

Hey, basically, Moodle is an online platform, that means it is on the internet. See, we find it on the internet and for our different courses our lecturers can upload assignments or texts for the respective sessions, and we can see them there, we can download them and work on the assignments there, and in discussion forums, we can exchange with other students. All these things, that means most courses are protected by passwords, i.e. only these people can take part that are registered in the course, unless you get the password from someone else. Then, you can also register. This, of course as decent students, we would never do, especially not with lectures or so.
