune, Ben Wood, Valerie Yule, and the staffs of libraries in New York, London, Edinburgh, Croton-on-Hudson, White Plains and Columbia University.

Above all has been the generous support of Photo-Lettering Inc., New York's distinguished typographic house, guardian of the world's largest collection of alphabet designs, and a pioneer in the legibility and esthetics of print. The organization's unique tools, helpful personnel, and seasoned expertise have undergird the research with a strength manifesting true corporate commitment to social responsibility and firm resolve to make a significant contribution to the welfare of society — a fitting response to the challenge voiced by Ben Franklin, statesman and printer.

THE AMERICAN LANGUAGE ACADEMY

The American Language Academy, chartered in 1985 by the State of Delaware, is the current name of the 110-year-old organization which has worked to mitigate the damage done by our disastrous spelling. Its earliest American ancestor was the Spelling Reform Association, founded in 1876. In 1946 the SRA merged with the Simplified Spelling Board (founded 1906) to form the Simpler Spelling Association, grandparent of The American Language Academy, thus preserving organizational continuity.

The genius of alphabet, the one-to-one sound-to-letter correspondence, is largely obscured in our writing. English is by far the most erratically spelled of modern languages. The forty-odd sounds we speak are spelled in well over four hundred different ways. For those literate in English it is an inefficient and expensive absurdity. For those learning to write and read it is a disaster — a dragon at the gate — encountered by children almost on their first day in school. It is indeed a major factor in creating our mass of adult English-speaking functional illiterates, minimally estimated at 10 percent of the population.

The central concern of what developed into a spelling reform movement was first expressed by John Hart in England in 1554 and by Benjamin Franklin in America in 1768, followed on both sides of the Atlantic by eminent personages among whom were Noah Webster, Mark Twain, Theodore Roosevelt, Melvil and Godfrey Dewey, John Dewey, Robert McCormick, Andrew Carnegie, Isaac Funk, Nicholas Murray Butler, Frank Laubach, Isaac and James Pitman, George Bernard Shaw, and many others including the present HRH Prince Philip.

The American Language Academy is sponsoring two parallel projects ultimately to be tied together to achieve the goal of a simplified phonetic spelling for general use.

The first project uses phonetic spelling to teach traditional spelling. It begins by teaching children the basic concept of letters: a reliable one-to-one relationship between letter and sound. Thus the discouragement of early failure is avoided. When the child becomes skilled in converting sound to sight phonetically, then a gradual changeover to the irregularities of traditional spelling is undertaken. This computer-assisted instructional system is known as the "Writing to Read" program. It was developed by John Henry Martin (a vice president of The ALA) and is now available through IBM. More than 150,000 children in schools coast-to-coast are being introduced to writing and reading by this highly successful means.

The second project of The American Language Academy is just getting under way. Its goal is to expand the phonetic "Writing to Read" notation along a broad front into a regularized, optional, alternative, 26-letter "American" spelling for general use. Certain adjustments have been made in the notation to render it sufficiently compatible with traditional spelling so that the two may be used interchangeably. The project foresees the time when American spelling will largely replace traditional spelling in print and for general use. The project's principal tools — the American Spelling Dictionary and the transliterating program for typesetting — are the work of Edward Rondthaler (a trustee of The ALA) and Edward Lias (a specialist in computer technology) using the research facilities of the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform based at Photo-Lettering Inc.

How Widespread is Illiteracy?

How many English-speaking adults in the U.S. are totally illiterate? Nobody knows. But there are millions who cannot read, write, and comprehend texts on familiar subjects, and do not understand the signs and written instructions they encounter every day. These are the semi-illiterates — a fast-growing population with reading and writing problems so serious that they cannot function smoothly in modern society. They number between 25 and 55 million: one in every seven of us, perhaps one in every four. From the very limited statistics available it is estimated that more than 40 nations have a higher percentage of literates than the United States.

Such figures are staggering: a shocking disgrace to the nation whose education system, moneywise, is the best in the world.

Jonathan Kozol's book "Illiterate America" tells about a commercial artist, skilled in his work, who keeps himself currently informed through news broadcasts, but cleverly hides his illiteracy by conspicuously carrying a copy of The New York Times — unread.

The story arouses a searching question: Why could the young man master the tools of his art, but not the tools of literacy?

Good tools are good teachers. Poor tools make poor pupils. No art instructor would give his students blunted pencils, whiskered brushes, rusty pens or crooked T-squares. English spelling — the basic tool of writing and reading — is whiskered, blunted, crooked and rusted. It is the only branch of learning that has undergone no serious update or repair since before the 16th Century. Other disciplines receive continuous updating. But not spelling.

The book in hand directly addresses our tortured orthography. It sees new light coming from two directions. The very latest methods of teaching children to write before they read, and the use of computers in typesetting — neither of which were developed with spelling reform in mind — are precisely what is needed to achieve reform. How these two developments can work together to solve our illiteracy problem is discussed on the following pages.

Hearty guffaws are sure to greet this effort. They reflect the traditional blindness behind our failure to come to grips with this vitally important but sadly fossilized tool of our culture.

The Case for Spelling Reform

This ENGLISH-AMERICAN SPELLING DICTIONARY focuses directly on the prospect of expanding the phonetic "teaching spellings", used more and more widely in primary education, into a fully accredited alternative spelling for general use. The key word is alternative.

Several factors point to the timeliness of this endeavor:

1. Increased use of typewriters, computers, and phonetic spelling in the teaching of writing. Convincing evidence that when writing is taught before reading, the ability to read comes naturally, as a by-product: A child learning to write is also learning to read.

2. The fact that many of our children, even some of the brightest, find their sense of logic unable to cope with the illogic and disorderliness of English spelling. Acknowledgment that remedial efforts for adults reach scarcely five percent of those in need.

3. Astonishment of most literate American adults upon learning that only in English-speaking schools is it necessary to teach spelling. As explained by a Spanish student: "In Spain the teacher tells us the sounds of the letters and then we can write or read anything we can say."

4. Surprise at finding that pronunciations (prə·nun·sē·ā·shənz) always found in English dictionaries are generally omitted from foreign language dictionaries — omitted because foreign spellings adequately represent pronunciation.

5. The pressing demand for a much higher level of literacy in the United States as we move from a manufacturing economy into a sophisticated high-tech economy of services and communication.

6. Growing awareness of the connection between illiteracy and our mounting social problems: dropout, crime-in-the-streets, hard core unemployment, and poverty. It is not by chance that half of our prison inmates are illiterate.

7. The largely overlooked but very serious fact that illiteracy is a real threat to democracy. Those voters who depend on the spoken word alone — who live, as it were, in a perpetual twilight — are easily deluded and manipulated.

8. Widespread acceptance of English as the emerging lingua franca of international communication. It is also the cornerstone of legislative efforts by "U.S.English" and "English First" to establish an official United States language. Whatever helps immigrants and foreigners to write and speak our language without needless frustration works for the good of all. A reduction in language barriers can open diplomatic, commercial, civic and societal doors that are now scarcely ajar. It may well broaden the avenues toward peace.

9. Recognition of the fact that traditional spelling tends to promote the mispronunciation of English, and that a regularized spelling would tend to do the opposite. A better fit between sight and sound should not only reduce illiteracy but lead to greater stability of pronunciation, to less chance of misunderstanding, and to more reliable communication overall.

10. An awareness that we have already accepted various alternative spellings: ax/axe, taboo/tabu, hijack/highjack, forgo/forego, dript/dripped, and many others. Applying to more words a principle that has proved fully successful with some is not breaking new ground; it is sensibly expanding what already works.

11. The prospect that a new spelling mixed with the old (even in the same sentence) need not be disruptive if it is introduced as an optional alternative for use by those, and only by those, who prefer it. Respectability for the new spelling can be anticipated by labeling it "American" in the U.S., "British" (with minor changes) in the U.K., and "Australian" in Australia.

12. The present availability of "American"—a no-new-letter system designed to be compatible with traditional spelling. This system is supported by a computer translating program currently being perfected for typesetting machines, word processors, desk top publishing, personal computers, and computerized typewriters. It is an extension of the "spelling check" programs often used today. It will automatically translate traditionally spelled input into simplified "American" output, thus answering the concern of authors, reporters, editors, copywriters, keyboard operators and others who, understandably, would resist a change that threatened to alter their customary writing habits.

It is fortunate that as the social and economic needs for a more logical spelling increase, our new technologies overcome the blocks that have historically thwarted reform. The attainment of this worthy goal, however, depends on the foresight, sensitivity, and compassion of the literate — not on the desperation of the illiterate, whose lack of literacy robs them of any voice in the matter.

"AMERICAN"

Children want to write before they want to read. When they come to school for the first time almost all children think they can write. They've scribbled their names at home, or made a few letters with crayons. That's "writing". Very few, however, think they can read. For this valuable observation we're indebted to Dr. Donald Graves' book "Let Them Write", published by the Ford Foundation, and confirmed by the exhaustive research of Dr. John Henry Martin, author of IBM's "Writing to Read" program. More and more schools are making the most of this important truth. Their 5- and 6-year-olds become, with a little encouragement, avid writers. In many cases this is done with the aid of computers. Much of the spelling is not what we'd call "correct"; but it makes sense to a beginner. It's an elementary phonetic spelling partly invented by the children themselves. Teachers or parents explain the sounds of various consonants and do the best they can to explain our wayward vowels. Then each child goes ahead and writes according to his or her own understanding of the link between letters and sound, unhampered by the irregularities of "correct" English spelling.

An invitation to a bicycle ride might read like this:

"If yu kum to see mee yu kan rid mi bik"

Another child might write it this way:

"Ef yoo kum too se me yoo kan ryd my byk"

This wide dissimilarity of spelling is more illustrative than typical. A lenient but reasonable uniformity is encouraged in the preschool and elementary classroom, particularly where computers do part of the teaching. What is all-important, however, is that the children are grasping the fundamental principles of phonetics, are building confidence in their ability to convert sound to sight, and are expressing their thoughts in writing. That's progress. That's youthful logic in action — fertile soil for education. But there's a catch. All the good thinking is only a first step on the rough road to literacy in English. Trouble lies ahead. Big trouble for some. To be literate in English the child must scuttle much of his early spelling logic and memorize thousands of illogical unphonetic spellings. The marvel is that over 90 percent of the youngsters can do it. The tragedy is that a very significant number can not — and may end up in the ranks of our 25 million functional illiterates with their high incidence of dropout, juvenile delinquency, crime in the streets, hard core unemployment, and poverty.

It's not easy to defend English spelling. Try to explain to a rational child why sane adults spell kum "come", or dum "dumb", or tuf "tough", or sed "said". Where's the logic? Other means of communication do not scramble words. Neither TV, nor radio, nor tape recorders, nor the telephone give us sounds that must be unscrambled to be understood. Why should writing? Writing was not meant to be that way. Why do we insist on pushing millions of our children into lives of functional illiteracy? The answer is shocking: Because we are stubbornly determined to perpetuate phonetically obsolete spellings used in England during the 16th century! Absurd.

If the number of our readers and writers continues to decline the visual word is destined to become the province of an elite group of literates, say 50 million, whose literacy will give them control of government, education, business, and everything else. The illiterate masses will learn from TV, from radio, and loudspeakers whatever the literate elite wish them to know. Farewell democracy. Goodbye. Illiterates soon become docile sheep. The proper functioning of majority rule depends largely on the ability of all to get and to give information freely and independently by sound and by sight. In a society overrun with audible electronic communication the task of making it easy to read and write and understand our visual speech — our "speech that stands still" — deserves no less than top priority.

A thoughtful solution is waiting in the wings: We could offer an alternative to those who cannot memorize haphazard English spelling. We could offer them a well-structured systematic spelling that is not distorted, that does not play havoc with their sense of logic and reason, but builds on it, encourages it — and looks enough like present writing so the rest of us could read it on sight or after a few minutes' practice. (We'd find it as compatible with our present reading patterns as a strong regional dialect is compatible with our hearing.) Systematic spelling takes full advantage of a well documented educational principle: logic stimulates thinking, thinking encourages learning, learning is facilitated when what is being learned "makes sense". A spelling that makes sense would open the door to more literacy for more people, young and old, than all our remedial reading efforts put together. It would go a long way toward rescuing those who if not rescued will greatly magnify our social problems and undermine our democratic structure.

The idea of a simplified, reformed, systematic spelling is not new. It is no Johnny-come-lately. It is the product of a hundred years of careful research and meticulous refinement by some of the best scholars in our language. Not surprisingly it is called "American".

The proposal, then, is that temporarily we have two spellings: English and American. Strong medicine? Perhaps; but our malady is great. The 42 sounds of spoken English are not spelled in 42 simple ways, but in a mix-up of at least 400 different and conflicting ways! Other languages have no such nonsense. Their written words are reliable pictures of spoken words. Written English, accordingly, is enormously perplexing to foreigners, and tragically baffling to millions of our own children. The illiteracy spawned by English spelling doggedly feeds our mounting social problems, weakens our economy, hampers our international communication, and dims our future way of life. The sickness is severe. It calls for potent medicine. Now.

Tiny Switzerland cheers us on. Its people flourish in the scramble of four different languages at once! Surely we can accept the temporary inconvenience of living with two fully compatible spellings until the less functional one retires. A small price for such great benefits.

Our strong attachment to illogical spelling is probably a holdover from long ago when routine memorizing played a major role in elementary education. Memory skills were a mark of scholarship. Good spellers won high praise; poor ones were frowned upon. Spelling bees and the old Blue Back Speller gave teachers in one-room schoolhouses abundant material for memory drill — an easier task than developing the skills of logical thinking so important as high-tech replaces the pick-and-shovel.

Today we should be stressing different values. Writing and reading are essential to well-being. They are 'round-the-clock utilitarian functions, not matters of special privilege. Spelling — the basic tool of writing and reading — must be brought within reach of those whose native sense of logic is frustrated by our spelling's illogic. Our generation can perform a lasting service to society by supporting a simplified, regularized spelling for all. Every survey tells us that writing and reading are in crisis. Every school is affected. The tragic ramifications multiply. No longer can we afford the luxury of limping on with unsuccessful half-way measures, telling ourselves that we are solving the illiteracy problem when, in truth, we are not.

It is important to recognize that we are already attuned to the daily use of alternative spellings. Our scholarly dictionaries list more than a hundred of them: catalog/catalogue, align/aline, plow/plough, draft/draught, programme/program, etc. (see page 308). Interchangeable (interchangeable) spellings are not new. American, of course, will greatly increase their number, and in so doing achieve an orderly fit between sight and sound. What is significant is that we have already taken the first step toward accepting alternative spellings. We need only to adopt a tidy phonetic notation and let the computers help us move faster.

KEY TO READING AMERICAN SPELLING

Pronounce the long vowels — the pairs ending in 'e' (ae ee ie oe ue) — like the first letter of each pair sounds when reciting the alphabet:

The vowel-sound in 'good, should' etc. is written 'uu'— guud, shuud.

(No change in 'oo' for the sound in 'moon, food', etc.)

Most other changes in spelling are phonetically self-evident.

The photo-typesetting machine or word processor is programmed to convert the English spelling into simplified American spelling automatically as the type is set.

Q. Will books, magazines and newspapers be printed in American?

A. Not at first. But a typesetting computer program is being perfected that will enable typesetting that is keyboarded in regular English spelling to be translated automatically into American spelling without re-keyboarding. (See illustration at left.) This program — an extension of spelling correction programs currently in wide use — will allow operators of typesetting machines and word processors to spell in traditional English just as always. The computer then takes over and automatically translates into American spelling, so the typesetting or typewriting becomes American — or even a selected blend of American and English. This breakthrough permits authors, copywriters, typesetters and others to continue to write and keyboard in our present English spelling even though the output is to be in American.

Q. What will American spellers do when they encounter books in English spelling?

A. It will be difficult for them, but far less difficult than if they could not read at all. About 50 percent of the words on a page are the same in both spellings. Another 30 percent or more change only one or two letters. So the reader who knows only American will stumble, but will get along considerably better than if he had no reading fluency at all.

Q. Will we suffer a cultural loss by Americanising foreign spellings?

A. Other languages do not seem to have suffered culturally by adapting foreign words to their spelling systems. Has the 'f' in 'telefon' made the German language any less cultured? Such regularity of spelling has certainly contributed to German literacy — hence to a more cultured population.

Q. Won't the switch to American spelling be much like our effort to use Metric?

A. No. There is no easy way to switch to Metric. Everything is different. Meters are not compatible with feet, nor liters with quarts. The two measurement systems are totally different and cannot be used together. English and American spelling, on the other hand, have much in common and can be used together even in the same sentence.

Q. Would words like 'hear' and 'here' have only one spelling in American?

A. Yes. Context will clarify the meaning—just as it does in our speech. For example:

"Come heer to heer the music."

There's nothing new in using context to clarify the meaning. We do it all the time:

"That gold mine is mine."

"Bank at the bank on the bank."

Context is stronger than spelling. If I write

"Come hear to here the music", you know exactly what I mean. Thousands of words with just one spelling have numerous definitions. The word 'point' has 86; 'set' has 115!

Q. Will proper names be respelled?

A. No, nor will uncommon scientific or medical words whose present spellings have terminological significance. These will provide the "memory training" so dear to the hearts of traditionalists.

Q. How about regional dialects?

A. TV, radio, and travel have made regional dialects less distinctive than fifty years ago. Even so, many regional remnants persist. A word like "car" has one spelling, but several regional pronunciations. This means that in different sections of the country the letters represent slightly different sounds to the local reader's ear. Yet one spelling can suffice because all of us, in speaking, use the same number of spoken sounds no matter where we live. If this were not true, every dictionary publisher would be printing a separate edition with a different pronunciation scheme for each section of the country! Other languages have regional dialects too—with one spelling.

Q. Is American spelling 100 percent regular? Is there perfect fit between spelling and pronunciation in all cases?

A. No. No language has 100 percent fit. But with a single page for its alphabet key, no new letters, no diacritical marks, and only twelve rules, American achieves a remarkably good match. Its visual compatability with English spelling should do much to speed adoption.

Two diacritical marks may be helpful in the first stage of teaching children and foreign students: An indication of the unstressed schwa, and perhaps a dot over the 'half-ee', but continued use of these cues should not be necessary.

Q. How will the ball get rolling?

A. The spadework for phonetic spelling is well on its way in Dr. J. H. Martin's "Writing to Read" project sponsored by IBM, as well as in Dr. Donald Grave's "writing first" program for primary grades (see pg. 18). Sen. S. I. Hayakawa's organization "U S English" could be another spearhead. Leadership should, of course, come from the White House, but the main thrust is more likely to come from desperation elsewhere: from parents, teachers, principals, or school boards who can see the value of a simplified spelling; from the armed services where functional illiteracy is a major problem; from leaders of minority groups; from prisons where half the inmates are illiterate; from comic strip artists who often use phonetic spelling for emphasis; from dictionary publishers who see it as relevant to their subject matter; from avant garde publications, repair manuals, Bibles, or a special edition of the Readers Digest; from printers who will have the program in their computers; from teachers of "English as a second language"; quite likely from those engaged in technical or international communication. The need is great, the time is right. Just as Arabic numerals replaced Roman numerals, so simplified spelling is destined to replace traditional spelling. Those who need it most — the illiterates themselves — can never bring it to pass. Their illiteracy robs them of initiative.

Q. Will etymologists object?

A. Not if they're as knowledgeable as the eminent Dr. Mario Pei who has pointed out that since words must be traced back through several changes to reach their origin, reformed spelling will add just one more step of retracing.

Q. Could words in American be misread as meaning something else in English spelling?

A. No. Except in rare instances the new American spellings are one-of-a-kind even though they retain a high level of visual familiarity.

Q. Who will be the greatest opponents?

A. Those who have not thoughtfully considered the full significance of "American" or have not yet awakened to the fact that spelling is the only subject in which our schools use text books that have not been significantly updated since the 16th Century.

The complete AMERICAN alphabet is shown on the opposite page. Children, adults and foreign students who learn this 1-page system will be able to write, in American, anything they can say in English. The phonetic principle used in this notation is, for English, an equivalent of the phonetic spelling used daily by all who write in Spanish, Italian, German, Russian, Dutch, Finnish, Hungarian, Polish, Czech, Serbo-Croatian, Portuguese, Turkish, Korean, Vietnamese, Swahili, and scores of other languages. AMERICAN is a total system running close enough to established reading patterns to achieve a good phonetic fit and at the same time retain visual compatibility with traditional spelling. A logical set of rules enables our 26 letters to represent the 42 sounds of English. These rules lean slightly in favor of tradition — sometimes at the expense of maximum simplification; yet their virtue, unlike the countless rules of English spelling, lies in keeping them logical and within manageable limits. A by-product of AMERICAN orthography is that more than occasionally it provides a cue to the placement of stress in multi-syllable words.

REFERENCE NOTES and RULES:

² Neither ‘ar’ nor ‘or’ are digraphs when followed by a stressed vowel (around, maroon, memorandum, original). In such cases the ‘r’ begins a new syllable.

⁴ Final ‘e’ is dropped from ‘he~~e~~, she~~e~~, me~~e~~, we~~e~~, be~~e~~, and from words ending in ‘ie’ (justifi~~e~~), and ‘oe’ (banjo~~e~~). The ‘e’ must be restored before suffixes are added (dri, driely; embargo, embargoed). A hyphen may replace the final ‘e’ of a stressed long vowel prefix (re-enter, di-urnal, co-author).

⁷ ‘o’ followed by ff, ss (offer, cross) and usually by ng (long, strong) is stressed and pronounced ‘aw’ (like ‘o’ in ‘for, nor, mor’).

⁸ When a e o are followed by ‘rr’ the vowels are stressed and keep their normal short-vowel pronunciation (marry, merry, sorry).

⁹ ‘au’ and ‘ou’ never terminate a root or a word, and are always followed by a consonant (fault, out). ‘aw’ and ‘ow’ never begin a word (jaw, power). See page 292.

¹⁰ In unstressed syllables ‘ue’ becomes a very short diphthong pronounced ½yu (like the second ‘u’ in accumulate).

¹² At the beginning of a syllable ‘y’ is always a consonant (yet, beyond). Following ll, nn, ‘y’ always begins a new syllable (millyon, lannyard). At the end of a syllable ‘y’ is always a vowel and never stressed (victory, pityful). See note ³.

AMERICAN retains the traditional spelling of proper names, unusual scientific terms, and also ‘to’, ‘do’, ‘of’, ‘is’, ‘his’, ‘has’, ‘as’, ‘was’, and the suffix ‘-ful’. It has two self-evident abbreviations: th = the, U = you.

In vowel strings (flooid, freeing, kaeos, yeloish, triead) the syllable ends after the first two vowels if they form a digraphs (as shown on the spelling notation chart opposite); if not, the syllable ends after the first vowel (creaet, reality, jeografy, reiteraet).

Those citing regional pronunciations as a potential stumbling block to spelling reform fail to realize that different regions will routinely assign local pronunciations to AMERICAN spellings. This is as it should be. For example, many New Englanders will give an ‘aahr’ pronunciation to stressed ‘ar’ (as in car), while pronunciations in other regions will tend to be harder, or more nasal, or approaching ‘awr’. The International Phonetic Alphabet differentiates between such dialects, but AMERICAN and dictionary notations self-adjust, as explained in “How about regional dialects?” on page 13.

A Forecast of the Effectiveness of American Spelling based on the well documented experience of i.t.a.

Probably the best way to predict the effectiveness of American spelling is to examine the rise and the fall of its predecessor, Sir James Pitman's "initial teaching alphabet". American and i.t.a. have much in common, but the difference — a product of twenty year's hindsight — bids fair to be the difference between past failure and future success.

At the time of its introduction in the early 1960s, i.t.a. had great promise. This totally phonetic system and its 18 new letters provided a one-to-one fit with English sounds. A first grader using i.t.a. could write with some confidence any of the several thousand words in his vocabulary — precisely as children do in other languages. It worked. He could write words, and his classmates could read what he had written. No endless drill with sterile sentences like "The boy has a bat. The girl has a cat. The man has a hat." Instead of such tiresome and unimaginative drivel the i.t.a. child busied himself writing short essays on lively and timely subjects: how a neighbor rescued her cat from a tree; how a broken pipe flooded the basement; who got clobbered at the bike race yesterday; or how mother bought a rocking chair and two lawn mowers at the auction:

mie mufher went to an aucfhun and fhæe got a rockinġ çhær and tœ launmœers and fhœe is gœinġ tœ another aucfhun on satidæ and I am goinġ to join the boiz club and I nœ it looks liek in thær thæ hav a televizun and pœol tæblz and you can bie pœesa. the end. —Bobby, age 6, first grade, Long Island

The i.t.a. alphabet with its auxiliary letters was intended as no more than a "starter" alphabet. It was to be used only until the child could be weaned away into traditional spelling. Weaning away was thought necessary because back in the early '60s the concept of a widely used alternative spelling — an optional alternative spelling — had not yet surfaced. No one foresaw the role that computer translation could play in making an alternative spelling feasible. It was not yet understood that computers could bear the brunt of translation for print, and thus pull teeth from the strongest argument against reform.

Most children were able to master the transfer from i.t.a. to traditional English. By and large they succeeded in memorizing the vagaries of “book spelling”. Miraculously the many words that needed changing did not present an insurmountable obstacle. Among these were children who would have been totally discouraged by early-on failure. They were saved from wreckage. This tended to lull some observers into the assumption that the answer to illiteracy had at last been found. In reality, however, a significant number of children failed to make the successful transfer from an orderly and logical spelling into the morass of a disorderly and illogical one. These unfortunates were left with a 44-letter alphabet that had no practical use. The outside world saw the peculiar letters and spellings as freakish. That is where i.t.a. met its Waterloo. It was planned as salvation for those who otherwise could not have learned to spell. In practice, it left too many stranded.

American spelling focuses squarely on this problem — and gets its motivation and direction from hindsight. It uses the same phonetic pairs as i.t.a., but its notation and spelling are for the long term: it is intended as an orthography for all purposes. American is written in our familiar 26 letters arranged in orderly and fixed pairs. No letters are bizarre. It has the potential of serving as a contemporary, efficient, and comfortable spelling for children, for adults, for foreign students, for immigrants, for international communication and for all other purposes. The following comparison of notations speaks for itself:

i.t.a.....	æ	au	ou	oi	ee	ie	ue	œ	ɪ	wh	ch	th	th	sh	ʒ	ω	ω	ɣ
American.....	ae	au	ou	oi	ēē	ie	ue	oe	ng	wh	ch	th	th	sh	zh	uu	oo	z

American, of course, will serve our children as a “starter” alphabet—as in the “Writing to Read” and “Writing First” systems. As with i.t.a., teachers will stress phonetic spelling rather than memory spelling. Adult illiterates will be taught similarly. All will be encouraged to write essays using any word in their vocabulary. The big difference between American and i.t.a. then emerges: those who do not or cannot switch to traditional English spelling will not be left with a writing notation that has no practical use. They will have learned and will continue to use an accredited alternative spelling reasonably compatible with traditional English spelling and perhaps destined to replace it.

Thus the fully demonstrated and documented success of i.t.a.’s initial phase — before the required transfer to traditional spelling — forecasts the effectiveness of American spelling. The success of that initial phase tells us why American, with its much more lenient requirements, can be trusted to deal a telling blow to illiteracy.

Implementing Spelling Reform

THE TOOLS ARE ALREADY IN PLACE *

It is generally assumed that the introduction of spelling reform will require wide agreement among educators, and perhaps legislation by Congress. Just a few years ago that would have been true. But not today. The outlook today is very different. To understand why it is different we need only examine the change taking place quietly in one school after another out in the grass roots, coast to coast. The discovery that children want to write before they want to read is dramatically changing the instruction received by 5- and 6-year-olds. This instruction begins with a form of simplified phonetic spelling. Highlights from a preceding page tell the story and bear repeating here:

When they come to school for the first time almost all children think they can write. They've scribbled their names at home, or made a few letters with crayons. That's "writing". Very few, however, think they can read. For this valuable observation we're indebted to Dr. Donald Grave's book "Let Them Write", published by the Ford Foundation, and confirmed by the research of Dr. John Henry Martin, author of IBM's "Writing to Read" program. More and more schools are making the most of this important truth. Their 5- and 6-year-olds become, with a little encouragement, avid writers. Much of the spelling is not what we'd call "correct"; but it makes sense to a beginner. It's an elementary phonetic spelling partly invented by the children themselves. Teachers or parents explain the sounds of various consonants and do the best they can to explain our wayward vowels. Then each child goes ahead and writes according to his or her own understanding of the link between letters and sounds, unhampered by the irregularities of "correct" English spelling.

An invitation to a bicycle ride might read like this:

"If yu kum to see mee yu kan rid mi bik"

Another child might write it this way:

"Ef yoo kum too se me yoo kan ryd my byk"

These children are grasping the fundamental principles of phonetics. They are gaining confidence in their ability to convert sound to sight. They are expressing their thoughts in writing. That's progress. That's youthful logic in action — fertile soil for education.

Let us now suppose that one of the children embarks on an essay requiring the words "fire engine". He tentatively writes "fer injun"; then seeks guidance from his teacher. The time has not come to introduce the young writer to the misfits of English "book spelling", so the teacher is faced with making a choice: she can let "fer injun" stand as is — trusting that the boy will ultimately learn "fire engine". Or, as a precaution against the possibility that he may not make a smooth transfer to English spelling, she can help him piece together a spelling that (1) is consistent and makes sense to his understanding of letters and sounds, (2) is sufficiently compatible with English spelling so his parents can read it, (3) is true to authentic dictionary pronunciation so that his writing is not phonetically substandard, and (4) follows a system of notation that does not lead into a blind alley but can be used in adulthood if he fails to make a successful transfer to traditional spelling. These are desirable objectives, but fulfilling them on the spur of the moment may be difficult for the teacher. Much of English pronunciation has become so casual that a teacher may not be sure that her own pronunciation is "middle-of-the-road". A spelling source book (such as this) using our familiar 26 letters and based on dictionary pronunciation fills all four requirements and gives her the needed guidance — fier enjin.

Similar incidents repeated again and again by more and more teachers nationwide will quietly but surely usher in spelling reform — at first as a logical and respected alternative; later, as a full-fledged orthography where letters are seen as trustworthy guides to pronunciation. Different regions, of course, will give local pronunciations to certain graphemes, but a spelling that reliably represents speech will be a powerful influence for better diction in all regions and all levels of society.

The rising generation, by and large, will feel at home with both 'fire engine' and 'fier enjin'. In their circles American spelling will not be uncommon. At some point an important dictionary will replace its pronunciation notation with reformed spelling. Printers will make the translation program available. We need not wait for Congress to act. The new spellings, while subject to further perfecting, are sufficiently in place to begin to be used in selected classrooms and, with careful discretion, perhaps elsewhere.

→ This first edition of American spelling is not offered as a fait accompli. The material has been diligently researched, and is at the point where additional fine tuning would be welcome from phoneticians, linguists, educators, publishers, those with a special interest in the subject, and the public at large. The appendix has been compiled to stimulate such comments. A second edition benefitting from the material received should serve as an even more comprehensive source book for the schools and homes of children being taught to write before they read.

Helping Solve the Bilingual Problem

There is widespread concern as the U.S. moves toward becoming a bilingual nation. Our bilingual public signs, bilingual balloting in many states, and unduly prolonged bilingual education in the public schools contribute to our drift away from a nation bound together by a single language. The danger of being divided politically and culturally along linguistic lines is all too clear.

Two organizations — "U.S.English" 1424 16th St, Washington DC, and "English First" 5881 Leesburg Pike, Falls Church VA — are spearheading the drive for Federal legislation that would establish English as the official language of the United States. There are strong movements in Alabama, California, Idaho, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Washington and Wisconsin to enact legislation declaring English the official state language. In California a petition with more than a million signatures authorized a referendum on the issue. Similar statutes that have lain dormant for many years are being considered for reactivation in Georgia, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Nebraska and Virginia.

The intent of these efforts is highly commendable. But legislation alone will not reduce the formidable barrier immigrants face when attempting to become literate in English. It is a barrier not encountered in other languages, and little understood by our own citizens.

To grasp the importance of this matter, imagine that you are visiting Mexico and have learned the sounds of Spanish letters — a skill that can easily be acquired before your plane lands. Having learned the simple relationship between Spanish letters and sounds you can pronounce any word encountered in the course of your visit — any word you see on a sign, in a newspaper, a book, or elsewhere. You can pronounce these words with confidence because Spanish letters reliably match spoken Spanish sounds. When, for example, you see the word "teléfono" you can pronounce it correctly, and you have made a small beginning toward learning the language. If the next word that meets your eye is "policia" you can pronounce it too, and add it to your vocabulary. This gives you a feeling of accomplishment. It is a positive language-learning experience.

Now look at what the Mexican immigrant faces when he comes into the United States: He may have a strong desire to learn English, but his road to literacy is full of obstacles. He cannot learn a simple letter-to-sound relationship because our sounds, particularly the vowels, have many different spellings.

Each of our letters represent not one but many sounds, as illustrated by the English spellings on pages i-iv of the introduction. When the Mexican sees our word "telephone" he has no means of knowing which pronunciation out of a dozen or more is the correct one. His task is frustrating.

Written Spanish helps one learn Spanish.

Written English only confuses the learner.

To make the point even clearer, consider this: No farmer employing immigrants to harvest a crop would be so foolish as to give them dull tools. Dull tools would slow down the production to a dribble. Yet this is precisely what we do linguistically. We give our immigrants dull tools and wonder why they find it so hard to become literate in English — why, in so many cases, discouragement sets in so soon.

Our literacy tools must be sharpened. Legislation aimed at disqualifying those who cannot fathom our graphic potpourri does not really solve the problem. It does not develop competent and productive citizens. To make the legislation truly effective — to enable it to build a nation bound together by a single language — it should be backed up with the option of an alternative spelling that is as logical and learnable as the spelling of the immigrant's native tongue.

When the American spelling notation is firmly set it should, if possible, be presented to the public as a replacement for pronunciation notations in a respected dictionary (see page 23). This would immediately give status to the orthography. Lacking such favorable introduction, it is likely that the spellings will be labeled by some as inferior or second class. Four safeguards against such downgrading have been developed. All who are sympathetic to reform should keep them firmly in mind: (1) The reformed spelling has the appeal of being called "American". (2) It is offered purely as an optional alternative for those who prefer to use it — strictly a matter of choice. (3) It is fully compatible with traditional spelling and can be mixed with it in any proportion desired. (4) It is supported by a program being prepared for typesetting and personal computers which converts traditionally keyboarded copy into reformed spelling, thus making it unnecessary to retrain adults who may have occasion to write in American.

The phonetic spelling in the American column of this page (also shown within parentheses on the experimental dictionary page opposite) may be regarded as a 'picture' of the word's pronunciation. Subtle changes in letter size indicate (1) placement of stress and (2) intensity of stress, or vowel dilution. Primary stress is shown, additionally, by a continuous underscore; intermediate stress by a broken one real-ity (reality) n. 1. actual existence. 2. resemblance to what is real. 3. the state or quality of being real. — real-ities (realityz).

re-al-ly (reealy) adv. 1. in reality; actually. 2. genuinely or truly. 3. indeed.

ac-com-mo-date (acomodaet) v. 1. to do a kindness or favor to; oblige; provide suitably; supply. 2. to provide with room and sometimes with food and entertainment; make suitable or good. — ac-com-mo-dat-ed (acomodaeted); ac-com-mo-dat-ing (acomodaeting); ac-com-mo-da-tor (acomodaetor); ac-com-mo-da-tion (acomodaeshun) ger-und (jerrund) n. 1. a grammatical form regularly derived from a verb and functioning as a noun, having in Latin all case forms but the nominative. 2. a form similar to the Latin gerund in meaning or function. — ger-un-dial (jerundial) ger-un-div (jerundiv); ger-un-di-val (jerundieval); ger-un-dive-ly (jerundivly).

mon-o-gram (monogram) n. a character consisting of two or more letters combined or interlaced, often printed on stationery, embroidered on cloth, etc. — mon-o-gram-matic (monogramatic); mon-o-gram-mat-ical (monogramatical); mon-o-gram-mic (monogramic).

spec-i-fy (spesifi) v. -fied(-fied); -fy-ing(-fy-ing) 1. to mention, indicate, or name specifically or definitely; to state in detail. 2. to give specific character to; to name or to state as a condition. — spec-i-fi-ca-tive (spesificaetiv); spec-i-fi-ca-tiv-ly (spesificaetivly); spec-i-fi-er (spesifieer).

trans-par-en-cy (transpairensy) n., pl. -cies (-syz). Also trans-pare-ence (transpairens). quality or state of being transparent. 2. something transparent, esp. a picture, design, or the like on glass or some translucent substance made visible by light shining through from behind.

trans-pa-rent (transpairent) adj. 1. having the property of transmitting rays of light through its substance so that bodies situated beyond or behind can be seen distinctly. 2. admitting the passage of light through interstices; so sheer as to permit light to pass through easily. — trans-pa-rent-ly (transpairently); — trans-pa-rent-ness (transpairentnes).

vir-tu-al (vurchooal) adj. being such in power, force, or effect, though not actually or expressly such. 2. having the inherent power to produce effects. — vir-tu-al-ity (vurchooality).

vir-tue (vurchoo) n. 1. moral excellence; goodness; righteousness. 2. conformity of one's life and conduct to moral and ethical principles; uprightness; rectitude. — vir-tue-less (vurchooles); vir-tue-less-ness (vurchoolesnes).

Vocabulary Sources and Frequencies

The words and frequencies in this dictionary have come from a number of sources, chiefly from a study made by Drs. Henry Kučera and W. N. Francis at Brown University in the 1960s. Their research covered a million word sampling of contemporary running text, proportionally balanced, selected from a wide variety of subjects: news, editorials, science, religion, the arts, hobbies, skills, biography, fiction, humor, romance, mystery, mathematics, humanities, annual reports, government documents, etc.; a total of about 42,000 different words. Removing all proper names and unusual scientific and medical terms reduced the number to 31,000.

This was then augmented by words from a current Merriam-Webster list of most used words, by a similar McGraw-Hill list, the WES dictionary, and several lists of newer words, bringing the total vocabulary up to almost 45,000. Except for words very recently added to the language, a frequency of 1 was assigned to all entries not included in the original Brown University corpus, on the assumption that words missing from the largest collection were of very low frequency.

Inasmuch as the Brown University frequencies applied only to printed text it was appropriate, for research in spelling reform, to make adjustments for frequencies in other types of writing. The source for this was a search of 100,000 words from personal and business correspondence tabulated by L. P. Ayres of the Russell Sage Foundation. These frequencies were given a weight of 20 percent, it being felt that a ratio of 20 to 80 was a realistic balance between correspondence and printed matter. The resulting frequencies were then repropor-tioned to a total of one million — a convenient measure of reference.

The pronunciation authorities consulted in determining the transliteration are cited at various points in the appendix, and listed fully in the bibliography. Personal preference played no part in arriving at the respellings. Where pronunciation authorities disagreed and a choice had to be made, it was on the basis of general consensus except in a few cases where, in the interest of visual compatibility, a slightly less preferred pronunciation was chosen.

The corpus has thus been tailored to serve as a dependable source for research. It represents an endeavor of some twenty thousand hours and is held on computer disk at the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform, programmed for searches of various kinds in both English and American spellings.

Dictionary of ENGLISH / AMERICAN SPELLING

English spellings in this listing are preceded by an asterisk and paired with the American spelling immediately below. The format tends to highlight the points at which our traditional spelling disagrees with pronunciation, and shows the change required to achieve better fit. A brief perusal of the pages soon gives one a feeling for American notation: an 'e' following any vowel indicates that that vowel is pronounced long. Major American spelling characteristics are shown at the base of each recto page. Certain spellings seeming to require explanation are cross-referenced to the introduction or appendix. A hyphen follows spellings that are identical in English and American. Frequency of occurrence in a million words appears with each entry. The typeface was developed expressly for this listing. It stresses clarity, and purposely simulates both typesetting and typewriting. Design of the letter 'q' follows the suggestion advanced on page 298.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADRES

Forscor and seven yeerz ago our faatherz braut forth on this continent a nue naeshun, conseevd in liberty, and dedicaeted to th propozishun that aul men ar creaeted eegal.

Now we ar enngaejd in a graet sivil wor, testing whether that naeshun, or eny naeshun so conseevd and so dedicaeted, can long enduur. We ar met on a graet batlfeeld of that wor. We hav cum to dedicaet a porshun of that feeld as a fienal resting-plaes for thoez hoo heer gaev thair lievz that that naeshun miet liv. It is aultogether fiting and proper that we shuud do this.

But in a larjer sens we canot dedicaet—we canot consecraet—we canot halo—this ground. Th braev men, living and ded, hoo strugld heer, hav consecraeted it far beyond our puur power to ad or to detract. Th wurd wil litl noet nor long remember whut we sae heer, but it can never forget whut thae did heer. It is for us, th living, rather, to be dedicaeted heer to th unfinisht wurk which thae hoo faut heer hav thus far so noebly advanst. It is rather for us to be heer dedicaeted to th graet task remaening befor us — that frum theez onord ded we taek increest devoeshun to that cauz for which thae gaev th last fuul mezher of devoeshun, that we heer hiely rezolv that theez ded shal not hav died in vaen; that this naeshun, under God, shal hav a nue burth of freedom, and that that government of th peepl, bi th peepl, for th peepl, shal not perrish frum th urth.

ENGLISH-AMERICAN SOFTWARE

In the long range interest of maintaining orderliness and sustained progress for spelling reform, the data base and software used for the material in this volume is not being released until it has been upgraded by whatever comments are received in response to this "scholars' edition". It will then be made available to individuals and institutions as an aid for promoting literacy.

The software has been designed for use on any IBM-compatible personal computer with 256K memory. A hard disk drive is required since the base consumes 1.4 meg of disk space. The transliteration program will convert English text into American. Other programs will permit additions to the base, searches in both English and American for frequencies of letter combinations, etc.

In the meantime the computer facilities of the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform (research facility of The ALA) will be made available to readers wishing to analyze American, but who find that the material in the appendix is not sufficiently detailed or that it does not cover the particular aspect of notation on which they wish to comment.

Inquiries regarding any of the above should be addressed to Edward Rondthaler, 28 Nordica Dr., Croton-on-Hudson, NY 10520 914/271-3294 or 212/490-2348; or to E.J.Lias, 1003 Dogwood La, West Chester, PA19380; or to The American Language Academy, 680 Fifth Ave., New York City 10019.

Dr. Godfrey Dewey, th laet mentor of speling reform, is th author of a story that bairz repeeting heer: "Glas bloerz offen refer to a shaep noen as a Prins Rupert Drop. It is th tieny glas beed that formz at th top of a bloen object when it separaets frum th craftsman'z blo-piep. If this beed is clipt off th hoel glas shaterz, signifieing that th lienz of stres ar aul tied together at that seemingly insignificant point. This", sed Dr. Dewey, "ilustraets th daenjer that speling reformerz offen encounter. A smaual speling chaenj that apeerz to solv wun foneemic problem mae hav qiet adwers and far-reeching effects on uther parts of th orthografy. Speling reformerz eeger to ariev at qik and eezy solooshunz ar proen to maek il conseevd chaenjez that wil fens them into cornerz frum which thae canot rescue themselvz. U canot be shuur that yuur sistem wil wurk or that it wil caver evry foneemic sichooaeshun until U apli it, with paenz-taeking cair and acuerasy, to meny thousandz of wurdz. Thair is no shortcut. U mae luuk for wun, but U woen't fiend it."

4 percent shorter than English.

The purpose of this appendix is to aid the serious student in evaluating spelling reform in general, and American notation in particular. It is hoped that it will give rise to constructive discussion.

Previous reform systems have laid most of the foundation on which the present work is built. American's contribution comes from improved statistical data which, thanks to computer technology, provides a broader and more accurate overall view of the subject than before, and from the items discussed on page 2 of the introduction. Both factors have influenced the contents.

Subjects covered are largely those that have generated disagreement in the past. It is assumed, however, that by now the more fanciful orthographic schemes have fallen by the way and, in general, widespread accord prevails on the following points:

1. A reformed spelling should add no new letters to our alphabet.
2. Fit between sound and sight should be achieved with as little departure as possible from our present spelling.
3. Rules and exceptions should be kept to a minimum.
4. The pronunciation standard should strike a balance between "cultivated colloquial" and "platform speech", the latter being defined as a pronunciation sure to be understood by all listeners.
5. Instead of straining to achieve a single international English orthography, the few major differences between British, Australian, and American pronunciations should, for the present, be given different spellings.
6. The final test of a reformed spelling should be its ability to replace pronunciation notations in English Language dictionaries (as shown on page 23).

Dr. Godfrey Dewey, the late mentor of spelling reform, is the author of a story that bears repeating here: "Glass blowers often refer to a shape known as a Prince Rupert Drop. It is the tiny glass bead that forms at the top of a blown object when it separates from the craftsman's blow-pipe. If this bead is clipped off the whole glass shatters, signifying that the lines of stress are all tied together at that seemingly insignificant point. This", said Dr. Dewey, "illustrates the danger that spelling reformers often encounter. A small spelling change that appears to solve one phonemic problem may have quite adverse and far-reaching effects on other parts of the orthography. Spelling reformers eager to arrive at quick and easy solutions are prone to make ill conceived changes that will fence them into corners from which they cannot rescue themselves. You cannot be sure that your system will work or that it will cover every phonemic situation until you apply it, with painstaking care and accuracy, to many thousands of words. There is no short cut. You may look for one, but you won't find it."

In American spelling about 48% of the words are the same length as in English; almost 33% are shorter than English, and about 19% are longer. In general, the 33% that are shorter have a much higher frequency of occurrence than the 19% that are longer.

Length of average word in English.....4.68 letters
 Length of average word in American..... 4.48 letters
 American saves an average of 2 letters in 10 words.
 American saves an average of 2 letters in 10 words.

When all frequencies are added together American spelling is 4¼ percent shorter than English spelling. This saving, however, does not take into account the spaces between words. When the keystrokes for spaces are added the net saving is about 3½ percent, or several pages in an average book.

American spelling substantially decreases the frequency of 12 letters; has little or no effect on 11; and significantly increases j, u, and z. In English the j-sound is usually represented — misrepresented — by g (general vs jeneral; geography vs jeografy). The z-sound — common in our spoken language — is almost always represented by s (possessions vs. pozeshunz). The greater frequency of u comes in part from the introduction of the new digraph uu to relieve oo of its double-duty role in traditional English spelling as illustrated by the word 'footstool' (respelled 'fuutstool' in American).

Replacing the illogical uses of g, s, and oo with letters accurately representing the spoken sounds will have a noticeable effect on the printed page. J and uu will appear once in every five or six lines of ordinary text, and every ten or twelve lines of a newspaper. Z, the rarest of all letters in English spelling but far from rare in our speech, will appear once in every line or two — slightly less than y now appears in English spelling.

THE INCREASED USE OF Z

We use the s-sound in speech for somewhat less than half of our plurals and third person singulars (hits, keeps, tonics, surfs, tasks). These will continue to be written with s in American. The remainder are spoken with a z-sound (armz, jabz, yardz, kegz, cowz, jawz) and would be written accordingly. It is often assumed that we presently spell our plurals in only one way. That is not the case. We spell them in four different ways: s, ies, es, ses (boy boy[s], country countr[ies], church church[es], bus bus[ses]). The proposed use of s and z reduces these four to three (s, z, ez). It also eliminates irregularities. The suggestion has been made that plurals and third person singulars continue to be written with s or es regardless of sound. This overlooks the role of z in providing clear distinction between such words as 'loos looz, flees fleez, cors corz, hous houz, cloes cloez, purs purz, pees peez, peers peerz, scairs scairz, fauls faulz, hens henz, etc. Context might be relied on to overcome confusion, but it is hardly good practice to depend on context when a clearer means is available.

Perhaps the best way to effect substantial reduction in z-frequency is to retain the traditional spelling of five very high frequency words: is, was, as, his, has (rather than respelling them iz, wuz, az, hiz, haz). These have a combined frequency of 38,960 per million words. By continuing the use of s in these five spellings the letter z will appear on the page only 65 percent as often as we hear it in speech. This concession to tradition is observed in American, and all frequency tabulations take it into account.

FREQUENCY NOTATIONS

Frequencies can be very helpful in selecting the best of several possible spellings. When we know how often a particular grapheme — a letter or a digraph — will appear on the printed page, we are in a good position to judge its overall visual impact. For this purpose numerical notations such as 649:9270 will be found in the text. They serve to put the item under consideration into correct perspective. The meaning of a notation like 649:9270 is: "The grapheme illustrated in the preceding word or words occurs in 649 different words having a combined frequency of 9270 occurrences per million words of running text." (The fact that the same grapheme may appear more than once in the same word has, of course, been taken into account.)

Sometimes the frequencies are given in terms of occurrences per page. Such estimates are based on the assumption that a single-spaced typewritten page and most book pages contain between 400 and 500 words. It is helpful to remember that frequencies under 10,000 will appear fewer than 4 or 5 times on an average page. This is a very good rule-of-thumb to keep in mind when considering the general impact of a particular spelling.

LONG VOWELS

In English spelling we use the short vowels and their diluted schwas far more often than the long vowels. The ratio is about 4 to 1. It is appropriate, then, that the single letters a e i o u should represent the short vowels and their schwa dilutions. The ever-present problem facing all reformers is the knotty one of finding the best way to modify a e i o u so that these five letters may also represent the five long vowels. Here are some suggestions that have been proposed:

1.	māt (mate)	mēt (meet)	mīt (might)	mōt (mote)	mūt (mute)
	hā (hay)	hē (he)	hī (high)	hō (hoe)	hū (hue)

A macron above (or below) the long vowel has much to commend it. It is clear and simple. It would reduce the number of letters in a million American words from about 4,480,000 to about 4,340,000 — a reduction ratio of almost 100 to 97 — saving perhaps ten pages in an average book. Use of the macron in handwriting or as it becomes available in typewriting and printing may be desirable. Anything that increases our vowel symbols should not be ruled out. But diacritics, particularly in the early stages of reform, are not psychologically welcome or mechanically simple. They would seriously reduce the visual compatibility with traditional spelling by giving many of our words a foreign cast. Major and very costly alterations of keyboards for typewriters, computers, and typesetting machines would be required. The reform movement does not need another hurdle in its path, at least not at this point. Introduction of a diacritic would be less disruptive than adding new letters, but on a smaller scale it presents some of the same problems.

2. mAt mEt mIt mOt mUt
 (mate) (meet) (might) (mote) (mute)

This suggestion is visually awkward. Even if the caps were reduced to small cap height (OU) there would be difficulty in determining whether the o and u were cap or lowercase. Flowing scripts would be out of the question. A popular proposal is to eliminate capitals from our alphabet. Although they have no phonetic use and undoubtedly contribute to learning problems, any attempt to drop them from proper names, headlines, etc. needlessly impedes the progress of reform.

3. maat meet miit moot muut
 (mate) (meet) (might) (mote) (mute)

Doubling the vowel is far more practical than introducing caps or small caps, but we normally associate very different sounds with the digraphs aa and oo. Vowel doubling would call for a change in the well established pronunciations of aa oo. Still more disturbing would be the introduction of new and unfamiliar pairs to replace them.

4. mate mete mite mote mute

This is close enough to our present spelling so that words like 'night, boat, frail, speak' etc. could readily be changed to 'nite, bote, frale, speke'. A familiar rule of English spelling is operating here: An e following a consonant or consonants usually indicates that the vowel before the consonant is long. This system — the "leapfrog-e" system — serves quite well for single syllables, but can create chaos if rigidly applied to multi-syllable words. Consider the three long vowels in 'dehumanizing'. A systematic application of the leapfrogging rule would require that this word be spelled 'deheumeņanizeņing'. If we remove the extra e's then the long vowels e u i become short ('dehumanizing') and we are back in the traditional spelling that fails to represent pronunciation. Or consider the word 'abrasive' where the final e must make an Olympic jump backwards — over two consonants and a short vowel — to give a long vowel pronunciation to the medial 'a'!

Traditional English spelling does, however, gives us a clue to solving the long vowel problem: When no consonant follows the long vowel there is no leapfrogging:

nae see tie toe due

In rare cases of English spelling there is no leapfrogging even when a consonant does follow the long vowel:

naes seen tied toes dues

In these few examples English spelling is not leapfrogging the e. The long vowel is being designated internally rather than externally. Bringing an end to leapfrogging by designating all long vowels internally lays a solid foundation for phonetic word-building — a principle advocated by Ripman, Dewey and Pitman, and supported by many today. It is this principle that is used in American spelling:

maet	meet	miet	moet	muet
maeted	meets	miety	moets	muetly
maetles	meeting	mietyest	moetiv	muetabl
6281:63,174	3810:51,130	4440:43,116	3452:35,172	1870:21,031

It is worth noting that the use of the letter e to change the pronunciation of a preceding vowel is not unique to English. In German, for example, a trailing e often serves as an alternative for a diacritic in words such as: Blüte Bluete; Schönheit Schoenheit; Ärger Aerger, etc. This is seen as a perfectly natural and comfortable role for e .

5. Consideration should probably be given to the possibility of selecting a more familiar notation for long-a, even though this runs counter to the logic of adding the suffix 'e' to denote a long vowel, as recommended by earlier reformers and generally looked upon with favor today. While the digraphs 'ee, ie, oe, ue' occur frequently enough in English spelling to be recognized easily by present readers, it must be said that 'ae' lacks an equal familiarity. Although one may soon become accustomed to 'ae', there is merit in at least considering a more familiar notation. The digraphs 'ay' (play), or 'ai' (main) are obvious candidates. Both 'ay' and 'ai' account for about 13% of long-a spellings in English.

Caution warns us that ambiguities or conflicts with surrounding letters could arise. They do indeed arise in the case of 'ai' which is subject to possible confusion with the trigraph 'air' 610:13,080, particularly when it is followed by a vowel (pre-pairednes) 195:1707. It would be irresponsible to risk ambiguity when a notation free of misinterpretation is available.

The digraph 'ay' is not susceptible to double interpretation. In the terminal position it is more easily recognized than 'ae' (play, day vs plae, dae), but in other locations it becomes uncomfortable. Its unfamiliarity in medial positions (brayn, layk, saym) may make 'ay' less compatible overall than the less familiar but fairly obvious 'ae' which follows the regularity of American long vowels and has no long-standing pattern of use to be overcome (braen, laek, saem).

The corpus, of course, shows only 'ae'. One can visualize 'ay' or 'ai' in the 'ae' positions and perhaps reach some conclusion as to the merit of either or neither. Copies of a full ay-ai set can be made available to those who wish to give the matter detailed study (page 278).

TERMINAL LONG VOWELS

Dropping the final e from words ending in certain long vowels (wee, alibiē, goē) shortens 552 words, saves 52,598 letters in a million words, and significantly improves American's compatibility with English.

OE, IE. Reductions are appropriate for oe (no, go, flo, elbo, slo, alto, domino, tho, chelo, tempo, thro, furlo, torso, yelo 350:13,313), and for ie (I, hi, hi-fi, ni, ti, compli, counterspi, dri, tri, fli, bi, mi 197:18,162).

EE. The advantage of reducing ee is less certain. One does not feel comfortable in removing the final e from see, free, flee, fee, tree, three, trustee, etc. 398:2530. On the other hand we would not want to see an extra e added to the five short words "he, she, me, we, be" 5:23,933. This accounts for the rule in the box below, which makes an exception of these five short words.

AE. Reducing terminal ae to 'a' is not possible. It would create a conflict with 390:24,730 words ending in schwa-a (camera, extra, stigma, trivia, vista, etc.). Terminal 'a', therefore, always denotes a schwa.

UE. Reducing terminal ue to 'u' would sacrifice the familiar ending of a score of English words (subdue, argue, continue, value, avenue, rescue) for little gain. It would also rule out the most obvious and natural respelling (nue, intervue, curfue, nefue) of 27:3038 words now ending in ew. Terminal ue, therefore, is not reduced. This means that no words in American end with u.

An area that needs further consideration is the desirability of retaining terminal e where it matches traditional spelling (trustee, agree, belie); particular where the final e, tending to indicate stress on the last syllable, distinguishes between two words with differing pronunciations: below (below), belo (bellow).

Reductions of long vowel prefixes offer a clear gain in legibility. When a hyphen follows a prefix it indicates that the vowel is long (co-ed, re-arm, de-limit, thurmo-electric, re-enter, di-urnal, bi-lateral, re-print 708:1535). An adjacent preceding vowel is also long (bio-, neo-, jeo-compare. for instance, these two: jeo-thurmal, jeology).

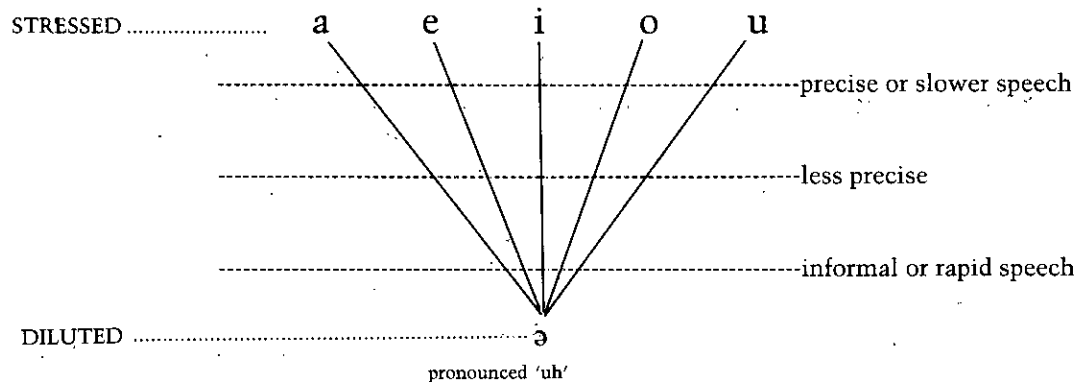

RULE Final e is dropped from hee, shee, wee, mee, bee and from words ending in ie (justifiē) and oe (banjoē). The e must be restored before suffixes are added (dri driely; embargo embargoed). A hyphen may replace the final e of a stressed prefix (re-enter, di-urnal, co-author).

The SCHWA

DILUTED A E I O U

A good definition of the schwa is "a weak neutral vowel sound occurring in many unstressed syllables of spoken English". Current dictionary pronunciations represent the schwa with the symbol ə (pronounced "uh").

The key to dealing with this sound for which we have no letter may lie in the fact that it is to some extent an offspring of imprecise diction. Spoken schwas are dilutions of unstressed short vowels — dilutions considerably more prevalent in informal, conversational, or rapid speech than in precise, slower, or "platform" speech. In most cases these dilutions retain at least a trace of the short vowel from which they were derived:

As the chart shows, the sound of the schwa depends upon the vowel from which it was diluted. To hear this difference consider the pronunciation of the second o in the word 'common'. It is not identical with the way it would be pronounced if the word were spelled 'comman' or 'commen' or 'commin' or even 'commun'. When inflections alter the sequence of syllable stress the short vowel "parent" of the schwa is heard clearly: compare the sound of a and o in 'atom' with the sound of a and o in 'atomic'.

Current dictionaries deny this important parent-child kinship — this relationship — when their pronunciation keys use the character ə. Such a character represents only the extreme in rapid informal speech. This is a disservice to more precise diction and does nothing for the cause of literacy. Earlier Merriam-Webster dictionaries, on the other hand, used ǎ ɛ̃ ɪ̃ ɔ̃ ʊ̃ to indicate the various schwa dilutions. The 1982 Oxford American Dictionary does the same. Here is a ray of hope; whatever discourages the use of the ə sign works for reform.

The most respected advocates of reform have always agreed that schwas should be represented by the short vowels from which they are derived — without diacritics. American offers a small refinement intended for use only in dictionary pronunciations as illustrated on pages 22 and 23: a set of reduced size vowels a e i o u to suggest the presence of a schwa and the source from which it came.

The SCHWER

Unstressed ER, AR, OR

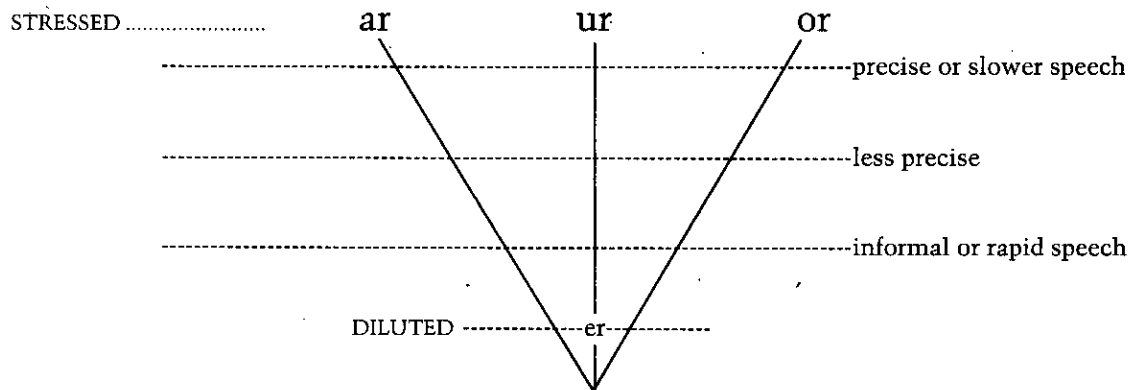

The problem addressed here is the relationship between 'er' and the unstressed occurrences of 'ar' and 'or' (better, collar, doctor), found chiefly in the terminal position.

In conversational speech unstressed 'ar' and 'or' have about the same pronunciation as 'er' (dealer-dollar; wrecker-rector). Dictionary pronunciations lump these sounds together using the same symbol (ər) for all three. For convenience we will refer to the unstressed er-ar-or sound, however spelled, as "schwer".

The frequency of 'er' exceeds that of unstressed 'ar' and 'or' by more than 10 to 1. Does it follow, then, that American should use 'er' to represent the schwer in all cases? Should the American spelling of 'doctor' be 'docter'; of 'dollar' be 'doler'?

Dewey and Ripman emphatically say NO, but do not explain why. Their reasoning may have run this way: 'ur, ar, or' dilute into schwer in much the same way that short vowels dilute into schwa. Like the schwa, the schwer dilutions are not total, but retain a link with their stressed parents. This linkage becomes clear when we consider how 'number' would be pronounced if it were spelled 'numbar' or 'number'.

Perhaps there is enough similarity between the schwer and schwa dilutions to illustrate them with similar graphics (it being understood that 'er' is the unstressed or diluted form of 'ur'):

When inflection brings stress to an unstressed syllable the schwer's dilution disappears (victor, victorious), the 'ar' usually becomes 'arr' (vulgar, vulgarrity), and the 'er' (insert) becomes 'ur' (insurshun; —or the verb insurt).

A suggestion not within the scope of this work is that certain unstressed syllables be abbreviated according to prescribed rules: that schwers be reduced to 'r' (numbr, doctr, vulgr, undrling, doctrd, considret, insrt, murdr); that -tion be abbreviated to -tn or -shn, etc. Whatever merit this may have in letter-saving, the immediate goal of American is to reflect a word's full pronunciation as nearly as possible within the framework of compatibility.

The SCHWI or "half-ee"

Dictionary pronunciation systems do not agree on the best way to represent the unstressed "half-ee" or "schwi" heard in the first syllable of 'between, demand, redeem, event, reality, geometry' 2064:25,699; heard also in the y of 'handyman, candy' 6214:51,940; and in the i of 'material, marionet, sodium' 808:4504.

The sound of this high frequency vowel (9086:82,107) is a cross between short-i and long-ee. It is never stressed. Dictionary pronunciation systems represent it with a variety of symbols: i ǎ r ē ě ê ee.

The work of reformers Ripman and Dewey clearly shows the difficulty of indicating this sound in a way that has good visual compatibility with traditional spelling yet does not use a diacritic nor stray from phonetic accuracy. The letter y (as in 'candy') represents the correct sound, but would look ridiculous and be confusing to present readers if used in the first syllable (bytween, dymand, yvent, ryality!)

Ripman uses e in the first syllable (between, demand) and y in all other syllables (freely, handyman, studying, audyens, conjeenyality). Sometimes, however, his use of y medially can become awkward and not the best representation of the half-ee sound (editorial, champyon, auditoryum, insomnya).

Dewey uses e in the first syllable, and either y or i medially and terminally. Unfortunately he is inconsistent. At times he sidesteps direct confrontation with awkward spellings by omitting certain words from his listing. Occasionally he inserts a period for separation (audi.ens).

American, intent on keeping as close to English spelling as possible, uses all three letters — e, i and y — each in a very specific and clearly defined way:

e in the first syllable; (printed ê when used in dictionary pronunciations as on p. 22-23)
i when followed by a schwa in the combinations ia io iu;
y terminally; or medially when not followed by schwa a, o, u .

Thus American combines most of the logic of Ripman with most of the visual compatibility of Dewey and, as a by-product, builds cues into the spelling that in certain cases help indicate stress.

A comparison of English, Ripman, Dewey, and American treatment of the schwi is shown below. Footnotes ^{1,2,3} explain the American spellings.

The question naturally arises: Is ee the only long vowel that has an unstressed "half" version? No. Merriam-Webster's 1957 and earlier editions recognize "half" versions of three other long vowels, illustrated in the first syllables of 'fatality, omit, humane'. Webster's more recent editions ignore this distinction. (One is puzzled by the omission of half-long i as in 'ideal, ironic'.) Inasmuch as the frequencies of these less important "halves" is far below that of the half-ee, American follows the current dictionary practice of making no distinction between long and half-long ae, ie, oe, ue (faetality, iedeel, oemit, huemaen). This is not as good a solution as might be desired, but a better one is yet to be found.

INTERNAL VOWEL "REDUCTIONS"

In 1955 the Simpler Spelling Association of the United States and the Simplified Spelling Society of Great Britain met in London to resolve some differences in their systems of notation. An important outcome of this meeting was the abandonment of "reductions"—the practice of dropping the final e from the long vowel digraphs ae ee ie oe when followed by another vowel, long or short; for example: reducing 'saeing' to 'saing', 'seeing' to 'seing', 'triad' to 'triad', 'noeabl' to 'noabl'. ('ue' presented special problems in connection with 'uu', and was not reduced.)

The idea of reduction has strong appeal. In theory it would affect 904:8920 words, tending to shorten them and often increasing their visual compatibility with traditional spelling: bias vs bieas, being vs beeing, etc. About one percent of the words on a page would be affected. Keeping the 1 percent figure in mind helps retain perspective when considering the pros and cons of reduction.

To understand why reductions were abolished one needs to look at the overall picture. Out of the total frequency (904:8920) about half the words (419:4371) require diereses to prevent their reduced vowel pairs from being mistaken for digraphs (poëm, göing, laër). The lower line of the illustration below represents another 263:1399 words in which the dieresis would be required to distinguish the reduced pairs iä iö iü from the American digraphs ia io iu:

Reduction data generated by the computer facilities of the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform is shown below. The first column is traditional English spelling. The second column is pre-1955 Ripman "reduced" spelling. The third column is post-1955 as used in American in conjunction with the rule "In 3- or 4-letter vowel strings the syllable ends after the first two vowels if they form a digraph; if not, the syllable ends after the first vowel." The last column shows the vowel string and its frequency in American.

'UE' was never reduced; therefore it is not shown in the table.

* Reconstruction of words not found in the Ripman dictionary.

This study shows:

A. Eight reduction pairs in the Ripman column that require diereses to distinguish them from digraphs (aä aë eë ië oë oï oö oü 419:4371).

B. Three more pairs (iä iö iü 263:1399) that require diereses to distinguish them from the higher frequency American schwi-schwa digraphs (ia io iu 808:4504).

C. Three more pairs (ea ei eo 140:2541) used in American for first syllable schwi spellings such as 'reality, theistic, jeologist' (112:1037) which have the added characteristic of preventing misplaced stress (page 289 footnote ³).

D. Two more pairs (ai ii 145:1068) which of themselves do not require diereses, but would require diereses when inflected to distinguish the inflected forms from digraphs: "sae, saing, saër, saëst"; "flie, fliing, fliër, fliäbl".

This leaves 3 low frequency reduction pairs (ao eu oa 49:168) illustrated by the words 'craon, coliseum, coalishun' that do not require diereses for clarity. These reductions could be used if it is felt to be worthwhile.

In all fairness it must be pointed out that the foregoing is the strongest anti-reduction case that can be made. It is, no doubt, the one that brought about the 1955 decision to abandon reductions. If, however, a consensus develops in favor of reductions, then certain changes can be made in items C, D, and even in B provided there is a willingness to sacrifice the compatibility of 520:3513 words in other areas of the orthography. All these changes in C, D, and B put together would, however, increase the reduction frequencies to only 485:4549 — a far cry from the goal of 904:8920 which cannot be reached without the use of diereses. The final decision will depend on whether two or three diereses on a page are more desirable than five or six vowel-strings.

OU	OW	AU	AW
out	now	auto	saw

We cannot expect readers of English to be comfortable with 'hou' or 'lau'. It is asking too much. These words must continue to be spelled 'how' and 'law'. On the other hand it may not be asking too much to change 'crowd' to 'croud' (proud), or to change 'lawn' to 'laun' (laundry). The rule is:

'ou' and 'au' are always followed by a consonant and never end a root or a word.
'ow' and 'aw' never begin a word.

[AW at the beginning of a word is not a digraph; it is schwa-plus-w: awae, awoek, etc.]

RIGHT:

WRONG:

flounder	flownder	use ou — since ou is always followed by a consonant (n)
outing	owting.....	use ou — since ow never begins a word
oul.....	owl.....	use ou — since ow never begins a word

flower.....	flouer	use ow — since ou is always followed by a consonant plow	plou.....	use ow — since ou never ends a root or a word plowing.....	plouing.....	use ow — ou never ends a root; is followed by a consonant fraud.....	frawd.....	use au — since au is always followed by a consonant aukward.....	awkward.....	use au — since aw never begins a word strawberry ..	strauberry ..	use aw — since au never ends a root or a word

flawd.....	flaud.....	use aw — since au never ends a root or a word (flaw)

Until a future generation settles on single spellings we may have to live with this stop-gap solution. Even so, American has made a significant start toward phasing out OW and AW by reducing their combined frequencies more than 65 percent:

English.....	OW 749:13243.....	AW 216:1620
American ..	OW 181: 4250.....	AW 125:1616

Vivian Ducat, director and producer of a large part of Robert MacNeil's television series The Story of English, puts into words a truism we instinctively know to be correct but do not fully appreciate until it is expressed very simply: "Anything becomes familiar if you see it often enough".

N D T
FOLLOWED BY 'OO' OR 'UE'?

All agree that the pronunciation of the vowel in 'cue' is not the same as in 'too'. Fewer agree about 'new, due, tube, tune, nuclear, numeral, dude, incredulity, attitude, etc.'

Pronunciation in the U. S. leans toward oo, but authorities agree that after n d t there is justification for either 'oo' or 'ue'. American has tentatively chosen 'ue' (nue, due, tuen) because it is more compatible with English spelling, avoids such grotesques as nooz, dooberry, etc., and leads to better spelling consistency when inflections change the stressed vowel from long to short, as illustrated below.

sedues seduesing sedueser seductiv seducshun		sedoos sedoosing sedooser seductiv seducshun
--	--	--

American, of course, uses oo wherever expert opinion clearly favors it: obtoos, manooover, fidooshyerry, toomult.

While words in this category do not have particularly high frequencies, they are higher than one would wish, averaging about two occurrences per page:

n:	nue vs noo,....nuemeral vs noomeral,... etc.....	131:2934
d:	duety vs dooty,...dueplex vs dooplex,...etc.....	62: 614
t:	substitutet vs substitoot,...tuen vs toon,...etc.....	123: 653
Total 'nue.... due.... tue'.....		316:4201

THRU ?

What do we do about 'thru'? It is a widely used simplification inherited from Theodore Roosevelt's noble effort in 1906. Millions regard 'thru' as a successful demonstration of spelling reform. Drivers who couldn't possibly read a newspaper have no trouble reading THRU TRAFFIC and THRUWAY. But the vowel is clearly 'oo', not short-u: too, woo, zoo, bamboo, shampoo, igloo, cuckoo, kazoo, taboo, etc. 99:6660.

Except for capital U, no words in American end in the letter u. To retain 'thru' would be phonetically incorrect but not in conflict with other American notation. In the interest of expediency this may be the time to relax a purist position and bow to reality by adding 'thru' and its compounds to the eight high frequency words — to, do, of, is, his, has, as, was — whose unphonetic spelling is not being changed.

AER AIR ERR

For a moderately high frequency sound it is difficult to understand why Ripman, Dewey, and Pitman have all used the trigraph 'aer' which is unfamiliar and suggests a stilted pronunciation (faer, haer, paerent, chaer, whaer) rather than the perfectly familiar 'air' (fair, hair, pairent, chair, whair, gregairius 610:13,080). American, of course, uses 'air'.

Closely associated with the sound of 'air' is a smaller group of words spelled 'err' (error, berry, derrick, terrible 480:4770). The difference between 'err' and 'air' may be heard by comparing 'ferry' with the slightly broader sound in 'fairy'. This difference is very subtle and could be resolved into a single spelling were it not for the fact that both spellings are so common in our written language. Neither can comfortably be dropped: 'errport' does not spell 'airport', nor does 'airor' spell 'error'.

American continues both spellings and — slightly out of character — suggests that 'err' not be changed to 'air' in the rare cases where inflection (temporerry, temporerrily 20:220) might suggest such a change:

fairy gregairius.....	}	610:13,080	ferry inherrit temporerry..... temporerrily	}460:4550 20: 220
--------------------------------	---	------------	--	---	----------------------------------

TERMINAL L M N

Dictionaries agree that words like 'curl harm born' have only one syllable. They do not agree on whether 'prism, button, poodle, madam, sudden, bottle, etc.' have one or two syllables — whether a schwa (or even a half-schwa) is pronounced between the final consonants.

The problem here is to reform the spelling of roots ending in l m n so their inflected forms will not be misleading. If 'mission', for example, were respelled 'mishn', then the inflected form 'mishnerry' would indicate the loss of a syllable (mish-nerry) which is not the case.

Ripman and Dewey guide us around this pitfall: Whenever a schwa vowel in English spelling separates the final consonants (as in button, atom, pedal) the vowel is retained in reformed spelling. Otherwise it is dropped (candl, sampl).

Applying this rule to American spelling gives unambiguous inflections in all cases: buton butond; atom atomic; sachel sachelz; rithm rithmic; taubl taubld; mishun mishunerry; carbon carbonaet; prizm prizmatic; ketl ketz; handl handler; puzl puzzing, etc.

The following table shows how these guidelines affect American spelling:

bl (taubl).....	686:2896
cl (articl)	40: 325
dl (poodl)	56: 360
fl (bafl).....	16: 93
gl (gigl).....	47: 381
kl (sparkl)...	43: 139
pl (sampl) ...	39:1821
sl (whisl)....	19: 85
tl (litl).....	37:1351
xl (axl).....	1: 1
zl (dazl).....	14: 42
zm (prizm) ...	248: 805

A search of English spelling finds no instances where terminal n is followed by a silent vowel; in all cases the vowel precedes the n, thus clearly separating the two final consonants (English: carbon, token, sudden; American: carbon, toeken, suden).

In words like 'ketlz, sampld, prizmz, doubld, suplnes' the l and m serve as semi-vowels for the second syllable.

CHOO JOO

Serious consideration must be given to the respelling of words like 'actual, estuary, fatuous, obituary, virtue'; and 'gradual, individual, arduous, module'.

All dictionaries agree that the t in these words is pronounced ch, and the d is pronounced j. Disagreement centers on whether the vowel following ch and j is 'oo' or 'uu'. American has tentatively selected oo as being more familiar and visually more compatible. (The vowel string rule is, as always, applicable: "In vowel strings the syllable ends after the first two vowels if they form a digraph."):

American: akchooal, fachoous, obichooerry, vurchoo.....137:1196
American: grajooal, indivijooal, arjooous, mojjool 40: 646

CHUUR

Dictionaries agree that first choice for pronunciation of the following words is 'chuur', second choice is 'cher':

English: amateur, literature, maturate
American: amachuur, literachuur, machuuraet..... 13: 181

CHU

Sources generally agree that pronunciation preference for the following phonetic situation is 'chu' (schwa-u):

English: bastion, capitulate, fortune, righteous
American: baschun, capichulaet, forchun, riechus..... 68: 818

JU

Authorities agree that when d is followed by schwa-u it is pronounced j in such words as:

English: credulous, glandular, fraudulent, pendulum, undulate
American: crejulus, glanjular, frauulent, penjulum, unjulaet..... 24: 26

Grand total for choo, joo, chuur, chu, ju.....282:2867.
(The frequency 2867 represents slightly more than 1 occurrence per page)

It is likely that spellings in the reformed British and Australian orthographies will differ from some of the above.

STRESS DIFFERENCES AFFECTING SPELLING

Stress and pronunciation occasionally change when suffixes are added to a root or when the word is used as a different part of speech. A spot check — representative but not exhaustive — indicates that about 7 percent of our roots are subject to change under such conditions. In all cases the American spelling is simply doing what English spelling generally fails to do: record pronunciation and, in some cases, stress.

	ENGLISH	AMERICAN
noun	allergy	alerjy	(er)
adjective	allergic	alurjic	(ur)
noun	transfer	transfer	(er)
verb	transfer	transfur	(ur)
noun	survey	survae	(ur)
verb	survey	servae	(er)
noun	advantage	advantej	(e)
adjective	advantageous	advantaejus	(ae)
noun	volcano	volcaeno	(ae)
adjective	volcanic	volcanic	(a)
noun	bibliography	biblyografy	(y)
adjective	bibliographical	bibliografical	(i)
verb	connote	conoet	(oe)
adjective	connotative	conotaetiv	(o)

Champions of traditional spelling often cite words like the above as a virtue of English orthography, saying that retention of a root spelling throughout inflectional change is beneficial to the reader. Defenders of traditional English overlook such spellings as:

	ENGLISH
noun	abstinence(i)
verb	abstain(ai)	!
adjective	abstemious(e)

A list could be developed showing spelling changes that occur in English although there are no corresponding changes in stress or pronunciation. Such ambiguity, of course, would not occur in American. For example:

ENGLISH	AMERICAN
glory(y)	glory(y)
gloried(ie)	gloryd(y)
glorify(i)	gloryfi(y)
glorying(y)	glorying(y)
glorified(i)	gloryfied(y)
glories(ie)	gloryz(y)

C K S

The letter c, except in the combination ch, could be replaced by k and s (kat, sity). The visual impact of such a change, however, would be enormous. At present 3657:45,109 words begin with c (not including ch or internal frequencies of c). Of this number 'hard-c' accounts for 3385:41,590; 'soft-c' for only 272:3519.

Changing soft-c to s is a natural and would have little effect on reading ease or the overall appearance of a page. Changing hard-c to k is quite a different matter. Present readers would experience substantial visual annoyance with almost a 5-times increase in the frequency of k. American suggests, therefore, that c and k be regarded as different shapes of the same letter — as we now regard gg and aa. Except for the fact that c is never followed by e or i, tradition would provide the only guidance for determining whether c or k were to be used in a particular word (cat, kiten).

Having two shapes for the same sound serves no purpose other than the immensely important one of making reformed spelling more acceptable to present readers. It is likely that either k or c will ultimately fall into disuse, but today is not the time to advocate change when there is a good alternative.

Q and X

The q and x are retained in American spelling. Q could, of course, be replaced by kw, and X by ks and gz, as in almost all other proposals for spelling reform. These two letters are retained because they are already in our alphabet, are available on all typewriters, computers and typesetting machines, effect a saving of about five letters per page, add to the overall compatibility with traditional spelling, and must be available for use in proper names and foreign spellings — just as French typographers must have the letter w available although it is not in the French alphabet. We're reminded of our attachment to these unessential but romantic letters by the British spelling reformer who advocated replacing the q with kw in every word except Queen!

Q. The q in American is fully able to support itself without an unnecessary 'u' tagging along behind: qantity, qit, qorum, ventriloquist, 575:4649.

A possible recommendation is that future type designers be encouraged to use the shape of capital Q in reduced size (q) to replace the present design of lowercase q, so that whatever visual confusion children may encounter in making a distinction between b d p q may be diminished by just that much (b d p q).

X. When x is followed by a vowel it is pronounced gz (exam, exempt, exist, exotic, exult, 135:1378). Otherwise it is pronounced ks (expect, dextrus, fox, 647:6505). In a number of English words a vowel presently follows the ks pronunciation (axis, exodus 229:1085). In these cases American inserts an s after the x (axis, exsodus) so that there may be no exception to the rule.

TH

The problem with using different spellings for voiced and unvoiced th is that, unfortunately, th has the highest frequency of any letter pair in the English language 1330:132,680; therefore any change has a tremendous visual impact. The breakdown between voiced and unvoiced th is this: voiced 461:105,613, unvoiced 869:27,067.

Identical spellings for voiced and unvoiced th date far back into history. Even when the language was in its Old English period (450-1150 a.d.) both sounds were represented by the symbol θ . Not until modern Icelandic was this symbol assigned exclusively to voiced th.

Spelling reformers have suggested the use of thh or dh (from the word "edh" which is the name of the Anglo-Saxon θ). Either of these would so dramatically change the overall appearance of the page that American rejects them both and, reluctantly, retains this major irregularity solely in the interest of visual compatibility.

Several rules have been offered to determine the voicing of th by adjacent letters, but no less authority than Dr. Dewey labels them all as unreliable.

SYLLABLE SEPARATION

A hyphen separates adjacent letters that might otherwise be mistaken for a digraph:

(th) pent-house 55:77; (nk) man-kiend 5:48; (sh) dis-harten 19:62;
(wh) cow-hand 5:8; (rr) for-runer 37:67; (ng) masheen-gun 11:11

Where n-g would be awkward (as in 'en-gulf'), a double-nn marks the close of the syllable: enngulf, enngaej enngraev 52:200.

(The single word 'enngaej' and its inflections account for more than half of the 200 frequencies.)

The hyphen is also used in certain places to indicate clearly that y is a consonant beginning a new syllable (mid-year, barn-yard, 26:46) rather than a high frequency vowel ending a syllable (handyman, apreeshyaet, raedyo, imortality 6214:51,940). Where '-y' would be visually awkward (as in mil-yon, compan-yon) a double-ll or double-nn marks the end of the syllable: millyon 67:610; compannyon 64:711.

Except for the specific instances described above (and the combinations 'off' and 'oss' see footnote 7 page 15), a syllable always breaks between doubled consonants: recoilles, unnumberd, buukkeeper, cattael — including rr (marry, sorry) which, although serving to indicate a preceding short vowel (footnote 8 page 15), bridges the end of one syllable and the beginning of the next.

TRANSLATING HOMOGRAPHIS

When the typesetting computer encounters a homograph — the English word “read”, for example — how will it know whether to translate it into the present tense “reed” or into the past tense “red”?

How will it know whether the English homograph “use” should be translated into the American noun “ues” or into the verb “uez”?

How will it know whether “separate” should be translated into the verb “separaet” or into the adjective “separet”?

There are 68 homographs in the English corpus:

Correct translation of a homograph depends to a large extent on environment. Usually the word preceding or following the homograph provides a key to its tense or part of speech. Compiling a checklist of such words is essential for correct translation. This small section of a homograph search shows the type of data from which a checklist is compiled.

When the translating computer encounters the word "read", it looks back at the preceding word and attempts to match it with a word in the READ CHECKLIST. If it does not find a match it translates "read" into the present tense: "reed". If it finds a match it translates into the past tense: "red". The READ CHECKLIST consists of the following words:

already/are/as/be/been/being/best/had/has/have/having/he/herself/himself
/I/is/it/just/most/she/that/was/well/were/who/yet/

The accuracy of this list is better than 80 percent. The words /I/just/that/who/ can also be followed by the present tense, but are included because they are usually followed by the past tense. Different homographs, of course, require different checklists, although there is some overlapping. In certain cases a search of the word following as well as preceding the homograph may be required. There is room for much refinement of the program.

DIALECTS

The Ripman dictionary lists alternative spellings to match the different British dialects heard at the time of its publication almost two generations ago. Today in the U.S. there is evidence that extremes in dialect are diminishing. A good example is found in what are sometimes called the "ask words" (ask, bath, last, laugh, path, calf, etc.). Older dictionaries indicate an 'aa' pronunciation for New England and parts of Virginia; short-a for the rest of the country. Although certain editors still follow this practice, Thorndike-Barnhart 1981 and Oxford American 1982 have dropped the "aa" pronunciation altogether. In reformed spelling some individuals may, of course, prefer aask, baath, laast, etc. for their own writing. Major international differences in pronunciation such as U.S. 'bin' vs British 'been' will certainly call for different spellings. By and large, however, reform should further the trend already set in motion by TV, radio, and widespread travel. These vehicles have done much to level out extremes in dialect, and a good fit between spelling and sound should give further push in that direction.

It has been suggested that many of our mispronunciations may be traced to the irregularity of English spelling: to the fact that a word's spelling is by no means an infallible clue to its pronunciation. In this connection one wonders whether the totally unphonetic character of Chinese writing — which gives no clue whatsoever to pronunciation — is responsible for the persistence of the more than two hundred Chinese dialects. These dialects, unlike ours, are so different that persons from different parts of China often can understand each other only by means of the written word.

PROPER NOUNS

Philadelphia will continue to be spelled Philadelphia. Waynesville will be Waynesville. George remains George. It is not anticipated that a name like Grace Wood would change even though both words, used in a different context, are common nouns (graes, wuud). Change of proper nouns may come in due time and without pressure, as we have often seen in the Anglicizing of foreign names. In this very sensitive area little can be gained and much lost by pressing for reform.

Dictionaries could use American notation (in reduced size and confined within distinctive brackets) to indicate the pronunciation of a proper noun — not to encourage respelling:

Philadelphia [filadelfia]

Waynesville [waenzvil]

George [jorj]

Since certain foreign language sounds cannot be represented in American notation the pronunciation of foreign proper nouns will have to be Anglicized, as is now the practice in some dictionaries: Istanbul (istanbool). Editors requiring foreign pronunciations would resort to diacritics or other special notation.

VISUAL EFFECT OF DIACRITICS

Using a minimum number of diacritics in text to identify possibly ambiguous schwas, first syllable schwis, and (in place of digraphs) long vowels, would have the following effect:

Forscor and seven yeerz ägō our faatherz braut forth on this contĭnent a nū nāshun, cōnsēvd in liberty, and dedicāted to th propōzishun that aul men ar créated ēqāl.

Now we ar enngājđ in a grāt sivĭl wor, testing whether that nāshun, or eny nāshun sō cōnsēvd and sō dedicāted, can long enduur. Wē ar met on a grāt batlfēld of that wor. Wē hav cum to dedicāt a porshun of that fēld as a fināl resting-plās for thōz hoo hēr gāv thair livz that that nāshun mĭt liv. It is aultōgether fĭting and proper that wē shuud do this.

But in a larjer sens wē canot dedicāt — wē canot consēcrāt — wē canot halō — this ground. Th brāv men, living and ded, hoo strugld hēr, hav consēcrāted it far bēyond our puur power to ad or to detract. Th wurld wil litl nōt nor long rēmember whut wē sā hēr, but it can never forget whut thā did hēr. It is for us, th living, rather, to be dedicāted hēr to th unfinisht wurk which thā hoo faut hēr hav thus far sō nōbly advanst. It is rather for us to bē hēr dedicāted to th grāt task rēmāning bēfor us — that frum thēz onord ded wē tāk incrēst dēvōshun to that cauz for which thā gāv th last fuul mezher of dēvōshun; that wē hēr hĭly rēzolv that thēz ded shal not hav đĭd in vān; that this nāshun, under God, shal hav a nū burth of frēdōm; and that that government of th pēpl, bĭ th pēpl, for th pēpl, shal not perrish frum th urth.

The use of diacritics in reformed spelling is discussed on pages 282 286 288.

REVERSE TRANSLATION

One might assume that computer translation from American back into English would be a simple matter of reversal. Not so. Moving from a logical spelling into an illogical one involves many more computer searches than vice versa. For example, a word so common as "for" (1:11,045) would require a search to determine whether it were to be translated 'for, four, or fore'.

The occasional book that might be printed in both spellings should be typeset in English first.

RESPELLINGS THAT HAVE FAILED THE TEST OF TIME

The abandonment of reductions (pg. 290) ended the need for diereses. Thus the U.S.-British meeting in 1955 took a big step forward. It made reformed spelling more visually acceptable. This forward step, however, was followed by a step backwards. The conferees agreed that the letter y should be used only as a consonant (yet, beyond, halyard 301:7702). The letter's traditional function as a vowel representing the schwi sound (marry, tarrying, timidity 6154:51,325) was to be replaced by i (marri, tarring, timiditi). The decision has not stood the test of time. The frequency of y in English spelling is far too high (6311:82,031) for such unnecessary downgrading. The vowel y, moreover, is the only letter that represents the schwi sound exclusively.

Thirty years later it is difficult to reconstruct the logic that led to this unfortunate decision. Perhaps one of the goals was to overcome the awkwardness of y in the Ripman spellings of 'editorial, champyon, auditoryum,' etc. 808:4504. Using y in this way gives an unnecessary strangeness to 808 words. American notation avoids the problem by defining ia io iu as fixed schwi-plus-schwa combinations (editorial, champion, auditorium).

The '55 change from y to i also created an ambiguous use of 'ie' (terrier, audiens etc.) which was overcome in a very slipshod manner by the insertion of a period between i and e: terri.er, audi.ens. Sheer typographic madness. For this schwi notation American spelling, of course, uses y — which, by definition, also denotes the end of a syllable (terryer, audyens 251:2136).

The United States-British meeting accepted an uncomfortable spelling for the different vowel sounds in the word 'footstool'. Ineptly it was agreed to abide by the Ripman dictionary's use of oo for the short vowel heard in 'put, should, full, foot, good, book' (respelled 'poot, shood, fool, foot, good, book'). This left the unfamiliar uu digraph for the vowel in 'moon, move, room, boot, food, pool, school, issue' (respelled 'muun, muuv, ruum, buut, fuud, puul, skuul, ishuu'). The decision had the most unfortunate effect of changing every word ending in '-ful' into a ridiculous '-fool' (one per page): cheerfool, mouthfool, buetifool, graetfool, delietfool, etc. 238:1937. Critics of reform merrily regarded this as utter foolishness, which indeed it was. It is difficult to understand why the totally unfamiliar digraph uu was assigned to words with higher frequencies (2039:22,214) while the very familiar digraph oo was assigned to words with lower frequencies (721:16,567). Such typographic insensitivity was doomed from the start, and when Dewey issued his dictionary in 1969 he disregarded the commitment.

A more comfortable notation than uu would, of course, be welcome. The most likely candidate is 'uo', but its qualifications win scant applause.

ALTERNATIVE ENGLISH SPELLINGS in CURRENT USE HAVE GIVEN US a START on the ROAD to REFORM

We are no stranger to alternative spellings. Our most authoritative dictionaries list over a hundred of them, including such familiar pairs as catalog/catalogue, align/aline, plow/plough, programme/program, draft/draught, etc. Often it is a toss-up which one we use: sextet/sextette, chaperone/chaperon, worshipping/worshiping... Our routine acceptance of either spelling tells us that we have already accepted the general idea of alternatives. Without realizing it we have taken a very important step toward implementing reform. What, over the years, has been a slow introduction of alternatives can now be enormously accelerated as computers shoulder the burden of change in the touchy area of keyboard operation. Interchangeable (interchangable) spellings, then, are not new. American, of course, will greatly increase their number, and in so doing achieve an orderly fit between sight and sound. Here is a sampling of accepted alternative English spellings in use today. The list is typical but far from complete:

Trademarks based on unorthodox spellings (U-Haul, Citibank, Stix-it) render an important service to the cause of spelling reform by showing (1) the potpourri that would result from a reformed spelling thrown together, like the trademarks, without careful overall planning or phonetic consistency, and (2) the surprising ease with which we comprehend even the most irregular and unfamiliar spellings. We are indebted to the commercial phonetic tricksters for giving us a generous demonstration of these two points.

Mark Twain on Speling Reform

Th furst tiem I was in Egypt a simplified speling epidemic had broeken out and th atmosfeer was electrical with feeling enjenderd bi th subject. This was for or fiev thousand yearz ago. Th Simplifieerz had rizen in revolt agenst th hieroglifics. An uncl of Cadmus hoo was out of a job had cum to Egypt and was trieing to introdoos th Phonecian alfabet and get it adopted in plaes of th hieroglifics. Th Simplifieerz wer fue; th Opozishun wer multituedinus. Amung th Simplifieerz wer meny men of lurning and distinkshun, maenly litererry men and memberz of colej facultyz; but aul ranks and condishunz of men and aul graedz of intelect, erruedishun, and ignorans wer represented in th Opozishun. Uncl Cadmus began with an object leson, with chauk, on a cupl of blakbordz. On wun of them he roet in hieroglifics: "At this tiem th King pozest of calvalry 214,580 men and 222,631 horsez for thair ues; of infantry 16,341 squadronz together with an emurjensy rezurv of aul armz, consisting of 84,946 men, 321 elefants, 37,264 transportaeshun carts, and 28,954 camelz and dromederryz." It fild th bord and cost him twenty-six minits of tiem and laebor. Then he repeeted it on anuther blakbord in Italian script and Arabic noomeralz and did it in too minits and a qorter. Then he sed: "Mi arguement is befor U. Wun of th objecshunz to th hieroglifics is that it taeks th brietest puepil nien yearz to get th formz and thair meeningz bi hart; it taeks th averj puepil sixteen yearz; it taeks th rest of th naeshun aul thair daez to acomplish it — it is a lief sentens. This cost of tiem is much too expensiv. It cuud be emploid mor uesfully in uther industryz, and with beter rezults. If U wil renouns th hieroglifics and adopt riten wurdz insted, a tremendus advantej wil be gaend. Bi U? No, not bi U. U hav spent yuur lievz in mastering th hieroglifics, and to U thae ar simpl, and th efect plezant to th ie, and eeven buetiful. But I apeel to U in behaf of th jeneraeshunz which ar to folo. Let yuur sunz and dauterz adopt th riten wurdz and th alfabet, and thus saev millyonz ov yearz of uesles tiem and laebor to fifty jeneraeshuns of posterrity that ar to folo U." Uncl Cadmus sat down, and th Opozishun roez and combated his reezoningz in th uezhooal wae. Thoez peepl sed that thae had aulwaez bin uezd to th hieroglifics; that th hieroglifics had deer and saecred asoeshyaeshunz for them; that thae luvd to sit on a barrel under an umbrella in th brillyant sun of Egypt and spel out th oulz and eeglz and aligaetorz and sawteeth, and taek an our and a haf to th Lord'z Prair, and weep with roemantic emoeshun at th thaut that thae had, at moest, but aet or ten yearz between themselvz and th graev for th enjoiment of this extasy.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN: "Whatever the difficulties and inconveniences [of reformed spelling] now are, they will be more easily surmounted now than hereafter, and some time or other it must be done, or our writing will be like the Chinese."

NOAH WEBSTER: "I once believed that a reformation of our orthography would be unnecessary and impracticable. This opinion was hasty, being the result of a slight examination of the subject. I now believe with Doctor Franklin that such a reformation is practicable and highly necessary."

GODFREY DEWEY: "Most people are aware that our traditional orthography is defective, but very few except those educators who have been directly concerned with the problem are aware just how deficient and defective it is."

JOHN STEINBECK: "Some people there are who, being grown, forget the horrible task of learning to read. It is perhaps the greatest single effort that the human undertakes, and he must do it as a child."

CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN BERGER: "The percentage of inmates in all penal institutions who cannot read or write is staggering...The figures on literacy alone are enough to make one wish that every sentence imposed could include a provision that would grant release when the prisoner had learned to read and write."

JOHN DREYFUS: "The utility of our phonetic alphabet is that whoever learns it can see with his eye something that corresponds to what is already familiar to him through his ear."

EDWARD RONDTHALER has devoted his life to letters, and much of it to a study of the role of letters in providing "a speech that stands still." "Letters," he says, "are Western Civilization's greatest invention. We take them for granted, but without them our society would be very primitive."

As part of his education he received training in speech-letter relationship under the guidance of Dr. Edwin Twitmyer of the University of Pennsylvania and Dr. Edward Scripture of Yale, and in the role of tone in enunciation and expression under Dr. John Finley Williamson of Westminster Choir College, Princeton. His psychology research and thesis at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, dealt with subconscious and emotional responses to letter design.

Dr. Rondthaler's broad typographic experience has made him highly sensitive to the mission of letters in our society. This, in turn, has focused his attention on the scourge of English illiteracy, its underlying cause, and its direct connection with several of our most serious social problems.

In the course of his career he has been instrumental in effecting radical changes in the typesetting industry, taking a leading part in the historic developments that forged the link between photography and typesetting. This 50-year story is told in his book Life with Letters. He foresees that much of what has been achieved in typesetting modernization can now be utilized to bring about equally significant and beneficial changes in our orthography. The volume in hand endeavors to lay a solid foundation toward that end.

Because of his contribution to the world of letters he has received an honorary doctorate from Drake University and been awarded the New York Type Directors Club medal for noteworthy achievement in the art of typography. He is President Emeritus of Photo-Lettering Inc., Chairman Emeritus of the International Typeface Corporation, a member of the British Simplified Spelling Society, the Australian Spelling Action Society, chairman of the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform, and a trustee of The American Language Academy.

EDWARD LIAS is an international university consultant specializing in emerging technology and the study of the future. His book Future Mind has been adopted as a text in many colleges both in the United States and around the world. In it the theories of Marshal McLuhan are applied to the evolving computer scene with projections to the year 2020.

His master's degree is from Columbia University in Communication Arts; his doctorate from New York University specializing in Computers and Media. He has taught at three colleges, served as department chairman at one, and for eight years was a college administrator and general manager for a New Jersey state-wide educational computer network.

Currently he is Director of University Marketing for Sperry Computer Information Systems, International Division, consulting worldwide with college leaders on the future of campus computing, computer master-planning, library automation systems, and computer-rich student computing environments.

As author of various books and articles, his most widely read writing, circulated to every college in the United States, is entitled "Avoiding Oversights in the Computer Acquisition Process". Another article, "Who will Reorchestrate the World's Knowledge?" appeared in five journals including "Computers and People".

Dr. Lias is author of computer aided instruction courses, a regular contributor to the College and University Systems Exchange (CAUSE), and is on the Advisory Board of St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia. His staff produced the language PILOT for Sperry distribution. He is known for his stimulating conference appearances, delivering a score of keynote addresses at national and international gatherings related to future uses of technology in the betterment of life and culture. He is a charter member of the Typographic Council for Spelling Reform and authored much of the software used in the research of this dictionary. The latter is now being readied to translate English text into simplified American spelling through the use of typesetting and desktop computers.
