

"I now have the initial screen, when you log in to Stud.IP. This is the overview. The upper part, where the different subsections are that you can select, and the first screen, so to speak, that is currently called up is my seminar overview. Then here are the times, that is the current semester, where my courses are, where there are different options. One thing comes to my mind – from time to time something lights up, that means new files have been added or evaluations are due. Or you can unsubscribe – that is directly integrated. When you choose this, you get a small view where you will be forwarded. This is the second page so to speak where you get detailed information about the course. Then up here in my tab, I have the overview that is currently selected. Then there is the message function and the timetable, that I can call up. Unfortunately, I could not remember the others. Then up here is the very important search bar, to find out all kinds of things. Then to the left an overview where you can select the different semesters and mark them in color. I always liked to do this – what had been done already and what not yet. Right, and on the other side you have this info box, where at the top in the tab it is immediately shown which messages just came in and are up-to-date."
