INTRODUCTION

Nitidulidae LATREILLE, 1802 are one of the largest and most diverse families belonging to the superfamily Cucujoidea and suborder Polyphaga. The family contains about 230 genera and more than 3000 species, widely distributed in all zoogeographical regions. Sap beetles are small beetles whose trophic and habitat requirements are extremely varied, utilizing a multitude of dietary niches. Kateretidae ERICHSON, 1846 are a small family of small-sized beetles, containing approximately 108 species in 16 genera. Until recently, Kateretidae were considered to be a subfamily in Nitidulidae, but were elevated to family status by AUDISIO (1984) and KIREJTSUK (1986). The first faunistic data on beetle species from the Azerbaijan have been mentioned in the 19th century by KOLENATI (1846) and REITTER (1891, 1896). In the next century several publications appeared, which were summarized by AUDISIO et al. in 2000 and JELÍNEK & AUDISIO in 2007. The aim of this paper is to give a summary of the current state of knowledge on the Kateretidae and Nitidulidae of the Azerbaijan based on published and original new data collected on several entomological expeditions which took place in 2010, 2012–2014.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

The published data on Kateretidae and Nitidulidae in Azerbaijan are summarized from previous reports as well as some original material collected from different regions of the country. The catalogue comprises the following data: the valid taxon name, synonymy, and published records with provincial distribution or, when this information is not available, “Azerbaijan (no locality cited)” is given. The system, nomenclature, synonymy, and distribution follow AUDISIO (1993) and JELÍNEK & AUDISIO (2007). The taxonomy, nomenclature, and extra-Azerbaijanian distribution used here follow the Catalogue of Palaearctic Coleoptera (JELÍNEK & AUDISIO 2007), except for Meligethes STEPHENS and relatives, which conform to the recent work of AUDISIO et al. (2009). The list of species is given alphabetically together with distribution data. Also, the following acronyms of collectors are used:

AL – Andrzej Lasoń

RK – Roman Królik

Unless otherwise specified in the text, all specimens are in the author’s collection.

DISCUSSION

The number of species of Kateretidae and Nitidulidae present in Azerbaijan is now updated to 10 and 65, respectively. Comparing this number to the fauna of Iran (8 Kateretidae and 91 Nitidulidae: LASOŃ & GHAHARI 2013, BUNALSKI & GHAHARI 2015, AUDISIO et al. 2017), given the size of both countries, it can be concluded that this list is quite substantial. In contrast, Iran's fauna is severely underestimated. This number looks a lot worse when we compare it to the much better known fauna of these beetle families in Turkey (18 Kateretidae and 163 Nitidulidae: LASOŃ 2007; AVGIN et al. 2012, 2015). Azerbaijan is a country with different geographical regions and climate, so I expect that discovering next species is only a matter of time.
